A consideration of $5 for property worth between $200 and $500 is so grossly inadequate as to shock the moral sense, and where it is obtained from an elderly woman ignorant of the facts in the matter, by men who are familiar with the facts and who represent to her that the land is in a "very bad way in regard to taxes," is worthless and of no value to her whatsoever, the transaction will be set aside. Benter v. Patch (1888) 7 Mackey (D. C.) 590.

The sale of land by a woman unfamiliar with the premises, through an agent acting for both parties, upon a consideration about one forty-fifth of the value of the land, is upon such an inadequate consideration that the deed will be set aside. Morriso v. Philliber (1860) 30 Mo. 145. The grantor could neither read nor write, and had no knowledge of the value of the property; this value was not disclosed to her before the sale, and her estimate of it was evidently influenced by the agent's representation that the property was about to be sold for taxes, a relation of confidence existing between her and the person acting as agent.

<sup>10</sup>Wood v. Craft (1887) 85 Ala. 260, 4 So. 469 (consideration of $1,000 not sufficient to warrant setting aside a deed for land which did not exceed $1,200 in value).

adequacy must be such as to amount to evidence of fraud.<sup>11</sup>

The inadequacy which amounts to fraud for which a deed will be canceled depends upon circumstances. Examples are given in the note of inadequacy which does not furnish a ground for rescission on this theory,<sup>12</sup> as are also examples of inadequacy which has been held sufficient to authorize the cancellation of a deed.<sup>13</sup> As is true in the case of inadequacy which shocks the con-

11 Wenegar v. Bollenbach (1899) 180 Ill. 222, 54 N. E. 192; Robb v. Robb (1893) 14 Ky. L. Rep. 747, 21 S. W. 580 (if it is not so inadequate as to furnish presumptive evidence of fraud, there is no ground for cancellation); Bevins v. Lowe (1914) 159 Ky. 439, 187 S. W. 422; Dotson v. Norman (1914) 159 Ky. 786, 169 S. W. 527; Morriso v. Philliber (Mo.) supra; Franklin v. Osgood (1817) 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 527 (no such inadequacy is shown in a conveyance of a large tract for one eighth its value, where title was in doubt); BRUNER v. COBB, ante, 377; Wells v. Houston (1902) 29 Tex. Civ. App. 619, 69 S. W. 183; Jenkins v. Einstein (1871) 3 Biss. 128, Fed. Cas. No. 7,265 (action by assignee for benefit of creditors); Follett v. Rose (1844) 3 McLean, 332, Fed. Cas. No. 4,900 (action by heirs).

Where gross inadequacy of price is coupled with circumstances such as raise a strong suspicion of fraud, and pecuniary embarrassment of the grantor, a court of equity will rescind the transaction. McKinney v. Crady (1886) 8 Ky. L. Rep. 259, 1 S. W. 402. The land was sold in this case for practically what it was worth, consequently no rescission was granted.

A deed was canceled in Chance v. Chapman (1915) — Ala. —, 70 So. 676, because of inadequacy of consideration. Neither the value of the land nor the consideration appears. The court cites from Pomeroy's Equity of Jurisprudence to the effect that where the inadequacy of price is so gross that it shocks the conscience and furnishes satisfactory and decisive evidence of fraud, it will be a sufficient ground for cancellation.

See Eyre v. Potter (U. S.) supra, note 5; Talbot v. Manard (Tenn.); McDonald v. Smith (Ark.) and Somers v. Ferris (Mich.) supra, note 6; and German Corp. v. Negau-nnee German Aid Soc. (Mich.) supra, note 7.

12 Such a gross inadequacy of consideration as to furnish evidence of fraud is not shown by a conveyance from an elderly man, resident of another country, to the widow of his son, at from one fourth to one fifth of the actual value of the grantor's interest in the property. Herron v. Herron (1887) 71 Iowa, 428, 32 N. W. 407. It is stated that the presumption in such circumstances is that the grantor preferred to accept the comparatively small amount paid him for his interest rather than be cheated and overreached in the transaction.

A consideration of $100 for property worth at least $1,500, on which there were rents of $800, is not so grossly inadequate as to call for the setting aside of the deed, where the sale took place in public and was held by auditors. Weber v. Weitling (1867) 18 N. J. Eq. 441. L.R.A.1916D.

A deed to property upon consideration that the grantee establish the grantor's title and settle the estate, and give to the grantor one half of the net proceeds, is not upon so inadequate a consideration as to call for a rescission. Hyer v. Little (1870) 20 N. J. Eq. 443.

A deed of land worth between $40,000 and $44,000, subject to a mortgage of $14,000, will not be set aside for inadequacy of consideration, where the consideration paid is $6,000 in cash, personal property worth $2,500, and land variously estimated at from $20,000 to $40,000, but subject to a mortgage of $10,000. Van Gundy v. Steele (1913) 261 Ill. 206, 103 N. E. 754.

A conveyance by a negro of his interest in an estate for about one fourth its value is not upon a consideration so grossly inadequate as to shock the conscience. Wilson v. Farquharson (1853) 5 Md. 134. At least it will not be set aside for this cause where the grantor, who is shown to be a person of ordinary understanding, possessing an intelligence quite equal to the general run of colored persons, and fully competent to the transaction of business, is willing to abide by the bargain, the conveyance being attacked by a third person.

13 A deed by an ignorant freedman of property worth $2,000, to a shrewd business man, upon a consideration of $15 and a horse formerly sold or traded to the grantor, and which practically already belonged to her, was held to be such a consideration as to warrant an inference of fraud. Barker v. Wiseman (1915) — Okla. —, 151 Pac. 1047.

It is stated in Witherwax v. Riddle (1887) 121 Ill. 140, 13 N. E. 545, an action to rescind a trade in real estate in which the complainant claims to have given property more valuable than he received, that mere inadequacy of price is not per se ground for setting aside a transfer of property; yet it may be so gross and palpable as to amount in itself to proof of fraud, and this, in connection with proof of imposition and misrepresentation on the part of the purchaser and his agents, will be sufficient to characterize the transaction as fraudulent in a court of equity.

A sale and conveyance of an interest in an estate for less than one third the value thereof, obtained by a nephew of the grantor, who was addicted to the use of intoxicating liquors and was under the influence of liquor at the time, was set aside in Matthis v. O'Brien (1910) 137 Ky. 651, 126 S. W. 156. The court, after stating that it was not necessary that the grantor be so intoxicated that he did not understand the nature and contents of the contract, continues: "It will be sufficient if his science according to the theory above discussed, it is also true here that the inadequacy which furnishes a ground for cancelation on the theory that it amounts to fraud is always accompanied by some other inequitable incident. It is stated in one case<sup>14</sup> that "no principle is better settled than that mere inadequacy does not form a distinct ground of equitable relief. And yet there are cases where there is no positive evidence of fraud, in which the inequality of the bargain is so gross that the mind cannot resist the inference that, though there be no direct evidence of fraud, such a bargain must have been in some way improperly obtained. In such cases, a court of equity will avoid a bargain, not merely on account of its gross inequality, but because that inequality furnishes 'the most vehement presumption of fraud.'" In this case the grantee stood in a relationship to the grantor, which the court states "should have prompted the defendant [grantee], instead of profiting by the recklessness and improvidence of his cousin, to take measures more effectually to secure the property for his benefit."

Standing alone, inadequacy of consideration is entitled to but little weight as evidence of fraud.<sup>15</sup> On the contrary, it has been stated to be evidence of fraud,<sup>16</sup> but in the cases containing such a statement, there were in evidence other inequitable incidents.

weakness and necessities are taken advantage of, as in this case, and a contract obtained that no man in his sound and sober senses would have entered into."

See Fecht v. Freenian (1911) 251 Ill. 84, 95 N. E. 1043, supra, note 8.

<sup>14</sup> Dunn v. Chambers (1848) 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 376, holding that a deed to a half interest in property worth about $1,800, for $100, would not be declared absolutely void, but would stand as security for what the grantee had paid, where so far as appears the grantor was fully informed of his rights and it appeared that, if he should die without issue, he had only a life estate to dispose of, and there was a strong probability arising from his dissolute habits and reckless course of life that he would not live long. The court states that, after all, the extenuating circumstances which the case presents do not wholly overcome the inequitable features of the transaction.

<sup>15</sup> Hardy v. Dias (1903) 203 Ill. 211, 67 N. E. 852.

Inadequacy of consideration is stated to be insufficient to show fraud in the absence of any other evidence, in Emonds v. Termeh (1882) 60 Iowa, 92, 14 N. W. 197.

Inadequacy of price is stated in Crane v. Conklin (1831) 1 N. J. Eq. 346, 22 Am. Dec. 519, not of itself to be evidence of fraud, and never to be the ground of setting aside the deed unless accompanied with fraud or misrepresentations, where the party is able to contract. In this case, however, the party was intoxicated and inadequacy of price was held to be direct evidence of fraud. See Ashby v. Yetter (N. J.) infra, note 16.

In Powers v. Powers (1905) 46 Or. 479, 80 Pac. 1058, mere inadequacy of consideration is stated not to be a ground for avoiding a deed, although it may be evidence of fraud in connection with other circumstances sufficient for that purpose.

In Derby v. Donahoe (1907) 208 Mo. 684, 106 S. W. 632, it is stated that while inadequacy of consideration is insufficient to warrant a court of equity in annulling a sale of real estate, yet in connection with other facts it may be considered in determining the question as to whether an actual L.R.A.1916D.

fraud has been committed on the rights of an individual.

In an action in ejectment in which it was claimed by the defendant that the plaintiff had obtained title by a deed upon an inadequate consideration, it was held that inadequacy of consideration is not sufficient to prove fraud without some additional evidence. Davidson v. Little (1853) 22 Pa. 245, 60 Am. Dec. 81. The grantor in this case was not complaining. The additional evidence of fraud which the court required seems to be that there be ignorance on the part of the grantor as to the facts in regard to the land, that he be of unsound mind, or that there be circumstances which give the grantee an improper control over him, or some other inequitable incident.

A sale of mineral rights by one ignorant of the value of such rights, to one with full knowledge of the value, at about 1 per cent of the value, will not be set aside for inadequacy of consideration. It is stated by the court that the sale of this privilege at a low price is explained by so many reasons that it is not necessary to account for it by supposing there was any foul play; it is enough to say that the vendor had a right to sell at what price he pleased or keep his property, and having chosen to do the former he cannot undo it by changing his own mind. Harris v. Tyson (1855) 24 Pa. 347, 64 Am. Dec. 661, 14 Mor. Min. Rep. 634.

The presumption of fraud arising from an inadequate consideration never prevails where it is clearly shown that the grantor intelligently and deliberately disposed of his property in a manner decided by himself. Stamper v. Venable (1906) 117 Tenn. 557, 97 S. W. 812. The attack upon the deed was made by heirs of the grantor.

<sup>16</sup> In Schwarz v. Reznick (1913) 257 Ill. 479, 100 N. E. 900, it is stated that mere inadequacy of price may be so gross and palpable as to amount in itself to a proof of fraud. There were other circumstances of fraud in this case. See infra, note 22.

The obtaining of land worth at least $10,000 for $3,000 was held ground for the cancelation of the deed, the court stating that while it may not be actual fraud, it

It is the theory of some counts that relief is granted in such cases because of the fraud, and not because of the inadequacy of consideration.<sup>17</sup> Consequently, in the absence of fraud no relief can be granted.<sup>18</sup> Fraud as a basis for cancellation, however, is beyond the scope of the present note, which is confined to inadequacy of consideration as a distinct ground for cancellation.

It thus appears that, notwithstanding these statements by the courts, a deed will not be canceled for mere inadequacy of consideration, however great.<sup>19</sup> It is only where there is some other inequitable incident, such as disparity in mental ability of the parties, fraudulent concealment, abuse of confidential relations, etc., combined with the inadequacy, that the "conscience is shocked," or that "it amounts to fraud." It doubtless is true that the other inequitable incidents in many of the cases are not sufficient of themselves to set the deed aside, but combined with the inadequacy of consideration, they furnish a sufficient reason for the exercise of equitable jurisdiction for the setting aside of the deed.

As shown above, where cancellation of a deed is granted, some inequitable incident in addition to the inadequacy is essential. These inequitable incidents are of infinite variety and degrees. As the inequitable incidents become more palpable, relief on the ground of inadequacy of consideration is the more readily granted, that is, the inadequacy need not be so gross.<sup>20</sup> In a large number of cases there is a disparity of mental ability between the parties to the transaction, so that they cannot be said to be dealing on an equality. Where this condition exists, rescission will be granted for inadequacy of consideration.<sup>21</sup> Rescission will also be granted amounts to fraud in law. Turner v. Washburn (1904) 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2198, 80 S. W. 460. The grantor in this case was not informed as to the exact amount of land nor interest in the land which he was conveying.

A property worth between $500 and $900 given in exchange for property worth $12,400 is stated in Ashby v. Yetter (1911) 79 N. J. Eq. 196, 81 Atl. 730, to be such a grossly inadequate consideration as of itself to be evidence of fraud. The grantor was mentally weak, and grantee took advantage of this weakness.

In McPhaul v. Walters (1914) 167 N. C. 182, 83 S. E. 321, it is stated that when an issue is raised upon the trial of an action involving fraud and undue influence in securing the execution of a deed, the consideration paid is an important and material fact, and is frequently controlling. If it is near the value of the land conveyed, it is natural and reasonable to conclude, in the absence of peculiar conditions and circumstances, that there is no fraud, but if, on the other hand, there is a gross inequality between the price paid and the value of the property, the inference of mistake or deception arises almost irresistibly. Approving of an earlier case in this jurisdiction, the court states that inadequacy of consideration is evidence of fraud, and when grossly so, may, standing alone, justify submitting the issue of fraud to the jury.

See Witherwax v. Riddle (1886) 121 Ill. 140, 13 N. E. 545, supra, note 13.

<sup>17</sup> Herron v. Herron (1887) 71 Iowa, 428, 32 N. W. 407.

A conveyance of land in exchange for other land worth less than a third of the land conveyed was set aside in Jordan v. Cathcart (1905) 126 Iowa, 600, 102 N. W. 510, where the grantee occupied a confidential relation with reference to the grantor, and fraudulently obtained the conveyance.

<sup>18</sup> Brockway v. Harrington (1891) 82 L.R.A.1916D.

Iowa, 23, 47 N. W. 1013. A deed of land containing about 100 acres and variously estimated to be worth from $3,500 to $5,000, by a husband to his wife, for a consideration of $100, will not be set aside for inadequacy of consideration.

But in Williams v. Longman (1899) — Iowa, —, 78 N. W. 198, a deed of land worth $2,400 upon a consideration of $1,000 was set aside where the grantee called upon the grantor, who was an elderly man, at a time when he was ill, obtained an agreement of sale, and on the following day obtained a deed. The court states that the grantor's years, his illness, which to some extent affected his mind, and the gross inadequacy of the consideration are well established; that other circumstances appear, such as the unusual, and for the grantor very unfavorable, terms of payment of the purchase money.

<sup>19</sup> A deed by a grantor who is mentally capable of making the deed, and understands the nature and effect of the transaction, will not be set aside for inadequacy of consideration, in the absence of some other ground for equitable relief. Miller v. Folsom (1915) — Okla. —, 149 Pac. 1185.

<sup>20</sup> Wells v. Houston (1900) 23 Tex. Civ. App. 629, 57 S. W. 584. See Fecht v. Freeman (1911) 251 Ill. 84, 95 N. E. 1043, supra, note 8.

See Walker v. Shepard (1904) 210 Ill. 100, 71 N. E. 422, infra, note 23, and Crane v. Conklin (1831) 1 N. J. Eq. 346, 22 Am. Dec. 519, supra, note 15.

<sup>21</sup> Scovill v. Barney (1872) 4 Or. 288.

A conveyance of property worth at least $500, upon a consideration of $25, was set aside where it was obtained by an intelligent business man from an ignorant negro woman, unfamiliar with the value of the property or the business being transacted. Yarbrough v. Harris (1910) 168 Ala. 332, 52 So. 916, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 702.

A deed of a lot obtained by an intelligent for inadequacy of consideration where there is a fraudulent conspiracy,<sup>22</sup> or business man from an ignorant negro woman upon an inadequate consideration, the grantor believing that she was conveying merely a strip of land for sidewalk purposes, will be set aside. Kirby v. Arnold (1915) — Ala. —, 68 So. 17. The exact value of the interest in the lot conveyed does not appear; the testimony placed it from $200 to $400, and was based upon the idea that the grantor had an undivided one-fourth interest in the lot, subject to a life estate, but it was shown that there was no life estate and none was reserved in the deed. The consideration named was $12.50.

A conveyance of land by an ignorant and weak-minded old man to a purchaser of shrewdness and ability, upon a consideration of about half the value of the land, was set aside in Wilson v. Oldham (1851) 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 55.

And in Chisholm v. Schroeder (1885) 40 N. S. 8, a sale of property at but little more than one half its value by a person of weak mind, unfit for any business transaction which required judgment and discretion, was set aside.

An exchange of property by a weak-minded visionary person, for other property worth less than one half its value, will be rescinded for inadequacy of consideration. Holden v. Crawford (1826) 1 Aik. (Vt.) 390, 15 Am. Dec. 700.

An exchange of property worth $3,000 by an elderly woman without education, ignorant of business and of real estate values, and acting without competent disinterested advice, for other property and a money consideration totaling $1,250, is upon such an inadequate consideration as to shock a conscientious person and to furnish ground for annulling the conveyance. Sherman v. Glick (1914) 71 Or. 451, 142 Pac. 606. The grantee in this case had represented to the grantor that the property taken in exchange was worth $2,500 instead of $750, as was the fact.

The incompetency of a grantor taken in connection with a sale of property worth $3,000 for $1,250 is sufficient to justify the setting aside of the deed. Castle v. Dole (1909) 54 Wash. 585, 103 Pac. 828.

A decree setting aside a deed will be sustained where the evidence shows that it was made by an aged woman unable to read or speak the English language, upon a consideration of a transfer of property to her which was mortgaged for practically its entire value, and a cash payment of $2,000, of which she received only about one fourth, the balance being consumed in commission charged by one of the defendants and in the payment of judgments claimed to exist against her and in the satisfaction of an attachment proceeding which was secured to be issued against her by one of the defendants. Shea v. Teufert (1904) 207 Ill. J.R.A.1916D.

222, 69 N. E. 872. The property in question was worth about $8,000.

A deed for property worth from $3,500 to $4,000, upon a consideration of $2,500, was rescinded where the grantor was intoxicated and in such a mental condition as to be incapable of executing the deed. Hardy v. Dyas (1903) 203 Ill. 211, 67 N. E. 852. It is stated that while the consideration agreed to be paid would not, standing alone, authorize a court of chancery to set aside the sale for inadequacy of consideration, when taken in connection with the other facts of the case the fact that the property was purchased at that price is an important factor in determining whether the transaction should be set aside and the deed canceled.

The sale of an inheritance of £40 per annum, for an annuity of £20 per annum, by a weak man easily imposed upon, was set aside in Clarkson v. Hanway (1723) 2 P. Wms. (Eng.) 203.

A conveyance upon an inadequate consideration, by a grantor who was weak minded and did not comprehend the nature of the transaction, was relieved against in Paulter v. Manuel (1909) 25 Okla. 59, 108 Pac. 749, by granting the grantor judgment for the value in her land less the amount actually received by her from her grantee, the land having passed into the hands of a bona fide purchaser.

Under the Georgia Code, § 4033, great inadequacy of consideration joined with great disparity of mental ability in contracting a bargain may justify the setting aside of a sale or other contract. This was applied to a deed in Pye v. Pye (1909) 133 Ga. 246, 65 S. E. 424.

A deed obtained for a grossly inadequate consideration, by unfair advantage taken of great mental weakness, though not amounting to absolute incapacity, of the grantor, will be set aside on equitable terms. Walling v. Thomas (1901) 133 Ala. 420, 31 So. 982 (demurrer to a bill which alleged a conveyance at one fourth the value of the land overruled).

But the court in Coghen v. Garcia v. Llonin (1909) 5 Porto Rico Fed. Rep. 18, refused to interfere in the case of a deed upon a consideration at about one half the value of the land, where the grantor was not mentally so weak minded that he did not understand the nature of the transaction.

<sup>22</sup>In Schwarz v. Reznick (1913) 257 Ill. 479, 100 N. E. 900, rescission was granted of a deed of a farm worth about $4,800 for property taken in exchange worth less than $450, where the property taken in exchange was represented to be worth $5,000, and a third party who was obtained by the vendee for the purpose of giving an appearance of value to the property offered to purchase it for $4,800 and paid $100 down for an option thereon.

where there is imposition in the case of a relation of confidence,<sup>33</sup> or misrepresentation and fraud.<sup>34</sup>

The rule was established in England

that the sale of an expectancy or reversionary interest in real estate cannot stand unless it is upon an adequate consideration.<sup>35</sup> The purchaser must show <sup>33</sup> A consideration of $4,000 for property worth upwards of $14,000 is grossly inadequate, and a deed obtained by a father from his daughter at a time when she is under the influence of opiates and incapacitated from doing business will be set aside. Neilson v. Laffin (1893) 66 Hun, 636, 50 N. Y. S. R. 277, 21 N. Y. Supp. 731.

A conveyance of land worth from $2,800 to $3,200, upon a consideration of $500, by a grantor of feeble mind, between whom and the grantee the relations are of such character that a threat made by the grantee to deprive her of her land by suit if she does not accept the sum offered by him would have undue weight, will be set aside. Walker v. Shepard (1904) 210 Ill. 100, 71 N. E. 422. In such a situation the gross inadequacy of the consideration is stated to become evidence of fraud which is of controlling importance and justifies the interference of a court of equity. The claim made by the grantee that the conveyance was made in a compromise was held not sustainable.

A consideration of $125 for property worth $600 or $800 on which there was a mortgage for $125 and a lien for street improvements for $60 is stated in Davis v. Yancy (1907) 31 Ky. L. Rep. 1155, 104 S. W. 697, to be so inadequate as to raise a presumption that it must have been obtained by some means not appearing on the face of deed. The deed in this case was obtained by a son from his mother upon his representation that there was a lien of $200 or $300 for street improvements, and that if the mother did not make a deed to him for the lot she would get nothing for it.

See Matthis v. O'Brien (1910) 137 Ky. 651, 126 S. W. 156, supra, note 13, and Chambers v. Chambers, infra, note 33.

<sup>34</sup> A deed of land worth from $3,000 to $6,000, for a consideration of $25, will be set aside where, in addition to the inadequacy of consideration, the grantee misrepresents conditions, conceals facts when he should speak, and makes misstatements preventing an inquiry which would disclose material circumstances and conditions unknown to the grantor. Armstrong v. Randall (1913) 93 Neb. 722, 141 N. W. 829.

A sale by an ignorant negro for $5, of property worth $1,000, is upon such a gross inadequacy of price as to shock the conscience and establish fraud, and the deed therefore will be rescinded where, in addition to this inadequacy, there is suppressive and misleading conduct on the part of the grantee's agent, which in itself amounts to fraud. Stevens v. Ozbourn (1901) 107 Tenn. 572, 89 Am. St. Rep. 957, 64 S. W. 902.

A deed obtained from a grantor ignorant of the value of the property, upon representations as to its value by the grantee's agent, and representations also that it is L.R.A.1916D about to be sold for taxes and that the grantor will not realize anything therefrom, will be set aside where the consideration is only a third of the value, the rescission, however, being for fraudulent misrepresentations rather than inadequacy of consideration. Stack v. Nolte (1902) 29 Wash. 188, 69 Pac. 753.

A deed of property worth $2,000 upon a consideration of $500, to a stranger in blood of the grantor, to the exclusion of her son, will be set aside where, in addition to the inadequacy of consideration, the grantor believes that she is giving security merely. Johnson v. Woodworth (1909) 134 App. Div. 715, 119 N. Y. Supp. 146.

A consideration which, considering the evidence most favorable to the grantee, amounts to only half of the value of the property, when accompanied by misrepresentations to the grantor, who was without knowledge in regard to the property and was hurried into the execution of the deed without being given an opportunity to make appropriate investigation, is ground for setting aside the deed. Wenegar v. Bollenbach (1899) 180 Ill. 222, 54 N. E. 192.

A conveyance of land worth between $10 and $20 an acre, for less than $2 an acre, by a grantor ignorant of the value of the land, the deed being delivered after oil is discovered thereon, which greatly increases the value, will be set aside. Hyde v. McFaddin (1905) 72 C. C. A. 655, 140 Fed. 443, certiorari denied in (1906) 203 U. S. 596, 51 L. ed. 333, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 784. The agent of the grantors in this case, who knew of the fact, violated his trust in not giving full information to the grantors.

A deed by an ignorant negro girl of a half interest in a lot worth $3,000, upon a consideration of $300, will be canceled where it is obtained upon false and fraudulent representations that the lot is worth only $500, and that she may be forced to put down a sidewalk and the lot sold to pay expenses. The grantor desired to consult with her agent about the lot, but was persuaded not to do so. Storhiz v. Williams (1908) 86 Ark. 460, 111 S. W. 804.

A deed of the grantor's interest in an estate of the value of $7,000, upon a consideration of $1,000, at a time when the grantor is wholly ignorant of the character, condition, and value of the estate, where the grantee purposely keeps him ignorant and makes false statements in regard to the amount and value thereof, will be set aside. Lavette v. Sage (1861) 29 Conn. 577.

<sup>35</sup> Bawtree v. Watson (1834) 3 Myl. & K. (Eng.) 339; Twisleton v. Griffith (1716) 1 P. Wms. (Eng.) 310; Newton v. Hunt (1833) 5 Sim. (Eng.) 511 (reversionary interest in stock set aside for inadequacy and unjust and oppressive conduct of purchaser); Nott v. Hill (1683) 1 Vern. (Eng.)

that it was adequate, and where he fails to show this the conveyance will be set aside.<sup>26</sup> The market value of the reversionary interest is the determinative test of its value, not the value calculated by the tables.<sup>27</sup>

The rule of these cases was denied application in the case of a sale of a reversion at auction.<sup>28</sup> And also where there was a long delay in seeking to set the sale aside.<sup>29</sup> And the English court refused to set aside a sale of a reversion for mere inadequacy of consideration, where the inadequacy was the result of the death of the life tenant shortly after the sale.<sup>30</sup>

A statute was subsequently enacted in England (sales of reversions act of 1867) providing that no purchase made bona fide and without fraud or unfair dealing, of any reversionary interest in real or personal estate, shall hereafter be opened or set aside merely on the ground of undervalue. In order to bring a sale of a reversion within this act, it must be made bona fide and without fraud or unfair dealing. Consequently, in a case of unfair dealing a sale of a reversionary interest in a certain trust fund at about half its value was set aside.<sup>31</sup>

But this doctrine of the English courts has been quite generally repudiated in the courts of this country as to reversionary or remainder estates. Where there is no fraud or imposition, the sale will not be set aside for mere inadequacy of consideration.<sup>32</sup> And this is true although the interest is contingent.<sup>33</sup> A sale of a vested interest in remainder will not be set aside because of the mere fact that vendor did not receive 167; Peacock v. Evans (1809) 16 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 512, 10 Revised Rep. 218 (sale of expectancy at less than half its value); Gowland v. De Faria (1810) 17 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 20, 11 Revised Rep. 9.

A sale by a tenant in tail in remainder of his reversionary interests worth at the lowest estimate nearly twice what he received therefor, will be set aside. St. Albyn v. Harding (1859) 27 Beav. (Eng.) 11.

A sale of a reversion worth £200 for £38 less than its value will be set aside. Jones v. Ricketts (1862) 31 Beav. (Eng.) 130, 8 Jur. N. S. 1198, 31 L. J. Ch. N. S. 753, 10 Week. Rep. 576.

A sale of a legacy worth £400 for £370 was set aside as upon an inadequate consideration in Foster v. Roberts (1861) 29 Beav. (Eng.) 467, 30 L. J. Ch. N. S. 666, 7 Jur. N. S. 400, 4 L. T. N. S. 760, 9 Week. Rep. 605.

The doctrine was extended to Canada.

Morey v. Totten (1857) 6 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 176, sale of reversion in property worth £400 for £125. Life tenant eighty years of age.

An obiter statement in accord with this rule in the case of the sale of an expectancy is found in Wells v. Houston (1900) 23 Tex. Civ. App. 629, 57 S. W. 584, but it seems there was fraud in procuring the sale. S. c. second appeal (1902) 29 Tex. Civ. App. 619, 69 S. W. 183.

Salter v. Bradshaw (1858) 26 Beav. (Eng.) 161, 28 L. J. Ch. N. S. 426, 5 Jur. N. S. 831. In this case the conveyance of a reversion nearly forty years before the suit was brought was set aside, the life estate having terminated.

Edwards v. Burt (1852) 2 De G. M. & G. (Eng.) 55, holding that a sale upon a consideration of £250, of a reversionary interest variously estimated at from £318 to £840 would be set aside, and that a sale upon a consideration of £500, of a reversionary interest valued at about twice that amount by the witnesses for the vendor, at about £80 more by the vendee himself, and L.R.A.1916D.

at about £500 by witnesses for the vendee, would be set aside, the court stating that the vendee had not sustained the burden that was upon him to show that the consideration was fair and adequate.

Nesbitt v. Berridge (1863) 32 Beav. (Eng.) 282, 9 Jur. N. S. 1044, 8 L. T. N. S. 76, 11 Week. Rep. 446, holding that a consideration of £75 for property which was within a few days sold for £125, and which was valued by witnesses at a very much higher sum, was an inadequate consideration and the sale would be set aside.

Aldborough v. Trye (1840) 7 Clark & F. (Eng.) 436, West, 221.

Shelly v. Nash (1818) 3 Madd. Ch. (Eng.) 232, 18 Revised Rep. 223.

In Moth v. Atwood (1801) 5 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 845, a bill to set aside a sale of a reversion on the ground of inadequacy of price was dismissed where it was not brought until twelve years after the sale and there was no fraud or circumvention.

Nichols v. Gould (1752) 2 Ves. Sr. (Eng.) 422.

Brenchley v. Higgins (1900) 83 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 751, 70 L. J. Ch. N. S. 788.

Cribbins v. Markwood (1856) 13 Gratt. (Va.) 495, 67 Am. Dec. 775; Mayo v. Carrington (1869) 19 Gratt. (Va.) 74.

Thus, mere inadequacy of consideration does not afford a sufficient reason of setting aside a conveyance of the interest which a son acquires in consequence of the remarriage of his mother, under a statute which prohibits the widow, after her second marriage, from selling or conveying her interest in her prior husband's real estate, and provides that at her death the title should vest in her children by her former husband. McAdams v. Bailey (1907) 169 Ind. 518, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1003, 124 Am. St. Rep. 240, 82 N. E. 1057. As to mere expectancies, however, the rule is stated to be different.

The contrary opinion expressed in Chambers v. Chambers (1894) 139 Ind. 111, 38 N. E. 334, must be regarded as overruled.

full market value.<sup>34</sup> And it has been held that mere inadequacy is not ground for canceling the sale of a mere expectancy.<sup>35</sup> The sale of an equity of redemption will not be set aside unless the consideration is grossly inadequate or such as to shock the conscience.<sup>36</sup>

But in this country as in England the contracts generally of expectant heirs, reversioners, and holders of other expectant and contingent interests, with reference to such interest, are guarded with great care in equity.<sup>37</sup> No attempt has been made, however, in this note, to discuss the rights upon the transfer of such interests. Neither does the note purport to be exhaustive of sales of remainders, where the peculiar rules applicable to expectancies and other contingent interests have been applied to the sale of remainder estates.

In the Chambers Case, however, the deed was made by an orphan boy who had been brought up in the grantee's family, immediately upon reaching his majority and in ignorance of his legal rights, so that there was an element of breach of confidential relations upon which the cancellation rested in addition to the inadequacy of consideration. The conveyance was of a remainder which had been contingent, but which was vested at the time of conveyance.

<sup>34</sup> Hayes v. Huddleson (1913) 40 App. D. C. 183, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1037. See Chambers v. Chambers (Ind.) supra, note 33.

A sale of a vested interest in remainder by one in financial distress, for about one fourth its value, will not be set aside for inadequacy of consideration. Phillips's Estate (1903) 205 Pa. 511, 55 Atl. 212.

<sup>35</sup> A sale by a son of his expectant interest in his father's estate for less than one third its value, but upon a full and fair transaction, and with the consent of the father, will not be set aside for inadequacy of consideration. Lee v. Lee (1865) 2 Duv. (Ky.) 134. But see Texas cases cited in note 25, supra.

<sup>36</sup> Thornton v. Pinckard (1908) 157 Ala. 206, 47 So. 289 (property worth about what was paid).

<sup>37</sup> See 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 953; Perry, Trusts, § 188.

As to the validity of conveyance of property in expectancy, see McClure v. Raben, 9 L.R.A. 477, and footnote. W. A. E.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

T. J. MCKEE

v.

WILLIAM HUGHES et al., Pliffs. in Certiorari.

(133 Tenn. 455, 181 S. W. 930.)

Conspiracy — petition to revoke business license — liability.

1. Persons who, in good faith, petition a village council to revoke the license of a merchant to carry on his business in the town, on the ground that it is so conducted as to constitute a nuisance, are not liable as for conspiracy, although the council acts upon the petition, and, in excess of its authority, revokes the license to the injury of the merchant.

For other cases, see Conspiracy, III. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — burden of proof — malice.

2. One injured by the closing of his business in response to a petition of citizens has the burden of showing malice on their part to hold them liable for the injury done.

For other cases, see Evidence, II. e, 6, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Case — petitioning for closing of store — liability for loss.

3. Citizens are not liable in damages for seeking summary action from the village council having authority to declare and abate nuisances for the closing of a store as a nuisance because of the congregation of disorderly persons there, rather than resorting to the courts for relief, although the council acts upon the petition and closes the store in excess of its authority.

For other cases, see Case, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 8, 1916.)

CERTIORARI to the Court of Civil Appeals to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the Circuit Court for Maury County in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover damages for alleged unlawful conspiracy of defendants to destroy plaintiff's business. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Holding & Garner and J. H. Denning for plaintiffs in certiorari:

Messrs. J. L. Jones, J. C. Voorhies, and R. S. Hopkins for defendant in certiorari.

Williams, J. delivered the opinion of the court:

McKee brought this suit against a large number of the residents of the village of Spring Hill, Maury county, to recover damages, his declaration containing several counts, all of which, save the fourth, have been eliminated by the verdict of the jury and the rulings of the court of civil appeals. In this fourth count it was averred that

Note — As to civil liability of persons who join in petition addressed to public authorities, see annotation following this case, post, 394.
L.R.A.1916D.

Spring Hill is incorporated, and has a board of mayor and aldermen, from which plaintiff had procured a license to do the business of a general merchant; that under this license he conducted a store for the sale of merchandise and had a prosperous business, when the defendants unlawfully conspired together to stop and destroy his business, and for that purpose signed and delivered to the board of mayor and aldermen the following petition addressed to that body:

"We, the undersigned citizens, do hereby petition your honorable body to declare the store conducted by T. J. McKee a public nuisance, and we further petition you to abate this nuisance by revoking his license and closing up his place of business.

"This 27th day of August, 1913."

This paper was signed by nineteen of the defendants.

It was further averred that the said board passed a resolution reciting that "numerous complaints have been made that T. J. McKee has been and is conducting a place of business which is a nuisance, and whereas a formal petition has been presented to us, numerous signed by citizens, be it resolved that we hereby revoke the license issued to T. J. McKee," and that the marshal of the town be authorized to deliver to McKee a check rebating him a part of the license sum prepaid, "and to notify him that he can no longer conduct his place of business under the penalty of the city laws."

It is averred also that, by reason of the above, plaintiff's business was stopped and destroyed, to his damage, etc.

The trial judge instructed the jury that the defendants had a right under the law to petition the village council for redress of grievances, and that they were not bound to see that the details of that council's action with reference to their petition were absolutely legal. Further, that there was no liability shown under the fourth count.

The court of civil appeals reversed the judgment of the circuit court because of the above ruling; and we are asked to grant the writ of certiorari and to review the judgment of reversal.

We have no difficulty in following the court of civil appeals to its conclusion that the action of the village council in undertaking to revoke the license and in notifying McKee that he could no longer conduct his business was unwarranted by law; but we are unable to follow that court in the ruling that the defendant petitioners must respond in damages on the ground that, in presenting said petition, they conspired to and did cause injury to plaintiff unlawfully.

There was proof adduced by plaintiff that tended to show that he had been injured by the action taken by the city marshal under the resolution of the council. But are defendants liable as conspirators?

A "civil conspiracy" may be defined to be a combination between two or more persons to accomplish by concert of action an unlawful purpose, or to accomplish a purpose not in itself unlawful by unlawful means; the damage caused being the gist of any action. 5 R. C. L. 1061, 1091; 1 Words & Phrases, 2d series, 910.

The defendants, in assembling and petitioning the village council, were proceeding in the exercise of a high constitutional privilege. By the Declaration of Rights embodied in our Constitution (art. 1, § 23) it is provided: "That the citizens have a right, in a peaceable manner, to assemble together for their common good, to instruct their representatives, and to apply to those invested with the powers of government for redress of grievances, or other proper purposes, by address or remonstrance."

In 8 Cyc. 894, citing Citizens' Bank v. Board of Assessors (C. C.) 54 Fed. 73, the rule is stated to be: "The right of assembly and petition is guaranteed by the Constitutions, which secure to every person, natural or artificial, the right to apply to any department of the government for the redress of grievances, or the bestowal of a right, and also guarantee the enjoyment of such redress [of the grievances] . . . when obtained, free from all penalty for having sought or obtained it."

We think that this, with modification to be noted below, is a correct statement of the law.

We have been cited to but a single case in which a court has dealt with liability for conspiracy predicated upon the defendants' signing a petition to those invested with governmental power for redress of grievances, or setting forth instructions by way of an expression of their wish or will. The court of civil appeals grounded its ruling upon the authority of that case, Vanarsdale v. Laverty, 69 Pa. 103, 109.

The petition in that case was addressed to the district school directors by defendants, who were patrons of the school which had been taught by Laverty. The petition expressed their wish that Laverty be not employed for the ensuing school term under any circumstances, and the willingness of the petitioners to accept any other competent teacher that the board might select. The action of Laverty was on the case for conspiracy, and malice was charged to have colored the effort made by defendants to prevent the directors from employing plaintiff. Referring to the petition, the court said: "It preferred no charges and gave no reasons, and was a simple expression . . . of the wishes of the signers. It was the right of these citizens of the district thus to declare their desire. They had a right to express a preference or to declare their objection to anyone applying for appointment. They were deeply interested, and had therefore a right to speak out. But we cannot recognize the position to which the argument of the plaintiffs in error leads, that such a right of expression can be made a channel through which men may gratify their malice and enmity. This would be the actual result of the argument that the right of petition is so sacred that the private purposes and motives of the actors cannot be inquired into. If they cannot, and if the real purpose of the petition be the gratification of ill will and malice without cause, then men may be borne down by the power of their enemies, especially in numbers and by combination. . . . A groundless petition instigated only by malice cannot surely be the right of any citizen where it . . . results in harm to the object of its malicious purpose."

The court, moreover, approved a charge given by the trial judge to the effect that, if defendants acted honestly and were influenced by proper motives, the plaintiff could not recover.

We ourselves think that a true doctrine was enunciated by the Pennsylvania court in that case; but it fails of proper application in the case before us because here there was no malice and no intention to injure plaintiff. The purpose of defendants, as manifested by the only proof adduced, was to serve what was deemed to be the legitimate interests of the village,—not a selfish one springing out of trade rivalry, jealousy, or revenge.

The village of Spring Hill is the location of a large boys' training school; defendant Hughes being one of the principals of the school and mayor of the town. The proof demonstrates that the plaintiff's store was, what one of his own witnesses termed it, a rough house, frequented, as it was, by numbers of drinking and boisterous men, colored and white, and boys at times were seen in the store, full of drink. The store appears to have been the rendezvous of plaintiff and a woman, in daytime and at night. Vile communications between the two passed through the local telephone exchange. The woman resorted to the store, and was seen there more than once with plaintiff about midnight, the door being locked. Cursing in loud tones often was heard by the passers-by. Plaintiff himself was often in drink at the store, and was loudly profane. The citizens of the village L.R.A.1916D.

naturally were desirous of eliminating this condition, and in a public meeting, after discussion, petition to their village council was resorted to as a peaceable means of relief.

The same principle announced in the Pennsylvania case underlies those cases which involve the exercise of the right of petition where a suit for libel was based upon the contents of the instrument by the person affected thereby.

A number of courts hold that such petitions and all matters embraced therein, if pertinent and relevant, are absolutely privileged. But, by the weight of authority, they are only qualifiedly privileged; the privilege extending no further than the protection of the signers when they act without malice. Even if the complaint embodied in the petition be untrue, no action can be maintained if it was not maliciously made. White v. Nicholls, 3 How. 266, 11 L. ed. 591; Kent v. Bongartz, 15 R. I. 72, 2 Am. St. Rep. 870, 22 Atl. 1023; Wieman v. Mabee, 45 Mich. 484, 40 Am. Rep. 477, 8 N. W. 71. But proof of actual malice in respect of such a petition will render it libelous in character, and therefore, of course, an action would lie. White v. Nicholls, supra; Dennehy v. O'Connell, 66 Conn. 175, 33 Atl. 920, and cases cited above.

Such a petition is presumed not to be the product of the malice of its signers; they ought, in the exercise of such a constitutional privilege, to be presumed to act in the discharge of a social or public duty. The burden of proof to show malice was therefore on the plaintiff, McKee. White v. Nicholls, supra; Ambrosius v. O'Farrell, 119 Ill. App. 265; Van Wyck v. Aspinwall, 17 N. Y. 190. And, as seen, there was no evidence of malice that could have supported a verdict of the jury; and the trial judge was not in error in giving the instruction he did touching the fourth count of the declaration.

It may be that the petitioners misconceived the power of the council under the charter of the village, which granted the council authority to issue privilege licenses, to declare, prevent, or abate nuisances, and to prohibit or suppress disorderly houses of all kinds; further, that under such misconception they petitioned for an abatement of McKee's store as a public nuisance "by revoking his license and closing up his place of business." But malice or bad faith are not to be imputed to the petitioners because they could not discriminate between the power of summary abatement of a nuisance per se and the abatement of a condition such as that shown to have been in existence at McKee's store by a judicial proceeding. Can it be that ordinary laymen, in the exercise of such a right, may be thus caught on such a fine point of law, to their undoing, as is insisted in this case? The juster view is that these men but advanced the above mode of action as a suggestion for the consideration of the members of the council, deemed by them competent to judge and act as public officials, and that they are not liable if they acted in good faith or without malice. The right of petition guaranteed to the citizen in the Bill of Rights should not be allowed to become a trap for the petitioner, to be sprung by any such hairtrigger of technical law.

In Harrison v. Bush, 5 El. & Bl. 344, there was involved a memorial signed by defendant along with a large number of the inhabitants of his borough, complaining of the conduct of plaintiff as a justice of the peace, and the court was of opinion no action would lie for libel if the memorialist thought he was addressing an authority who might reasonably be, and was, supposed by him to have the duty and power to act in the premises. Lord Chief Justice Campbell, delivering the opinion, referred to an earlier case of Fairman v. Ives, 5 Barn. & Ald. 642, 1 Chitty, 85, 1 Dowl. & R. 252, 24 Revised Rep. 514, and to the opinion of Mr. Justice Holroyd therein, and said: "Mr. Justice Holroyd considered that it was enough if the petition had been presented bona fide, 'for the purpose of obtaining redress,' without considering whether the functionary to whom it was presented had the power to grant redress; and he recognized the case of Cleaver v. Sarraude, cited in 1 Campb. 268, 10 Revised Rep. 680, which carries considerably further the doctrine of the occasion repelling the presumption of malice. The language of Best, J., in Fairman v. Ives, supra, is particularly applicable to the present case: 'The circumstances under which this letter was sent rendered it a privileged communication. It was an application for the redress of a grievance, made to one of the King's ministers, who, as the defendant honestly thought, had authority to afford him redress. And this may be done without hazard of an action or prosecution, if the application be made bona fide with a view to obtain redress for some injury received, or to prevent or punish some public abuse.'"

Satisfied, as we are, that the trial judge properly ruled this case, the writ of certiorari is granted, and the judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals is reversed. Judgment here in accord.

Petition for rehearing denied.

Annotation—Civil liability of persons who join in petition addressed to public authorities.

An extensive search, both from the point of view of conspiracy and of libel, has revealed but little authority on this question. The case of Vanarsdale v. Laverty (1871) 69 Pa. 103, is fully discussed in the opinion in McKee v. Hughes, ante, 391, and need not be further alluded to here.

In Wieman v. Mabree (1881) 45 Mich. 484, 40 Am. Rep. 477, 8 N. W. 71, to prevent a town superintendent of schools from licensing an applicant as teacher, persons interested in the school in question represented to the superintendent, in a petition and affidavit, that the applicant was a person of bad moral character and unfit to have charge of a school. In a suit for libel, it was decided that the communication was privileged. The court said: "The communication was fully privileged. It was made by persons interested in the school, to the person qualified to receive and act on the petition, for an honest purpose, and with an honest belief in the justice of their action. In such cases no action can be maintained even if the complaint is untrue, if not maliciously made."

As to the privileged character of complaints to public officer against subordinate, see note in 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1041.

As to privilege as to proceedings for impeachment or removal of public officers, see note in 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 455.

As to privilege of informal communications relating to criminal charge, see notes in 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 149; 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 740, and L.R.A.1915E, 413.

Various other questions as to privilege in respect of legal proceedings are treated in notes cited in the Index to L.R.A. Notes, under the title, "Libel and Slander."

Generally as to the effect of bad motive to make actionable what would otherwise not be, see note to Passaic Print Works v. Ely & W. Dry Goods Co. (1900) 62 L.R.A. 673. W. W. A.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.
(Department No. 2.)

ANNA DAVIES, Resp.,

v.

MARYLAND CASUALTY COMPANY,
Appt.

(— Wash. —, 154 Pac. 1116.)

Insurance — employers' indemnity — satisfaction of judgments — giving of notes.

1. The mere giving of its notes by an insolvent employer to one who has recovered judgment against it for an injury, and their immediate return in consideration of an assignment of an indemnity insurance policy, is not such a satisfaction of the judgment, although it is in fact marked satisfied, as to make enforceable the liability on the insurance policy.

For other cases, see Insurance, VIII. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — estoppel to deny liability.

2. One who has undertaken to indemnify an employer against loss because of judgments paid for accidents to employees estops himself from insisting on prepayment of judgment as a condition to his own liability by assuming the defense of the employee's action, so that the policy may be enforced or assigned when the judgment is entered against the employer.

For other cases, see Estoppel, III. j. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — assignment — right to contest.

3. One who has insured a corporation against loss because of injury to employees cannot contest the validity of an assignment of the policy to one who has obtained a judgment against the corporation, on the theory that, prior to the assignment, the name of the corporation had been stricken from the public rolls, and its assets, under the statute, had passed to its trustees for disposition.

For other cases, see Action or Suit, I. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — misconduct of counsel — non-prejudicial error.

4. A case cannot be reversed for misconduct of counsel when it is clear that the verdict could not possibly have been affected by it.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. m, 5, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 9, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County

Note.—For giving of note as loss or damage within condition of contract of indemnity, see notes to Kennedy v. Fidelity & C. Co. 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 478, and West Riverside Coal Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 195.

As to injured employee's right to reach fund under employers' liability policy, see L.R.A.1916D.

in plaintiff's favor in an action by her as assignee of an indemnity policy issued by defendant to a coal company, to recover the amount of the policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John W. Roberts and George L. Spirk, for appellant:

The policy was solely one of indemnity against loss, and indemnified only the coal company.

Ford v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 70 Wash 29, 126 Pac. 69; Sheard v. United States Fidelity & G. Co. 58 Wash. 29, 107 Pac. 1024, 109 Pac. 276; Puget Sound Improv. Co. v. Frankfort Marine, Acci. & Plate Glass Ins. Co. 52 Wash. 124, 100 Pac. 190; Fidelity & C. Co. v. Martin, 163 Ky. 12, L.R.A. —, —, 173 S. W. 307; American Employers' Liability Ins. Co. v. Fordyce, 62 Ark. 562, 54 Am. St. Rep. 305, 36 S. W. 1051; Finley v. United States Casualty Co. 113 Tenn. 592, 83 S. W. 2, 3 Ann. Cas. 962; Frye v. Bath Gas & E. Co. 97 Me. 241, 59 L.R.A. 444, 94 Am. St. Rep. 500, 54 Atl. 395; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Moses, 63 N. J. Eq. 260, 92 Am. St. Rep. 663, 49 Atl. 720; Gilbert v. Wiman, 1 N. Y. 550, 49 Am. Dec. 359; Cushman v. Carbondale Fuel Co. 122 Iowa, 656, 98 N. W. 509; Carter v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 76 Kan. 275, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1155, 91 Pac. 178; Allen v. Gilman, McN. & Co. 137 Fed. 136; Allen v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 958, 76 C. C. A. 265, 145 Fed. 881; Saratoga Trap Rock Co. v. Standard Acci. Ins. Co. 143 App. Div. 852, 128 N. Y. Supp. 822; Conqueror Zinc & Lead Co. v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 152 Mo. App. 332, 133 S. W. 156; Munro v. Maryland Casualty Co. 48 Misc. 183, 96 N. Y. Supp. 705; Appel v. People's Surety Co. 148 App. Div. 70, 132 N. Y. Supp. 200; Burke v. London Guarantee & Acci. Co. 47 Misc. 171, 93 N. Y. Supp. 652, 199 N. Y. 557, 93 N. E. 1117; Kennedy v. Fidelity & C. Co. 100 Minn. 1, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 478, 117 Am. St. Rep. 658, 110 N. W. 97, 10 Ann. Cas. 1; Connolly v. Bolster, 187 Mass. 266, 72 N. E. 981; Stenbom v. Brown-Corliss Engine Co. 137 Wis. 564, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 956, 119 N. W. 308; Cayard v. Robertson, 123 Tenn. 382, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1224, 131 S. W. 864, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 122; O'Connell v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 187 Mass. 272, 72 N. E. 979; Maahs v. Antigo Lumber Co. 156 Wis. 1, 145 N. W. 222; Pfeiler v. Penn Allen Portland Cement Co. 240 Pa. 468, 87

notes to Allen v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 958, and Clark v. Bonsal, 48 L.R.A.(N. S.) 191.

The general question whether insurance against liability for injury to property or person of third person is indemnity or liability insurance is discussed in the note to Patterson v. Adan, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 184.

Atl. 623; Beyer v. International Aluminum Co. 115 App. Div. 853, 101 N. Y. Supp. 83; Texas Short Line R. Co. v. Waymire, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 89 S. W. 452; Brewster v. Empire State Surety Co. 145 App. Div. 678, 130 N. Y. Supp. 439; Poe v. Philadelphia Casualty Co. 118 Md. 347, 84 Atl. 476; Henderson Lighting & P. Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 153 N. C. 275, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1105, 69 S. E. 234; Stephens v. Pennsylvania Casualty Co. 3 Ann. Cas. 480, note; Fuller, Employers' Liability Ins. pp. 451-458; Imperial F. Ins. Co. v. Coos County, 151 U. S. 452, 38 L. ed. 231, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 379.

The coal company was insolvent prior to the judgment, and at no time suffered or sustained any loss.

First Nat. Bank v. Colby, 21 Wall. 609, 22 L. ed. 687; United States v. Spokane Mill Co. 206 Fed. 999.

The casualty company was in no way responsible for the insolvency of the coal company. It can in no manner be blamed for the insolvency, nor charged with any liability on account thereof.

Clark v. Bonsal, 157 N. C. 270, 72 S. E. 954; Campbell v. Maryland Casualty Co. 52 Ind. App. 228, 97 N. E. 1026; Stenbom v. Brown-Corliss Engine Co. 137 Wis. 564, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 956, 119 N. W. 309.

When a corporation has been stricken from the roll by the secretary, it loses its corporation franchise, and an action pending against it abates by failure to pay the license fee.

Hawley v. Bonanza Queen Min. Co. 61 Wash. 90, 111 Pac. 1073.

The judgment should be reversed because of misconduct of plaintiff's counsel.

Fernandis v. Great Northern R. Co. 41 Wash. 486, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1086, 111 Am. St. Rep. 1027, 84 Pac. 18; Spencer v. Arlington, 49 Wash. 121, 94 Pac. 904; Bean v. Kinseder, — Kan. —, 135 Pac. 1181; Zimmerle v. Childers, 67 Or. 465, 136 Pac. 349; Stratton v. C. H. Nichols Lumber Co. 39 Wash. 323, 109 Am. St. Rep. 881, 81 Pac. 831; Rogers v. Kangley Timber Co. 74 Wash. 48, 132 Pac. 731; Cranford v. O'Shea, 75 Wash. 33, 134 Pac. 486; Ford v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 70 Wash. 29, 126 Pac. 69; Hanstad v. Canadian P. R. Co. 44 Wash. 505, 87 Pac. 832; Sullivan v. Seattle Electric Co. 51 Wash. 71, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1082, 97 Pac. 1109.

Messrs. Brady & Rummens for respondent.

Bausman, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff's husband was killed in a mine of the Rose-Marshall Coal Company, when that company had a policy of indemnity L.R.A.1916D.

from the casualty company. After prolonged litigation, including an appeal to this court (Davies v. Rose-Marshall Coal Co. 74 Wash. 565, 134 Pac. 186), judgments for $15,000 were obtained by the widow and her son in consolidated actions against the coal company. The present suit against the casualty company alone was brought by the widow as the coal company's assignee of the policy. Judgment being given against the casualty company for $5,000, its full amount, the casualty company appeals.

In addition to alleged trial errors, which will be discussed later, the appellant contends: That the coal company had never paid the loss, and thus put itself in a position where, by the policy, it could ask reimbursement; second, that there was nothing assignable in this policy before that; third, that the assignment was not only without consideration, but in bad faith.

The coal company was incorporated in 1910, the policy issued in September of that year, and the death of Davies occurred in December following. That the coal company is utterly insolvent is clear. The Davies judgment was first recovered in June, 1912, and, after the appeal here, was made final below in November, 1913. A receiver of the coal company, appointed in March, 1914, before the present action, but after the assignment of the policy, found no assets. The only other asset of the company had between the date of the Davies judgment and the commencement of this action was a leasehold interest in coal lands, forfeited at some uncertain date after the accident. The policy we shall construe as intended to reimburse, and not to prepay, the assured. It resembles the generality of these contracts, but does lack some features that are common in them. Thus, the insurer, while engaging to defend suits, did not in terms exclude the assured itself from defending. Neither did it forbid an assignment of the policy. It permitted cancellation by the insurer at any time on five days' notice, with partial refund of premium. The suit of Davies against the coal company was defended from the beginning by the insurer, with whom there is no evidence that the coal company in any way interfered.

Plaintiff admits that the policy is one solely of reimbursement, and that nobody could sue the insurer until the employer had paid the judgment; but the employer, she argues, had in fact paid the judgment, after which it assigned to her the then actionable policy for a valuable consideration.

The facts are that the insolvent coal company executed notes of $17,000 to Mrs. Davies; that she, on the same day, gave them all back, satisfied the judgment, and took a written assignment of the policy. In our opinion, this transaction was but a subterfuge. We have, of course, held, in Seattle & S. F. R. & Nav. Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co. 50 Wash. 44, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 121, 96 Pac. 509, that an employer may make by notes such a payment to a creditor employee as will sustain a suit for reimbursement from one of these insurers before the notes are paid. In that case, though, the assured employer was not insolvent. When it gave notes, it gave something valuable. Here insolvency made the notes presumptively worthless. But other facts here are still stronger. The notes were hardly issued until they were handed back. Not only were they given back immediately, but they were actually issued with an unconcealed understanding that this should be done immediately. The maker practically never took its hands off them. It never expected to pay them. The payee's own testimony leaves it clear that she expected to return them immediately, satisfy the judgment, and get the policy. Moreover, what she gave back was not $5,000 of these notes, but all of them. She satisfied a judgment for $17,000 in exchange for a right to sue the casualty company in not to exceed $5,000; all this in a few hours. The transaction cannot be sustained as a payment by the coal company.

If, then, plaintiff's right to sue the casualty company were to depend on plaintiff's own theory, her case must fail. But other facts require our consideration, and we must enter on a discussion beyond, to be sure, the scope of the briefs on either side, but indispensable to justice in this case, as well as to a proper view of these contracts in the future.

The Davies claim against the coal company was long resisted by the casualty company. To reimburse for such a claim when established by judgment and paid was the purpose of its contract. The judgment has established that claim. Nothing remains except a form. The casualty company, in effect, says to Mrs. Davies that, if the coal company will pay her at one end of the desk, the casualty company will repay the coal company at the other end. Not one thing besides, does it argue, is wanting to its liability except this formula. On that process it insists, not because, when the coal company shall have first paid and the casualty company shall then have given reimbursement there will result to it a right, claim, or even a salvage interest against the coal company or its assets, but because it wishes the thing done in just that way. It will pay a moment after, not a moment before, the coal company pays. If the latter will but get a loan for a few moments from someone else and pay the L.R.A.1916D.

judgment, then the casualty company will hand it a check perhaps long previously prepared.

Such mummeries are ill favored by the law. Technicality, indeed, is not only respectable, but is to be enforced by courts when even a remote right is exposed to danger. When technicality is invoked, however, to avoid an obligation morally established, the common law usually finds in its arsenal some weapon with which to confront it, and to make that a legal which is already a moral debt. The actuary of the casualty company undoubtedly reckoned on paying a loss thus earned. It must be assumed that reserves are not calculated upon an escape through the chance of the assured's insolvency after liability to the employee. It is the executive branch of the insurer that, looking to the precise words of contract, may feel itself justified in adding casual gains from situations like these, where some claims will be perfectly established, be morally complete in every respect, but where the employer, not allowed by the insurer to pledge or assign the policy one minute in advance, will be unable to get so much as a temporary loan.

Employers' policies are of two sorts. One, called a liability contract, obliges the insurer to pay the loss without first requiring the assured to do so. The other type, of which the present is one, is called an indemnity policy, and imposes only reimbursement after the employer has paid the debt. This last being found better for the insurer, the liability policy has gradually been displaced by the other.

Tracing now the growth of the indemnity policy up to its present phraseology, its basic principle was that the assured would not only first pay the loss, but that he would attend to his own defense. The indemnifier, standing aloof, would pay the final bill, providing the defense had been honestly conducted by the employer. Generally speaking, the practice as well as the contract of the indemnifier to take over the defense came later. To do that under the old liability policy was natural, but under the pure indemnity policy was not natural. The insurer desired to defend through his own agent, because he could do so more cheaply than the employer, who would charge the expenses to him, and because he could be more certain of the good faith of that defense. He accordingly wished to become a mere reimbursor in law while a defender in fact. But in taking over the defense the insurer assumes a feature of a liability contract, as distinguished from an indemnifying contract. When an accident occurs, he hurries to protect the assured and himself from liability by defeating the claimant in advance. But, when the claimant has been successful, the insurer, falling back on the other theory, argues that he is not a liability insurer, only a reimbursement insurer. This shifting subjects him to the familiar doctrine of estoppel by election in inconsistent positions. The law does permit him to have the exemptions of a reimbursement engagement, but he cannot have the benefits of a liability engagement at the same time. If he wishes to rely upon the former, he may continue to do so under the words of his contract and leave the defense to the assured. When he takes over the defense himself, he will not be heard to say that he has not assumed the position of a liability insurer. Accordingly we hold that, by conducting the defense, the employer's insurer waived the right to exact prepayment by the assured, and that on the final judgment of Davies against the coal company "loss" matured. The policy as one of reimbursement could then be either sued on by the assured or be assigned.

Such a consequence of the insurer's acts would seem, aside from any justice to the employee, to be but fair to the employer also; for the latter, whose solvency and protection are supposed to be promoted by these policies, is, as this feature is now taken advantage of, exposed to a willingness and even a desire in the insurer to see him, not succeed, but fail. In fact, they do sometimes fail because they are left unassisted by their insurer in just such a juncture, for the employee's judgment often ruins embarrassed employers, notwithstanding they hold in their hands the very contract that was supposed to save them. They are told by the maker of that contract that he will save them when they have saved themselves. If that is to remain permissible in these insurers, it will not remain such in this state when they take over the defense and costs of a suit. Such a privilege in their contracts involves a question of public policy. It is a privilege that would be grudgingly extended, if ever extended at all, to any private individual, since it increases the temptations to prolong litigation and puts in the hands of a stranger, who may gain by harshness, a controversy that ought to be left to those whose previous relations invite reconciliation and concord.

This brings us to the assignment that was made. It is clear that, before this was done, the coal company's name had been stricken by the secretary of state from the public rolls for want of paying its annual licenses during the prescribed period. In consequence of this, the assets of the corporation passed to its trustees to be disposed of, as the statute expresses it, under the order of the court in appropriate proceedings. Just what proceedings would be appropriate are not specified by the statute. The receiver appointed after the assignment of the policy acquiesced in that transaction, of which he was plainly cognizant, and in which he appeared to assist.

Whether the act of assigning the policy in exchange for a satisfaction of the judgment was ultra vires under our statutes, which, though intended to be revenue measures, must necessarily be enforced with some rigor to produce the desired revenue, is a question not necessary to be determined. The assignment, we are confident, was not void, but voidable, and, if it was voidable, it was not the casualty company that could complain of it. Voltz v. National Bank, 158 Ill. 532, 30 L.R.A. 155, 42 N. E. 69. To the latter it should be unimportant which it pays when the loss is due; and the corporate acts that are in excess of corporate power and yet unassailable by third parties are too numerous to mention. Neither creditors, if any such exist (which the record does not show), nor the receiver, have sought to disturb this transaction.

In view of the foregoing, the judgment of the lower court must be affirmed. Nor can we reverse it for misconduct of plaintiff's counsel either as witnesses or as advocates before the jury. The misconduct complained of is, indeed, such as the lower court should have reprehended, for defendant's counsel made to this misconduct timely and proper objection. But no case can be reversed for misconduct of counsel when it is clear that the verdict of the jury could not possibly have been affected by it. Such is the present instance. The jury had to bring in a verdict of the $5,000 sued for or no verdict for plaintiff at all. Under the undisputed testimony in this case plaintiff was, in fact, entitled to an instructed verdict in her favor for the amount of the policy. It is in that sum that the jury, though the case was tried by both parties under a mistaken theory, have given their verdict.

Morris, Ch. J., and Holcomb and Main, JJ., concur. Parker, J., concurs in the result.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, the following Per Curiam response was handed down on March 17, 1916 (— Wash. —, 155 Pac. 1035):

In a petition for rehearing, counsel complains that we have not adverted to Ford v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 70 Wash. 29, 126 Pac. 69. There the injured person, after judgment against the employer, sued the insurance company without assignment of the policy, arguing privity with the insurer on the theory that the contract was really for his benefit, or had been made so by the insurer's conducting the defense. We denied that privity of contract there, and have not, by any expression whatever, allowed it to Mrs. Davies here. The difference is that Mrs. Davies sues as assignee of the policy. We have simply made the policy an asset of the employer after defense by the insurer and judgment against the employer. To shake the soundness of our conclusions the petitioner offers no argument, largely citing cases where, as in our Ætna Case, the injured plaintiff sought unsuccessfully to establish privity. From our views on this subject we see no evil results, but, on the contrary, relief both to employers and to employees in a class of cases small but of downright injustice, in which, when insolvency happens to the employer, the insurer escapes a liability actually earned by premium and covered by reserves.

While the Ætna Case chiefly discussed privity, it closed with another feature in which our present decision is not consistent with it. The plaintiff there had also garnished the insurance company as his employer's debtor, and, as to this indebtedness, we did say that there could be none notwithstanding defense by the insurer. In that feature we are content to modify the Ætna Case.

The petition is denied.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF WISCONSIN EX REL. DANIEL F. CONWAY et al., Appts.,

v.

DISTRICT BOARD OF JOINT SCHOOL DISTRICT NO. 6, OF PLYMOUTH, et al., Resp't.

(— Wis. —, 156 N. W. 477.)

Mandamus — to prevent future act — applicability.

1. Mandamus will not lie to prevent holding the graduating exercises of a public school in churches in the future.

For other cases, see Mandamus, I. g, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

School — graduating exercises in church — sectarian instruction.

2. Holding the graduating exercises of a public school in a church, and permitting a clergyman to deliver a nonsectarian prayer in connection therewith, does not violate a constitutional provision against sectarian instruction in schools.

For other cases, see Schools, V. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Constitutional law — religious liberty — graduating exercises in church.

3. The constitutional prohibition against compelling attendance at a place of worship and interference with the rights of conscience is not infringed by holding the graduating exercises of a public school in a church, and permitting a clergyman to deliver a nonsectarian invocation in connection with them.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 22, 1916.)

APPEAL by relators from a judgment of Circuit Court for Juneau County, quashing a writ of mandamus compelling defendants to discontinue the practice of holding school graduating exercises in churches and allowing any minister or person to offer an invocation or prayer at such exercises. Affirmed.

Statement by Barnes, J.:

The plaintiffs filed a petition in the circuit court, praying that a writ of mandamus issue from said court to the defendants, commanding that they discontinue the practice of holding graduating exercises in any of the churches of the city of Elroy or churches elsewhere, or permitting or suffering any minister or person to offer an invocation or prayer at the graduating exercises of such school district, and commanding the defend-

Note. — The question of what constitutes religious instruction in public schools was considered in the note to Church v. Bullock, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 860, supplemented by the note to Herold v. Parish Board, L.R.A.1915D, 941. Dorner v. School Dist., cited by the court in STATE EX REL. CONWAY v. DISTRICT BOARD, is reported in 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 171, where the right to recover public money that has been appropriated to sectarian institutions is discussed. The question whether or not conducting a public school in rooms in a parochial school building near a Roman Catholic Church, a parochial school being conducted at the same time in other rooms L.R.A.1916D.

in the same building, is a violation of any constitutional provision, was not considered upon the merits in that case.

The court, in STATE EX REL. CONWAY v. DISTRICT BOARD, passes upon the question of holding public school functions in a house dedicated to religious purposes. The converse of this, i. e., using school buildings for religious meetings, is discussed in note in 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 593. Also, see note in 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1182.

On question of wearing religious garb or uniforms in public schools, see note to Connell v. Gray, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 337, and note to which reference is there made.

ants to hold the graduating exercises in other places than in any of the churches of the city of Elroy, or churches elsewhere, and for such further order or relief as might be proper. The petition set forth that the petitioners were residents and taxpayers of joint school district No. 6 in the towns of Plymouth, Wonewoc, and the city of Elroy, in Juneau county, Wisconsin; that they were taxed for the support of said school, and were entitled to the benefits thereof by having their children instructed therein according to law; that they are parents of children whom they desire to have educated in said school; and that children of the petitioners are in fact attending the same for the purpose of receiving instruction.

The petition then recites that for many years it has been the practice of the defendant board to hold graduating exercises for high school graduates, and that the practice still prevails and is part of the school requirements of the district board before pupils are granted diplomas; that it has been the practice of the board to conduct a part of the graduating exercises in the different churches of the city of Elroy, and a part of such exercises in the opera house, and to invite and engage certain ministers and priests to officiate at such graduating exercises, their duty, while so officiating, being to give a so-called invocation, which consisted of a religious service, prayer, blessing, or religious exercises; that by reason of the practice followed by said board in engaging Protestant ministers and inviting Catholic priests to officiate at said graduating exercises, it has wounded the sensibilities of both Protestant and Catholic patrons of said schools alike, and subjected those patrons, and others similarly situated, to humiliation, and forced upon them "the offense of conscience" by reason of these religious exercises; and that by reason of such acts said board has allowed and encouraged sectarian instruction in the public school in question.

The petition further recites that since the establishment of the district the practice complained of has been pursued against the ineffectual protests of taxpayers, parents, and patrons of the school, and that the board threatens to continue such practice; that by reason of the practice followed certain citizens and taxpayers of Elroy belonging to the Catholic Church and living in the school district refuse to allow their children, who are about to graduate, as well as other children of theirs, to attend the graduating exercises, and also refuse to attend themselves on account of the religious functions that are made a part of such exercises; that although such practice has been followed for more than six years, the school board has taken no steps to correct the abuse, and such practice still continues, and threatens to continue in the future; that by reason of the school board refusing to omit the practice set forth, and by reason of the believers in the Catholic faith refusing to allow their children to attend graduating exercises, such children did not receive their diplomas at such exercises, but were granted them privately afterward by special request; that such a situation produces a bad state of affairs, both to the parents, patrons, and graduates of the school, and causes young men and women who desire to participate in the honors of graduation much chagrin and mortification at not being able to participate in the exercises with their fellow graduates; that because of conscientious scruples Catholic parents and citizens have refrained from taking part in what they believe to be distinctly Protestant religious worship, and that the practice of having prayers offered by Protestant ministers is contrary to the right of conscience, and in violation of law; that petitioners have requested said board to discontinue the practice complained of to the extent of not holding the graduating exercises in churches and in not permitting prayers to be offered by denominational clergymen, and that said board has neglected and refused to comply with such request, and refused to interfere with the matter in any way; that such graduating exercises are an integral part of the curriculum of our public schools; that permitting religious service to take place in a public school, and permitting a minister to offer an invocation or prayer at such time, amounts to a sanction of the minister of one sect and an invitation to lend his personal influence and prestige to the particular sect in preference to all others, and that this action amounts to the teaching of certain religious doctrines of the particular sect so favored.

The petition further shows that permitting ministers of different denominations to offer prayers to the graduates and patrons assembled, irrespective of their religious creeds, and regardless of the wording of the prayer, amounts to giving sectarian instruction; that such prayers must necessarily be clothed with external form for delivery and reception, and held with internal significance; that it is these various forms, together with their various significances, which constitute the various sectarian churches, and that prayer in the Protestant service is delivered standing and received sitting, and in the Catholic service it is offered and received kneeling; that Protestants worship a Supreme Being by prayer alone, and hold that prayer is supreme worship; that Catholics worship the Supreme Being by official sacrifice and prayer, and teach that official sacrifice is supreme worship; that prayer, therefore, as well in external form as doctrine, differs with the different services and is sectarian, and is therefore in violation of § 3, art. 10, of the Constitution; that by permitting the acts complained of in a public school, the board has permitted and suffered the practice of religious and sectarian instruction to become part of the public school curriculum which is conducted by those who are allied by profession to sectarianism, and who teach the same by suggestion; that such practice interferes with religious liberty and subjects the pupils to slight, insult, and contempt because of their religious faith.

The petition then recites that the petitioners enjoined the school board in the year 1912 from carrying on any religious services in connection with the graduating exercises, and that thereupon said board refused to hold any graduating exercises at all; that such action tends to engender strife and to perpetuate in a public school curriculum religious and sectarian doctrines, and to impress upon the pupils that they can expect no honors or favors at the hands of the school board unless it is permitted to hold graduating exercises in accordance with certain religious and sectarian forms.

Upon this petition an alternative writ of mandamus was issued. The defendants made a motion to quash such writ because neither the petition nor the writ stated facts showing that the petitioners, or either of them, were entitled to such writ. The issue joined by the motion to quash was heard before the court, and such motion was granted. From a judgment entered in accordance with the decision of the court, the plaintiffs appeal.

Mr. James P. Riley, for appellants:

Mandamus will lie to prevent the holding of school graduating exercises in a church.

State ex rel. Weiss v. District Board, 76 Wis. 177, 7 L.R.A. 330, 20 Am. St. Rep. 41, 44 N. W. 967; State ex rel. Lloyd v. Rotwitt, 15 Mont. 29, 37 Pac. 845; 26 Cyc. 165; State ex rel. Treat v. Richter, 37 Wis. 275; Rex v. Barker, 3 Burr. 1267, 1 W. Bl. 300; Com. v. Justices of Ct. of Sessions, 2 Pick. 414; Mendon v. Worcester County, 10 Pick. 235; Johnson v. Randall, 7 Mass. 340; Life & F. Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 8 Pet. 291, 8 L. ed. 949; Kendall v. United States, 12 Pet. 524, 9 L. ed. 1181; People ex rel. Dikeman v. Brooklyn, 1 Wend. 318, 19 Am. Dec. 502; 26 Cyc. 176; Dorner v. School Dist. 137 Wis. 147, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 171, 118 N. W. 353; Frederrick v. Douglas County, 96 Wis. 411, 71 N. W. 798; Webster v. Douglas County, 102 Wis. 181, 72 Am. St. Rep. 870, 77 N. W. L.R.A. 1916D.

885, 78 N. W. 451; State ex rel. Weiss v. District Board, 76 Wis. 177.

Messrs. Grotophorst, Evans, & Thomas, for respondent:

Mandamus does not lie to compel the performance of an act by a public officer, unless the act be one that is actually due from the officer at the time of the application.

State ex rel. Board of Education v. Hunter, 111 Wis. 582, 87 N. W. 485; State ex rel. Cook v. Houser, 122 Wis. 534, 100 N. W. 964; 26 Cyc. 182; Pierce v. Executive Council, 165 Iowa, 465, 146 N. W. 85; State ex rel. Lord v. Washington County, 2 Pinney (Wis.) 555; State ex rel. Kane v. Larrabee, 3 Pinney (Wis.) 166; State ex rel. Carpenter v. Hastings, 10 Wis. 518; State ex rel. Pfister v. Manitowoc, 52 Wis. 423, 9 N. W. 607; State ex rel. Spaulding v. Elwood, 11 Wis. 17; 26 Cyc. 182, 183.

The court should not by mandamus compel the board of education of the city of Elroy to eliminate the opening prayer or invocation at the graduating exercises.

Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 470; State ex rel. Weiss v. District Board, 76 Wis. 177, 7 L.R.A. 330, 20 Am. St. Rep. 41, 44 N. W. 967; Billard v. Board of Education, 69 Kan. 53, 66 L.R.A. 166, 105 Am. St. Rep. 148, 76 Pac. 422, 2 Ann. Cas. 521; Spiller v. Woburn, 12 Allen, 127; Hackett v. Brooksville Graded School Dist. 120 Ky. 608, 69 L.R.A. 592, 117 Am. St. Rep. 599, 87 S. W. 792, 9 Ann. Cas. 36; Moore v. Monroe, 64 Iowa, 367, 52 Am. Rep. 444, 20 N. W. 475; Pfeiffer v. Board of Education, 118 Mich. 560, 42 L.R.A. 536, 77 N. W. 250.

Barnes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is fortunate that the present hapless controversy is of a genus that seldom makes its appearance in this court. Our population is made up of many people, divided into many religious sects, as well as many people who belong to no sect, all of whom contribute to the maintenance of our state school system in proportion to their ability to pay. The number of our people who do not believe in the existence of a Supreme Being and in life hereafter is almost negligible. Of the vast majority who do, some think eternal bliss can be most safely insured by pursuing one route, and others by pursuing other routes, and hence the number of sects into which we are divided. There is no subject on which people are more touchy than on that of religion. We may think that there is small reason for such a state of mind, but it is a "condition and not a theory" which confronts us. It may well be said that the grievance here complained of is trifling, but human nature is much the same whether the individual be Catholic or Protestant. Reverse conditions, and let a Catholic school board select a church or building devoted to Catholic services in which to hold graduating exercises, and engage a Catholic clergyman to deliver a non-sectarian prayer or invocation, and the devout Lutheran, Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, or other member of a Protestant communion would be just as likely to take umbrage at what was done as were the petitioners in the present case. Our Constitution makers wisely sought to prevent, as far as they could, the injection into the affairs of state of anything that would tend to germinate or foster religious rancor or bitterness. It is wise and just that its provisions be adhered to in spirit as well as in letter. For reasons that will be stated later, we conclude that the petitioners are not entitled to relief on the facts stated. Nevertheless, we think it would be a wise exercise of official discretion to discontinue such practices as are here complained of when objection thereto is made by any substantial number of school patrons. We do not underrate the efficacy of prayer. Neither are we prepared to say that the average high school graduate may not need it. But whenever it is likely to do more harm than good, it might well be dispensed with. It is not at all times wise or politic to do certain things, although no legal rights would be invaded by doing them.

Turning aside from ethical considerations and taking up the legal questions involved, it is clear that if the plaintiffs have a cause of action, they did not pursue the proper remedy. It was here sought to use the writ of mandamus to compel the school board to do away with the practices complained of at the graduation exercises to be held for that year. The writ is not granted to take effect prospectively. Spelling, Inj. & Extr. Rem. § 1385; High, Extr. Legal Rem. 3d ed. §§ 12, 36; Tapping, Mandamus, 10th Am. ed. p. 63; Wood, Mandamus, 2d ed. 51. In State ex rel. Board of Education v. Hunter, 111 Wis. 582, 588, 87 N. W. 485, this court said: "The general principle is frequently stated that mandamus will not lie to compel performance of an act by a public officer unless the act be one that is actually due from the officer at the time of the application. Until the time arrives when the duty should be performed, there is no default of duty; and mere threats not to perform the duty will not take the place of default."

This rule was again announced in State ex rel. Cook v. Houser, 122 Wis. 534, 100 N. W. 964. It is in accordance with the well-nigh uniform current of authority, and may well be said to be elementary.

Counsel on both sides expressed the desire that the court should take up the case on the merits and dispose of it if possible. The request is a commendable one. If the plaintiffs have a cause of action, but have mistaken their remedy, it is a better administration of justice to permit them to amend their pleading than it is to turn them out of court and compel them to begin anew. Ample power has been conferred on the court to pursue such practice by § 2836b, Stat. 1915 (chapter 219, Laws of 1915), if such power did not exist independently of statute.
L.R.A.1916D.

The plaintiffs' contentions are two-fold:

(1) That the acts complained of violate the constitutional rights guaranteed to them by § 3, article 10 of our Constitution; and (2) that they violate the rights guaranteed by § 18, of article 1 of that instrument. The provision first referred to reads as follows: "The legislature shall provide by law for the establishment of district schools, which shall be as nearly uniform as practicable; and such schools shall be free and without charge for tuition, to all children between the ages of four and twenty years; and no sectarian instruction shall be allowed therein."

Section 18 of article 1 provides: "The right of every man to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of his own conscience shall never be infringed, nor shall any man be compelled to attend, erect or support any place of worship, or to maintain any ministry, against his consent. Nor shall any control of, or interference with, the rights of conscience be permitted, or any preference be given by law to any religious establishments or modes of worship. Nor shall any money be drawn from the treasury for the benefit of religious societies, or religious or theological seminaries."

The two things complained of are the use of a church building in which to hold graduation exercises and the delivery of an invocation or prayer thereat by a denominational clergyman. The holding of graduation exercises in a church is not in itself the giving of sectarian instruction, within the meaning of § 3 of article 10, above quoted. This is obvious, and presently eliminates from consideration the constitutional provision first quoted. Neither is it shown that the taxpayers were called upon to pay for the use of the churches in which the exercises were held, nor that the clergymen who gave the invocations were paid for doing so. Such being the case, no one has been called upon against his will to erect or support any place of worship or maintain any ministry, nor has any money been drawn from the treasury for the benefit of a religious society. A man may feel constrained to enter a house of worship belonging to a different sect from the one with which he affiliates, but if no sectarian services are carried on, he is not compelled to worship God contrary to the dictates of his conscience, and is not obliged to do so at all. The only clauses of § 18 of article 1 that are at all applicable to the question under discussion are those which provide that no person shall be compelled to attend any place of worship against his consent, and which forbid interference with the rights of conscience. Obviously, graduation exercises are a part of the school curriculum, and are under the direction and control of school boards. They may be dispensed with, but, so long as they are not, school boards cannot escape responsibility for them. Parents and pupils of all denominations have a right to attend such exercises without their legal rights being invaded. It would be far-fetched, however, to say that by so doing they are compelled to attend a place of worship. True, the building is one ordinarily used for conducting religious services. Other buildings that are not churches are often used for like purposes. So are our public streets. Indeed, at the present day, churches are largely used for social gatherings of various kinds at which no religious services of any kind are carried on. The kind of a building is hardly the significant thing from the legal standpoint, but the fact that worship is carried on when there is actual or moral compulsion. Graduation exercises take place but once a year. Often in smaller places church auditoriums are more commodious and better calculated to take care of the overflow crowds that congregate at such times than any other building that is available. To say that a person attending such place once a year is compelled to attend a place of worship would be giving prominence to form rather than to substance. When the Constitution protects the individual from being compelled to attend a place of worship, it undoubtedly means that he shall not be required to attend a place where religious instruction is being given at the time he is required to be present. It protects a man from being obliged to attend the services of the Salvation Army in our public streets, or from being compelled to enter a hall or opera house while such services are being carried on, just as much as it does against being forced to enter a church. It is what is done, not the name of the place where it is done, that is significant.

The fact that certain persons desire to attend graduation exercises with their children, and that they say that being compelled to enter a church of a different denomination from that to which they belong is violative of their assured rights of conscience, does not make it so. If it is clear that the thing complained of does not violate any L.R.A.1916D.

right guaranteed by the Constitution, then the courts cannot interfere in their behalf, because the final decision on this question must necessarily rest with the courts, and not with the individual. The individual must decide for himself whether his conscience tells him that he must not frequent a certain place. If it does, he should punctiliously regard its behests and stay away. But the court cannot turn casuist further than to determine whether a legal right has been invaded in any given case. Neither can it say that a thing offends against conscience when there is no substantial reason why it should. It is not sufficient for a person to say: "This thing is contrary to what my conscience tells me to be right, therefore it must be stopped." The individual cannot foreclose inquiry into the reasonableness of his request by his bare assertion. Some consciences are very tender and very highly developed, so much so that the possessor regards as being wrong many things that the law regards as harmless. Some refrain from playing cards for amusement, some from dancing, some from attending places of amusement, and some from all these things, because they consider it wrong to participate in or countenance them. The law regards none of these things as being essentially wrong in itself. At the same time it recognizes the right of anyone to stay away from them where the promptings of conscience indicate that it would be wrong to attend.

To the lay mind there is very little difference in principle between the case before us and Dorner v. School Dist. 137 Wis. 147, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 171, 118 N. W. 353. There a Catholic parochial school was built adjacent to a Catholic church, and some of the school rooms were rented and used for the purposes of a public school. The Catholic school children attended church services before school hours in the morning, and prayers were recited and hymns were sung during school hours in the portion of the school building used for parochial school purposes, and in rooms either adjoining or adjacent to those rented by the public school authorities. The parochial school was taught by Sisters clad in the conventional garb of the order to which they belonged. The lower court found that the public school conducted in the parochial school building had, at times, been pervaded and characterized by sectarian instruction, and very properly enjoined the continuance of such practices. It held, however, that the school board was acting within its legal rights in renting and using a part of the parochial school building for the purposes of a public school, and such decision was affirmed in this court. There are points of dissimilarity:

between the two cases, but it would be difficult to say that those who felt aggrieved in the Dorner Case did not have at least as strong a ground for complaint as did the plaintiffs in the present case. It is true that the public school was not conducted in the church building, and that certain rooms in the parochial school were exclusively devoted to the use of the public school. But it is also true that the school building was one in which sectarian instruction was given, and was within the shadow of a church which was attended daily by the children attending the parochial school; that the teachers in such school were clad in a religious garb, and that the public school attendants, or many of them, were within the hearing of prayers recited aloud in the parochial school rooms, as well as within the hearing of sectarian hymns sung in such rooms. We conclude that the holding of graduation exercises in a church building is not, in and of itself, contrary to either of the constitutional provisions relied on by the plaintiffs.

A somewhat different question is raised by the complaint about prayers being offered at graduation exercises by denominational clergymen. A prayer may be either sectarian or nonsectarian in character. The sessions of our national Congress, of our state legislature, and of our great party conventions, are customarily opened with prayer. These prayers are almost invariably nonsectarian in character, so much so that a person reading them or listening to them would be entirely at a loss to discover to what denomination the clergyman belonged. The enthusiast who places his desire to make proselytes to the faith he professes above his sense of propriety may occasionally "slop over," but it is only just to say that our clergy rarely offend in this regard. To be sure, offense may be very adroitly given if the clergyman is so minded, but there is no claim that any such thing has occurred in this case.

The court decided in the Edgerton Bible Case that the giving of a nonsectarian prayer was not sectarian instruction. We quote from the opinion: "The term 'sectarian instruction,' in the Constitution, manifestly refers exclusively to instruction in religious doctrines, and the prohibition is only aimed at such instruction as is sectarian; that is to say, instruction in religious doctrines which are believed by some religious sects and rejected by others. Hence, to teach the existence of a Supreme Being, of infinite wisdom, power, and goodness, and that it is the highest duty of all men to adore, obey, and love Him, is not sectarian, because all religious sects so believe and teach. The L.R.A.1916D.

instruction becomes sectarian when it goes further, and inculcates doctrine or dogma concerning which the religious sects are in conflict. This we understand to be the meaning of the constitutional prohibition." State ex rel. Weiss v. District Board, 76 Wis. 177, 192, 193, 7 L.R.A. 330, 20 Am. St. Rep. 41, 44 N. W. 967, 973.

In the case before us it appears from the allegations of the petition that both Catholic priests and Protestant ministers had at different times been selected to deliver the invocation at graduation exercises. There is no claim that on any of these occasions any unseemly hint or suggestion was made by any of the reverend gentlemen who were so honored. In fact, the contrary appears, by inference at least. So it is clear that no showing was made that "sectarian instruction" was given, as that term is defined in the case last cited. Had it appeared that the invocations given were sectarian in character, and that the school board threatened to continue or permit such practices in the future, we do not wish to be understood as intimating that a court of equity would not enjoin the continuance of such practice.

We think it would be difficult to pick out any clause of § 18, art. 1, of the Constitution which by any fair or reasonable construction could be said to be violated by the delivery of a nonsectarian prayer at a graduation exercise. No man is compelled to worship, nor compelled to attend a place of worship, nor does he, as before stated, attend such a place, except in the most technical sense, when he attends graduation exercises. Pupils do not congregate on such an occasion for the purpose of worship, and the short nonsectarian invocation that is usually given is a mere incident, which occupies but a few moments of the two hours or more that are usually occupied with the program prepared for such occasions. If the prayer be nonsectarian, it does not interfere with any right of conscience that the law recognizes, and neither is the matter of permitting it the giving of any preference to any religious establishment or religious mode of worship in a constitutional sense. A very different question would arise if an attempt were made to introduce the practice of having prayer as part of the daily routine in our public schools. Considering what has been done here and the rare occasions on which it has been or can be done, the matter complained of seems to be too inconsequential to furnish the subject of a lawsuit. It follows from what has been said that the judgment of the lower court was right.

Judgment affirmed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

JOHN LAHTI

v.

TAMARACK MINING COMPANY, Plff. in Err.

(— Mich. —, 152 N. W. 907.)

Master and servant — failure to have light on car in mine — liability for injury.

A mine owner is not liable for injury to an employee by failure of the one operating the ore cars in the mine to place a lamp on the front car when starting on a trip in accordance with his duty, where the master furnished a sufficient supply of lamps and the failure was due to breaking of the one he was using just prior to starting, since the negligence is that of a fellow servant of the injured employee.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. c. 5, a, (1) in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Bird, Moore, and Kuhn, JJ., dissent.)

(June 7, 1915.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Houghton County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. D. L. Robinson and Albert E. Petermann, with Mr. Allen F. Rees, for plaintiff in error:

The negligence, if any, which plaintiff alleges was the cause of his injury, was the negligence of a fellow servant.

Smith v. Potter, 46 Mich. 258, 41 Am. Rep. 161, 9 N. W. 273; Miller v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 90 Mich. 230, 51 N. W. 370; Baron v. Detroit & C. Steam Nav. Co. 91 Mich. 585, 52 N. W. 22; Greenwald v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. 49 Mich. 197, 13 N. W. 513; Henry v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 49 Mich. 495, 13 N. W. 832; Peterson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 67 Mich. 102, 11 Am. St. Rep. 564, 34 N. W. 260; Jarman v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 98 Mich. 135, 57 N. W. 32; Dewey v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 97 Mich. 329, 22 L.R.A. 292, 37 Am. St. Rep. 348, 56 N. W. 756; Schroeder v.

Flint & P. M. R. Co. 103 Mich. 213, 29 L.R.A. 321, 50 Am. St. Rep. 354, 61 N. W. 663; Loranger v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 104 Mich. 87, 62 N. W. 137; Hennig v. Globe Foundry Co. 112 Mich. 616, 71 N. W. 156, 3 Am. Neg. Rep. 48; Frazee v. Stott, 120 Mich. 627, 79 N. W. 896, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 297; Miller v. Michigan C. R. Co. 123 Mich. 374, 82 N. W. 58; Lellis v. Michigan C. R. Co. 124 Mich. 37, 70 L.R.A. 598, 82 N. W. 828; Bergstrom v. Staples, 82 Mich. 654, 46 N. W. 1035; Jurkiewicz v. American Car & Foundry Co. 147 Mich. 622, 111 N. W. 183; Wickham v. Detroit United R. Co. 160 Mich. 277, 52 L.R.A. 1082, 136 Am. St. Rep. 436, 125 N. W. 22, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1069; Dixon v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. 147 Mich. 667, 111 N. W. 220, and 155 Mich. 169, 118 N. W. 946; Stever v. Ann Arbor R. Co. 160 Mich. 207, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1139, 125 N. W. 47; Haskell & B. Co. v. Przewdziankowski, 170 Ind. 1, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 972, 127 Am. St. Rep. 352, 82 N. E. 626; Jones v. Granite Mills, 126 Mass. 84, 30 Am. Rep. 661; Meehan v. Speirs Mfg. Co. 172 Mass. 375, 52 N. E. 518, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 363; Whittaker v. Bent, 167 Mass. 588, 46 N. E. 121, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 455; Fraser v. Red River Lumber Co. 45 Minn. 235, 47 N. W. 785; Fowler v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 61 Wis. 159, 21 N. W. 40; Jenkins v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 39 S. C. 507, 39 Am. St. Rep. 750, 18 S. E. 182; Hoover v. Beech Creek R. Co. 154 Pa. 362, 26 Atl. 315; Wheatley v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. 1 Marv. (Del.) 305, 30 Atl. 660; Lundquist v. Duluth Street R. Co. 65 Minn. 387, 67 N. W. 1006; Lockwood v. Tennant, 137 Mich. 308, 100 N. W. 562, 16 Am. Neg. Rep. 413; Kleinfelt v. J. H. Somers Coal Co. 156 Mich. 473, 132 Am. St. Rep. 532, 121 N. W. 118.

Plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.

Carlson v. Cincinnati, S. & M. R. Co. 120 Mich. 484, 79 N. W. 688; Schaible v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 97 Mich. 318, 21 L.R.A. 660, 56 N. W. 565; Tobias v. Michigan C. R. Co. 110 Mich. 440, 68 N. W. 234; State Trust Co. v. Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co. 49 C. C. A. 598, 111 Fed. 769.

Messrs. Le Gendre & Driscoll for defendant in error.

Note.—The applicability of the fellow-servant rule between train men and other railway employees is discussed in the note to Wickham v. Detroit United R. Co. 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1082. Although the employer in LAHTI v. TAMARACK MIN. CO. was a mining company, the negligent employee was in charge of a train of cars, and the liability of the employer for injuries caused by his negligent act would seem to depend upon the same considerations as if the employer had been in fact a railroad company. It will be noted that a great majority of the cases cited by the court in support of its conclusion are cases in which the employer was a railroad company.

As to the master's liability for injuries caused by the failure of an employee to use the instrumentalities furnished by the master, see the note appended to Lafayette Bridge Co. v. Olsen, 54 L.R.A. 122.

Stone, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action for damages by reason of the injury of the plaintiff in a mine of defendant on the morning of March 19, 1910, on the fifteenth level of No. 3 North Tamarack shaft. This was a perpendicular shaft. In order to reach the vein from the shaft a crosscut was driven in barren ground west from the shaft until the vein was reached. At the time of the accident the crosscut from the shaft to the vein was somewhere between 700 and 1,000 feet long. At the point where the crosscut started from the shaft there was a room or opening, which was called the plat. At this point the crosscut was wider, and it was about 50 feet or more from the shaft before the crosscut narrowed down to its average size. The crosscut was about 5 feet high on the average, and about the same in width. It is straight, so that one could see a light through it from one end to the other. When the crosscut reached the vein there was a drift along the vein south of about 1,000 feet long. The copper rock was mined and brought down to the drift, and along the floor of the drift, and continuing into the crosscut and to the shaft was a track built similar to a railroad track, save that the rails were a great deal smaller in size. On this track cars called tramcars were run to carry the rock from the drifts to the shaft. These cars were 4 feet high from the track and 3 feet 8 inches wide. The motive power to pull the cars was furnished by means of an endless cable which ran through the drift and crosscut, and which was run by means of a compressed air engine and a drum located at the junction of the drift and the crosscut. The cable coming from the crosscut into the drift went in a straight line on the drum of the engine. There were four or five rounds of cable around the drum, so as to give the cable a grip on the engine. The cable then left the drum and was carried along the floor of the drift to the end of the drift and onto a wheel at that point, and returned on rollers situated between the rails of the track on the floor of the drift and through the crosscut to the plat at the shaft, where it went onto another wheel and back on the rollers on top of the crosscut. The rails of the track were about 3 feet apart, and the rollers on the floor were about halfway between the rails. These rollers were about 5 or 6 inches in diameter. The shaft on which the rollers were fastened turned with the rollers, and the cable would be 2½ inches from the floor of the drift when it was running on the rollers on the floor. The tops of the rollers in the roof of the crosscut were about 6 inches from the roof. The rollers on the floor of the crosscut were about 20 feet apart, and those on the roof about the same distance.

The cars were iron cars. They were filled in the drift, attached to the cable, drawn to the plat at the shaft, where they were taken off the cable, and run onto the cages which elevated them to the surface. They were fastened to the cable in the following manner: There was a ring on the cable with a short piece of chain leading from it. This chain was fastened to the front end of the front car, whichever way the cars were going, by means of an iron bolt. The cars were then fastened together. There was a slight grade in the crosscut toward the shaft. The cars, being fastened to the endless cable, had no brakes upon them. The moment the cable stopped the cars stopped. If the cars were being run through the drift or crosscut at their ordinary rate, they would be stopped instantly when the power was shut off at the engine, or would stop within a few inches. These cars were ordinarily run at a speed somewhat faster than a man walks. When there was more than one party of trammers they used four cars; if there was only one they used two cars in a train.

The man or boy who operated the engine was stationed at the junction of the crosscut and drift, where he could see in both directions. He is referred to in the record as the "puffer boy," and the engine used is ordinarily called a puffer engine. When a train of cars was running through the drift, generally a man was with the cars. That man was called a conductor. He rode back and forth on the cars through the drifts and crosscuts. He was on the rear while going to the shaft. There was a signaling apparatus running through the drift and crosscut to notify the puffer boy when to start and stop his engine. The signal wire ran to the engine and was located in the roof of the crosscut, more on the right side going in from the shaft. This signal cord was within easy reach of persons in the crosscut, and was like the bell signal in a train or street car. All that was necessary was to reach the bell rope and pull it down. The signal to stop was one bell. The conductor could reach out from his position on the train and pull the cord at any time going through the crosscut. It was customary for the men to go into the crosscut on their way to and from work. In fact this was the only way to reach their work in the drift or drifts.

The crosscut was not lighted except by the miner's lamps, which they carried in their hats in going through the crosscut. When the cars were being run through the crosscut, it was customary to have a light placed on the front end of the front car. This light was placed on the car by the man called the conductor when he had his train made up and was ready to take it out, and he was the only man whose duty it was to place the light there. The light or lamp that was used for this purpose was an ordinary miner's lamp that burns "Sunshine" grease,—the same kind of lamp that the men wear on their hats. There was a little hole on the end of the car and a hook on the lamp, and he placed the hook in the hole. In addition to the light that the conductor placed on the front of the first car, he also carried a lamp of his own on his hat.

Before entering the crosscut from the shaft the men could ascertain whether or not the cars were running by looking at the wheel at the plat around which the cable went. They could tell whether the cars were running, and in which direction they were running, by feeling the rope back of the timbers and where the wheel was, and by watching the light. The custom was to put their foot on the rope passing the post where the wheel was.

The plaintiff was employed by the defendant as a miner, and on the day of the accident his working place was the fifteenth level of No. 3 shaft, where he was to work in a stope. In company with two other men, at about 8 o'clock in the morning, he went down in the cage and got off at the fifteenth level at the plat. Quoting plaintiff's own words, he testified:

"When I got to the mouth of the crosscut first I looked for the lights on the cars; and then Arfman, who was ahead of me, he felt the rope with his hand, and I felt with my foot. The rope was not moving then. I had two bars on my shoulders, one was 6 or 7 feet long, the other 10 feet or thereabouts, and their weight was about 30 or 40 pounds. After I felt the rope and found it not moving we started to walk in. Arfman was ahead. He might have been 10 feet or more ahead of me. I think it was somewhere around 300 feet from the shaft in the crosscut where I was injured."

As the plaintiff and Arfman were walking through the crosscut they were met and run down by a loaded train of cars, and the plaintiff was injured. On that morning the conductor had taken a train of cars in from the plat to the drift, and had taken them to a place between 900 and 1,000 feet south of the crosscut. At that point he got the loaded cars and attached them to the cable. At this point the lamp, which he ordinarily placed on the front of the head car, got broken, and on this trip, which was the first one for the day, he ran the cars out from the drift and into the crosscut without putting a light at the front of the car. The train had run a distance of 1,800 or 1,900 feet from the place where the lamp was broken to the place where the plaintiff was injured.

The following uncontradicted testimony was given by the conductor, who was called by the plaintiff for cross-examination under the statute:

Q. You are the conductor that was on the train which caused the injury to Lahti?

A. Yes.

Q. You are the one whom the company appointed to look after the headlights on the train for the safety of the men?

A. Yes.

Q. You are the only one upon whom that duty was imposed?

A. Yes.

Q. You were supposed to keep a headlight on the train at all times for the men's safety?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, at the time the plaintiff was hurt, you were on the train, were you not?

A. Yes.

Q. And there was no headlight on the train?

A. No.

Q. There hadn't been any headlight on the train from the time you left the south end of the drift, about 1,000 feet from the place where the plaintiff was hurt?

A. No.

Q. And you knew that all the time, didn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. And didn't you put any headlight on there?

A. No.

Q. You ran the train without a headlight?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, the only thing that that headlight was on the train for was for the men's protection, to warn them that the train was coming, wasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And it was the custom of the company to at all times keep a headlight upon the trains for the safety of the men?

A. Yes.

Q. And they imposed that duty upon you for the safety of the men, the company did?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, why didn't you put a headlight upon the train that morning while running the train in from the south end of that drift?

A. Because she was broke inside.

Q. The headlight was broken inside?

A. Yes.

Q. And by inside, you mean at the south end of the drift, do you?

A. Yes.

Q. And weren't you furnished with any extra headlights to use in case one got out of order?

A. No.

Q. You are the one whose duty it was there, under the customs and rules of the company, to keep the headlights in repair and lighted?

A. Yes.

Q. And you didn't have any extra one to replace the broken one at that time?

A. No.

Q. The defendant didn't furnish you any?

A. No. . . .

Q. While you were riding in on the cars on that train you were on the hind car, weren't you?

A. Yes.

Q. On the back end of it?

A. Yes.

Q. How many cars were in the train?

A. Two.

Q. And there was no light of any kind on the front car?

A. No.

Q. And you hung onto the back car, stooping down low, didn't you?

A. All that was above the car was my head.

Q. And the cars were loaded with rock, were they not?

A. Yes, with rock.

Q. And the rock was heaped up over the top of the car?

A. Yes.

Q. And you had to keep your head down from the top so as not to strike the rollers on top?

A. I did when I came close to a roller, I just ducked. . . .

Q. You didn't do anything else but just run that train and take care of those lights?

A. That is all I did do.

Q. Did you see the lights of the plaintiff or Arfman as you came through the crosscut?

A. No.

Q. Did you know they were in the crosscut before you heard them holler?

A. No.

Q. I assumed that you heard them holler; did you hear them holler?

A. I did when the cars came right by them.

Q. How long would it take to stop that train, after you gave a signal to stop it?

A. I think about 30 feet.

Q. How fast was the train going as you went through the crosscut there that morning?

A. Like a man on a fast walk. Like a man would walk fast.

L.R.A.1916D.

The undisputed evidence shows that the plaintiff, stepping to the south side of the crosscut, sought to protect himself from the on-coming train of cars, but was hit by the cars, and suffered serious injuries, which were the foundation of this action.

At the close of the plaintiff's case, and again at the close of all the evidence, the defendant moved the court for a directed verdict upon the grounds: (1) That the evidence showed no negligence on the part of defendant, which was attributable to the defendant; (2) that the negligence, if any, in the case was the negligence of a fellow servant of the plaintiff, namely, the conductor on the car; (3) that the evidence showed beyond any dispute that, as a matter of law, the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence; (4) that the conditions, as shown by the testimony, established conclusively, as matter of law, that the plaintiff assumed the risk; (5) that if there was any negligence in this case in not putting a light on the car, the testimony showed that the lamp was broken so recently before the accident that notice of that fact could not be brought home to the defendant, and until such time, or such lapse of time, was shown to have existed, the defendant would not be responsible for the failure to place the light on the car. Said motions were overruled, and defendant excepted. There was a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of $3,000, and defendant has brought the case here upon writ of error; and, while there are many assignments of error, it relies, mainly, for reversal, upon the claim, under appropriate assignments of error, that the court should have directed a verdict for the defendant because the negligence, if any, which the plaintiff alleges was the cause of his injury, was the negligence of a fellow servant.

Although the declaration in the case alleges numerous acts of negligence on the part of the defendant, it appears from the record that the act of negligence upon which the plaintiff relied at the trial was the failure of the defendant to keep the crosscut, through which plaintiff was passing, reasonably safe, in that on this occasion a train of cars was run through the crosscut without a light on the front car. Aside from that one circumstance, we find no evidence or claim in the record that the place was unsafe.

Under the custom and the rule of the defendant, it was the duty of the conductor to run the cars through the drift and crosscut, with a miner's lamp stuck on the front end of the front car. On this occasion he ran the train through without a lamp. Reduced to its simplest terms, therefore, the primary question is whether the conductor was, or was not, the fellow servant of the plaintiff in handling his train as he did on this occasion. Defendant maintains that, under established principles, he was such a fellow servant. The learned trial court, basing its opinion apparently upon the case of McDonald v. Michigan C. R. Co. 108 Mich. 7, 65 N. W. 597, submitted the question to the jury. It is contended by the defendant that the McDonald Case does not warrant the ruling of the trial court, and it is urged that in that case the defect, viz., that of a cracked push bar, was a defect in a permanent part of defendant's locomotive, while in the case at bar there was no defective machinery whatever, but the negligence consisted solely in the failure of the conductor, in properly making up and equipping his train before taking it through the crosscut. In other words, it is a case of the disobedience of the conductor in not complying with his instructions and the rules of the company. It is urged on behalf of defendant, as distinguishing the instant case from the McDonald Case, that the trains which were run through the crosscut were not made up in any particular or special manner; that there were a great many tramcars in use, all being alike; that the lamp was an ordinary miner's lamp such as the men wore in their hats, and was not fastened permanently to any car, but was temporarily stuck in whichever car happened to be in front of the train; that the cars that were taken to the plat filled with rock were not taken right back, but the conductor took in whatever empty cars that were there; that similarly when he arrived at the drift he left his empty cars there, and took out such as were filled; that consequently he had to change the position of this lamp a great many times a day, and on each trip, whether in or out, had to place his lamp on a different car; that there were a great many similar lamps in the drift at the time he left it, and each man had one, and there were many men there, and that the conductor had another lamp like it on the way out on the cars, but he carried it on his hat; that the headlight or lamp on the front end of this train of cars was therefore not an appliance of a permanent nature, fastened to the car, which could be kept in condition by the inspection which the master ordinarily owes, in order to keep appliances in a reasonably safe condition, and that the placing of the lamp on the front car before taking the train through the crosscut was one of the duties incident to the making up of the train, and was a mere detail of its operation; that to require an independent inspector to see that this servant did his duty of attaching the cars to the cable, putting the lamp on the front car, and giving the proper signals, would be carrying the rule far beyond the limits contemplated by the decisions, and that it is well established that an employer who furnishes a safe place, proper machinery and appliances, and competent men to perform the work, is not required to personally superintend all the details of the work, and cannot be held liable for every negligent act of his employee in the use of such machinery and appliances.

It is also urged by the defendant that the instant case cannot be distinguished from numerous cases decided by this and other courts of last resort, holding, under facts similar to those in this case, that the injured party and the man in charge of the machinery or appliances were fellow servants. We have read with great care the opinions in the McDonald Case. Even the opinion of Justice Montgomery deals with the matter of inspection and the discovery of defects in machinery. It is well that we should note that in that case there was also an additional cause of the injury in the failure of a brake and reverse gear to work, which caused an extra strain to be put upon the defective push bar; and the opinion of Justice Hooker approves the holdings of this court in Smith v. Potter, 46 Mich. 258, 41 Am. Rep. 161, 9 N. W. 273, where the failure of the yard inspector to detect a defect in a car received from another road was held to be the negligence of a fellow servant, and of Dewey v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 97 Mich. 333, 22 L.R.A. 292, 37 Am. St. Rep. 348, 56 N. W. 756, where a similar ruling was made, and also Miller v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 90 Mich. 230, 51 N. W. 370, and Jarman v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 98 Mich. 135, 57 N. W. 32, both of which latter cases were in line with the first-mentioned cases, and Justice Hooker there said: "It was the duty of the defendant to furnish machinery in a reasonably sound and safe condition, and to use ordinary care in keeping the same in repair. This is an absolute duty, which the master cannot relieve himself from by imposing it upon another. There is no claim that defendant did not furnish a reasonably safe push bar. If there is liability, it must be based upon a failure to use proper care in discovering and remedying the defect. If there was negligence in this, it was either a failure to prudently inspect, or by reason of the use of the defective push bar after inspection. The record shows that there was no provision for inspection other than inspection by the engineer operating the train. He was expected to inspect his engine at all practicable times, and to report defects. This was no more than common prudence dictates should be required of all operatives of railway trains, and it is to be considered as a part of their duties in and about the operation of their trains; and this is as true when the railroad company makes no other provision for inspection as when it has another regular inspector. Such inspection, in the ordinary operation of the road, is the act of a fellow servant, as between the engineer and brakeman, and, as between them, does not constitute the engineer a representative of the master. To say that an engineer who should err in attempting to make the next station, after his engine became broken, acted as the representative of his master, thus holding the latter liable to the fireman, who was injured, would be carrying the rule too far. An unreported injury of the brakes known to the brakeman would be another illustration. The duty that the master owes to his patrons requires vigilance and care upon the part of the crew, and the master should be permitted to require it without subjecting himself to all the consequences following negligence by an inspector proper. The duty of such inspection should not be imposed upon operators of trains or machinery at the master's peril. If he provides for the discovery of defects and repair of his machines with reasonable diligence, it should be enough, and he should be allowed to provide additional precautions and safeguards, through the vigilance of operatives. To hold otherwise would put a premium upon carelessness."

Then follows the reference to the cases cited above.

Attention is also called to the later language of Justice Hooker, in the opinion, calling attention to the proper submittal to the jury of the question of concurrent negligence of the engineer and that of the defendant. It seems to us that there was no failure of inspection in the instant case; that the duty of placing a miner's lamp on the front car of the train, before making a trip through the crosscut, was one which, by its very nature, had to be performed a great many times during the day, and one which required from the servant no skill, but merely obedience to the orders of the employer. His failure to so place the lamp was purely a failure to perform a detail of his work in preparing the cars, and, as such, was the act, it seems to us, of a fellow servant of the plaintiff, for whose negligence the defendant should not be held liable. It is hard to conceive how this case can be distinguished from the case where the engineer, or servant, fails to light the headlight on a locomotive before starting on a trip, or a brakeman who fails to give a proper signal of warning, or a yardman who sends out a car improperly loaded, all of whom have been repeatedly held to be acting in a purely ministerial manner, and L.R.A.1916D.

not in a representative capacity. There is no evidence in the case that the lamp was liable to be broken that day, or ever had broken before, or that it was necessary, in the operation of the trains, to provide at the plat in the crosscut, or in the drift, duplicate parts for the very simple machinery operated by the conductor. In fact there is no claim of negligence on the part of the defendant in failing to keep duplicate parts, alleged in the declaration, nor was any such claim set up or relied upon at the trial. The evidence in the case shows affirmatively that the train had never been run before without the light in front, and therefore the defendant had no notice that such a thing was likely to occur. Unless notice to the conductor was notice to the defendant, the latter cannot be charged with notice of the breaking of the lamp before the accident occurred. The defendant had furnished a safe place, safe machinery and appliances, and a competent servant to operate them. It is difficult to say in what respect it failed in any duty toward the plaintiff. In the light of the following decisions of this court, we are constrained to hold that the learned trial judge should have directed a verdict for the defendant, upon the ground that the conductor was the fellow servant of the plaintiff. We think this view of the case is fully sustained by the following decisions of this court. We shall quote from two only. Smith v. Potter, supra; Greenwald v. Marquette H. & O. R. Co. 49 Mich. 197, 13 N. W. 513; Henry v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 49 Mich. 495, 13 N. W. 832; Peterson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 67 Mich. 102, 11 Am. St. Rep. 564, 34 N. W. 260; Bergstrom v. Staples, 82 Mich. 654, 46 N. W. 1035; Miller v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. supra; Baron v. Detroit & C. Steam Nav. Co. 91 Mich. 585, 52 N. W. 22; Dewey v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. and Jarman v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. supra; Schroeder v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 103 Mich. 213, 29 L.R.A. 321, 50 Am. St. Rep. 354, 61 N. W. 663; Loranger v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 104 Mich. 80-87, 62 N. W. 137; Hennig v. Globe Foundry Co. 112 Mich. 616, 71 N. W. 156; Frazee v. Stott, 120 Mich. 624, 79 N. W. 896, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 297; Miller v. Michigan C. R. Co. 123 Mich. 374, 82 N. W. 58; Lellis v. Michigan C. R. Co. 124 Mich. 37, 70 L.R.A. 598, 82 N. W. 828; Jurkiewicz v. American Car & Foundry Co. 147 Mich. 622, 111 N. W. 183; Dixon v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. 147 Mich. 667, 111 N. W. 200, and 155 Mich. 169, 118 N. W. 946; Wickham v. Detroit United R. Co. 160 Mich. 277, 62 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1082, 136 Am. St. Rep. 436, 125 N. W. 22, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1069; Stever v.

Ann Arbor R. Co. 160 Mich. 207, 52 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1139, 125 N. W. 47.

In Dixon v. Grand Trunk Western R. Co. 147 Mich. 667, 111 N. W. 200, and 155 Mich. 169, 118 N. W. 946, the plaintiff, a crossing tender in defendant's employ, alleged that he was injured through the negligence of defendant in not keeping a certain switch east of the crossing, at which plaintiff was assigned, securely locked and fastened when not in use, and by reason of which a part of a train passing the crossing ran off the track and struck him. When the case was first here Justice Blair, speaking for the court, said: "We think that the court erred in holding that the doctrine of safe place applied to this case. The duty of keeping switches closed and locked while not in use was not one of the absolute duties of the defendant, but an assignable duty, relating to a detail of operation which could properly be delegated to an employee" (citing cases).

When the case was here the second time, the following language was used by Justice Hooker: "As we said in our former opinion, if the accident was due to negligence, it was that of a fellow servant, for which the master is not liable."

In Miller v. Michigan C. R. Co. 123 Mich. 374, 82 N. W. 58, the plaintiff was the foreman of a section gang, and was struck and injured by a piece of timber projecting from a flat car. The conductor and the brakeman of the train crew placed the timbers on the flat car, but failed to comply with the rules prescribed by the defendant, with which they were familiar, for the proper loading of cars, in that they did not use a sufficient number of stakes to secure the timbers properly upon the car. In an opinion reversing a judgment for the plaintiff this court, speaking through Justice Moore, said: "The trial judge was in doubt as to whether he ought to have charged the jury that the conductor and the station agent, who were responsible for the loading of the timber, were fellow servants with the plaintiff or not. He expressed himself as of the opinion that the cases decided in this court were not harmonious, and that under the later cases he ought to allow the case to go to the jury. He doubtless referred to the cases of Balhoff v. Michigan C. R. Co. 106 Mich. 606, 65 N. W. 592; Anderson v. Michigan C. R. Co. 107 Mich. 591, 65 N. W. 585, 16 Am. Neg. Cas. 98; McDonald v. Michigan C. R. Co. 108 Mich. 7, 65 N. W. 597. A reference to these cases will show that each of them announced the doctrine that it was the duty of the master to provide a reasonably safe place to work, and machinery, tools, or appliances in a reasonably safe condition with which to work, and that this was a duty which could not be delegated by the master so as to escape liability. If the master has provided a safe place to work, or tools, machinery, and appliances reasonably safe with which to work, these cases do not indicate that the negligent use of these things by a fellow employee would make the master liable. These cases, as applied to the testimony in the case at bar, restricted as it was by the court to the third count in the declaration, did not justify a submission of the case to the jury upon the theory that the station agent and conductor were not fellow servants. In that respect the case is controlled by Dewey v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 97 Mich. 329, 22 L.R.A. 292, 37 Am. St. Rep. 348, 56 N. W. 756; Jarman v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 98 Mich. 135, 57 N. W. 32; Loranger v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 104 Mich. 80, 62 N. W. 137; and Frazee v. Stott, 120 Mich. 624, 79 N. W. 896, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 297. The last-named cases all relate to the negligent use by fellow servants of cars, machinery, or appliances which were reasonably safe for the purposes for which they were intended. Under such circumstances it is held that the negligence of the fellow servant does not make the master liable. If the distinction we have pointed out is borne in mind, we think it will be found the decisions are not inharmonious."

We have not omitted to examine the cases cited by plaintiff's counsel. In our opinion Murphy v. Great Lakes Dredge & Dock Co. 175 Mich. 216, 141 N. W. 564, can readily be distinguished from the instant case. In that case the defendant had not provided such a reasonably sufficient lighting system as to render the operations safe for its employees. Manifestly that is not this case. Here the conductor had been instructed, and it is undisputed, that it was his duty to put a lighted lamp upon the front of every train. He violated his instructions and moved his train without a light.

The case of Kaukola v. Oliver Iron Min. Co. 159 Mich. 689, 124 N. W. 591, is also cited. There we applied the rule of safe place, and held that it was the duty of the company to provide a safe passageway for its employees, to prevent their falling into a trap or excavation while going to their work. Here no complaint is made of the safety of the passageway, had the conductor followed his instructions and placed the simple appliance of a lamp in front of the train. We do not think that anything that was said by us in the Kaukola Case is controlling of the instant case.

We have examined the other cases cited by counsel, and think they are readily distinguished. Counsel for both parties have cited many cases outside this state. While we have examined some of them, we are of opinion that the subject under consideration has been covered by our own decisions, and deem it unnecessary to cite the numerous authorities from other jurisdictions.

We are of opinion that by the undisputed testimony and for the reasons stated, the trial court should have directed a verdict for the defendant. This disposition of the case renders it unnecessary to consider the other questions discussed by counsel.

For the reasons pointed out, the judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, and no new trial granted.

Brooke, Ch. J., and McAlvay and Steere, JJ., concur with Stone, J.

Bird, J., dissenting:

I am unable to agree with the conclusion reached by Mr. Justice Stone, that this case should be reversed. The place in which the plaintiff was injured was not one which was in the process of making. It was a permanent place, provided with a railway and cars, and was also used as a passageway for the employees going to and from their work. When the defendant put the passageway to this joint use, it was bound to keep it reasonably safe for the passage of the employees, and to keep it reasonably safe for them it was necessary to light it. Of the many ways in which this might have been accomplished, the defendant chose to light it by a lamp carried on the front end of the train. If the burden was on the conductor to keep the light on the car, in this respect he was acting for the master, and as to such duty was not a fellow servant of the plaintiff. It will not do to dispose of the question by saying that the passageway became unsafe by reason of negligent operation. If the place had been made safe in the first instance by the master, and had subsequently become unsafe by reason of operation, of course the master would not be liable, but the difficulty of applying this rule is the fact that the place was never safe for the joint use of the cars and employees unless it was lighted. The lighting was a necessity which preceded operation, and operation could not be carried on in a reasonably safe manner until it was accomplished. As was said in Kaukola v. Oliver Iron Min. Co. 159 Mich. 689, 124 N. W. 591, where a like question was very ably discussed: "The lighting of this passageway or thoroughfare of the mine, far distant from the working places of most of those who passed through them,—it being always dark in the mine,—was just as necessary for the safety of the men as it was to have the walls and floors in a proper condition. It was one of the 'instrumentalities' which it was necessary to provide to enable the men to do their work, and to get to and from their work safely. It was a thing which it was necessary to keep permanently in condition."

I am unable to distinguish this case from Kaukola v. Oliver Iron Min. Co. supra, and Murphy v. Great Lakes Dredge & Dock Co. 175 Mich. 216, 141 N. W. 564, recently decided by this court, and I think this case should follow them, and the judgment should be affirmed.

Moore and Kuhn, JJ., concur with Bird, J.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

OLE MATHISON, Appt.,
v.
MINNEAPOLIS STREET RAILWAY COMPANY, Resp't.

(126 Minn. 286, 148 N. W. 71.)

Statute — constitutionality — presumption.

1. Laws enacted by the legislature are presumed to be valid, and will not be declared invalid by the courts unless they clearly transgress some constitutional limitation. For other cases, see Evidence, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Headnotes by TAYLOR, C.

Note. — As to the constitutionality of workmen's compensation and industrial insurance acts, see note attached to Jensen v. Southern P. Co. L.R.A.1916A, 409. L.R.A.1916D.

Constitutional law — equal protection — classification.

2. The constitutional requirement that all persons shall receive the equal protection of the laws is not infringed by legislation which applies only to those persons falling within a specified class, if it applies alike to all persons within such class, and reasonable grounds exist for making a distinction between those who fall within such class and those who do not.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — conclusiveness of legislative decision.

3. When the legislature has determined that a sufficient distinction exists between two classes of persons to justify applying rules to one class which do not apply to the other; such determination is binding upon the courts, unless they can point out that the distinction is purely fanciful and arbitrary, and that no substantial or logical basis exists therefor.

As to the applicability and effect of workmen's compensation acts generally, see note attached to Rayner v. Sligh Furniture Co. L.R.A.1916A, 23.

For other cases, see Courts, I. c. 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — workmen's compensation act — exclusion of employees.

4. Excluding domestic servants, farm laborers, casual employees, and such railroads and railroad employees as are engaged in interstate commerce, from the provisions of the workmen's compensation act, does not render it unconstitutional as class legislation.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. a, 5, c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Master and servant — workmen's compensation act — abrogation of defenses.

5. The legislature may place employers, who become subject to part 2 of the act, in a different class from those who do not, and may also place employees who become subject thereto in a different class from those who do not; and abrogating the defenses of contributory negligence, assumption of risk, and negligence of a coemployee, in actions against employers who do not accept such part 2, and permitting such defenses in actions against employers who do accept such part 2, does not render the act invalid as class legislation.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. a, 5, c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — change of remedies.

6. Part 2 of the act substitutes the rights, remedies, and liabilities therein provided for those previously existing, and employers and employees subject thereto are limited to such rights and remedies; but such provisions impair no constitutional rights, as they apply only to those who have voluntarily chosen to become subject thereto, and such choice is no less optional because part 2 is presumed to have been accepted by all employers and employees who have not given notice to the contrary.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Statute — constitutionality.

7. The act contains no provision prohibited by the state or Federal Constitution, and is valid.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(July 3, 1914.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of District Court for Hennepin County overruling a demurrer to the answer, in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries for which defendant was alleged to have been responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

L.R.A.1916D.

Messrs. Duxbury, Conzett, & Pettijohn, for appellant:

The law does not accord to all persons within the jurisdiction of Minnesota the equal protection of the law.

27 Harvard, L. Rev. pp. 235, 344; Ives v. South Buffalo R. Co. 201 N. Y. 271, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162, 94 N. E. 431, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 156, 1 N. C. C. A. 517; Vandalia R. Co. v. Stillwell, 181 Ind. 267, 104 N. E. 289, 5 N. C. C. A. 483.

Messrs. Koon, Whelan, & Hempstead, for respondent:

The subject-matter of the act is within the limits of legislative power to make laws regulating matters of internal police.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549, 570, 55 L. ed. 328, 339, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259; McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 539, 547, 548, 53 L. ed. 315, 319, 320, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206.

The power of our legislature to enact laws is "practically absolute," except as limited by Federal and state Constitutions.

Ramsey County v. Heenan, 2 Minn. 330, Gil. 281; State v. Corbett, 57 Minn. 345, 24 L.R.A. 498, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 694, 59 N. W. 317; Lommen v. Minneapolis Gas-light Co. 65 Minn. 196, 33 L.R.A. 437, 60 Am. St. Rep. 450, 68 N. W. 53; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 684, 32 L. ed. 253, 256, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257.

The question whether the public interests or public necessity requires the enactment of certain legislation by the legislature, in the exercise of its police power, is a legislative, and not a judicial, question.

Butler v. Chambers, 36 Minn. 69, 1 Am. St. Rep. 38, 30 N. W. 308; State v. Corbett, 57 Minn. 345, 24 L.R.A. 498, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 694, 59 N. W. 317; State v. Great Northern R. Co. 68 Minn. 381, 38 L.R.A. 672, 71 N. W. 400; State v. Smith, 58 Minn. 35, 25 L.R.A. 759, 59 N. W. 545; Rippe v. Becker, 56 Minn. 100, 22 L.R.A. 857, 57 N. W. 331; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549, 569, 55 L. ed. 328, 339, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259.

Only those whose rights would be prejudiced by the enforcement of an unconstitutional act will be heard by a court to question its validity.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. p. 232; Clark v. Kansas City, 176 U. S. 114, 118, 44 L. ed. 392, 396, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 284; 6 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1090; Sexton v. Newark Dist. Teleg. Co. 84 N. J. L. 85, 86 Atl. 451, 3 N. C. C. A. 569.

The provisions of the act do not violate the constitutional provision as to due process of law.

Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. ed. 327, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; Borgnis v. Falk Co. 147 Wis. 327, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 489, 133 N. W. 209, 3 N. C. C. A. 649; Sexton v. Newark Dist. Teleg. Co. 84 N. J. L. 85, 86 Atl. 451, 3 N. C. C. A. 569; Re Opinion of Justices, 209 Mass. 607, 94 N. E. 848; Ives v. South Buffalo R. Co. 201 N. Y. 271, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 162, 94 N. E. 431, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 156, 1 N. C. C. A. 517; Herrick v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 31 Minn. 11, 47 Am. Rep. 771, 16 N. W. 413; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Herrick, 127 U. S. 210, 32 L. ed. 109, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1176; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Lavallee v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 40 Minn. 249, 41 N. W. 974; Deibeikis v. Link-Belt Co. 261 Ill. 454, 104 N. E. 211, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 241, 5 N. C. C. A. 401.

The persons whose rights are interfered with being both subject to part 2, they, by their acceptance of it, become bound by its provisions, including those of § 33, and waive all right of objection to such interference, and to any of the provisions of the section, on constitutional grounds.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. p. 250; 8 Cyc. 791; Pierce v. Somerset R. Co. 171 U. S. 641, 648, 43 L. ed. 316, 319, 19 Sup. St. Rep. 64; William Deering & Co. v. Peterson, 75 Minn. 118, 77 N. W. 568; Field v. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. 117 Fed. 925; Eustis v. Bolles, 146 Mass. 413, 4 Am. St. Rep. 327, 16 N. E. 286, appeal dismissed in 150 U. S. 361, 37 L. ed. 1111, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 131; St. Louis v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 248 Mo. 10, 154 S. W. 55; Deibeikis v. Link-Belt Co. 261 Ill. 454, 104 N. E. 211, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 241, 5 N. C. C. A. 401; Mellen Lumber Co. v. Industrial Commission, 154 Wis. 114, L.R.A.1916A, 374, 142 N. W. 187, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 997; Sexton v. Newark Dist. Teleg. Co. 84 N. J. L. 85, 86 Atl. 451, 3 N. C. C. A. 569.

No one has a vested right in the continuance of the rules of the common law.

Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 134, 24 L. ed. 77, 87; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Martin v. Pittsburg & L. E. R. Co. 203 U. S. 284, 51 L. ed. 184, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 100, 8 Ann. Cas. 87; Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 50, 56 L. ed. 327, 346, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Commercial Mill. Co. 218 U. S. 406, 417, 54 L. ed. 1088, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 220, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 50, 21 Ann. Cas. 815; West v. Louisiana, 194 U. S. 258, 262, 48 L. ed. 965, 969, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650; Hulett v. Carey, 66 Minn. 327, 34 L.R.A.1916D.

L.R.A 384, 61 Am. St. Rep. 419, 69 N. W. 31.

There is no constitutional right to pecuniary damages for personal injuries which may happen in the future.

Martin v. Pittsburg & L. E. R. Co. 203 U. S. 284, 295, 51 L. ed. 184, 191, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 100, 8 Ann. Cas. 87; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sowers, 213 U. S. 55, 71, 53 L. ed. 695, 702, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397; Williams v. Galveston, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 63, 90 S. W. 505; Sawyer v. El Paso & N. E. R. Co. 49 Tex. Civ. App. 106, 108 S. W. 719; Quackenbush v. Wisconsin & M. R. Co. 62 Wis. 416, 22 N. W. 519; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Borgnis v. Falk Co. 147 Wis. 327, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 489, 133 N. W. 209, 3 N. C. C. A. 649; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mottley, 219 U. S. 467, 55 L. ed. 297, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 671, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 265; Sexton v. Newark Dist. Teleg. Co. 84 N. J. L. 85, 86 Atl. 451, 3 N. C. C. A. 569; Re Opinion of Justices, 209 Mass. 607, 96 N. E. 308, 1 N. C. C. A. 557.

The provisions of the act do not violate that clause of § 8, article 1, of our state Constitution, as to a certain remedy in the laws for all injuries or wrongs.

Allen v. Pioneer-Press Co. 40 Minn. 117, 3 L.R.A. 532, 12 Am. St. Rep. 707, 41 N. W. 936; Kipp v. Johnson, 31 Minn. 360, 17 N. W. 957; Straw & E. Mfg. Co. v. L. D. Kilbourne Boot & Shoe Co. 80 Minn. 125, 83 N. W. 36; Grimes v. Bryne, 2 Minn. 89, Gil. 72; West v. Louisiana, 194 U. S. 258, 263, 48 L. ed. 965, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 650; Heyward v. Judd, 4 Minn. 483, Gil. 375; Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. 515; Allen v. Pioneer-Press Co. 40 Minn. 117, 3 L.R.A. 532, 12 Am. St. Rep. 707, 41 N. W. 936.

The provisions of the act do not violate that clause of § 4, article 1, of our state Constitution, as to right of trial by jury. (Sexton v. Newark Dist. Teleg. Co. 84 N. J. L. 85, 86 Atl. 451, 3 N. C. C. A. 569; Deibeikis v. Link-Belt Co. 261 Ill. 454, 104 N. E. 211, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 241, 5 N. C. C. A. 401; State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 65 Wash. 156, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 466, 117 Pac. 1101, 2 N. C. C. A. 823, 3 N. C. C. A. 599); nor the provisions as to the equal protection of the laws (Borgnis v. Falk Co. 147 Wis. 327, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 489, 133 N. W. 209, 3 N. C. C. A. 649; Sexton v. Newark Dist. Teleg. Co. 84 N. J. L. 85, 86 Atl. 451, 3 N. C. C. A. 569; Re Opinion of Justices, 209 Mass. 607, 96 N. E. 308, 1 N. C. C. A. 557; Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. ed. 327, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; Deibeikis

v. Link-Belt Co. 261 Ill. 454, 104 N. E. 211, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 241, 5 N. C. C. A. 401; Ives v. South Buffalo R. Co. 201 N. Y. 271, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162, 94 N. E. 431, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 156, 1 N. C. C. A. 517; State ex rel. Yapple v. Creamer, 85 Ohio St. 349, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 694, 97 N. E. 602, 1 N. C. C. A. 30; State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 65 Wash. 156, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 466, 117 Pac. 1101, 2 N. C. C. A. 823, 3 N. C. C. A. 599; Herrick v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 31 Minn. 11, 47 Am. Rep. 771, 16 N. W. 413; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Herrick, 127 U. S. 210, 32 L. ed. 109, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1176; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Lavallee v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 40 Minn. 249, 41 N. W. 974).

Messrs. Davis, Kellogg, & Severance, amici curiæ:

These acts are a valid exercise of the police power of the state.

State ex rel. Yapple v. Creamer, 85 Ohio St. 349, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 694, 97 N. E. 602, 1 N. C. C. A. 30; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 84; Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 55 L. ed. 112, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1062, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487; Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 348, 26 L. ed. 566; Escanaba & L. M. Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 107 U. S. 683, 27 L. ed. 445, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 65 Wash. 156, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 466, 117 Pac. 1101, 2 N. C. C. A. 823, 3 N. C. C. A. 599; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Butler v. Chambers, 36 Minn. 71, 1 Am. St. Rep. 638, 30 N. W. 308; State ex rel. Minneapolis v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 98 Minn. 389, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 298, 120 Am. St. Rep. 581, 108 N. W. 261, 8 Ann. Cas. 1047; State v. Mountain Timber Co. 75 Wash. 581, L.R.A. —, 135 Pac. 645, 4 N. C. C. A. 811; State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 68 Minn. 385, 38 L.R.A. 672, 64 Am. St. Rep. 482, 71 N. W. 400; Winona & St. P. R. Co. v. Waldron, 11 Minn. 515, Gil. 392, 88 Am. Dec. 100; Rippe v. Becker, 56 Minn. 100, 22 L.R.A. 857, 57 N. W. 331; State ex rel. Beek v. Wagener, 77 Minn. 483, 46 L.R.A. 442, 77 Am. St. Rep. 681, 80 N. W. 633, 778, 1134; State v. Boehm, 92 Minn. 374, 100 N. W. 95; Northwestern Teleph. Exch. Co. v. Minneapolis, 81 Minn. 140, 53 L.R.A. 175, 83 N. W. 527, 86 N. W. 69; Joyce v. Great Northern R. Co. 100 Minn. 225, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 756, 100 N. W. 975.

They do not violate the "due process of law clause."

Borgnis v. Falk Co. 147 Wis. 327, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 489, 133 N. W. 209, 3 N. C. C. A. 649; Re Opinion of Justices, 209 L.R.A.1916D.

Mass. 607, 96 N. E. 308, 1 N. C. C. A. 557; Sexton v. Newark Dist. Teleg. Co. 84 N. J. L. 85, 86 Atl. 455, 3 N. C. C. A. 569; Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. ed. 327, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Herrick, 127 U. S. 210, 32 L. ed. 109, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1176; Tullis v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 176 U. S. 348, 44 L. ed. 192, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 136; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549, 55 L. ed. 328, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259; Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Houlihan, 157 Ind. 494, 54 L.R.A. 787, 60 N. E. 943; Quackenbush v. Wisconsin & M. R. Co. 62 Wis. 411, 22 N. W. 519; Davidson v. Farrell, 8 Minn. 264, Gil. 225; Hutado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 536, 28 L. ed. 232, 238, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 111, 292; Bardwell v. Collins (Bardwell v. Anderson) 44 Minn. 97, 9 L.R.A. 152, 20 Am. St. Rep. 547, 46 N. W. 315; State ex rel. Blaisdell v. Billings, 55 Minn. 467, 43 Am. St. Rep. 524, 57 N. W. 206, 794; Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 110, 55 L. ed. 116, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1062, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186; Reno Smelting, Mill. & Reduction Works v. Stevenson, 20 Nev. 269, 4 L.R.A. 60, 19 Am. St. Rep. 364, 21 Pac. 317.

An ulterior public advantage may justify a comparatively insignificant taking of private property without fault being necessarily involved.

Fire Dept. v. Noble, 3 E. D. Smith, 440; Exempt Firemen's Benev. Fund v. Roome, 29 Hun, 391; Firemen's Benev. Asso. v. Lounsbury, 21 Ill. 511, 74 Am. Dec. 115; Fire Dept. v. Helfenstein, 16 Wis. 136; Peterson v. The Chandos, 4 Fed. 645; Reed v. Canfield, 1 Sumn. 195, Fed. Cas. No. 11,641; Buckley v. Brown, 3 Wall. Jr. 199, Fed. Cas. No. 2,092; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Zernecke, 183 U. S. 582, 46 L. ed. 330, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 229; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Eaton, 183 U. S. 589, 46 L. ed. 341, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 228; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Wolfe, 187 U. S. 638, 47 L. ed. 344, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 847; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 41 L. ed. 611, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 243; Pierce v. Worcester & N. R. Co. 105 Mass. 199; Rodemacher v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 41 Iowa, 297, 20 Am. Rep. 592; Jensen v. South Dakota C. R. Co. 25 S. D. 506, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1015, 127 N. W. 650, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 700; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Taylor, 210 U. S. 281, 52 L. ed. 1061, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616, 21 Am. Neg. Rep. 464;

Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Riverside Mills, 219 U. S. 186, 55 L. ed. 167, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 7, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 164; Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 53 L. ed. 97, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 14; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Arkansas, 219 U. S. 465, 55 L. ed. 296, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 275.

They do not violate the right of trial by jury.

State v. Woodling, 53 Minn. 144, 54 N. W. 1068; State v. Bannock, 53 Minn. 419, 55 N. W. 558; Marsh v. Brown, 57 N. H. 173; Shaw v. Kent, 11 Ind. 80; Com. v. Whitney, 108 Mass. 5; Jacobs v. People, 218 Ill. 500, 75 N. E. 1034; State v. Packenhan, 40 Wash. 403, 82 Pac. 597; United States v. Praeger, 149 Fed. 474; Schick v. United States, 195 U. S. 65, 49 L. ed. 99, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 826, 1 Ann. Cas. 585; Haythorn v. Van Keuren & Son, 79 N. J. L. 101, 74 Atl. 502; Humphrey v. Eakeley, 72 N. J. L. 424, 60 Atl. 1097, 5 Ann. Cas. 929; State, Joy & S. Co., Prosecutor, v. Blum, 55 N. J. L. 518, 26 Atl. 86; Sexton v. Newark Dist. Teleg. Co. 84 N. J. L. 85, 86 Atl. 451, 3 N. C. C. A. 569; Mellen Lumber Co. v. Industrial Commission, 154 Wis. 114, L.R.A.1916A, 374, 142 N. W. 187, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 997; Twitchell v. Pennsylvania, 7 Wall. 321, 19 L. ed. 223; Livingston v. New York, 8 Wend. 85, 22 Am. Dec. 622; Lee v. Tillotson, 35 Am. Dec. 624, and note, 24 Wend. 337; State v. Keyes, 8 Vt. 57, 30 Am. Dec. 450; Mille Lacs County v. Morrison, 22 Minn. 178; State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 65 Wash. 156, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 466, 117 Pac. 1101, 2 N. C. C. A. 823, 3 N. C. C. A. 599; Bert-holf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 30 Am. Rep. 323.

They do not deny to persons the equal protection of the laws.

Cameron v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 63 Minn. 384, 31 L.R.A. 553, 65 N. W. 652; Merritt v. Knife Falls Boom Corp. 34 Minn. 245, 25 N. W. 403; Johnson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 29 Minn. 425, 13 N. W. 673; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 293, 42 L. ed. 1037, 1042, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; St. John v. New York, 201 U. S. 633, 636, 50 L. ed. 896, 898, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 554, 5 Ann. Cas. 909; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 103, 43 L. ed. 909, 912, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 609; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 31, 28 L. ed. 923, 924, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 703, 28 L. ed. 1145, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 730; State ex rel. Mudeking v. Parr, 109 Minn. 147, 134 Am. St. Rep. 759, 123 N. W. 408; Hjelm v. Patterson, 105 Minn. 256, 127 Am. St. Rep. 560, 117 N. W. 610; State ex rel. Board of Education v. Brown, 97 Minn. 402, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 327, 106 N. W. 477; L.R.A.1916D.

State ex rel. Fitz v. Jensen, 86 Minn. 19, 89 N. W. 1126; Duluth Bkg. Co. v. Koon, 81 Minn. 486, 84 N. W. 335; State ex rel. Douglas v. Ritt, 76 Minn. 531, 79 N. W. 535; Cobb v. Bord, 40 Minn. 479, 42 N. W. 396; Nichols v. Walter, 37 Minn. 264, 33 N. W. 800; State v. Moore, 104 N. C. 714, 17 Am. St. Rep. 696, 10 S. E. 143; Ex parte Swann, 96 Mo. 44, 9 S. W. 10; Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517, 36 L. ed. 247, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 45, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 468; Tinsley v. Anderson, 171 U. S. 101, 43 L. ed. 91, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 805; Savings & L. Soc. v. Multnomah County, 169 U. S. 421, 42 L. ed. 803, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 392; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Indiana, 165 U. S. 304, 41 L. ed. 725, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 345; Covington & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Sandford, 164 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 560, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 198; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Pontius, 157 U. S. 209, 39 L. ed. 675, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585.

Mr. H. V. Mercer also amicus curiæ.

Taylor, C., filed the following opinion:

Plaintiff, an employee of the city of Minneapolis, while engaged in laying paving along and near the railway track of defendant in one of the streets of that city, was struck by one of defendant's street cars and received injuries which necessitated the amputation of his leg. Alleging that the injury was caused by the negligence of the defendant, he brought this action to recover damages. Defendant, in its answer, among other things, alleged that plaintiff, the city, and defendant had all accepted, were acting under, and were governed by, the provisions of part 2 of chapter 467, p. 677, Laws of 1913 (§§ 8195-8230, Gen. Stat. 1913), commonly known as the workmen's compensation act; and that plaintiff's rights were limited and confined to, and were measured and determined by, the relief provided for in part 2 of that act. Plaintiff demurred to this portion of the answer, and appealed from an order overruling the demurrer.

Plaintiff contends that the act violates §§ 2, 4, 8, and 13 of article 1 of the Constitution of the state of Minnesota, and the 5th and 14th Amendments to the Constitution to the United States, and is therefore unconstitutional and void. Whether this contention be well founded is the sole question for decision. The able arguments and exhaustive briefs presented have received attentive consideration and have been of much assistance.

We shall not stop to discuss the shortcomings and unsatisfactory results of the law of negligence as applied to present-day industrial conditions; nor the desirability of providing more certain, effective, and inexpensive relief for injured workmen than the present common-law actions afford; nor the economic reasons for imposing upon an employer, not because he is at fault but as a burden incident to his business, the obligation to contribute to the support of employees disabled through injuries received in the course of their employment. Much consideration has been given to these questions by publicists and students of industrial, economic, and social problems; and it has become generally recognized that the common law fails to make adequate or equitable provision for the economic loss resulting from a disability which deprives the workman of his earning power. But changes in the laws, and in the public policies recognized in the laws, must emanate from the lawmaking power and not from the courts. The courts must administer the law as they find it, not as they may think it ought to be. Hence arguments showing the need for a change in the laws governing the relations of master and servant should be addressed to the legislative, and not to the judicial, branch of the government. The briefs have given considerable attention to these legislative questions, but it is sufficient, for present purposes, to say that the arguments advanced furnish ample basis for legislative action under the police power of the state; and that laws enacted for the purpose of adjusting and determining the respective rights and obligations of employer and employee may make radical innovations in pre-existing policies and rules of law, so long as they do not infringe some constitutional guaranty.

In considering the questions now before the court, it is proper to say, at the outset, that all laws enacted by the legislature are presumed to be valid; and that it is the duty of the courts to declare them valid, unless they clearly transgress some limitation upon the power of the legislature imposed by the state or Federal Constitution. Roos v. State, 6 Minn. 428, Gil. 291; State v. Corbett, 57 Minn. 345, 24 L.R.A. 498, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 694, 59 N. W. 317; Lommen v. Minneapolis Gaslight Co. 65 Minn. 196, 33 L.R.A. 437, 60 Am. St. Rep. 450, 68 N. W. 53; Union P. R. Co. v. United States, 99 U. S. 700, 25 L. ed. 496; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257.

The act in question provides that compensation shall be made by the employer to the employee, or in case of his death to his dependents, for injuries sustained in the course of the employment, "provided the employee was himself not wilfully negligent;" but the act does not apply to those railroads, or those employees of railroads, that are subject to the laws of the United States enacted pursuant to the power to regulate commerce, nor to domestic servants, farm laborers, or persons whose employment is only casual. The act is separated into two divisions, designated as part 1 and part 2. The provisions of part 2 apply only in the event that both employer and employee elect to become subject thereto. If either or both elect not to become subject to part 2, the provisions of part 1 apply. If the employer has elected not to become subject to part 2, he cannot interpose as a defense, in an action brought under part 1, that the employee was negligent, unless such negligence was wilful; nor that he had assumed the risk; nor that the injury was caused by the negligence of a coemployee. Depriving the employer of the three defenses named, in case he elects not to become subject to part 2 of the act, is the only substantial change made by part 1 in the previously existing law. If the employer declines to accept the provisions of part 2, he loses the benefit of these three defenses; if he accepts the provisions of part 2, but the employee declines to accept such provisions, the employer retains the benefit of such defenses.

It is claimed that the act violates the equality provisions of the state and Federal Constitutions for the reason that it abrogates these three defenses, in actions under part 1, brought against employers who elect not to accept the provisions of part 2, but permits such defenses to be interposed, in actions under part 1, brought against other employers, and also for the reason that the act excludes from its provisions domestic servants, farm laborers, casual employees, and such railroads and railroad employees as are within the legislative domain of the United States. That the defenses mentioned may be entirely abolished, or abolished as to certain classes of employments only, is too well settled to require argument. Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Herrick, 127 U. S. 210, 32 L. ed. 109, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1176; Tullis v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 175 U. S. 348, 44 L. ed. 192, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 136; Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. ed. 327, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Castle, 224 U. S. 541, 56 L. ed. 875, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 606; Vindicator Consol. Gold Min. Co. v. Firstbrook, 36 Colo. 498, 86 Pac. 313, 10 Ann. Cas. 1108; Borgnis v. Falk Co. 147 Wis. 327, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 489, 133 N. W. 209, 3 N. C. C. A. 648; Deibeikis v. Link-Belt Co. 261 Ill. 454, 104 N. E. 211, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 241, 5 N. C. C. A. 401; Re Opinion of Jus- tices, 209 Mass. 607, 96 N. E. 308, 1 N. C. C. A. 557; Ives v. South Buffalo R. Co. 201 N. Y. 271, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162, 94 N. E. 431, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 156, 1 N. C. C. A. 517; Sexton v. Newark Dist. Teleg. Co. 84 N. J. L. 85, 86 Atl. 455, 3 N. C. C. A. 569; State ex rel. Yapple v. Creamer, 85 Ohio St. 349, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 694, 97 N. E. 602, 1 N. C. C. A. 30. The power to abolish such defenses rests upon the principle that no person has any property right or vested interest in a rule of law, and that the legislature may change such rules at its pleasure. Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. ed. 327, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; Borgnis v. Falk Co. 147 Wis. 327, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 489, 133 N. W. 209, 3 N. C. C. A. 649; Sawyer v. El Paso & N. E. R. Co. 49 Tex. Civ. App. 106, 108 S. W. 718; Cunningham v. Northwestern Improv. Co. 44 Mont. 180, 119 Pac. 554, 1 N. C. C. A. 720; Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 30 Am. Rep. 323; Deibelkis v. Link-Belt Co. 261 Ill. 454, 104 N. E. 211, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 241, 5 N. C. C. A. 401. Plaintiff contends, however, that the classifications made by the act are unwarranted, and that the constitutional requirement that all persons shall receive the equal protection of the laws is infringed unless such defenses are abrogated as to all employers, or remain available to all employers, and unless the act applies to the classes excepted from its operation as well as to those included therein.

It is universally recognized that such constitutional provisions do not prohibit the legislature from prescribing valid rules and regulations, nor from imposing valid duties and obligations, nor from conferring valid rights and privileges, which apply only to those persons falling within a specified class, and not to the general public. Legislation which applies alike to all persons within the designated class, but does not apply to persons outside such class, is well within the constitutional requirement, if there be reasonable grounds for making a distinction between those who fall within such class and those who do not. Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank, 170 U. S. 283, 42 L. ed. 1037, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 594; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 174 U. S. 96, 43 L. ed. 909, 19 Sup. St. Rep. 609; St. John v. New York, 201 U. S. 633, 50 L. ed. 896, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 554, 5 Ann. Cas. 909; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton, 218 U. S. 36, 54 L. ed. L.R.A.1916D.

921, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 84, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 676; Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Turnipseed, 219 U. S. 35, 55 L. ed. 78, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 226, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 136, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 463, 2 N. C. C. A. 24; Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. ed. 327, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; Merritt v. Knife Falls Boom Corp. 34 Minn. 245, 25 N. W. 403; Cameron v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 63 Minn. 384, 31 L.R.A. 553, 65 N. W. 652; Nichols v. Walter, 37 Minn. 264, 33 N. W. 800; State ex rel. Scheffer v. Justus, 85 Minn. 279, 56 L.R.A. 757, 89 Am. St. Rep. 550, 88 N. W. 759; Pfaender v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 86 Minn. 218, 90 N. W. 393; State ex rel. Young v. Standard Oil Co. 111 Minn. 85, 126 N. W. 527.

A classification for purposes of legislation, to be valid, "must be based upon some reason of public policy, growing out of the condition or business of the class to which the legislation is limited." But it is the province of the legislature to determine what differences or peculiarities, of condition or of business, furnish a sufficient basis for applying a different rule to those engaged in such business or those affected by such condition, than is applied to the remainder of the community. It is also the province of the legislature to draw the line marking the boundary between one class and another, and between the several classes and the general public. When such questions have been determined by the legislature, the legislative judgment is binding upon the courts, unless they can point out that the classification adopted is purely fanciful and arbitrary, and that no substantial or logical basis exists therefor. Cameron v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 63 Minn. 384, 31 L.R.A. 553, 65 N. W. 652; Lommen v. Minneapolis Gaslight Co. 65 Minn. 196, 33 L.R.A. 437, 60 Am. St. Rep. 450, 68 N. W. 53; State v. Corbett, 57 Minn. 345, 24 L.R.A. 498, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 694, 59 N. W. 317; Joyce v. Great Northern R. Co. 100 Minn. 225, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 756, 110 N. W. 975; State ex rel. Young v. Standard Oil Co. 111 Minn. 85, 126 N. W. 527; State ex rel. Beek v. Wagener, 77 Minn. 483, 46 L.R.A. 442, 77 Am. St. Rep. 681, 80 N. W. 633, 778, 1134; State ex rel. Douglas v. Westfall, 85 Minn. 437, 57 L.R.A. 297, 89 Am. St. Rep. 571, 89 N. W. 175; State ex rel. Board of Education v. Brown, 97 Minn. 402, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 327, 106 N. W. 477; Hunter v. Tracy, 104 Minn. 378, 116 N. W. 922; Quong Wing v. Kirkendall, 89 Mont. 64, 101 Pac. 250; Cunningham v. Northwestern Improv. Co. 44 Mont. 180, 119 Pac. 554, 1 N. C. C. A. 720; State ex rel. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Clausen, 63

Wash. 535, 116 Pac. 7; Id., 65 Wash. 156, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 466, 2 N. C. C. A. 823, 3 N. C. C. A. 599, 117 Pac. 1101.

We think it is within the discretion of the legislature to place in a class by themselves those employers and those employees who, for the reason that they are engaged in interstate commerce, are subject to the laws which have been, or may be, passed by Congress. Within the domain of interstate and foreign commerce, the power of Congress is supreme; and the legislature may well refrain from including, within the operation of the state laws, those persons as to whom such laws are, or may be, rendered nugatory by the laws of the United States. Deibeikis v. Link-Belt Co. 261 Ill. 454, 104 N. E. 211, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 241, 5 N. C. C. A. 401. The suggestion that the present law does not exclude from its operation all who are engaged in interstate commerce, but only those who are engaged in such commerce by railroad, is sufficiently answered by the decisions affirming the validity of laws which apply only to those engaged in interstate commerce by railroad. Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. ed. 327, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875.

Other courts have held, and we think for sufficient reasons, that the exclusion of domestic servants, farm laborers, and persons whose employment is casual only, from the operation of laws providing compensation for injured workmen, is within the proper discretion of the legislature. Re Opinion of Justices, 209 Mass. 607, 96 N. E. 308, 1 N. C. C. A. 557; Borgnis v. Falk Co. 147 Wis. 327, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 489, 133 N. W. 209, 3 N. C. C. A. 649; Deibeikis v. Link-Belt Co. 261 Ill. 454, 104 N. E. 211, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 241, 5 N. C. C. A. 401; Dirkin v. Great Northern Paper Co. 110 Me. 374, 86 Atl. 320, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 396.

We also think that the legislature is well within its prerogative when it places in one class employers who become subject to the provisions of part 2 of the act, and in another class employers who do not become subject to such provisions; also when it places in one class employees who become subject to such provisions, and in another class employees who do not become subject thereto. Employers who become subject to part 2 thereby tender to their employees, as a consideration for exemption from common-law liabilities, rights and privileges which did not previously exist, and offer to assume the burden of duties and obligations which were not previously imposed upon them. Employees who become subject to part 2 thereby tender to their employers immunity from common-law actions as a consideration for the rights and remedies provided for by part 2. These propositions become binding contracts in respect to all who accept them, and remain as continuing offers to those who have not accepted them. An employer or employee who, at his option, may secure all the advantages possessed by any other, is hardly in a position to claim that he is discriminated against. The legislature has the power to determine the public policy of the state, and, in furtherance of any policy adopted by it, may enact proper laws tending to induce conformance therewith. The defenses of contributory negligence, assumption of risk, and negligence of a fellow servant, were doubtless abrogated in the cases specified, and not abrogated in other cases, to induce an acceptance of the provisions of part 2 of the act. But notwithstanding this purpose, the act permits any employer to place himself within either class of employers at his election, and to change from one to the other if he so desires; it also permits any employee to place himself within either class of employees at his election, and to change from one to the other if he so desires. Such legislation is not discriminatory and is not inhibited by the Constitution. Furthermore, if its validity rested upon the distinction between the two classes of employers and the distinction between the two classes of employees, we could not say that such distinction is so fanciful and arbitrary, or so wanting in substance, that the legislature is prohibited from applying rules to one class which it does not apply to the other. This is in harmony with the holding of other courts. State ex rel. Yapple v. Creamer, 85 Ohio St. 349, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 694, 97 N. E. 602, 1 N. C. C. A. 30; Borgnis v. Falk Co. 147 Wis. 327, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 489, 133 N. W. 209, 3 N. C. C. A. 649; Sexton v. Newark Dist. Teleg. Co. 84 N. J. L. 85, 86 Atl. 451, 3 N. C. C. A. 569; Deibeikis v. Link-Belt Co. 261 Ill. 454, 104 N. E. 211, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 241, 5 N. C. C. A. 401.

The act provides that every employer and every employee shall be presumed to have accepted and become subject to part 2 of the act, "unless otherwise expressly stated in the contract, in writing, or unless written or printed notice has been given," in the manner prescribed in the act, that he has elected not to become subject thereto. It is beyond question that the legislature has power to create this presumption, and to require those who elect not to come under the provisions of part 2, to give notice thereof in the manner prescribed. The act also provides the manner in which one who is subject to the provisions of part 2 may thereafter change and become not subject thereto, and the manner in which one who is not subject to such provisions may thereafter change and accept them. The choice is no less voluntary and optional because a party is deemed to have accepted these provisions, unless he give notice to the contrary, than it would be if he were deemed not to have accepted them until he gave notice to that effect.

The act provides that, if both employer and employee become subject to part 2 thereof, the employer shall make compensation according to the schedules contained in the act, "in every case of personal injury or death of his employee, caused by accident, arising out of and in the course of employment, without regard to the question of negligence, except accidents which are intentionally self-inflicted or when the intoxication of such employee is the natural or proximate cause of the injury." Gen. Stat. 1913, § 8203. It also provides that, in case both employer and employee become subject to part 2, such election "shall be a surrender by the parties thereto of their rights to any other method, form or amount of compensation or determination thereof than as provided in part 2 of this act, and an acceptance of all the provisions of part 2 of this act" [§ 8204]. The rights, remedies, and liabilities provided by part 2 are substituted for those previously existing, and the parties are limited thereto. It is competent for the parties to enter into such an agreement, especially if they are authorized by law so to do; and, so long as the privilege is given them to elect whether they will or will not become bound by the provisions thereof, the agreement is voluntary, and none of the constitutional rights of the parties are infringed by requiring that the terms of the agreement, if entered into, shall be those prescribed by the act. Sexton v. Newark Dist. Tele. Co. 84 N. J. L. 85, 86 Atl. 451, 3 N. C. C. A. 569; Borgnis v. Falk Co. 147 Wis. 327, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 489, 133 N. W. 209, 3 N. C. C. A. 649; Deibeikis v. Link-Belt Co. 261 Ill. 454, 104 N. E. 211, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 241, 5 N. C. C. A. 401; State ex rel. Yaple v. Creamer, 85 Ohio St. 349, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 694, 97 N. E. 602, 1 N. C. C. A. 30; Re Opinion of Justices, 209 Mass. 607, 96 N. E. 308, 1 N. C. C. A. 557; Cunningham v. Northwestern Improv. Co. 44 Mont. 180, 119 Pac. 554, 1 N. C. C. A. 720.

The section of the act most vigorously assailed is § 33 (§ 8229, Gen. Stat. 1913), which provides for cases in which the employee is entitled to compensation from his employer under part 2, for injuries which occurred under circumstances also creating a liability against a third party. In case such third party is also subject to the provisions of part 2, the employee may either recover from his employer the relief prescribed by the act, or may bring an action against such third party, but cannot proceed against both. If he proceed against the third party, his recovery is limited to the relief prescribed by the act. If he takes compensation from his employer under the act, the employer becomes subrogated to his right of action against the third party, and may recover the aggregate amount payable to the employee, with costs, disbursements, and reasonable attorneys' fees. In case such third party is not subject to the provisions of part 2, the employee may maintain an action against him, without waiving any rights against the employer, and the damages recoverable are not limited to the relief prescribed by the act; but, if the employee recover from such third party, the employer is entitled to deduct, from the compensation payable by him under the act, whatever amount is actually received by the employee from the third party. In other words, if a sum equal to, or exceeding, the compensation payable under the act, is actually collected from the third party, the employer is relieved from liability, but, if the sum actually collected be less than the amount payable under the act, he must make good the deficiency. If, instead of prosecuting an action against such third party, the employee collects compensation from his employer, the employer becomes subrogated to the rights of the employee against the third party, and may maintain an action against him for the recovery of the damages sustained by the employee, but, after reimbursing himself for the compensation payable to the employee, and for the costs, attorneys' fees, and expenses of collecting the damages, the employer must pay over to the employee any surplus remaining of the amount collected. We find nothing in these provisions contravening any of the provisions of the Constitution. They apply to and bind only those who have voluntarily accepted and agreed to them.

A careful examination of the entire act satisfies us that it contains nothing prohibited by either the state or Federal Constitution. The 5th Amendment to the Federal Constitution applies only to proceedings under the Federal laws, and has no bearing upon the instant case. Section 4 of article 1 of the state Constitution, securing the right of trial by jury in all cases at law, expressly provides that such right may be waived. Where employer and employee both become subject to the provisions of part 2 of the act, they thereby waive a jury trial as to matters governed by such provisions.

Such right remains unchanged, however, as to all other matters and all other persons. The rights set forth and declared in § 8 of article 1 of the Constitution do not appear to have been infringed. The prohibition contained in § 13 of article 1 has no bearing upon the case whatever. The fact that the provisions of part 2 of the act apply to those only who elect to be governed thereby obviates the objections to the act, not hereinbefore considered, which are based upon the provisions contained in the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution and § 2 of article 1 of the state Constitution.

Order affirmed.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

SENA ODENBREIT, Appt.,

v.

ANNE UTHEIM, Respnt.

(— Minn. —, 154 N. W. 741.)

Specific performance — contract to adopt.

1. Where, under an oral contract to adopt an infant and to give her a specified portion of the property of her foster parents at their death in consideration of the relinquishment of all parental rights by her natural parents, the child is reared as the child of her foster parents, and renders to them all the duties and services of a daughter until she attains her majority, and such foster parents die without having legally adopted her and without making any provision for her by will or otherwise, the property rights provided for in such contract may be enforced in equity; and where the property consists of real estate, or such rights have not been submitted to the probate court for determination, they are not barred by a final decree of the probate court assigning the property to others.

For other cases, see Specific Performance, I. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Adoption — rights under contract.

2. If the contract merely provided that she should be adopted, and contained no express provision in respect to property rights, she became entitled to the property rights given by statute to an adopted child.

For other cases, see Descent and Distribution, I. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Parent and child — rights of adopted child.

3. The property rights of an adopted child are now the same as those of a natural child.

For other cases, see Descent and Distribution, I. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Will — disinheritance of child.

4. A parent may, by will, entirely disinherit a child.

For other cases, see Wills, III. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Courts — probate — rights of pretermitted child.

5. The rights given by § 7260, Gen Stat.

Headnotes by TAYLOR, C.

Note.—As to right of adopting parent to disinherit adopted child, see annotation following this case, post, 424.

1913, to a pretermitted child, must be enforced in the probate court, and if not so enforced are barred by the final decree of that court.

For other cases, see Judgment, II. d, 5, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Judgment — distributing estate — rights of adopted child.

6. The allegations of the complaint failed to show that the contract in controversy contained any express provision to give plaintiff a portion of the property of her foster parents. Consequently she has no greater rights in such property than are given by statute to an adopted child, and such rights were barred by the final decree of the probate court assigning the property to the devisee named in the will.

For other cases, see Judgment, II. d, 5, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 5, 1915.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Lac Qui Parle County sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to enforce specific performance of a contract of adoption. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Mr. G. H. Smith, for appellant:

The amended complaint states a cause of action.

1 C. J. pp. 1376-1397; Fiske v. Lawton, 124 Minn. 89, 144 N. W. 455; Crawford v. Wilson, 139 Ga. 654, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 776, 78 S. E. 30; Laird v. Vila, 93 Minn. 48, 106 Am. St. Rep. 420, 100 N. W. 656; Coulam v. Doull, 133 U. S. 228, 33 L. ed. 599, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 253; Thomas v. Maloney, 142 Mo. App. 193, 126 S. W. 523; Bray v. Miles, 23 Ind. App. 432, 54 N. E. 446, 55 N. E. 510; Svanburg v. Fosseen, 75 Minn. 350, 43 L.R.A. 427, 74 Am. St. Rep. 490, 78 N. W. 4; Smith v. Olmstead, 88 Cal. 582, 12 L.R.A. 46, 22 Am. St. Rep. 336, 26 Pac. 521; McIntire v. McIntire, 64 N. H. 609, 15 Atl. 218.

The district court has, and the probate court has not, jurisdiction where real estate is involved and the contract is oral.

Laird v. Vila, 93 Minn. 45, 106 Am. St. Rep. 420, 100 N. W. 656; Mousseau v. Mousseau, 40 Minn. 238, 41 N. W. 977; Farnham v. Thompson, 34 Minn. 335, 57 Am. Rep. 59, 26 N. W. 9; Svanburg v. Fos-seen, 75 Minn. 350, 43 L.R.A. 427, 74 Am. St. Rep. 490, 78 N. W. 4; State ex rel. Union Nat. Bank v. Probate Ct. 103 Minn. 328, 115 N. W. 173.

Mr. N. F. Soderberg, for respondent:

The complaint herein does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

Fiske v. Lawton, 124 Minn. 85, 144 N. W. 455; Albring v. Ward, 137 Mich. 352, 100 N. W. 609; Burns v. Smith, 21 Mont. 251, 69 Am. St. Rep. 653, 53 Pac. 742; Brantingham v. Huff, 174 N. Y. 53, 95 Am. St. Rep. 545, 66 N. E. 620; Jordan v. Abney, 97 Tex. 296, 78 S. W. 486; Kirk v. Middlebrook, 201 Mo. 245, 100 S. W. 450; Sorenson v. Rasmussen, 114 Minn. 324, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216, 131 N. W. 325; Sharkey v. McDermott, 91 Mo. 647, 60 Am. Rep. 270, 4 S. W. 107; Stellmacher v. Bruder, 89 Minn. 507, 99 Am. St. Rep. 609, 95 N. W. 324; Lowe v. Lowe, 83 Minn. 206, 86 N. W. 11; Haubrich v. Haubrich, 118 Minn. 394, 136 N. W. 1025; Laird v. Villa, 93 Minn. 45, 106 Am. St. Rep. 420, 100 N. W. 656; Whitby v. Motz, 125 Minn. 43, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 645, 145 N. W. 623; Bengtsson v. Johnson, 75 Minn. 321, 78 N. W. 3; Hadley v. Bourdeaux, 90 Minn. 177, 95 N. W. 1109.

The district court has not jurisdiction over the subject of the action.

Brown v. Strom, 113 Minn. 1, 129 N. W. 136; Appleby v. Watkins, 95 Minn. 455, 104 N. W. 301, 5 Ann. Cas. 471.

Taylor, C., filed the following opinion:

Appeal by plaintiff from an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint. The complaint contains allegations to the effect that plaintiff's mother, in 1880 and while on her deathbed, requested Anfin Utheim and Marith Utheim, his wife, who were childless, to adopt plaintiff, who was then one and one half years of age; that they consented on condition that plaintiff's father renounce all claims and parental rights to plaintiff; that plaintiff's father made the required promise, and thereupon the Utheims took plaintiff into their home, gave her the name of Sena Utheim, and cared for and reared her as their child; that plaintiff believed that the Utheims were her parents until she was ten years of age, when she was told of her true parentage by a neighbor; that she reported to the Utheims what she had been informed, and was told by them "that she had once had other parents, but that they had adopted her, and that she was now their child and heir, and had no other parents, but belonged to them, and she believed them;" that frequently thereafter they informed plaintiff "that she was their child and that their property would go to her on their death;" that the church record of the L.R.A.1916D.

church of which Anfin Utheim was pastor contains a statement in his handwriting and signed by him and his wife that plaintiff was their adopted child and their heir; that Marith Utheim died in January, 1897, and at her instance while on her deathbed Anfin Utheim again promised to "continue to treat plaintiff as his child and make her his heir;" that plaintiff lived with said Anfin and Marith Utheim until the death of Marith and thereafter with said Anfin until she was in her twentieth year, and at all times treated and regarded them as her parents, and gave them the love, and rendered to them all the services and duties, of a daughter; that after the death of said Marith, said Anfin married the defendant; that in August, 1913, said Anfin died leaving a will, executed in 1910, by which he gave all his property to defendant; that the property consisted principally of the real estate described in the complaint; and that the will was duly probated and the entire estate assigned to defendant.

Anfin and Marith Utheim were childless. They took plaintiff into their home and family at the age of one and one half years, and she lived with them as a member of their family until after she had attained her majority. During all this time they treated and regarded her the same as if she had been their own natural child; and she treated and regarded them the same as if they had been her natural parents, and at all times performed the duties and services and gave them the companionship and affection of a daughter. If in doing so plaintiff fully performed on her part the terms of an oral contract, made by her natural parents for her benefit, which provided that in consideration for such performance she should receive the property of Anfin Utheim, or a specified portion thereof, at his death, she had the right at his death to enforce specific performance of such contract. Svanburg v. Fosseen, 75 Minn. 350, 43 L.R.A. 427, 74 Am. St. Rep. 490, 78 N. W. 4; Stellmacher v. Bruder, 89 Minn. 507, 99 Am. St. Rep. 609, 95 N. W. 324; Laird v. Villa, 93 Minn. 45, 106 Am. St. Rep. 420, 100 N. W. 656; Richardson v. Richardson, 114 Minn. 12, 130 N. W. 4; Haubrich v. Haubrich, 118 Minn. 394, 136 N. W. 1025; Fiske v. Lawton, 124 Minn. 85, 144 N. W. 455; Brasch v. Reeves, 124 Minn. 114, 144 N. W. 744; Robertson v. Corcoran, 125 Minn. 118, 145 N. W. 812. If the contract provided merely that they should adopt her as their child, and did not contain any express provision that she should receive the property of the Utheims, or a specified portion thereof, she has no other or greater rights than would have been given her by the statute in case she had been legally adopted. Had she been legally adopted, she would have precisely the same rights, under the statute as it now exists, that are given by statute to a natural child.

Unless a parent has bound himself by contract, based upon a sufficient consideration, to give his property, or a specified portion thereof, to his child, he may by will dispose of all the property that would otherwise descend to the child in any manner that he sees fit. He may entirely disinherit the child. The statute provides however: "If a testator omits to provide in his will for any of his children or the issue of a deceased child, they shall take the same share of his estate which they would have taken if he had died intestate, unless it appears that such omission was intentional, and not occasioned by accident or mistake." Gen. Stat. 1913, § 7260.

The power and duty to determine to whom property passes by will or descends by inheritance is vested in the probate court; and it is the province of that court to determine, in the first instance, whether a pretermitted child is entitled to inherit under the statute above quoted. A child claiming under that statute must enforce such claim in the probate proceedings; and if he fails to do so and the probate court makes a final decree assigning the property to others, such decree becomes binding and conclusive and operates to bar his claim unless an appeal be taken therefrom in the manner provided by statute.

In the present case the probate court allowed the will and made a decree assigning all the property to defendant thereunder. No appeal was taken from this decree. Assuming that plaintiff, by virtue of the contract, possessed the same rights as a natural child, and no others, she is concluded by the judgment rendered by the probate court, and cannot enforce, in this action, the rights of a pretermitted child.

But if the contract with the Utheims expressly provided not only that plaintiff should be adopted by them, but also that she should receive their property, or a child's share thereof, at their death, a different question is presented. Under such a contract, the rights of plaintiff would not depend upon the will, nor upon the laws of descent, but would be fixed and determined by the contract. Such rights attach to the property of the decedent by virtue of the express contract made by him in his lifetime; and create, or at least may create, a claim of title to the property adverse to the title thereto given by will or by the laws of descent. The determination and enforcement of such rights is ordinarily beyond the jurisdiction of the probate court; and they are unaffected by a decree of the probate court determining the devolution of the property of the decedent, at least unless they have been submitted to that court for determination. Mousseau v. Mousseau, 40 Minn. 236, 41 N. W. 977; Haataja v. Saarenpaa, 118 Minn. 255, 136 N. W. 871; Svanburg v. Fosseen, 75 Minn. 350, 43 L.R.A. 427, 74 Am. St. Rep. 490, 78 N. W. 4; Laird v. Vila, 93 Minn. 45, 106 Am. St. Rep. 420, 100 N. W. 656.

It is true that such contracts were established and enforced in probate proceedings in Kleeberg v. Schrader, 69 Minn. 136, 72 N. W. 59, and Fiske v. Lawton, 124 Minn. 85, 144 N. W. 455; but in each of these cases the claimant voluntarily presented his claim to the probate court, and the property involved consisted wholly of personal property in the hands of the administrator over whom that court had full control. Where the property involved consists of real estate, the probate court has no jurisdiction to determine contested adverse claims thereto, asserted by one whose rights do not rest upon a will or the laws of descent, against those in whom a will or the laws of descent have vested the title to such property. See the cases above cited, and also Caron v. Old Reliable Gold Min. Co. 12 N. M. 211, 78 Pac. 63, 6 Ann. Cas. 874, and cases cited in note appended thereto. The following excerpt from Haataja v. Saarenpaa, 118 Minn. 255, 136 N. W. 871, applies with equal force to the present case: "While it is true, as insisted by the defendants, that the probate courts have exclusive original jurisdiction over the estates of decedents, and decrees within their jurisdiction are binding until set aside by such courts themselves or reversed on appeal, and are not subject to collateral attack for want of jurisdiction not appearing on the face of the record, it is equally true that these rules do not apply to the instant case; such jurisdiction being purely for the purpose of administration. The legal title to the land in controversy was in Herman Hardy at the time of his death, and, he dying intestate, the jurisdiction of the probate court extended to the determination of who were his creditors and to whom the estate passed under the statute upon his death. Claims of parties against the land, not depending upon the law of descent, were not involved in the administration of the estate, and the probate court did not and could not determine the question as to whether the deceased had or had not forfeited his title as to this plaintiff. The decrees of the probate court in no wise determined the rights or duties of the deceased or the defendants towards this plaintiff, growing out of the contract under which the legal title to the land was acquired. State ex rel.

Union Nat. Bank v. Probate Ct. 103 Minn. 325, 115 N. W. 173, and cases cited; 2 Dunnell, Minn. Dig. § 7779."

If it appears from the complaint that, at the death of Anfin Utheim, plaintiff was entitled to receive his property, or a child's portion thereof, by virtue of the contract, independent of the laws of descent, she has the right to enforce such contract in the present action notwithstanding the final decree rendered by the probate court.

The remaining question is whether it appears from the complaint that the Utheims contracted to give plaintiff a specified portion of their property. The allegations contained in the complaint consist largely of statements of evidentiary facts rather than statements of ultimate, issuable facts. It nowhere states that either of the Utheims agreed, as a part of the contract, to give plaintiff their property or a specified portion thereof. It alleges that after plaintiff learned that the Utheims were not her parents, they repeatedly made statements to her to the effect that she was their adopted child and heir and "that their property would go to her on their death;" that they made and signed a writing in the church record that she was their adopted child and heir; and that, while Marith Utheim was on her deathbed, Anfin Utheim promised to "continue to treat plaintiff as his child and make her his heir." It would seem to be a fair inference from these statements and from all the other facts and circumstances that the Utheims understood and intended that plaintiff should occupy the same position in their family, and have the same right to inherit, as a natural child. Alleging the making of these statements cannot fairly be construed as alleging that the Utheims had made an irrevocable contract to give plaintiff other and greater rights in their property than a natural child would possess, and had deprived themselves of the power to dispose of their property by will. So far as the complaint discloses, the agreement between plaintiff's parents and the Utheims contemplated only that plaintiff should be adopted by the Utheims, and contained no provision whatever in respect to property rights. The Utheims took plaintiff into their family and reared her as their own child pursuant to such agreement; and we think the subsequent statements made by them had reference to this original agreement and the status to which plaintiff was entitled thereunder, and cannot be construed as establishing contractual rights in their property. Especially so in view of the rule that a claim for such contractual rights can be given effect only when clearly and satisfactorily established. To contract to give an adopted child greater rights than the law gives a natural child is contrary to common experience; and if a litigant bases his claim upon such a contract, he should allege such contract, and not leave it to be spelled out from allegations of the making of scattered statements which, in view of the ordinary course of human conduct, are more consistent with a different theory.

Order affirmed.

Annotation—Right of adopting parent to disinherit adopted child.

In general.

Since adoption was unknown to the common law, the rights of an adopted child are statutory, and vary as the statutes vary in the different jurisdictions. But, speaking generally, adoption means "to take into one's family the child of another and give him or her the rights, privileges, and duties of a child and heir." (Black's Law Dict.) No cases have been found in which the statute confers upon the adopted child greater rights than a child born in lawful wedlock would have. So, the right of an adopting parent to cut off the adopted child by will cannot be denied if he could cut off his own natural child. On the other hand, some statutes make exceptions to the rule that the adopted child has the same rights as a natural child, in which case the right to cut off the former under certain circumstances or by certain means is not measured by L.R.A.1916D.

the inability to cut off a natural child under the same circumstances or by the same means. What has been said thus far is upon the assumption that there was no contract, express or implied, which obligated the adopting parent to leave property to the child by will or to permit him to inherit. "The question of the rights of an adopted child under such contract is covered in the note to Baumann v. Kusian, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 756, and is not considered here. There are many cases there cited in which it is indirectly held or assumed that an adopting parent may, in the absence of a contract, cut off the adopted child by will, but those cases are not cited here. That note covers in a practical way the most important questions decided in ODENBREIT v. UTHEIM, ante, 421.

Where natural heir may be cut off.

Because of the fact that an adopted child's right to inherit from the adopting parent is the same as it would be if he were the natural child of the same person, he can be cut off from his share by the will of the adopting parent the same as if he were the natural child of the adopting parent. Steele v. Steele (1901) 161 Mo. 566, 61 S. W. 815; Grantham v. Gossett (1904) 182 Mo. 651, 81 S. W. 895 (an indirect holding); Fugat v. Allen (1906) 119 Mo. App. 183, 95 S. W. 980; Horton v. Troll (1914) 183 Mo. App. 677, 167 S. W. 1081; Gatch v. Burnes (1905) 132 Fed. 485 (the question was not directly before the court, and the statement refers to the law in Missouri. The decision was affirmed in (1905) 70 C. C. A. 357, 137 Fed. 781, and certiorari denied in (1905) 199 U. S. 605, 50 L. ed. 330, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 746; Pemberton v. Perrin (1913) 94 Neb. 718, 144 N. W. 164, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 68 (an incidental holding); Wright's Estate (1890) 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 492; Clark v. West (1903) 96 Tex. 437, 73 S. W. 797; Logan v. Lennix (1905) 40 Tex. Civ. App. 62, 88 S. W. 364; Masterson v. Harris (1915) — Tex. —, 174 S. W. 570. And see reference, supra, to note in which many cases are cited wherein this proposition is assumed, or held to be correct by necessary implication.

In Bowdlear v. Bowdlear (1873) 112 Mass. 184, the testator had provided for a later adopted child, referring to her by name as it was before the adoption. The suit was to permit her to take against the will the share that she would have taken if no will had been made. By necessary inference the court held that the adopting parent may cut off the adopted child with less than she would inherit in case of intestacy.

Where natural heir may not be cut off—where rights are same as those of natural heir.

If the parent does not have the power to cut off the share of a natural child, and the right of inheritance of an adopted child is the same as that of a natural child, of course, the adopted child cannot be cut off. Hosser's Succession (1885) 37 La. Ann. 839.

If the rights of inheritance from the parent are the same between natural and adopted children, anything that prevents the one from being cut off will likewise prevent the other. So, it has been held that the adoption of a child after the making of a will in which no provision has been made for the child operates as a revocation of the will. (Hilpire v. Claude (1899) 109 Iowa, 159, 46 L.R.A. 171, 77 Am. St. Rep. 524, 80 N. L.R.A.1916D

W. 332; Glascott v. Bragg (1901) 111 Wis. 605, 56 L.R.A. 258, 87 N. W. 853.) In these cases the statute was interpreted as giving the adopted child the same rights as those of a natural child. There are some cases cited under the next heading in which the statutes were interpreted as not making the adopted child equal in this respect to a natural child. So the opposite result is reached. But it will be noted that those cases, as well as these, support the principle here stated. The question of revocation of a will by the adoption of a child is not within the scope of this note, and its consideration is merely an incident to the question here considered.

Likewise it has been held that "the adoption of a child after the making of a will brings it within the provisions of a statute providing that on the birth of a child after making of a will, unless an intention to disinherit it shall appear from the will, the devises and legacies shall be abated in equal proportions to raise a portion for such child equal to that which such child would have been entitled to receive out of the estate of testator had he died intestate, where, by statute, an adopted child, for the purpose of inheritance, is declared to be in law the child of the parents the same as if he had been born to them in lawful wedlock." Flannigan v. Howard (1902) 200 Ill. 396, 59 L.R.A. 664, 93 Am. St. Rep. 201, 65 N. E. 782.

And it has also been held that failure to mention an adopted child in the will gives the child all the rights of a pretermitted heir (the same as if she were the natural child), so that she may obtain her share of the estate if a natural child could under like circumstances. Thomas v. Maloney (1910) 142 Mo. App. 193, 126 S. W. 522.

—where rights are less than those of natural child.

If the rights of the adopted child are in some respects less than those of a natural child, then this line of argument is not applicable, and the adopted child may be cut off, even though a natural child could not, under the same circumstances or by the same means, be cut off. For example, it has been held that the adopted child is cut off by the will, of the adopting parent made before the adoption, in which no provision is made for it (see cases cited under preceding heading, where a different result is reached under almost identical statutes, which were interpreted as giving the adopted child the same rights as those of a natural heir; observe that the question of revocation of a will by the subsequent adoption of a child is not the question that is here annotated), —where a statute provides that “if, after the making of a will, the testator shall have born to him legitimate issue, who shall survive him, or shall have posthumous issue, then such will shall be deemed revoked, unless provision shall have been made in such will for such issue,” even though by the general statutes the right of an adopted child to inherit would be, in the absence of the statute just quoted, the same as that of a natural child, Davis v. Fogle (1890) 124 Ind. 41, 7 L.R.A. 485, 23 N. E. 860;

—where a statute provides that marriage and issue shall operate as a revocation of a will made prior thereto, there being in this case a marriage and adoption, but no birth of issue, Re Comassi (1895) 107 Cal. 1, 28 L.R.A. 414, 40 Pac. 15;

—whereby statute the birth of a child, after the parent's will is made in which no provision is made for the child, revokes the will, and the general statutes give to the adopted child the same rights as a natural child except in certain events having no reference to the revocation of wills, Re Gregory (1893) 15 Misc. 407, 37 N. Y. Supp. 925;

—where the statute provided that “any person desirous to adopt a child, so as to make it capable of inheriting his estate, real and personal, or to change the name of one previously adopted, may make a declaration in writing; . . . which, being acknowledged by the declarant before the probate judge of the county of his residence, . . . has the effect to make such child capable of inheriting such estate of the declarant, and of changing its name to the one stated in the declaration,” Russell v. Russell

(1887) 84 Ala. 48, 3 So. 900. (The question of revocation of the will by the birth of a child later was not before the court, as two thirds of the estate was left to testator's children; and it was held that the later adopted child was not included in the term “children”); —where a statute provides that, “when any person shall make his last will and testament and afterwards shall marry or have a child or children not provided for in such will, and die, leaving a widow and child, or either a widow or child or children, although such child or children be born after the death of their father, every such person so far as shall regard the widow or child or children after-born, shall be deemed and construed to die intestate and such widow, child or children shall be entitled to such purparts, shares and dividends of the estate real and personal of the deceased, as if he had actually died without any will.” Goldstein v. Hammell (1912) 236 Pa. 305, 84 Atl. 772, affirming (1912) 49 Pa. Super. Ct. 39.

Remedy as pretermitted heir.

Assuming that there was a legal adoption and that there was no contract in addition thereto, as the court in ODENBREIT v. UTHEIM, ante, 421, assumes or holds, the remedy of an adopted child as a pretermitted heir would be, generally speaking, the same as that of a natural child. So the court held. What the remedies of a pretermitted heir are, is discussed in note to Lowery v. Hawker, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1143; and some cases, on right of children omitted by testator, are cited in note in 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 966. These questions are not within the scope of the present note, but they are decisive on remedy of an adopted child as a pretermitted heir after a concession that the remedies are the same as those of a natural heir. J. W. M.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

JAMES JOYCE, Appt.,

v.

VILLAGE OF JANESVILLE et al., Respts.

(— Minn. —, 155 N. W. 1067.)

Injunction — nuisance — discharge of sewage.

1. In this action to enjoin the defendant village and its officers from discharging sewage upon plaintiff's land, the court found that a ditch maintained by the village for surface drainage collected the overflow from cesspools, sinks, and septic tanks, and, through a tile drain constructed by the village, discharged the same together with surface waters upon and over plaintiff's land to its detriment and injury. It was also found that the village officers had no knowledge of the discharge of sewage into the ditch, and that the village was not responsible therefor. It is held:

The invasion of plaintiff's lands as found by the court constituted a nuisance entit-

Note.—As to right of municipality to create a nuisance by pollution at point where its sewers discharge, see notes to Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury, 48 L.R.A.

Headnotes by HOLT, J.
L.R.A.1916D.

ling plaintiff to an injunction against its continuance by the village.

For other cases, see Nuisances, II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — notice.

2. That, if notice was necessary before suit, the officers of the village had knowledge and notice thereof, and the finding to the contrary is not sustained by the evidence, nor was the defense of want of notice made.

For other cases, see Nuisances, II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Municipal corporation — creation of nuisance — relief.

3. If a municipality invades private property and creates a nuisance thereon, the injured party is entitled to relief, and it is immaterial how or by what means the municipality or its officers caused the injury. For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, III. g, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — notice of nuisance — service.

4. When the main purpose of a suit is to enjoin a city or village from maintaining a private nuisance, the written notice prescribed by § 1786, Gen. Stat. 1913, need not be served before suit. Such action is not predicated upon negligence of the municipality or its officers.

For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, III. g, 5, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Nuisance — remedy.

5. For a continuing nuisance there is no adequate remedy at law.

For other cases, see Nuisances, II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 21, 1916.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Waseca County denying new trial of an action brought to enjoin defendants from discharging sewage and filth upon plaintiff's lands. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Henry M. Gallagher, for appellant:

The defendant village maintains in one of its public streets a drain or sewer, and the act of emptying the contents of said drain or sewer, consisting of sewage, decomposed matter, filth, offal, and other matters complained of, constitutes a nuisance, of which it had notice both constructive and actual.

29 Cyc. 1171, 1180, 1233-1235; Ball v. Nye, 99 Mass. 582, 97 Am. Dec. 56; Price v. Oakfield Highland Creamery Co. 87 Wis.

691; Georgetown v. Com. 61 L.R.A. 694; State v. Concordia, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1050; and McLaughlin v. Hope, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 137; and later cases, McDaniel v. Cherryvale, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 389; Bird v. Grand Rapids, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 473; and Parish v. Yorkville, L.R.A.1915A, 282. As to prescriptive right of municipality or individual to pollute stream, see note to Miles L.R.A.1916D.

536, 24 L.R.A. 333, 58 N. W. 1039; Exley v. Southern Cotton Oil Co. 151 Fed. 101; Dierks v. Highway Comrs. 142 Ill. 197, 31 N. E. 496; Reid v. Atlanta, 73 Ga. 523; Batcher v. Staples, 120 Minn. 86, 139 N. W. 140; 28 Cyc. 1293, 1323, 1331, 1334, 1335; O'Brien v. St. Paul, 18 Minn. 176, Gil. 163; Dyer v. St. Paul, 27 Minn. 457, 8 N. W. 272; McClure v. Red Wing, 28 Minn. 186, 9 N. W. 767; Winchell v. Waukesha, 110 Wis. 101, 84 Am. St. Rep. 902, 85 N. W. 668; Carmichael v. Texarkana, 94 Fed. 561; Tate v. St. Paul, 56 Minn. 527, 45 Am. Rep. 501, 58 N. W. 158; Seifert v. Brooklyn, 101 N. Y. 136, 54 Am. Rep. 664, 4 N. E. 321; Seymour v. Cummins, 119 Ind. 148, 5 L.R.A. 126, 21 N. E. 549; Manning v. Lowell, 130 Mass. 21; Demby v. Kingston, 60 Hun, 294, 14 N. Y. Supp. 601, affirmed in 133 N. Y. 538, 30 N. E. 1148; Mansfield v. Bristol, 76 Ohio St. 270, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 806, 118 Am. St. Rep. 852, 81 N. E. 631, 10 Ann. Cas. 767; Stoddard v. Saratoga Springs, 22 N. Y. S. R. 215, 4 N. Y. Supp. 745; Gould v. Rochester, 105 N. Y. 46, 12 N. E. 275; Bonner v. Welborn, 7 Ga. 312; Southern R. Co. v. Cook, 106 Ga. 453, 32 S. E. 585; Isham v. Broderick, 89 Minn. 397, 95 N. W. 224, 14 Am. Neg. Rep. 112; Aldrich v. Wetmore, 56 Minn. 20, 57 N. W. 221; Bartlett v. Siman, 24 Minn. 448; Barton v. Syracuse, 36 N. Y. 54; Howe v. Plainfield, 41 N. H. 134; District of Columbia v. Gray, 6 App. D. C. 314; McCarthy v. Syracuse, 46 N. Y. 194; Arndt v. Cullman, 132 Ala. 540, 90 Am. St. Rep. 922, 31 So. 478; Rowe v. Portsmouth, 56 N. H. 292, 22 Am. Rep. 464; Vanderslice v. Philadelphia, 103 Pa. 102; Nichols v. Boston, 98 Mass. 39, 93 Am. Dec. 132; Whipple v. Fair Haven, 63 Vt. 221, 21 Atl. 533; Blake v. Bedford, — Iowa, —, 151 N. W. 74; Willis v. St. Joseph, 184 Mo. App. 428, 171 S. W. 27; Cunningham v. Thief River Falls, 84 Minn. 21, 86 N. W. 763, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 106.

The natural drainage and the natural flow of the surface waters would not carry all of the water to plaintiff's property that is deposited there by the drain in question, and the village is liable for depositing surface water upon plaintiff's property which would not otherwise have gone there.

O'Neill v. St. Paul, 104 Minn. 494, 116 N. W. 114; O'Brien v. St. Paul, 25 Minn.

City v. Board of Health, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 589.

As to character of claims within statute or ordinance requiring notice or presentation as a condition of municipal liability, see note to Henry v. Lincoln, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 174, and see especially page 186 of that note as to suits to enjoin a nuisance.

331, 33 Am. Rep. 470; Pye v. Mankato, 36 Minn. 373, 1 Am. St. Rep. 671, 31 N. W. 863; Robbins v. Willmar, 71 Minn. 407, 73 N. W. 1097; Chapman v. Rochester, 110 N. Y. 273, 1 L.R.A. 296, 6 Am. St. Rep. 366, 18 N. E. 88.

Plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law, and injunctive relief should be granted.

United States Freehold Land & Emigration Co. v. Gallegos, 32 C. C. A. 470, 61 U. S. App. 13, 89 Fed. 773; Beach, Inj. 1129-1146; Tallman v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 121 N. Y. 119, 8 L.R.A. 173, 23 N. E. 1134; Uline v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 101 N. Y. 98, 54 Am. Rep. 661, 4 N. E. 536; Galway v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 128 N. Y. 132, 13 L.R.A. 788, 28 N. E. 479; Evans v. Ross, 2 Cal. Unrep. 543, 8 Pac. 88; Barrett v. Mt. Greenwood Cemetery Asso. 159 Ill. 385, 31 L.R.A. 109, 50 Am. St. Rep. 168, 42 N. E. 891; People v. St. Louis, 10 Ill. 351, 48 Am. Dec. 339; Whipple v. Fair Haven, 63 Vt. 221, 21 Atl. 533; Wahle v. Reinbach, 76 Ill. 322; Metropolitan City R. Co. v. Chicago, 96 Ill. 620; Dwight v. Hayes, 150 Ill. 273, 41 Am. St. Rep. 367, 37 N. E. 218; Robb v. LaGrange, 158 Ill. 21, 42 N. E. 77; Wood, Nuisances, 778; Bischof v. Merchants Nat. Bank, 75 Neb. 838, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 486, 106 N. W. 996.

Messrs. L. D. Rogers and Moonan & Moonan, for respondents:

Plaintiff is not entitled to recover, because of the failure to give the notice required by law.

Frasch v. New Ulm, 130 Minn. 41, L.R.A. 1915E, 749, 153 N. W. 121; Diamond Iron Works v. Minneapolis, 129 Minn. 267, 152 N. W. 647.

Respondent is not liable for surface water carried by the drain.

Rieck v. Schamanski, 117 Minn. 25, 134 N. W. 298; Sheechan v. Flynn, 59 Minn. 436, 26 L.R.A. 632, 61 N. W. 462; Flesner v. Steinbruck, 89 Neb. 129, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1055, 130 N. W. 1040; Miller v. Newport News, 101 Va. 432, 44 S. E. 712; St. Paul & D. R. Co. v. Duluth, 56 Minn. 494, 23 L.R.A. 88, 45 Am. St. Rep. 491, 58 N. W. 159; Valparaiso v. Hagen, 153 Ind. 337, 48 L.R.A. 707, 74 Am. St. Rep. 305, 54 N. E. 1062; Barnard v. Sherley, 135 Ind. 547, 24 L.R.A. 568, 41 Am. St. Rep. 454, 34 N. E. 600, 35 N. E. 117.

Failure to abate a nuisance created by private parties gives no cause of action.

4 Dill. Mun. Corp. 1628; Davis v. Montgomery, 51 Ala. 139, 23 Am. Rep. 545; Cain v. Syracuse, 95 N. Y. 83.

Respondent was not liable for acts of private individuals.

28 Cyc. 1331, 1332; Noble v. St. Albans, 56 Vt. 522; Chipman v. Palmer, 77 N. Y. L.R.A.1916D.

51, 33 Am. Rep. 566; Warden v. South Pasadena, 168 Cal. 612, 143 Pac. 776; Batcher v. Staples, 120 Minn. 86, 139 N. W. 140.

Plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law and an injunction will not be granted where there is a speedy and adequate remedy at law.

Vanderburgh v. Minneapolis, 93 Minn. 81, 100 N. W. 668; Bolton v. McShane, 67 Iowa, 207, 25 N. W. 135; Goodrich v. Moore, 2 Minn. 61, Gil. 49, 72 Am. Dec. 74; Cooper v. Detroit, 42 Mich. 584, 4 N. W. 262; Hopkins v. Keller, 16 Neb. 569, 20 N. W. 874; Council Bluffs v. Stewart, 51 Iowa, 385, 1 N. W. 628.

Holt, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The action is brought to enjoin the defendant village and its officers from discharging sewage and filth upon plaintiff's lands. Some damages are also claimed. The court made findings and directed judgment in favor of defendant. The appeal is from the order denying a new trial.

It appears that the village of Janesville contains about 1,200 inhabitants, and is located on high ground east of the valley which serves as an outlet to Lake Elysian. This valley used to be an extensive bog often submerged, but the whole is now in a fair way of being reclaimed because of the public drainage put through there a few years ago, and the land is now adapted for pasture, hay, and even for field crops. Some six months before this suit was brought plaintiff bought 1½ acres of land on the edge of the bog. This piece of land adjoins a highway on the westerly boundary line of the village. When plaintiff made the purchase he knew that the drain herein referred to, discharged offensive matters upon the land.

The complaint proceeds on the theory that the village commits a continuous trespass by discharging, through and by means of a ditch and tile drain, sewage and filth upon plaintiff's property. At the trial plaintiff admitted that it was not claimed that any injury resulted from the mere surface water cast upon his land by means of this drainage system of the village. From the court's findings it appears that in 1910 the village constructed a tile drain from block 13 in a northwesterly direction, thence west along First street, thence across such street down to Second street, and westerly on said street to within a few feet of plaintiff's land; that prior to the construction of the drain large quantities of surface water accumulated on block 13 and adjacent blocks; that the natural drainage from the village and these blocks west toward and upon plaintiff's land; and that this tile drain does not increase, but merely accelerates, the flow of such surface water. We now quote the part from the findings which will adequately disclose the matters which must control this decision, viz.:

"That said tile drain connects at its place of beginning with an open ditch, and that in blocks 11 and 14 of the said original town some private individuals have constructed cesspools, and that the overflow from said cesspools is conducted by natural and artificial drains, and empties into the said open ditch, and thence into said tile drain, and that in blocks 11, 14, and 32 some private individuals allow and permit considerable filth to discharge from said blocks to the alleys and streets adjacent, and to be conducted by natural and artificial drains into said open ditch, and thence into said tile drain. The said open ditch and said tile drain were constructed solely for the purpose of taking care of the surface waters, and are necessary for the protection of the health and well-being of the inhabitants of the defendant village, and that the said acts of said private individuals in permitting their cesspools to overflow and said filth to discharge from said blocks 11, 14, and 32 into said open ditch and tile drain were wholly without the knowledge, consent, or permission of these defendants or any of them.

"That the overflow from said cesspools and said filth from said blocks 11, 14, and 32 pass through said tile drain and to and upon the plaintiff's said lands, but the same does so without the knowledge, consent, sanction, or permission of these defendants or any of them.

"That the flow of the surface waters upon the plaintiff's said land has not in any manner been increased by said tile drain, but has only been accelerated, and the plaintiff's said land has not in any manner been damaged by the flow of said surface waters or by any acts of these defendants or any of them.

"That the overflow from said cesspools and the discharge of said filth upon the plaintiff's said land through said tile drain are injurious and detrimental to said lands and are damaging to the plaintiff, but that said defendants are not responsible therefor.

"That the said lands and premises of said plaintiff are valuable, but that said defendant village is solvent and amply able to pay for any damages done to the plaintiff's said property."

It is thus seen that the open ditch is permitted to collect a quantity of filth and sewage which with the surface water is discharged upon plaintiff's land to its detriment; in fact, a nuisance is created thereon within the definition of § 8085, Gen. Stat. 1913. True, the court finds that this is not done with the knowledge, sanction, or permission of the village or its officers, and that neither the village nor its officers are responsible therefor; but the assignments of error challenge the correctness of these findings. The conclusion of law denying relief to plaintiff is also questioned.
L.R.A.1916D

We are unable to reconcile the finding that there was discharged from the tile drain upon plaintiff's property to its detriment a quantity of polluted matter, with the finding that this occurred without the knowledge or sanction of defendants. The evidence is conclusive that upon plaintiff's complaint all the officers of the defendant village did investigate the matter; some of them going repeatedly for that purpose to the outlet of the drain. It is apparent that the village furnishes its inhabitants with a water supply; for the evidence discloses that several homes and business buildings are equipped with modern water and toilet conveniences, and that the overflow or discharge from sinks, cesspools, and septic tanks necessarily must reach and gather in the open ditch dug and kept in repair by the village. Indeed, the men who cleaned it out testified to tile drains from these private cesspools or septic tanks opening directly into the ditch. We think it clear that prior to the institution of this action the village, through its officers, had full knowledge of the situation; knew that the filth from the private cesspools collected in the ditch, as found by the court, and that the same was cast by means of the tile drain upon plaintiff's land, there creating a nuisance. However that may be, we do not think that a municipality which, by some construction or means under its control, invades the premises of a person or creates a nuisance thereon, can defeat an action to enjoin or abate the trespass or nuisance by allegation or proof that it or its officers had no knowledge thereof. This may not always hold true in actions at law for damages. But in this case a complete answer to defendant's contention is that no attempt was made by pleading or proof to oppose the injunction sought on the ground that there had been no notice or request to abate the nuisance prior to suit. Even a continuance of a nuisance waives the defense of want of notice to abate if he bases his defense upon other grounds than want of notice. Bartlett v. Siman, 24 Minn. 448. Defendant's counsel contends that no nuisance was created. It is undoubtedly true that the court could properly have so found, but the finding is to the contrary. This court can neither disregard a material finding of the trial court nor substitute another for the one made.

If by means of this drain a nuisance was cast upon plaintiff's land, he is entitled to injunctive relief, unless the village is not to be held responsible for the filth and waste discharged from private septic tanks, cesspools, sinks, or outhouses into its ditch and drain. On the proposition of responsibility for a nuisance created upon another's property, it does not seem to us material whether it be done by means of an ordinary city sewer, or by means of an open ditch and drain like the present. To the knowledge of the defendant the ditch collects sewage. It was so located that of necessity it must gather all discharges from cesspools and all offal from the village. The counsel for respondents relies upon Noble v. St. Albans, 58 Vt. 522, where it was held that the village was not liable in damages by reason of sewage discharged upon the plaintiff's property from a culvert designed to carry the surface water from one side of the street to the other, where it did not appear that the village knew that a private owner had connected his toilet with the culvert. No relief against a continuance of the pollution was asked. Here, as we have stated, the finding that the village had no knowledge is not warranted by the evidence. Valparaiso v. Hagen, 153 Ind. 337, 48 L.R.A. 707, 74 Am. St. Rep. 305, 54 N. E. 1062, is not an authority here; for there the sewer emptied into a water course, and the question was whether there was an unnecessary fouling of a stream which was the only means for getting rid of the sewage. Here the objection is that the sewage is not carried to the stream which ought to be the proper outlet. Chipman v. Palmer, 77 N. Y. 51, 33 Am. Rep. 566, and Warden v. South Pasadena, 168 Cal. 612, 143 Pac. 776, cited by defendants, do not seem to be in point.

As to the overflow from the cesspools, septic tanks, etc.—that is, matters other than surface waters—gathered up by defendant's ditch and drain and cast upon plaintiff's land in injurious quantities, the same must be regarded as amounting to acts of positive trespass, coming under the fifth division of principles governing the liability of municipal corporations for injuries to private property, as laid down by Justice Mitchell in Pye v. Mankato, 36 Minn. 373, 1 Am. St. Rep. 671, 31 N. W. 863, and as applied in Batcher v. Staples, 120 Minn. 86, 139 N. W. 140. A case very similar upon the facts is that of Ulmen v. Mt. Angel, 57 Or. 547, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 140, 112 Pac. 529, where the syllabus reads: "A municipal corporation may be enjoined from emptying a drain which collects surface water from the streets and sink drainage from houses, into a dry gully bordering on the property of a citizen, where it creates an offensive odor and percolates to some extent into his well, and pollutes the water therein; and the fact that the water in the well was polluted to some extent from other sources is immaterial."

The following authorities sustain the right to relief of the owner of premises upon which a municipality deposits sewage under circumstances somewhat similar to those in the instant case: Robb v. La Grange, 158 Ill. 21, 42 N. E. 77; Chapman v. Rochester, 110 N. Y. 273, 1 L.R.A. 296, 6 Am. St. Rep. 366, 18 N. E. 88; Demby v. Kingston, 60 Hun, 294, 14 N. Y. Supp. 601, affirmed in 133 N. Y. 538, 30 N. E. 1148. In the last-named case the offending sewer was a storm-water sewer intended to take care of surface water only. But, after the city obtained a water supply, private owners connected their closets and waste pipes with the storm sewer. There, as here, no formal leave of the city was obtained to connect. There the court refused to hold that plaintiff was not entitled to recover damages for injuries prior to the knowledge by the city of the condition causing the injury. The appellate court said: "We think it may be presumed, in support of the verdict, that the city, upon the introduction of water, consented to the connection by private parties of their waste pipes with the sewer."

There, as here, it was shown that one of the aldermen of the municipality connected a waste pipe with the sewer. There also it was urged that the injunction was improper because the city could not lawfully enter upon the premises of the parties who discharged the filth into the sewer and stop it, but the court suggested the city could extend the sewer to the open stream.

Defendants now claim that plaintiff cannot prevail for failure to serve a notice upon the village prior to suit, as provided by § 1786, Gen. Stat. 1913, and which under Diamond Iron Works v. Minneapolis, 129 Minn. 267, 152 N. W. 647, and Frasch v. New Ulm, 130 Minn. 41, L.R.A. 1915E, 749, 153 N. W. 121, is a condition precedent to maintenance of a suit. Neither by demurrer nor answer did the village attempt to raise this defense, nor does it appear to have been suggested to the trial court. But, as already stated, the basis for relief is not negligence of the village or any of its officers. As said in Price v. Oakfield Highland Creamery Co. 87 Wis. 536, 24 L.R.A. 333, 58 N. W. 1039: "It is the invasion of the plaintiff's premises with an offensive foreign substance by means of artificial appliances,"—the open ditch and tile drain of the village.

That the offensive sewage would not have reached plaintiff's land but for the drain is quite apparent; for the evidence shows that to drain the open ditch and low land in block 13 the tile, in going through the higher ground or the ridge which prevented the flow to the west, had to be laid as deep as 4 feet below the surface. Nor is this action one for damages, and that seems to be the sort of action referred to in the section mentioned. The damages here asked are merely an incident to the main purpose of the suit, which is to prohibit a continuing nuisance upon plaintiff's property. To the maintenance in equity of such a suit against a municipal corporation, we do not think it essential that a written notice be first given. Where a written notice is required, no suit can be begun until ten days after the notice is given, and it is unreasonable to suppose that the legislature intended to withhold for any time whatever the ordinary and proper remedy where a city or village is causing irreparable injury to private property, or is unlawfully imposing a nuisance thereon.

Upon the findings it cannot be said that plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law. The nuisance found is a continuing one. Upon this record we are not concerned with the amount of damages or the proper assessment thereof.

We feel constrained to grant a new trial. Since the findings of fact are somewhat conflicting, the case is not one wherein this court should direct a modification of the conclusions of law.

Order reversed, and a new trial granted.

NEVADA SUPREME COURT.

ELY WATER COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

WHITE PINE COUNTY, Resp.

(— Nev. —, 151 Pac. 335.)

Water — franchise — water for sprinkling lawn.

1. A provision in the franchise of a water company requiring it to furnish water free of charge for sprinkling streets and for the courthouse and other public buildings does not include the duty to furnish water to sprinkle the courthouse lawn free of charge. For other cases, see Waters, III. b, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — absence of provision for charge — effect.

2. Absence of a provision in the franchise of a water company of a rate to be charged for water furnished the public in excess of what is required to be furnished free of charge does not prevent the recovery by the water company of the fair value of the water so furnished.

For other cases, see Waters, III. b, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(August 31, 1915.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for White Pine County in defendant's favor in an action to recover compensation for water furnished for defendant's use in accordance with certain provisions of a water franchise granted to plaintiff. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note.—As to what are city or public purposes within contract requiring water company to furnish water for such purposes, see note to Water Supply Co. v. Albuquerque. 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 439. L.R.A.1916D.

Messrs. Brown & Belford and J. M. Lockhart for appellant.

Mr. Anthony Jurich for respondent.

NORCROSS, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This appeal presents the question of the liability of White Pine county to the appellant for water furnished the respondent county during the year 1913 for sprinkling the lawn surrounding the courthouse building in the town of Ely. The question involves the construction of certain provisions of the franchise granted to the appellant corporation by the legislature of 1907, under an act approved February 26, 1907 (Stat. 1907, chap. 25), entitled: "An Act Entitled 'An Act Granting to the Ely Water Company the Right, Privilege, and Franchise to Supply the Towns of Ely and Ely City, in White Pine County, State of Nevada, and the Additions of Said Towns, with Water for Domestic, Municipal, Fire Protection, Irrigation and Other Purposes, and to Charge Rental Thereof, and Ratifying and Confirming a Certain Grant of a Water Franchise Made to the Said Ely Water Company on the Sixteenth Day of February, 1907, by the Board of County Commissioners of Said County and by the Said Town of Ely, and Other Matters Relating Thereto.'"

By the terms of the third provision of the franchise the appellant corporation was required to furnish "free of cost to the said town" 12 fire hydrants for fire purposes, and for other hydrants required, "over the aforesaid twelve free hydrants, the said town of Ely shall pay a rental of $5 per month." By the terms of the seventh provision it was provided: That the appellant corporation "shall furnish and supply water to said town for sprinkling wagons during the dry season of the year for the purpose of sprinkling the streets of said town, free of any cost to said town. . . ."

By the eighth provision it is provided: That the appellant corporation "shall furnish and supply water to the courthouse, hospitals, city hall, and schoolhouses in said town and its additions free of any cost to said town, or its additions, or to said county of White Pine, state of Nevada, during the life of this instrument; Provided, that the cost of all taps, pipes, and plumbing necessary to connect said public buildings with mains or pipes . . . shall be borne by said town, or its additions, or by said county, as the case may be."

The sixth provision of the charter provides: That the appellant corporation "shall charge not more than $6 per season for sprinkling one lot of the dimensions of 100 feet by 25 feet or less, and for the sprinkling of each adjacent lot or portion thereof owned by the same person, not more than $5 per season."

The amount of the claim for sprinkling the courthouse grounds, which covered an entire block of about 4 acres, was determined by estimating the number of lots said grounds, exclusive of the area covered by the building itself, would make of the dimensions referred to in the sixth provision of the franchise, supra, and applying thereto the rate in force in the town of Ely for sprinkling in accordance with the said sixth provision.

The lower court held, and we think correctly, that "the clause providing for free water for the courthouse does not carry with it free water for the grounds. . . . On the other hand, the act provides that the water company may furnish water for municipal and irrigation purposes and to charge rental therefor."

Counsel upon either side of this case have been able to find but few authorities that might be considered in point upon the question whether a provision in a franchise requiring the furnishing of free water to a courthouse, schoolhouse, or other municipal public building, would also include the furnishing of free water for the grounds thereof. The only two cases cited that are analogous to the one here presented are the following: Birmingham v. Waterworks Co. — Ala. —, 42 So. 10; Henderson Water Co. v. Henderson Graded Schools, 151 N. C. 171, 65 S. E. 927. These cases support the construction placed upon the provision of the charter by the court below. Whatever doubt might have existed in case the proviso of the eighth provision of the charter had not been included is, we think, removed by the language of such proviso, which refers to the courthouse, hospital, etc., as "said public buildings."

While the court held that the appellant was not required to furnish free water for sprinkling the courthouse grounds, it was held that it was not entitled to recover, for the reason that no basis of charge for water so furnished was prescribed in the charter. The court construed the sixth provision of the charter, supra, as applying to town lots as platted on the official town plat, the blocks of the town being platted generally in lots of 25 by 100 feet, and not applicable to a block not so divided into lots—the block upon which the courthouse was located being not so platted. We need not, we think, determine whether this construction of the charter was correct.

Authority exists in support of the view taken by the court below, that where the charter fails to fix a rate applicable to the municipality no recovery can be had. Were the question entirely new in this state, we might be disposed to adopt the view of the learned trial judge. We think, however, that this court in the case of Virginia City Gas Co. v. Virginia, 3 Nev. 320, in which this court held that the gas company was entitled to recover from the city of Virginia "the fair value" of all gas furnished "in excess of that which the law made it incumbent on it to furnish," laid down a rule applicable to the case at bar. We think the rule applied in the Virginia City Case, supra, more just and equitable, both to the owner of the franchise and to the municipality, than that laid down by the authorities in support of the decision of the lower court. The municipality ought not to be put in the position of being deprived of water because of no specific provision in the charter specifying the rate the municipality should pay, and, upon the other hand, it would be equally unfair in many cases to expect a holder of a franchise to supply free water for the sprinkling of several acres of land in a region where water is scarce.

The Virginia City Case, supra, was not called to the attention of the court below, which would have undoubtedly followed the rule therein laid down, had its attention been directed to that case. The court found as a fact that the water furnished was of the value charged therefor, and it was stipulated in the court below that, if the appellant was entitled to recover at all, it was entitled to recover for the full amount alleged in the complaint.

The judgment is modified by allowing plaintiff and appellant also the amount sued for in its first cause of action, and, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

McCarran, J., concurs.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

ELYRIA SAVINGS & BANKING COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

WALKER BIN COMPANY.

(92 Ohio St. 406, 111 N. E. 147.)

Bank — liability on check.

1. By force of the provisions of § 8294, General Code, there is no liability on the part of a bank to the holder of a check unless and until it accepts or certifies the check.

For other cases, see Banks, IV. a, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. E.

Same — effect of payment.

2. Where a check is paid by a bank, which is the drawee thereof, on a forged indorsement, and there is stamped upon the check "paid," together with the date of the payment and the name of the bank, and the check is charged to the account of the drawer, this is not an acceptance of the check within the meaning of § 8294, and does not create a liability against the bank in favor of the true holder or payee.

For other cases, see Banks, IV. a, 3, b, (3), in Dig. 1-52 N. E.

(July 2, 1915.)

ERROR to the Court of Appeals for Lorain County to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on two bank checks. Reversed.

Statement by Newman, J.:

Defendant in error is the successor of the Walker Patent Pivoted Bin Company, and became the owner of all contracts, property, and rights of action of that company. One C. W. Smalley purchased from the Walker Patent Pivoted Bin Company certain store fixtures at the agreed price of $893, and in part payment thereof issued two checks of $155 each, payable to the order of R. W. McKain, manager of the company, and delivered them to one W. P. Sutherin, a salesman under McKain. These checks were received by plaintiff in error in the regular course of business through other banks, and were paid by it and charged to the account of Smalley. One check was paid September 10, 1909, and there was stamped on the face thereof with a rubber stamp the following: "The Elyria Savings & Banking Co. Paid Sep. 10 1909 E. M. Rice, Cashier." The other check was paid September 21st, and the stamping on this check is the same, with the exception of the date. The balance of the $893 was paid to the defendant in error, but it received no part of the proceeds of the two checks above mentioned; the indorsement of R. W. McKain, manager, thereon having been forged. Defendant in error brought an action against Smalley to recover this balance of $310 claimed to be due on account of the purchase of the store fixtures, and upon a hearing of this case on its merits judgment was rendered in favor of Smalley, the court holding that Sutherin had authority to receive the two checks, and that the delivery thereof to him canceled Smalley's obligation to the amount of the checks. Thereupon defendant in error brought this action against the banking company to recover the sum of $310, and interest, on account of the payment of these two checks upon a forged indorsement. The case was tried to a jury, and at the conclusion of the plaintiff's evidence a directed verdict was rendered in favor of plaintiff in error, and judgment was entered on this verdict. This judgment was reversed by the court of appeals upon the ground that the court of common pleas erred in directing a verdict for the banking company.

Headnotes by the Court.

Note.—The question whether the payment of a check on a forged indorsement amounts to an acceptance entitling the true holder to maintain an action against the drawee thereon is discussed in the annotation following Ballard v. Home Nat. Bank, L.R.A.1916C, 161. L.R.A.1916D.

Messrs. Ingersoll & Vandemark, for plaintiff in error:

There is no privity of contract between the drawee bank and the payee of a check until there is a signification on the part of the drawee bank to become liable to the payee of the check.

Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Metropolitan Nat. Bank, 54 Ohio St. 60, 31 L.R.A. 653, 56 Am. St. Rep. 700, 42 N. E. 700; Covert v. Rhodes, 48 Ohio St. 66, 27 N. E. 94; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 102 Va. 753, 47 S. E. 837; First Nat. Bank v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 343, 24 L. ed. 229; National Bank v. Berrall, 70 N. J. L. 757, 66 L.R.A. 599, 103 Am. St. Rep. 821, 58 Atl. 189, 1 Ann. Cas. 630; J. M. Houston Grocer Co. v. Farmers' Bank, 71 Mo. App. 132; Grammel v. Carmer, 55 Mich. 201, 54 Am. Rep. 363, 21 N. W. 418; Harrison v. Wright, 100 Ind. 515, 50 Am. Rep. 805; Thompson v. Bank of British N. A. 82 N. Y. 1; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Coates, 79 Mo. 168; Dickinson v. Coates, 79 Mo. 250, 49 Am. Rep. 228; National Bank v. Millard, 10 Wall. 152, 19 L. ed. 897.

Although the drawee bank pays the check upon a forged indorsement, such drawee bank is not liable as an acceptor under the negotiable instruments code.

Howard H. Clark & Co. v. Warren Sav. Bank, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 647; Rauch v. Bankers' Nat. Bank, 143 Ill. App. 625; John M. C. Marble Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 15 Cal. App. 347, 115 Pac. 59; Ballen v. Bank of Kremlin, 37 Okla. 112, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 621, 130 Pac. 539; Van Buskirk v. State Bank, 35 Colo. 142, 117 Am. St. Rep. 182, 83 Pac. 778; Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Metropolitan Nat. Bank, 54 Ohio St. 60, 31 L.R.A. 653, 56 Am. St. Rep. 700, 42 N. E. 700; New York Brick & Paving Co. v. Bronx Borough Bank, 42 Misc. 31, 85 N. Y. Supp. 557.

Messrs. D. B. Symons and F. M. Stevens, for defendant in error:

The fact that defendant received the checks through other banks, and never saw the person who originally cashed them, does not in the least degree lessen its duty to pay to the real payee or his order on his valid indorsement.

Dodge v. National Exch. Bank, 30 Ohio St. 8; Armstrong v. Pomeroy Nat. Bank, 46 Ohio St. 512, 6 L.R.A. 625, 15 Am. St. Rep. 655, 22 N. E. 866; Merrick v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 11 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 301, 8 Ohio N. P. 411, affirmed by Circuit Court, no report, March 9, 1901; Harmon v. Old Detroit Nat. Bank, 153 Mich. 73, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 514, 126 Am. St. Rep. 467, 116 N. W. 617; Graves v. American Exch. Bank, 17 N. Y. 205.

The mere right to receive a check, drawn to another, conveys no authority to indorse it.

Dodge v. National Exch. Bank, 30 Ohio St. 1, 20 Ohio St. 234, 5 Am. Rep. 648; State ex rel. Boston Woven Hose Co. v. Lewis, 6 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 221.

Plaintiff had the right to bring this action against defendant.

Dodge v. National Exch. Bank, supra; Pickle v. Muse (Pickle v. People's Nat. Bank) 88 Tenn. 390, 7 L.R.A. 93, 17 Am. St. Rep. 900, 12 S. W. 919; Chism v. First Nat. Bank, 96 Tenn. 644, 32 L.R.A. 778, 54 Am. St. Rep. 863, 36 S. W. 387; Seventh Nat. Bank v. Cook, 73 Pa. 483, 13 Am. Rep. 751; Saylor v. Bushong, 100 Pa. 23, 45 Am. Rep. 353; Merrick v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 8 Ohio N. P. 411.

Newman, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The checks in question, bearing the forged signature of McKain, manager, were cashed at Franklin, Pennsylvania, and were transmitted by a bank in that city through several other banks whose indorsements the checks bore when they were paid by plaintiff in error. For the purpose of this case, L.R.A.1916D.

however, the indorsements of the several banks may be disregarded, and the checks treated as though they were presented directly to plaintiff in error by the person who forged the signature of McKain, manager.

In 1902 the legislature of Ohio passed the negotiable instruments act. It follows generally the English bills of exchange act, and is substantially like the act adopted by practically all the states of the Union. It is entitled, "An Act to Establish a Law Uniform with the Laws of Other States on Negotiable Instruments." It is carried into the General Code, §§ 8106-8302. The courts of the country being in conflict in their decisions respecting negotiable instruments, the purpose of the passage of the act was to establish certain fixed rules governing negotiable instruments, and to bring about a uniform system of laws on the subject, and thereby do away with the confusion that had existed. In the adoption of the act the legislature intended to form a complete system of laws relating to negotiable instruments, and to cover the whole subject so far as it could be done by statute. In any case not provided for in the act, the rules of the law merchant govern. Section 8300. It follows, then, that, where a case is provided for, the statute must govern.

In the case here there is involved the right of the holder of a check to maintain an action against the drawee. If this point is specifically dealt with in the negotiable instruments act, the law on the subject should be ascertained by interpreting the language used in its provisions relating thereto. What the state of the law was previous to the adoption of the act need not be considered. Nor should earlier decisions of the court be resorted to if the provisions of the act are not of doubtful meaning. In fact, the act does not purport to be, nor is it, in every instance, a codification of the then existing law. Some of its provisions are declaratory of the existing law, while others alter and change the law as theretofore declared. In Rockfield v. First Nat. Bank, 77 Ohio St. 311, 14 L.R.A. 842, 83 N. E. 392, it was held that by force of certain provisions of the negotiable instruments act the law on the subject there under consideration was changed.

Section 8294 reads as follows: "A check does not of itself operate as an assignment of any part of the funds to the credit of the drawer with the bank, and the bank is not liable to the holder unless and until it accepts or certifies the check."

This, we think, is intended to cover the liability of a bank to the holder of a check, and he can recover from the bank only when he brings himself within the provisions of this statute. If a check is neither accepted nor certified, there is no liability on the part of the bank to the holder. There is no claim made that the checks in question here were certified. But it is insisted by counsel for defendant in error, and it was the holding of the court of appeals, that when the bank stamped, "The Elyria Savings & Banking Co. Paid Sep 10 1909 E. M. Rice, Cashier," and charged the same to the account of the drawer, there was an acceptance, and the banking company thereby became liable to the rightful holder. It is the settled law that a bank is obliged to pay on the order of the drawer to the person named in the check. It must follow the order with the utmost strictness. If it pay upon a forged indorsement, the check cannot be charged against the drawer, unless the bank; upon some principle of estoppel, or on account of some negligence chargeable to the drawer, might claim protection. So that, as between these two parties, the drawer and drawee, there was no payment. In the negotiable instruments act it is provided that the provisions applicable to a bill of exchange payable on demand apply to a check. Section 8290. Section 8237 provides that the acceptance of a bill of exchange is the signification of the drawee of his assent to the order of the drawer, but it further provides that the acceptance must be in writing and signed by the drawee, and it must not express that the drawee will perform his promise by any other means than the payment of the money. Under the negotiable instruments act acceptance means an acceptance completed by delivery or notification. Section 8295. Did the stamping of the checks in question amount to an acceptance as contemplated by this statute? Payment is the natural and legitimate end of a check. Acceptance is essentially different. As has been said, it is the beginning of the active career of the instrument, and there is added to its original vitality a new element of force and strength calculated to prolong its existence and widen its sphere of usefulness. Acceptance contemplates a promise on the part of the drawee to do something. Where there is an acceptance, a contractual relation arises between the drawee and the holder. The stamping of these two checks by the bank, and the charging of them to the account of the drawer, was certainly not an acceptance within the meaning of these provisions.

Counsel for defendant in error rely upon the case of Dodge v. National Exch. Bank, 20 Ohio St. 234, 5 Am. Rep. 648, and 30 Ohio St. 1, as decisive of the case at bar. In the Dodge Case, 30 Ohio St. 5, this language is used: "The paymaster, by drawing and delivering the check in question, in payment of plaintiff's voucher, set apart and appropriated for the plaintiff's use so much of his funds in defendant's hands as would be necessary for its payment. This act of appropriation the plaintiff conclusively ratified by bringing this action. The defendant also assented to this appropriation by accepting his check, by assuming to pay it, and by claiming and receiving credit from the drawer for its payment."

It was upon the theory that the drawing and delivering of the check operated as an assignment pro tanto of the funds of the drawer in the bank that the Dodge Case was decided. This doctrine was not recognized in a later Ohio case, Covert v. Rhodes, 48 Ohio St. 66, 27 N. E. 94, where it was held that a check does not of itself operate as an assignment of any part of the funds to the credit of the drawer with the bank. But whether or not that was the law in Ohio prior to the adoption of the negotiable instruments act is unimportant. It is not the law now. The rule announced in the Dodge Case has been discarded, and it is expressly provided in § 8294 that a check does not of itself operate as an assignment of any part of the funds to the credit of the drawer with the bank. In view of the provisions of the negotiable instruments act we cannot adhere to the rule announced in the Dodge Case.

Seventh Nat. Bank v. Cook, 73 Pa. 483, 13 Am. Rep. 751, and Pickle v. Muse (Pickle v. People's Nat. Bank) 88 Tenn. 380, 7 L.R.A. 93, 17 Am. St. Rep. 900, 12 S. W. 919, are cited by counsel for defendant in error in support of their contention. In these cases it was held that, where a bank pays on a forged indorsement, the true payee can maintain an action against the bank. At the time these cases were decided the negotiable instruments act had not been adopted by Pennsylvania or Tennessee, and we doubt very much whether the courts of those two states would follow this holding in the face of its provisions.

In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 102 Va. 753, 47 S. E. 837, the facts were very similar to those in the case here. The court interpreted certain sections of the Virginia Code which are identical with §§ 8237, 8290, and 8294, supra. The court used this language, which is in point here: "Now, if there be any virtue in that law, the checks in question did not assign to the holder the funds, or any part thereof, of their respective drawers on deposit with the defendant; nor could it have that effect unless and until the checks were certified, and § 185 expressly declares that the provisions of that act, with respect to bills of exchange payable on demand, shall apply with equal force to checks; and turning to § 132, already quoted, we find that the acceptance must be in writing and signed by the drawee in order to constitute a cause of action by the holder against the bank.

"This opinion might be greatly prolonged by citation of conflicting cases, and a discussion of the discordant views entertained by courts and text-writers of the greatest ability upon these questions; but the object, as we understand it, of the codification of the law with respect to negotiable instruments, was to relieve the courts of this duty, and to render certain and unambiguous that which had theretofore been doubtful and obscure, so that the business of the commercial world, largely transacted through the agency of negotiable paper, might be conducted in obedience to a written law emanating from a source whose authority admits of no question."

Counsel for defendant in error say that in the Virginia case it does not appear that the checks there were stamped as they were in the case at bar, and, had they been, a different conclusion might have been reached by the court. It does appear, however, that the amounts of the checks were charged to the account of the drawers, and the same returned on settlement of their accounts with the bank. The stamping of the two checks in the present case was simply a method adopted by the bank for canceling or extinguishing the checks. See also Howard H. Clark & Co. v. Warren Sav. Bank, 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 647.

We call attention to § 11225—1, General Code. This section was passed in 1911, several years after the adoption of the negotiable instruments act. It fixes the time within which an action may be brought against a bank on account of the payment on a forged or raised check. This language is used: "No bank which has paid and charged to the account of a depositor any money on a forged or raised check issued in the name of said depositor shall be liable to said depositor for the amount paid thereon unless," etc.

It is to be observed that the only liability mentioned is the liability of the bank to the depositor. No mention is made of the holder or payee of the forged check.

We are of the opinion that, when the legislature enacted § 8294, it intended to cover the subject of the liability of a bank to the holder of a check. It prescribed when and when only there is a liability to the holder. In the absence of the conditions therein prescribed, no right of action exists in favor of the holder. In the present case, the checks in question not having been certified or accepted within the meaning of § 8294, there was no right of action on the part of the defendant in error against the banking company, and the court of common pleas was correct in directing a verdict in favor of the latter company.

Judgment of the Court of Appeals reversed, and that of the Common Pleas affirmed.

Johnson, Donahue, and Matthias, JJ., concur.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

R. W. FREEMAN, Plff. in Err.,
v.

STATE BOARD OF MEDICAL EXAMINERS.

(— Okla. —, 154 Pac. 56.)

Parties — revocation of physician's license — state.

1. The state is not a necessary party to a proceeding before the state board of medical examiners to revoke the license of a physician.

Headnotes by RUMMONS, C.

Note. — As to grounds for revoking physician's license, see notes to Macomber v. State Bd. of Health, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 585; Munk v. Frink, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 439; State Medical Board v. McCrary, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 783; Richardson v. Simpson, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 911; and Chenoweth v. State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 958; and later case Aiton v. Board of Medical Examiners, L.R.A. 1915A, 691. L.R.A. 1916D.

For other cases, see Parties, II. a, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Physician — incurable disease.

2. In the second clause of § 6905, Rev. Laws 1910, defining "unprofessional conduct" of a physician as "... the obtaining of any fee on the assurance that an incurable disease can be permanently cured," the words, "incurable disease," mean any disease which has reached an incurable stage in the patient afflicted therewith, according to the then general state of knowledge of the medical profession.

For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, I. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — validity of statute.

3. The second clause of § 6905, Rev. Laws 1910, is valid, and defines an offense against professional conduct on the part of physicians.

For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, I. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — revocation of license — procedure.

4. The state board of medical examiners in a proceeding before it to revoke the license of a physician acts in an administrative, and not a judicial, capacity, and the same strictness in pleadings and practice is not required before it as before a judicial tribunal. It is sufficient if the accused is informed by the complaint of the wrong charged against him and the particular instances of its perpetration charged, and has an opportunity to defend against proof of such charges, and the proceedings are free from prejudice, fraud, or oppression.

For other cases, see Pleading, II. p. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — advertisement by physician.

5. An advertisement published by a physician held properly admitted in evidence against him upon a charge of obtaining a fee on the assurance that an incurable disease can be permanently cured by him, as tending to prove the assurance of permanent cure, where such assurance is denied by the physician.

For other cases, see Evidence, XI. l, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — finding without evidence.

6. It is error for the court to make a finding of fact upon a matter upon which all evidence was excluded, but, where the other findings of the court are supported by the evidence, and are sufficient to sustain the judgment of the court, such error is not so prejudicial as to warrant a reversal.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. m, 8, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — sufficiency.

7. Evidence considered, and held to sustain the judgment of the court.

For other cases, see Evidence, XII. k, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 7, 1915.)

ERROR to the District Court for Bryan County to review a judgment quashing a writ of certiorari to review the action of the State Board of Medical Examiners revoking petitioner's license as a physician. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hatchett & Ferguson, for plaintiff in error:

Section 4254 of the Revised Laws of 1909, making it a ground of the revocation of the certificate of a physician if he advertises his business with the use of grossly improbable statements calculated to mislead the public, is so indefinite and uncertain as to be void.

Hewitt v. State Medical Examiners, 148 Cal. 590, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315, 84 Pac. 39, 7 Ann. Cas. 750; Czarra v. Medical Supers. 25 App. D. C. 443; Matthews v. Murphy, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 750, 54 L.R.A. 415, 63 S. W. 735.

If there was anything in the advertisement of petitioner that was of an improbable nature calculated to deceive the public, L.R.A.1916D.

such should have been proved, even if the allegation had been properly made and the statute were constitutional.

Macomber v. State Bd. of Health, 28 R. I. 3, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 585, 65 Atl. 263.

There is no ground for revocation of a physician's license in the statute because he improperly hires a man to work for him in a medical way who is not licensed, and the court cannot say that such facts constitute ground for revocation of the license.

State ex rel. Spriggs v. Robinson, 253 Mo. 271, 161 S. W. 1169.

Since there is no such thing as a manifestly incurable disease, the legislature cannot authorize the revocation of the license of a physician for obtaining a fee "on the representation that a manifestly incurable disease can be cured."

Graeb v. State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 55 Colo. 523, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1063, 139 Pac. 1099.

Testimony of individual cases was not admissible.

Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Spears, 31 Okla. 469, 122 Pac. 228; Chambers v. Van Wagner, 32 Okla. 774, 123 Pac. 1117.

The action was not properly prosecuted.

Gulley v. Territory, 19 Okla. 187, 91 Pac. 1037; State ex rel. Beckman v. Estes, 34 Or. 196, 52 Pac. 571, 55 Pac. 25.

Messrs. S. P. Freeling, Attorney General, and C. W. King, Assistant Attorney General, for defendant in error:

The statement that petitioner has accepted fees for and guaranteed to cure incurable cases of tuberculosis, in the absence of a motion to make more definite and certain, was sufficient to warrant the court in admitting evidence of individual cases.

Wey v. City Bank, 29 Okla. 313, 116 Pac. 943; Armstrong, B. & Co. v. Crump, 25 Okla. 452, 106 Pac. 855.

Rummons, C., filed the following opinion:

The questions involved in this appeal raised in the brief of plaintiff in error necessary to be considered consist of four propositions: First, Is the state a necessary party to this proceeding? Second, Is the clause in § 6905, Revised Laws 1910, defining "unprofessional" conduct of a physician as follows: "Second. The obtaining of any fee on the assurance that an incurable disease can be permanently cured,"—void and of no effect? Third, whether or not the proceedings before the state board of medical examiners and the district court were regular and free from prejudicial error. Fourth, Was the evidence sufficient to support the judgment of the trial court?

The plaintiff in error, a duly licensed physician, was informed against before the state board of medical examiners upon a charge of being guilty of unprofessional conduct. He was thereafter duly cited to answer the complaint, and did answer the same, denying specifically the acts complained of. Thereafter, at one of its regular quarterly meetings, the state board heard the complaint, and, after plaintiff in error had unsuccessfully moved to dismiss the complaint, demurred thereto, and moved to strike, proceeded to take testimony upon the complaint. The state board found against plaintiff in error, and ordered that his license as a physician be revoked. Thereupon plaintiff in error filed his petition in the district court of Bryan county, praying a writ of certiorari to issue to the state board of medical examiners to review their action upon the complaint aforesaid. The writ was issued, and thereafter the cause came on before the district court of Bryan county, and a trial was had to the court, without the intervention of a jury, upon the complaint filed with the state board of medical examiners and the answer of plaintiff in error thereto. The trial court found against plaintiff in error, and quashed the writ of certiorari, and affirmed the action of the state board of medical examiners.

Plaintiff in error insists that this proceeding should have been dismissed for the reason that the state of Oklahoma is a necessary party to a proceeding like this. We cannot agree with this contention of plaintiff in error. The case of Gulley v. Territory, 19 Okla. 187, 91 Pac. 1037, does not sustain the contention of the plaintiff in error, because that case was begun and tried under the laws then in force in the territory of Oklahoma, providing that the district court shall, upon the complaint of any member of the territorial board of health, have power to cancel the license of any physician found guilty, etc. Under this statute the proceedings to revoke the license of a physician were judicial, had to be commenced upon the complaint of a member of the territorial board of health, and were thus officially controlled, and the court rightfully held the state to be a proper party in such a proceeding. The case of State ex rel. Beckman v. Estes, 34 Or. 196, 51 Pac. 77, 52 Pac. 571, 55 Pac. 25, cited by plaintiff in error, also fails to sustain the contention of plaintiff in error. In that case it was held that the state was a proper party in a proceeding to revoke the license of a physician, and that notice of appeal having been served upon the state, it need not be served upon the state board.

Our statutes (§§ 6901, 6903, and 6904, Revised Laws 1910) provide the procedure for revoking the license of a physician. The L.R.A.1916D.

proceeding to revoke the license may be commenced by anyone upon a sworn complaint; and thereupon it is the duty of the state board of medical examiners to issue citation to the party complained of to answer within twenty days after the filing of the complaint, and to proceed thereafter to try and determine the issues raised.

Section 6913, Revised Laws 1910, further provides: "Any person who has been aggrieved by any act, rule, or regulation of said board shall have his right of action to have such issue tried in the district court of the county in which some member of the board shall reside."

It will be seen that under no provision of the statute does the state of Oklahoma or any official thereof have exclusive authority to institute proceedings for the revocation of the license of a physician, nor is there any authority in the statute by which the state of Oklahoma can control such proceedings. The proceedings may be instituted by anyone, and the state of Oklahoma or the attorney general would be wholly without authority to dismiss such proceeding or cause it to be discontinued. Therefore we are of the opinion that, while the state of Oklahoma, through its attorney general, might appropriately institute such a proceeding, yet it is not such a necessary party to the proceedings as to require it to be in court before the matter could be proceeded with.

Is the provision of § 6905, Revised Laws 1910, above quoted, void and of no effect? Upon this proposition counsel for plaintiff in error cite the case of Graeb v. State Bd. of Medical Examiners, 55 Colo. 523, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1063, 139 Pac. 1099. The Colorado statute provides as a ground for revoking the license of a physician: "... The obtaining of a fee on the representation that a manifestly incurable disease can be permanently cured." Rev. Stat. 1908, § 6068. Our own statute makes the ground for the revocation of license: "... the obtaining of any fee on the assurance that an incurable disease can be permanently cured." The two statutes are identical, except for the word "manifestly" used in the Colorado statute. A majority of the Colorado supreme court in the case cited held that the statute quoted was too indefinite and uncertain to be valid. The court, in passing upon this question, uses the following language: "The position of the board is very clearly stated in this respect in their brief in Hamilton v. State Bd. of Medical Examiners, — Colo. —, 148 Pac. 1145, to which brief we are referred and asked to consider in connection with this case. This is as follows: 'If the question were in controversy in this case as to whether the words, "manifestly incurable diseases" is so indefinite as to be unenforceable, we would welcome the issue, but we hesitate to burden this court with a vast number of authorities on a point not in issue. Suffice it to say that the words last quoted do not refer to any diseases per se, but to a condition of the patient suffering from almost any disease. It is true that consumption is not "a manifestly incurable disease" in itself, but an invalid suffering from consumption may have reached a stage in which the disease is "manifestly incurable." Under our statute, a physician might lawfully take money for representing that he could cure one case of consumption and at the same time be committing an offense for taking money under a similar representation as to another case of the same disease which had manifestly gone beyond the curable stage. This argument is also advanced in this case, but not so clearly stated as in the above quotation. This position is not tenable. If the statute had intended a manifestly incurable person, or a manifestly incurable diseased condition, it would doubtless have so recited. But the language is a 'manifestly incurable disease.' Clearly the descriptive words manifestly and incurable apply to the disease, and not to the person or the condition of the person afflicted with the disease. This is likewise the charge in the complaint; for it alleges 'that a manifestly incurable disease could be cured . . . the disease known as consumption.' Counsel for the board have cited no authority justifying such construction of the language used in the statute as that for which they contend, and we do not see how language so clear and explicit can be so tortured. If there is no disease known and understood to be manifestly incurable, then the statute states no offense in that particular, and the board was without jurisdiction in the premises."

Mr. Justice Gabbert, writing the dissenting opinion for the minority of the court, uses the following language: "When is a disease manifestly incurable? Clearly when it is evident it has reached the stage that it cannot be made to yield to medical treatment. That is what laymen, as well as the medical profession, understand from the expression 'a manifestly incurable disease.' The intent of the law is to be considered in its interpretation, and, in ascertaining such intent, the evil against which it is directed must be considered. It is common knowledge that one suffering from disease can easily and readily be imposed upon by those who, by reason of the fact that they have obtained a license to practise medicine, are presumed to possess that degree of skill in the treatment of disease which will enable them to accomplish that which they represent they can. The object of the statute is to prevent what would be nothing less than extortion by members of the medical profession, obtaining money from persons or the relatives and friends of those suffering from disease by promising a cure when it is apparent that the patient is beyond the reach of medical science. Such being the object of the statute, the words employed to express it should not be given such a narrow construction as will result in destroying its beneficent purpose, when from such language, and the general understanding of what it means, it is apparent that the legislature intended to prevent the helpless ill being imposed upon by the promises of a cure when it was evident their condition was such that it could not be accomplished."

This case is the only one cited by counsel, and the only one which we have been able to find, which passes directly upon the point raised by plaintiff in error. The majority opinion undoubtedly sustains the contention of plaintiff in error. While the Colorado statute uses the words, "manifestly incurable," instead of the word "incurable" as in our statute, we do not regard this as affecting the applicability of the majority opinion of the Colorado court, since the court there holds that the words "manifestly" and "incurable" must be taken as applicable to the disease per se, and not to the condition of the patient suffering with the disease at the time his treatment is undertaken by the physician. The record in the case at bar discloses that the diseases which the plaintiff in error is charged with having undertaken to treat upon assurance of effecting a permanent cure were not considered by the witnesses for the complainant to be incurable per se; in fact, it may be doubted if the medical profession recognizes any disease as incurable per se,—that is, beyond the reach of medical skill at any stage in the progress of the disease. We think, however, that the majority opinion of the Colorado court does not rightly construe the statute, and we prefer to follow the dissenting opinion in that case, as we think the dissenting opinion correctly interprets the statute in question, and that such interpretation is equally applicable to our own statute.

To sustain the contention of the plaintiff in error upon this proposition would be to nullify that section of our statute, and to hold that the legislature, adopting it, did a vain and useless thing. The universal rule of statutory construction is that, when the intent of the legislature can be determined from the statute, it is the duty of the courts to follow and enforce such intent. In construing statutes consideration is always given to the mischief to be corrected and the remedy to be afforded. As we regard this section of our statute, we think that it is not aimed at any unethical practices of physicians as interpreted by the medical fraternity, but was aimed to prevent acts on the part of physicians which are universally regarded as immoral and against good conscience, not only by the medical profession, but by laymen as well, and for which under the style of obtaining money under false pretenses our Criminal Code has provided the penalties of the law. The gist of the offense of which it is claimed plaintiff in error was guilty is duping the credulous and taking advantage of the afflicted by taking money from them with an assurance that they can be permanently cured when, in fact, their condition is incurable according to the general state of knowledge of the medical profession at that time. The word "incurable" is defined: "Not curable; beyond the power or skill of medicine." 22 Cyc. 74. "Not susceptible of cure; applied to both patients and disease." Dunglison's Medical Dictionary.

Section 2914, Revised Laws 1910, provides: "Words used in any statute are to be understood in their ordinary sense, except when a contrary intention plainly appears."

Section 4642, Revised Laws 1910, provides: "... But the rule of the common law, that statutes in derogation thereof, shall be strictly construed, shall not be applicable to any ... statute of Oklahoma; but all such statutes shall be liberally construed to promote their object."

Under these definitions and under the rules of construction laid down as above in our statutes we must conclude that the word "incurable," in the section of the statute in question, is to be interpreted in its ordinary acceptation, and that the legislature, in adopting that section, did not intend to do a useless thing, but intended the statute to be enforced in accordance with an interpretation based upon the ordinary understanding of the words used, both by laymen and physicians. In that view of the case we are clearly of the opinion that the words, "incurable disease," in the section of the statute in question, apply to the state of the disease which a patient may have at the time the treatment of it is undertaken by the physician; and that, if a physician undertakes to treat a patient who is suffering from a disease which has in its progress reached an incurable state according to the then general state of knowledge of the medical profession, and accepts a fee from the patient upon the assurance that he can effect a permanent cure of such disease, he would be guilty of unprofessional conduct as defined in that section of our statute.

Plaintiff in error complains of irregularity and error in the proceedings before the state board of medical examiners and in the trial before the district court. He particularly complains of the sufficiency of the complaint filed before the state board. It is practically held unanimously by all the courts that such boards, in proceedings similar to the one at bar, do not act judicially, and are not judicial bodies, but that their action is merely administrative. It is also held that it is within the police power of the state to grant powers such as are sought to be exercised in this case to such boards as a part of the administrative arm of the government, and to provide for summary proceedings to be taken by such boards in cases similar to the one at bar. It is also held that it is not necessary in a trial under such complaint that the proceedings shall be conducted with that degree of exactness which is required in trials before ordinary tribunals of justice, and that a complaint filed before a state board of health for the purpose of revoking the license of a physician is sufficient if it informs the accused not only of the nature of the wrong charged, but of the particular instances of its alleged perpetration. Munk v. Frink, 81 Neb. 631, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 439, 116 N. W. 525; Meffert v. State Bd. of Medical Registration (Meffert v. Packer) 66 Kan. 710, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 811, 72 Pac. 247, affirmed in 195 U. S. 625, 49 L. ed. 350, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 790; State Medical Board v. McCrary, 95 Ark. 511, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 783, 130 S. W. 544, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 631; State Bd. of Health v. Roy, 22 R. I. 538, 48 Atl. 802; State ex rel. Chapman v. State Medical Examiners, 34 Minn. 387, 26 N. W. 123; State ex rel. Feller v. State Medical Examiners, 34 Minn. 391, 26 N. W. 125.

In view of the fact that the controversy is narrowed down to the one charge that plaintiff in error accepted a fee for the treatment of an incurable disease with the assurance that he could effect a permanent cure, we are of the opinion that the paragraph of the complaint which charges plaintiff in error with that offense against professional conduct is sufficient, since it advises him of the particular diseases the treatment of which he is charged with having undertaken, especially as plaintiff in error did not seek to have these charges made more definite and certain.

The plaintiff in error complains of the admission in evidence by the trial court of an advertisement which is admitted to have been published by plaintiff in error. Plaintiff in error says that he was not charged with making grossly improbable statements, calculated to mislead the public, in advertising his business. While this is true, we do not think the court erred in the admission of this advertisement, since it tended in some degree to throw light upon a question properly before the court; i. e., whether or not plaintiff in error gave assurances of effecting permanent cures of incurable diseases.

Plaintiff further complains that the trial court in its findings in this cause found plaintiff in error guilty of a charge upon which the trial court, upon the objection of plaintiff in error, had excluded all evidence. The record seems to bear out the contention of plaintiff in error in this particular. While this is error, yet, as we have concluded that the judgment of the trial court was right, the fact that he may have included in his findings a conclusion which was not supported by the evidence, since he did make findings that are supported by the evidence and which sustain the judgment, we will not disturb the judgment of the court therefor.

Plaintiff in error further contends that the findings of the court are not supported by sufficient evidence. We have examined the record upon the propositions complained of by plaintiff in error, and we find sufficient evidence to sustain the findings of the court as to the incurable nature of the diseases undertaken to be treated by plaintiff in error, as to his assurances of effecting a permanent cure, and as to his accepting a fee therefor. It is urged by plaintiff in error that the written guaranty which was introduced in evidence, and which is as follows:

Absolute Guaranty.

_____, Okla., _____, 191—.

I, R. W. Freeman, M. D., party of the first part, do hereby agree to refund all moneys paid to me by H. S. Hawkins, party of the second part, should he fail to receive a complete cure by my treatment.

R. W. Freeman.

I, H. S. Hawkins, party of the second part, do hereby agree to follow the directions given by R. W. Freeman, M. D., party of the first part, through a period of time sufficient as deemed by him to effect a complete cure. Should I fail to follow the directions as given by him, then I agree that this agreement becomes null and void.

H. S. Hawkins.

—is not a guaranty of a cure, but only a guaranty to refund the fee in the event the treatment prove unsuccessful. We consider this contract to be a mere subterfuge, and have no doubt that it was drawn for the very purpose of protecting plaintiff in error in a case like this. But a reading of the entire contract shows that it holds out to the patient an assurance of a permanent cure. And, aside from this contract, the record contains evidence of assurances made by plaintiff in error of effecting a permanent cure to his patients orally. This evidence was perfectly competent, since this action is not based upon the contract above quoted, and oral evidence tending to prove or disprove the matter at issue was admissible.

We conclude that there is no prejudicial or reversible error in the record, and that the judgment of the court below was right, and should be affirmed.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

Petition for rehearing denied January 11, 1916.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND

v.

FRANCIS J. BARTLEY.

(— R. I. —, 96 Atl. 305.)

Husband and wife — failure to support — “means.”

A man's ability to earn money by working at his trade is “means” within the meaning of a statute requiring him to support his family according to his means, although he is not shown to possess property.

For other cases, see Husband and Wife, IV. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 19, 1916.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Providence and Bristol Counties made during the trial of Note. — The question of what amounts to nonsupport by husband within criminal statutes like that under consideration in STATE v. BARTLEY is considered in the note to State v. Waller, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 588. That one's ability to work or earn a wage L.R.A.1916D.

materially affects his responsibility for his failure or neglect to support his family is disclosed by the cases referred to in that note as well as the decision in the BARTLEY CASE.

a complaint charging him with neglecting to support his family according to his means, which resulted in his conviction. Overruled.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Clarence N. Woolley, for defendant:

In prosecutions for nonsupport the means or ability of the defendant is a constituent element of the offense and must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

State v. Peabody, 25 R. I. 544, 56 Atl. 1028; State v. Tillinghast, 25 R. I. 391, 56 Atl. 181; Goddard v. State, 73 Neb. 739, 103 N. W. 443; Hammond v. Hammond, 15 R. I. 40, 2 Am. St. Rep. 867, 23 Atl. 143; Battey v. Battey, 1 R. I. 212.

Mr. Abbott Phillips, Assistant Attorney General, for the State.

Vincent, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a complaint and warrant brought under § 39, chap. 347, of the General Laws of 1909, and charges the defendant with neglecting to support his wife and child according to his means. The case was tried in the superior court, where the defendant was found guilty, and is now before us on the defendant's exceptions: (1) To the refusal of the trial court to direct a verdict for the defendant; and (2) to the refusal of the trial court to charge that the jury must be satisfied that the state has proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant neglected to provide for his wife and child according to his means. There must be evidence of means.

The defendant's wife testified that the defendant was a carpenter; that he went away and left her and their child, four years old, on May 13, 1913; that from that time he had not contributed anything to the support of either of them; that she did not know where the defendant went, but had been informed that he went to New York; that she did not see him from May, 1913, to December, 1914, when she met him on the street in Pawtucket; that she did not know of her own knowledge whether or not the defendant had worked while away, but that he had told her sister that he had been working; and that she and her child had been supported by her own work and the help of her father. The father of the defendant's wife testified that the defendant had contributed nothing to the support of his wife and child for about two years, and that the defendant was a first-class carpenter and was working then. The defendant offered no evidence. Upon this testimony the defendant asked the court to direct the jury to find a verdict of not guilty. We think this request was rightly refused.

Our attention has been called, during the argument of counsel for the defendant, to the hearsay character of that portion of the testimony of the defendant's wife wherein she states that the defendant had told her sister that he had been working while he was away. No exception was taken to this testimony at the trial. It is not essential, however, to the disposition of the case, as we view it, and therefore it need not be discussed. Without this there is sufficient testimony to show that the defendant had a good trade in which he was a skilful worker. The jury saw him, and was thereby able to form some judgment as to his health, age, and general physical condition. It is not necessary for the complainant to show that the defendant had actually been in receipt of money during the period in which he had failed to support his wife and child. It is sufficient if it be shown that he had the means of earning money had he been so disposed. To be versed in the technicalities of a good trade, like that of carpentry, and to have the ability and skill to meet its requirements, is to possess a "means" by which a man may be enabled to contribute to the support of his family. We think that the words of the statute, "according to his means," refer to capacity to earn money, as well as to property actually owned and possessed, and that where a man has the physical and mental power to acquire means, he comes within the intent of the law. State v. Witham, 70 Wis. 473, 35 N. W. 934. Applying these principles to the matter in hand, we think that the complainant has made out a prima facie case. The defendant did not offer any testimony. While his failure to do so should not, perhaps, be allowed to militate against him, yet the complainant having made a prima facie case, the way was open to him to show that, by reason of ill health or inability to obtain employment, he had been unable to earn money and contribute to the support of his wife and child. The complainant having made a prima facie case and the defendant having failed to offer any testimony to rebut it, we think that the denial of the defendant's request for the direction of a verdict was proper.

An examination of the charge of the trial court, as appears from the transcript of testimony, shows that the request of the defendant to charge, as set forth in his second exception, was fully covered. The court charged with distinctness that the guilt of the defendant must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt in order to convict him, and that the jury must find beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant neglected to provide for his wife and child according to his means, and later in the charge the same language was substantially repeated.

The defendant's exceptions are overruled, and the case is remitted to the Superior Court for sentence.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.
(Department No. 2.)

FRED BARNHART, Resp.,

v.

CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE, & ST. PAUL RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(— Wash. —, 154 Pac. 441.)

Negligence — pond — attractive nuisance.

A pond formed by surface water impounded by a fill for a railroad right of way deep enough to drown a child, and about which children are accustomed to play, is not an agency so likely to result in injury to those attracted to it as to render the railroad company liable for the death of a boy drowned there because of absence of protection, on the theory that it was an attractive nuisance.

For other cases, see Negligence, I. c. 2, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 15, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Snohomish County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's son alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George W. Korte for appellant.

Mr. M. J. McGuinness, for respondent:

Defendant was liable for the death of plaintiff's son.

Bjork v. Tacoma, 76 Wash. 225, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 331, 135 Pac. 1005; Pekin v. McMahon, 154 Ill. 141, 27 L.R.A. 206, 45 Am. St. Rep. 114, 39 N. E. 484; 1 Thomp.

Note.—The general doctrine of attractive nuisance is discussed at length in the note to Cahill v. Stone, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1094; its applicability as to ponds, reservoirs, etc., being specifically treated at page 1143 of that note, and in a supplementary note to Thompson v. Illinois C. R. Co. 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1101; and see also later cases as to ponds, reservoirs, etc., Riggle v. Lens, L.R.A. 1915A, 150; Cœur d'Alene Lumber Co. v. Thompson, L.R.A. 1915A, 731; and Starling v. Selma Cotton Mills, L.R.A. 1915D, 850.

Supplementary notes on various other concrete phases of the doctrine of attractive nuisance may be found by consulting the Index to L.R.A. Notes, under the title "Negligence." The same title in the L.R.A. Digest may also be profitably consulted. L.R.A. 1916D.

Neg. 2d ed. § 1031; 3 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 6th ed. § 705; Haynes v. Seattle, 69 Wash. 419, 125 Pac. 147.

Main, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff brought this action for the purpose of recovering damages for the death of his son, a child eight years of age. The cause was tried to a jury. At the conclusion of all the evidence the defendant challenged the sufficiency thereof, and moved for a directed verdict. This motion was denied. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $650. Judgment being entered upon the verdict, the defendant appeals.

The facts, briefly stated, are: During the latter part of the year 1911, the appellant railway company was completing the construction of its branch line from Cedar Falls to Everett. This line passed through the city of Snohomish. Where the line passed through this city it was upon low lands adjacent to the Snohomish river, and a considerable embankment or fill was made upon which the rails and ties were laid. About 1,200 feet from the west boundary of the city the railroad grade met a hill which was to the north of the grade. The hill had an elevation of approximately 25 feet, upon the side of which grew brush or small trees. The meeting of the grade and the hill at this point left a depression between the two in which either surface water, or flood waters of the river, were impounded and created a pond. The pond was entirely upon the right of way of the railway company. On the bank or hill to the north there was an old picket fence through which there were a number of openings. Above this hill was what is known as Second avenue. Before the embankment was constructed the flood waters from the river would at times form a pond in the same vicinity as the pond in question, but a little further south, to which boys would resort for the purposes of play, as they did upon this pond. After the pond in question had been formed, the boys of the neighborhood were accustomed to gather for play, and had constructed a raft out of old railroad ties or other timbers. The water in the pond was from 8 to 10 feet deep at the deepest point. In reaching the pond it was necessary for the boys to go upon and across the private property of the railway company. On February 3, 1912, the two sons of the respondent, respectively eight and six years old, were upon the raft upon the pond, at play, when the older of the two fell into the water and was drowned. This action, as already indicated, was brought by his father.

It is claimed that the railway company was negligent in failing to drain the pond. The controlling question in the case is whether the owner of the property upon which a pond is formed, where the boys of the neighborhood resort for play, is guilty of negligence in failing, either to drain the pond, or fence his property against such intrusion. The general rule, of course, is that the private owner of land is not liable to strangers who come thereon without any invitation, express or implied, and receive an injury from some agency upon the premises.

An exception to this general rule is made by what is known as the doctrine of the turntable cases. According to this doctrine damages may be recovered from the owner for the death or injury of a child of tender years even though technically a trespasser, and who has been attracted to the place of the accident by a dangerous agency which is in the nature of an attractive nuisance. Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Clark v. Northern P. R. Co. 29 Wash. 139, 59 L.R.A. 508, 69 Pac. 636; Union P. R. Co. v. McDonald, 152 U. S. 262, 38 L. ed. 434, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 619. The turntable doctrine has been adopted by the courts of last resort in a considerable number of states, and rejected by almost an equal number. There is a tendency generally on the part of courts which have approved the doctrine to limit, rather than extend, its application. Harris v. Cowles, 38 Wash. 331, 107 Am. St. Rep. 847, 80 Pac. 537; Bottum v. Hawks, 84 Vt. 370, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 440, 79 Atl. 858, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1025, 3 N. C. C. A. 186. In the case last cited will be found a review of the cases which support the statement as to the tendency to limit the doctrine.

The question here presented is not whether the owner of property may be liable (a) by reason of a trap or pitfall upon his property which may produce the death or injury; (b) a hidden or concealed danger; or (c) a dangerous agency in close proximity or so near a highway that in the use of the highway an accident may occur—but is whether a pond of water is a dangerous agency such as will subject the owner of the property to liability for damages for the death of a child of tender years, attracted to the pond for the purpose of play. The turntable doctrine makes the owner liable because the dangerous agency was attractive to children of tender years, and in playing about or with such agency accident or injury would probably result. That a pond of water is attractive to boys for the purposes of play, swimming, and fishing no one will deny. But its being an attractive agency is not sufficient to subject the owner to liability. It must be an agency such as is likely, or will probably, result in injury to those attracted to it. That many boys every year lose their lives by drowning is a matter of common knowledge. But the number of deaths in comparison to the total number of boys that visit ponds, lakes, or streams for purposes of play, swimming, and fishing is comparatively small. It would be extending the doctrine too far to hold that a pond of water is an attractive nuisance, and therefore comes within the turntable cases. There are a number of analogous cases which would support the holding that an owner is not liable for the death of a child drowned in a pond. But in this case it is not necessary to support the holding by analogous cases when there is ample direct authority upon which it may be rested. Emond v. Kimberly-Clark Co. 159 Wis. 83, 149 N. W. 760; Sullivan v. Huidekoper, 27 App. D. C. 154, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 263, 7 Ann. Cas. 196; Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal. 345, 56 Am. St. Rep. 106, 47 Pac. 113, 598, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 4; Thompson v. Illinois C. R. Co. 105 Miss. 636, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1101, 63 So. 185; Stendal v. Boyd, 73 Minn. 53, 42 L.R.A. 288, 72 Am. St. Rep. 597, 75 N. W. 735. Those cases are all from courts that approve the turntable doctrine. In each of them a boy had lost his life by drowning, the youngest of which was four and the oldest eleven, years; and in each of them it was held that there was no liability for the death of a child that occurred in an artificial pond. In the Peters Case it was said: "It is not contended by appellant that the rule of the turntable cases has ever been applied to facts like those in the case at bar; his contention is that the reasoning and philosophy of the rule ought to extend it to a case like the one at bar. But the same reasoning does not apply to both sets of cases. A body of water—either standing as in ponds and lakes, or running as in rivers and creeks, or ebbing and flowing, as on the shores of seas and bays—is a natural object incident to all countries which are not deserts. Such a body of water may be found in or close to nearly every city or town in the land, the danger of drowning in it is an apparent open danger, the knowledge of which is common to all, and there is no just view consistent with recognized rights of property owners which would compel one owning land upon which such water, or part of it, stands or flows, to fill it up, or surround it with an impenetrable wall."

In the Sullivan Case, after reviewing the authorities, it was said: "Without citing other authorities, we are persuaded that the conclusions in the cases cited and the reasoning upon which they are based are correct, and that in a case such as the one at bar it would be unjust to hold the landowner liable for the death of, or injury to, a child of ten years of age. We do not consider that the appellee was negligent in not taking steps to prevent the trespassing upon her land by boys of such age as plaintiff's intestate. To hold landowners responsible under such circumstances would be to impose upon them an oppressive burden, and shift the care of children from their parents to strangers. Every man who has been brought up with the freedom allowed to American boys knows that you might as well try to dam the Nile with bulrushes as to keep boys away from ponds, pools, and other bodies of water."

The case of Pekin v. McMahon, 154 Ill. 141, 27 L.R.A. 206, 45 Am. St. Rep. 114, 39 N. E. 484, in its reasoning is out of harmony with the cases above cited; and it is the only case, so far as our information goes, which would sustain liability. That case could have been rested upon a different ground and brought within one of the classes in which it is well recognized that liability exists. It is not, however, so rested.

The respondent relies upon the case of Bjork v. Tacoma, 76 Wash. 225, 48 L.R.A. (N.S.) 331, 135 Pac. 1005. That case, however, is distinguishable from this. There a child three years old was drowned by falling into an opening in a flume which was 24 inches square. The flume, other than this particular opening, was covered. This was a dangerous agency which was attractive to children, and in the event a child should fall into the flume, death by drowning was inevitable. It was not of the same nature as a pond where children are accustomed to play, and where comparatively few lose their lives by drowning. In the Bjork Case, Pekin v. McMahon, supra, was cited as analogous; but in citing that case, it was not the intention of the court to adopt all of the reasoning contained in the opinion. To hold that a pond is an attractive nuisance within the doctrine of the turntable cases would be an extension of that rule beyond its proper limitations.

The judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to dismiss.

Morris, Ch. J., and Bausman, Parker, and Holcomb, JJ., concur.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

SANDY VALLEY & ELKHORN RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

WILLIE TACKITT.

(167 Ky. 756, 181 S. W. 349.)

Master and servant — liability of master for hernia.

A laborer cannot hold his master liable for a rupture caused by his attempt alone to operate a lifting jack which is beyond his strength, although commanded to do so by his foreman, if he could have desisted without danger when he found he was not equal to the task.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II, b, 6, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 14, 1916.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pike County

Note.—As to servant's right of action for injuries received in obeying a direct command, see notes to Dallemand v. Saalfeldt, 48 L.R.A. 753, and Lowe Mfg. Co. v. Payne, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 436; and see later cases, Pigford v. Norfolk Southern R. Co. L.R.A.1916D.

in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Auxier, Harman, & Francis and Hager & Stewart, for appellant:

Plaintiff cannot hold defendant liable, as he knew the strength required to do the work as he did it, as it was simply a matter of lifting or straining, and he knew when his capacity for that was reached better than anyone else could know, and when he reached the limit of his capacity it was his duty to quit the employment rather than to endanger himself.

Duncan v. Gernert Bros. Lumber Co. 27 Ky. L. Rep. 1039, 87 S. W. 762; Kirby v. Hillside Coal Co. 32 Ky. L. Rep. 519, 106 S. W. 278; 3 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 1166; Stenvog v. Minnesota Transfer R. Co. 108 Minn. 199, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 362, 121 N. W. 903, 17 Ann. Cas. 240; Ferguson v. Phoenix

44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 865; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Shalstrom, 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 387; Maloney v. Winston Bros. Co. 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 634; and Philip Carey Roofing & Mfg. Co. v. Black, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 340.

Cotton Mills, 106 Tenn. 236, 61 S. W. 53; Roberts v. Indianapolis Street R. Co. 158 Ind. 634, 64 N. E. 217; Worlds v. Georgia R. Co. 99 Ga. 253, 25 S. E. 646; Leitner v. Grieb, 104 Mo. App. 173, 77 S. W. 764; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Miller, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 240, 81 S. W. 535; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Figures, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 255, 89 S. W. 780; American Mill. Co. v. Bell, 146 Ky. 68, 141 S. W. 1191; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Crowe, — Ky. —, 118 S. W. 365; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Grimes, 150 Ky. 219, 150 S. W. 346; Waxahachie v. Connor, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 35 S. W. 692; Texas & P. R. Co. v. White, 62 L.R.A. 90, 42 C. C. A. 86, 101 Fed. 928.

Messrs. Staton & Pinson for appellees.

Clay, C., filed the following opinion:

Claiming to have been ruptured while operating a lifting jack, and that his injuries were due to the negligence of defendant in ordering him to operate the jack alone and in failing to furnish a sufficient force to operate the jack, plaintiff, Willie Tackitt, brought this action against defendant, Sandy Valley & Elkhorn Railway Company, to recover damages. A trial before a jury resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiff for $2,780. Defendant appeals.

The evidence for plaintiff tends to show the following facts: Plaintiff was a laborer in defendant's employ. He had been at work for about three months, and was engaged in dressing track, tamping ties, and operating the jack. In the work of operating the jack he had had only about three weeks' experience. At the time of his alleged injury the company was using two jacks. Tom Harman was in charge of the rear jack, while plaintiff, with the assistance of William George Tackitt, was operating the jack in front. There were seven or eight men in the crew, and John Keaton was the foreman. Addressing plaintiff and William George Tackitt, Keaton said:

"By G——, it looks like if Tom Harman could pull this jack, looks like one of you fellows ought to pull that."

He also remarked that it was a one man's job, and that he had pulled a jack for three months by himself. Thereupon William George Tackitt dropped back and left plaintiff on the jack. After working ten or fifteen minutes plaintiff felt something tear about his groin. He then went down the road and came back and mentioned it to Keen Harman. After that he worked a little over three days, when it began hurting him so badly he quit. Later on he went to Keaton's house and told him that he was ruptured. He further says that when the accident occurred he was working on the inside of the curve, and that the ballast was very heavy where they were at work. Later on he consulted a physician, and since that time he has not been able to do heavy work. Sam Ray, plaintiff's brother-in-law, testified that plaintiff called for help, and William George Tackitt started to help him. Thereupon John Keaton stated that if Tom Harman could pull his jack, it looked like one of them could pull the other jack. Thereupon William George Tackitt went back to tamping ties. He saw the place where plaintiff was injured. Plaintiff afterwards went to Keaton, and Keaton told him that if he was hurt, he had better lay off a few days. In describing the accident this witness said:

"He [plaintiff] went to pull on it and tried to move it and couldn't, and he got down on the end of the bar to try to get it to go, and when he did that, I saw him get off the lever and go down the road. He stayed down there a while and then came back."

Several witnesses testified that when the ballast was heavy three or four men were required to operate the jack, but when the ballast was light two or three men could operate it.

For the defendant John Keaton testified that plaintiff worked for four days and four hours after he claimed that he was hurt. After plaintiff quit work he never heard of any complaint that he was ruptured. Plaintiff, however, told him on November 23d that he believed he was going to be ruptured. He denied using the language attributed to him by plaintiff and his witnesses. He heard plaintiff and Tom Harman discussing their abilities to run the jacks. One bet the other $5 that he could run it. Witness told the person making the bet that he would lose the money, as he himself had run a jack many a time. William George Tackitt testified that on the occasion in question John Keaton said something about the operation of the jack being a one man's job. While Keaton did not direct him to quit, yet what Keaton said was the cause of his quitting. There was further evidence to the effect that on several occasions plaintiff and other workmen engaged in a test of their strength by lifting rails, hand cars, etc.

Defendant insists that a peremptory instruction should have gone in its favor. On the other hand, plaintiff contends that the facts bring it within the rule laid down in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Langan, 116 Ky. 318, 76 S. W. 32, and Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mahan, — Ky. —, 118 S. W. 887. In the first-mentioned case plaintiff and three others were engaged in moving steel shafts, weighing from 200 to 460 pounds each, from the company's cars to the freight platform. They were working under the direction of a freight clerk. After moving several of the smaller shafts they requested the freight clerk to obtain assistance for the removal of the larger shafts which weighed 460 pounds each. They stated that it would be dangerous for them to attempt to move the larger shafts, which were round, and had been oiled or greased, and which were about 20 feet long and from 4 to 6 inches in diameter. After failing to get additional men, the freight clerk told plaintiff and the others to go on. In handling one of the larger shafts it slipped or was dropped from the hands of the men, and fell on plaintiff's foot, severely injuring him. There was evidence to the effect that the force was inadequate. It was held that, as the master insisted, after objection, that plaintiff proceed with the work, plaintiff did not assume the risk incident to the master's employing an inadequate force to assist in the work, where the probability of injury was such that the judgment of prudent men might differ as to the certainty of its happening, or with reference to whether the force was reasonably adequate to perform the work. In the last-mentioned case plaintiff was ordered by the foreman to shoulder a hydraulic jack which was on the car and carry it a short distance therefrom. The jack weighed from 150 to 200 pounds. It had handles on each side, and the usual way of carrying it was for two men to take hold of the handles. When told to shoulder the jack, plaintiff demurred on the ground that he thought it was too heavy. The foreman insisted that as he and other men had carried it, plaintiff could carry it. Thereupon the foreman placed the jack on plaintiff's shoulder. Plaintiff could not stand the weight, and undertook to throw the jack to the ground. Failing to do this, he was crushed to the earth by the jack and seriously injured. It was held that the defendant was liable. Clearly the facts in the case at bar present an entirely different question from that involved in either of the above cases. In the Langan Case plaintiff, together with others, was handling steel shafts, and was injured because the force was inadequate. The peril was not obvious, since he could not know of the danger until actually subjected to the strain. In the Mahan Case plaintiff not only acted in obedience to the order of his superior, but had no opportunity to know of the real danger until the jack was placed on his shoulder, and it was then too late to escape injury. In the case at bar, however, plaintiff was not placed in a position where he was required to sustain an unexpected weight. The jack was stationary and was operated by means of a lever which plaintiff could release at any time without danger. It is simply a case where the servant, with knowledge of the fact that he was not equal to the task, overstrained himself. It is the general rule that a servant is the best judge of his own physical strength, and the duty is on him not to overtax it. Therefore, if he misconceives the amount of strength required to accomplish the task and overstrains himself, the master is not liable. It may be doubted if the remarks of the foreman in this case amounted to anything more than the mere expression of an opinion, but, even if it be conceded that they amount to an expressed command to plaintiff to operate the jack alone, that fact does not alter the rule. Such remarks did not authorize plaintiff, when he found that he was not equal to the task, to persist in the attempt until he was injured by overtaxing his own strength, of which he was the best judge. Worlds v. Georgia R. Co. 99 Ga. 283, 25 S. E. 646; Leitner v. Grieb, 104 Mo. App. 173, 77 S. W. 764; Ferguson v. Phoenix Cotton Mills, 106 Tenn. 236, 61 S. W. 53; Roberts v. Indianapolis Street R. Co. 158 Ind. 634, 64 N. E. 217; Stenvog v. Minnesota Transfer R. Co. 108 Minn. 199, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 362, 121 N. W. 903, 17 Ann. Cas. 240; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Williams, 165 Ky. 386, L.R.A.1915E, 613, 176 S. W. 1186, 9 N. C. C. A. 368. It therefore follows that the trial court erred in refusing the peremptory instruction asked for by defendant.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for a new trial consistent with this opinion.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

FRANK A. MULLEN, Respt.,
v.

OTTER TAIL POWER COMPANY, Appt.

GLEN FALLS INSURANCE COMPANY et al., Interveners, Respts.

(130 Minn. 386, 153 N. W. 746.)

Electricity — cutting off current — loss — liability.

1. Defendant, under contract with plaintiff, a merchant, supplied electric current to his store. A fire broke out in a restaurant in the rear of the store and separated from it by a solid partition. Defendant

Headnotes by BUNN, J.

Note. — As to liability of electric power or light company for cutting off, or failure of, electric current, see annotation following this case, post, 451.

severed the wires supplying the store with electric current, and plaintiff, by reason of the darkness, was unable to remove his stock and fixtures. In this action to recover the value of such stock and fixtures, which were ultimately destroyed by the fire, it is held defendant had the right to sever the wires that supplied electricity to the store, providing it was reasonably necessary to do so in order to save loss or damage to its property, but it had no such right until such act became so reasonably necessary. It owed plaintiff a legal duty not to deprive him of light unless and until protection of its own interests, or safety to the public, made it reasonably necessary to do so. In this case the wires were severed forty minutes before there was any such necessity, and defendant knew that plaintiff would need light to save his property. The evidence sustains a finding that cutting the wires at this time was a breach of defendant's duty to plaintiff.

For other cases, see Electric Lights, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Proximate cause — fire — cutting off light — loss.

2. The court was justified in finding that the act of defendant in cutting the wires was the proximate cause of plaintiff's loss, unless plaintiff, after discovering that the wires had been cut, could have averted the loss by reasonable diligence.

For other cases, see Proximate Cause, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — avoiding loss — sufficiency.

3. The evidence does not sustain a finding that plaintiff could not have averted the loss, or at least made it less, by reasonable care and diligence after discovering that the wires had been cut.

For other cases, see Evidence, XII. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(July 16, 1915.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Stevens County in favor of plaintiff and interveners, in an action brought to recover the value of a stock of merchandise and fixtures destroyed by fire alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. N. F. Field and Spooner & Spooner, for appellant:

To say that it was the duty of the company to furnish lights in the case of a fire in the building would be a forced and strained construction to place upon the contract, and would be injecting into it an element which is not in express terms covered by the contract, and could not have been within the contemplation of the parties at the time it was made.

Landquist v. Swanson, 78 Minn. 444, 81 N. W. 1; New Omaha Thomson-Houston Electric Light Co. v. Anderson, 73 Neb. 84, 102 N. W. 89, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 601. L.R.A.1916D.

The cutting of the wires was not the proximate cause of the destruction of plaintiff's stock of goods and fixtures.

Nelson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 30 Minn. 74, 14 N. W. 360; Strobeck v. Bren, 93 Minn. 428, 101 N. W. 795; Fitzgerald v. International Flax Twine Co. 104 Minn. 138, 116 N. W. 475; Lebanon, L. & L. Teleph. Co. v. Lanham Lumber Co. 131 Ky. 718, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 115, 115 S. W. 824, 18 Ann. Cas. 1066; Smith v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 83 Ky. 104, 4 Am. St. Rep. 126; Volquardsen v. Iowa Teleph. Co. 148 Iowa, 77, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 554, 126 N. W. 923, 3 N. C. C. A. 355; Franke v. Head, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1128, 42 S. W. 913, 3 Am. Neg. Rep. 402.

Messrs. James B. Ormond and F. W. Murphy, for respondents:

The words used in this contract are to be taken in the ordinary and popular sense, and, taken in this sense, it is impossible to discover anything which may be construed as relieving the defendant from furnishing a supply of current to a burning building where the apparatus or equipment of the company is not in danger.

Shore v. Wilson, 9 Clark & F. 565; Dwight v. Germania L. Ins. Co. 103 N. Y. 341, 57 Am. Rep. 729, 8 N. E. 654; 9 Cyc. 578; Pennebaker v. San Joaquin Light & P. Co. 158 Cal. 579, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1099, 139 Am. St. Rep. 202, 112 Pac. 459, 1 N. C. C. A. 319; New Omaha Thomson-Houston Electric Light Co. v. Anderson, 73 Neb. 84, 102 N. W. 89, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 601.

The acts of the defendant in the case at bar amount to wilful negligence.

Anderson v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 103 Minn. 224, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 886, 114 N. W. 1123.

The destruction of plaintiff's goods and fixtures by said fire was the direct and proximate result of said acts of negligence of the defendant, its servants and agents.

Campbell v. Stillwater, 32 Minn. 308, 50 Am. Rep. 567, 20 N. W. 320; Deming v. Merchants' Cotton-Press & S. Co. 90 Tenn. 306, 13 L.R.A. 518, 17 S. W. 89; Burk v. Creamery Package Mfg. Co. 126 Iowa, 730, 106 Am. St. Rep. 377, 102 N. W. 793, 18 Am. Neg. Rep. 62; Bibb Broom Corn Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 94 Minn. 269, 69 L.R.A. 509, 110 Am. St. Rep. 361, 3 Ann. Cas. 450, 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 590; Moore v. Townsend, 76 Minn. 64, 78 N. W. 880, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 95; Belshan v. Illinois C. R. Co. 117 Minn. 110, 134 N. W. 507; Erickson v. Great Northern R. Co. 117 Minn. 348, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 237, 135 N. W. 1129, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 763, 3 N. C. C. A. 490; Bodkin v. Great Northern R. Co. 124 Minn. 219, 144 N. W. 937, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 705; Kiernan v. Metropolitan Constr. Co. 170

Mass. 378, 49 N. E. 648; Morey v. Shenango Furnace Co. 112 Minn. 528, 127 N. W. 1134.

Bunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was to recover the value of a stock of merchandise and fixtures destroyed by fire, the claim of liability being that defendant, at the time of the fire, negligently cut the service wires that supplied electric light to plaintiff's store, plaintiff, by reason of the darkness, being unable to remove and save his stock and fixtures. The case was by consent tried before the court without a jury. The decision was in favor of plaintiff and the intervening insurance companies, which had paid plaintiff for part of the loss, for the full amount claimed as the value of the property destroyed.

The case is an important one, and involves an unusual, if not an entirely new, state of facts. We have reached the conclusion that there should be a new trial because the evidence, in our opinion, does not show that plaintiff used due care or diligence in attempting to save his property. The other questions are determined to guide the trial court when the case shall be retried. These questions concern the liability of defendant, and may be stated thus: (1) Was defendant guilty of a breach of duty towards plaintiff in cutting the wires when it did? (2) Was such act the proximate cause of plaintiff's loss, conceding that he did all he reasonably could have done to save his property?

The facts which the evidence justified the trial court in finding true may be summarized as follows: Defendant owned and operated an electric light plant in the city of Morris, furnishing electric current to consumers under contract with them. Plaintiff owned a lot on the corner of Atlantic avenue and Sixth street. The lot fronted on Atlantic avenue, was 25 feet in width on that street, and 140 feet in depth along Sixth street. There was a two-story frame building on this lot, the front 65 feet of which was occupied and used by plaintiff as a clothing and gentlemen's furnishing store. The rear 30 feet of the building was used as a restaurant, consisting of a dining room and kitchen; the dining room was next to the store, and separated from it by a solid double partition without doors or windows. Between the dining room and the kitchen there was a stairway and a door under it, with two partitions, except in the place where the door led into the kitchen. This restaurant was not conducted by plaintiff. Defendant furnished electric current to plaintiff, under contract made with the former owner of the plant and assumed by defendant upon its purchase thereof. This contract provided, among other things, that "the company shall use all due diligence in providing a regular and uninterrupted supply of current, but in case supply of current shall be interrupted or be defective the company shall not be held liable therefor."

The service wires entered plaintiff's store at a point on Sixth street about 20 feet from the rear of the store, and about 9 feet from the floor. They came from a pole on the corner of Atlantic avenue and Sixth street, across Sixth street from the front of plaintiff's store. Two other wires carried the current for the restaurant, and were strung from a pole standing on the other side of Sixth street nearly opposite to the rear of the plaintiff's store. These wires entered the building in the dining room of the restaurant.

About 2:45 o'clock on the morning of February 20, 1913, fire broke out in the kitchen of the restaurant. It was a cold, calm morning. The fire alarm sounded and the volunteer fire department responded, as did plaintiff, four employees of defendant, and numerous citizens. Plaintiff opened the front door of his store, turned the electric-light switch, and there was no light. With a number of men to help, plaintiff tried to remove his stock and fixtures. They succeeded in taking out one show case, with some neckwear, and a few shoes, but abandoned further effort because, as plaintiff claims, they were unable to do anything on account of the complete darkness of the store. In spite of the efforts of the firemen, in forty minutes after plaintiff came on the scene, the fire broke through from the restaurant into the store, and the result was soon the complete destruction of the store and the stock and fixtures in it. The evidence of plaintiff and a number of witnesses is that, had the electric light been burning in the store, all the stock and fixtures could have been removed to a place of safety in twenty minutes. Nick Finneman, an electrician in the employ of defendant, was at the scene of the fire soon after the alarm was given. He tried to get into the store to rescue the meter, but found the door locked. He then climbed the pole at the corner of Atlantic avenue and Sixth street, and cut the wires that supplied plaintiff's store. This was the reason why plaintiff was unable to turn on the lights when he entered his store. It is this action of Finneman upon which plaintiff bases his claim of liability. There was much testimony bearing upon the necessity of cutting service wires in case of a fire. It was practically all directed to the danger to the plant or to people on the street by the chance of a short circuit being caused by the melting or burning of the fuses in the building, the burning of the insulation around the wires, their falling and coming in contact with each other. There was testimony that such a short circuit might cause serious damage in the plant of defendant, and testimony that this chance was extremely remote. The trial court found that this danger was very remote, and it was practically the unanimous opinion of the experts that the danger to people on the street was almost negligible.

The evidence is practically undisputed that Finneman could have waited thirty or forty minutes before cutting the wires without any danger of their being affected by the fire. In fact witnesses for the defendant are inclined to admit that Finneman acted before he should have. It is plain that he knew that plaintiff would need lights to remove his stock. He does not seem to have thought of this at the time, though he waited before cutting the wires serving an adjacent store until the owner and volunteers had removed the stock.

1. Was this act of Finneman in cutting the wires serving plaintiff's store with electric current forty minutes before there was any necessity for so doing, and with knowledge that this might prevent plaintiff from saving his property, a breach of any legal duty that defendant owed plaintiff? The contract between the parties is not important except for the bearing it has on the question of what the legal duty of defendant was. It is not a breach of contract that plaintiff complains of, but a tort, actionable negligence on the part of a servant of defendant in the course of the performance of his duties. We are unable to find that the state of facts has ever been presented to any court for its decision as to whether it constitutes actionable negligence. It is admitted that ordinances have been enacted in some cities requiring power companies to cut their electric wires in case of a fire, but there was no such ordinance in the city of Morris. We hold, however, that in case of fire, a power company supplying electricity to consumers has the right to cut its wires in case it is reasonably necessary to do so in order to save loss or damage to its property. But this does not answer the present question. While the company should not be compelled to take nice chances as to the particular moment of time when it is justified in severing the wires supplying current to a burning building, there would certainly be no excuse for such action in a case where it was apparent that there was no danger for hours of the fire reaching a point where the wires would be affected, and where it was apparent that the act might cause loss to the consumer. It cannot be said that defendant owed no legal duty to plaintiff. It could not cut off his supply of current arbitrarily and escape liability for consequent damages. We think it must be held that the legal duty of defendant was not to deprive plaintiff of needed light unless and until the protection of its own interests, or safety to the public, made it reasonably necessary to do so. It would be liable for a breach of this duty that was the proximate cause of damages to plaintiff. And we are unable to hold on the evidence before us that the trial court was not justified in finding that there was this breach of duty, as before pointed out. Finneman cut the wires from forty to fifty minutes before there was any necessity for doing so, either from the standpoint of protecting the property of defendant or that of protecting people on the street from electrical shocks. That it was an error of judgment defendant concedes. To the knowledge of Finneman the fire was then confined to the restaurant, there was no wind, and it was not making rapid progress toward the store. He knew that plaintiff had a stock of goods that could be saved if he had light. His act was unnecessary, and the trial court's finding that it was a negligent act must be sustained.

2. Was the negligence of defendant in cutting the wires the proximate cause of plaintiff's loss? We are unable to draw a sound distinction between this case and that of Erickson v. Great Northern R. Co. 117 Minn. 348, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 237, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 763, 135 N. W. 1129, 3 N. C. C. A. 490, where it was held that the act of cutting a hose being used to extinguish the fire was the proximate cause of the burning of the hotel, the evidence being sufficient to sustain a finding that the fire would have been extinguished but for the act. In the present case the evidence is uncontradicted that plaintiff's stock and fixtures could and would have been saved had defendant postponed for half an hour the severing of the service wires. It is impossible to distinguish between the two cases. We hold that the evidence sustains the finding of the trial court that the negligent act of cutting the wires was the proximate cause of plaintiff's loss, unless it can be said that plaintiff could have averted the loss by the exercise of reasonable diligence after discovering that the wires had been severed.

3. It was plainly the duty of plaintiff to do all he could to make his loss as small as possible. If he could have removed his stock in the darkness, or if he could have obtained light from other sources in time to have removed it, he should not be allowed to charge defendant for his loss. The efforts of plaintiff to obtain light consisted of appeals to bystanders to get lanterns. Plaintiff seems to have made no search for them himself. The city had been lighted with electricity for many years, and it may be that lanterns, lamps, candles, and other means of illumination were not readily available.

The evidence makes no mention of candles; little of oil lamps. It is not clear how much light there was on the street. The testimony was directed to efforts to procure lanterns. One was brought in answer to an appeal, but proved smoky and was discarded. Two others were found in a hardware store, but there was no oil. There was probably a lantern on the hose cart, but plaintiff, though a member of the fire department, did not know where this hose cart was stationed, though it was in fact but a short distance from the front of his store. Plaintiff did nothing himself in the way of searching for lanterns or other lights, but just stood around, trusting entirely to his requests of bystanders who had no personal interest in saving his stock. It is not very clear why the smoky lantern could not have been cleaned and made useful, or why oil could not have been procured for those brought from the hardware store. And it is not easy to understand why candles or lamps or other illumination might not have been procured in time to enable plaintiff and his willing volunteer assistants to remove at least a large portion of the stock and fixtures. If, as they testify, this could all be done in twenty minutes, and if it took the fire forty minutes to reach the store, there was twenty minutes' time which could have been profitably used in serious effort to obtain light. Our conclusion is that the evidence on this branch of the case is so unsatisfactory that a new trial is demanded.

We call attention to the state of the evidence on the question of the value of plaintiff's stock of goods. He testified to the value of his stock as a whole, based upon the cost price as shown by an inventory taken a short time before the fire. This inventory was produced in court, but not put in evidence, nor was there any examination or cross-examination as to the different items of merchandise or their value. Nothing was deducted for shelf-worn stock. We would not grant a new trial for the insufficiency of the evidence on the question of damages, but the evidence on this issue is quite unsatisfactory, and should be made more convincing on another trial.

Order reversed, and new trial granted.

Annotation—Liability of electric power or light company for cutting off, or failure of, electric current.

As to liability for damages caused by shutting off water or gas from premises, see note to Brame v. Light, Heat, & Water Co. 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 468.

As to duty to cut off electric connection in case of fire, see note to Pennbaker v. San Joaquin Light & P. Co. 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1099.

As to liability of telephone company for failure to make connections for subscribers, see note to Lebanon, L. & L. Teleph. Co. v. Lanham Lumber Co. 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 115.

MULLEN v. OTTER TAIL POWER Co. ante, 447, seems to be a case of first impression as to the liability of an electric company to a consumer for injuries due to the turning off of electric current where the liability is predicated not on a breach of contract, but in tort in having breached an alleged duty owed. The decision in MULLEN v. OTTER TAIL POWER Co., that an electric company that shuts off the current before it is absolutely necessary, either in order to fulfil its duty to the public or to protect its own property, is guilty of an actionable wrong, is sound in principle. And the question involved might be said to be, When, under circumstances similar to those in the MULLEN CASE, does the duty of the company to a consumer end, and the duty to the public and the right to protect its own property begin? And this it would seem would usually be a question of fact for the jury under the particular circumstances of each case.

Nor can there be any ground for questioning the decision that the loss sustained in this case would be the natural consequences of the electric company's act, at least in the absence of any breach of duty that the consumer himself might owe to endeavor to avert any loss. The following cases, where the liability was predicated on a breach of contract, are included not as bearing on the question of substantive liability, but because, the liability once fixed, the measure of damages in either instance would be the same.

In Stone v. Schenectady R. Co. (1904) 99 App. Div. 44, 90 N. Y. Supp. 742, a contract for electric current to operate a stereopticon used in throwing advertisements at night upon a screen provided that the power company had the right to cut off the current after the expiration of ten days from the presentation of a bill, and in violation of this provision the current was cut off within three days after the presentation of a bill, and it was held that the power company was liable for such damages as the owner of the stereopticon suffered from the time the current was cut off until notified by the company of its intention to again furnish the electricity. In this case notice to the party's attorney was held sufficient.

In Terrace Water Co. v. San Antonio Light & P. Co. (1905) 1 Cal. App. 511, 82 Pac. 562, where an electric power company contracted to sell to the water company for a period of five years, during the irrigation season, electric power to operate the pump used in pumping water from its wells, and after furnishing power for a certain period of time, destroyed the connections and refused thereafter to furnish any power whatever, it was held that the water company was entitled to recover the excess cost in procuring power from another company. The court stated that the proposition advanced by the power company, that a party may disregard his obligations and confidently assume that the only consequence thereof is a nominal damage, and that such nominal damage is all that necessarily follows such violation and all that can reasonably be anticipated, should have no support.

In Morris v. Loughborough Corp. [1908] 1 K. B. (Eng.) 205, the act of incorporation required that the electric company furnish electrical energy to certain classes of persons, and also gave it permission to enter into special agreements with others to furnish them with electrical energy. A clause of the act provided that "whenever the undertakers make default in supplying energy to any owner or occupier of premises to whom they may be and are required to supply energy under this part of this act, they shall be liable in respect of each default to a penalty. . . ." In construing this penalty clause, it was held to apply only to cases of default in supplying electrical energy to those to whom it was required to furnish such energy, and did not apply to cases of default in supplying electrical energy to one with whom the company had entered into a special agreement to supply such energy, and so plaintiffs, being of the latter class, having been deprived of electrical energy for a certain period of time, were held to be entitled to maintain an action for damages suffered thereby. J. H. B.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

J. B. DOPPE SONS LUMBER COMPANY,
Plff. in Err.,
v.

CINCINNATI, NEW ORLEANS, & TEXAS
PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

(— Ohio St. —, 110 N. E. 640.)

Carrier — switching service.

1. "A switching service," within the meaning of §§ 8998 and 9000, General Code, is one which precedes or follows a transportation service, and applies only to a shipment upon which legal freight charges have already been earned or are to be earned.

For other cases, see Carriers, IV. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — transportation within city.

2. A transportation service may be rendered within the terminal limits of a city, and where a contract of carriage calls for the movement of a car from a point on one railroad to a point on a connecting road, both of which are within such limits, the railroad companies in their charge for service are not subject to the provisions of § 9000, General Code, but may charge for such service a rate that is just and reasonable.

For other cases, see Carriers, III. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(May 25, 1915.)

ERROR to the Court of Appeals for Hamilton County to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover overcharges for alleged switching service. Affirmed.

Statement by Newman, J.:

Plaintiff in error brought an action under § 9002, General Code, in the court of common pleas of Hamilton county against the defendant in error and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, & St. Louis Railway Company to recover the sum of $150.

The allegations of the petition in substance are as follows: The lumber yards of plaintiff are contiguous to the railroad tracks of defendant in error, and are connected therewith by sidetrack leading therefrom and to the lumber yards, all of which tracks are within the proper terminal limits of the city of Cincinnati. The tracks of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, & St. Louis Railway Company are connected with the tracks of defendant in error, and the distance from plaintiff's tracks to the general freight house of defendant in error in said city does not exceed 5 miles. On October 2, 1911, plaintiff caused to be transported upon and over the road of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, & St. Louis Railway Company, from Fernbank, Hamilton county, Ohio, to its siding in the city of Cincinnati, one car of lumber, and requested that the shipment be made to its switch, known as the "Doppel switch, Cincinnati, New Orleans, & Texas Pacific Railway," and both the defendant railroad companies so transported it. Fernbank is within the switching limits of the city of Cincinnati. The Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, & St. Louis Railway Company demanded and received from plaintiff for transporting said car the following amounts, viz.: Trackage charge at Fernbank $2, switching from Fernbank to Cincinnati $5, and the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, & St. Louis Railway Company and defendant in error demanded and received from plaintiff for switching from the tracks of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, & St. Louis Railway Company on to and over the tracks of the defendant to plaintiff's siding the sum of $6.

Headnotes by the COURT.

Note. — As to what constitutes switching service, see annotation following this case, post, 455.
L.R.A.1916D.

The railroad companies are entitled to demand and receive for said switching from the tracks of one on to and over the tracks of the other to the sidetrack of plaintiff the sum of $2 and no more, this sum being the rate fixed by § 9000, General Code, for such service for that distance, to wit, not exceeding 5 miles, and the railroad companies, their officers and agents, violated or permitted to be violated said § 9000, and demanded, exacted, and received of plaintiff the sum of $6 for said service, which sum is $4 in excess of the amount authorized by law therefor.

Plaintiff in its petition says that it has been aggrieved by said overcharges, and by reason thereof it is entitled to recover from the railroad companies the sum of $150, for which amount judgment is asked.

The railroad companies each filed an answer in which practically all the allegations of the petition are admitted to be true, but there is the averment in each of the answers that the transportation described in the petition was transportation of freight between a local station on the line of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, & St. Louis Railway Company and a local station on the line of the defendant in error, that the same was not a switching service, and that L.R.A.1916D.

the statute mentioned in the petition does not apply.

Plaintiff and each of the railroad companies filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings in their favor, respectively. The court of common pleas sustained the motion of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, & St. Louis Railway Company, and that company was dismissed from the case. The motion of defendant in error here was overruled, and that of plaintiff in error was sustained, and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff in error against the defendant in error in the sum of $150.

Defendant in error, the Cincinnati, New Orleans, & Texas Pacific Railway Company, filed a petition in error in the court of appeals, and the judgment of the court of common pleas was reversed, and final judgment was rendered in its favor. Plaintiff in error is here asking for a reversal of the judgment of the court of appeals and an affirmance of that of the court of common pleas.

Messrs. Dolle, Taylor, & O'Donnell, for plaintiff in error:

Defendant must switch cars on the sidetrack of plaintiff at the rates specified in Gen. Code, § 9000.

Hay & Grain Co. v. R. 6 Ohio L. Rep. 147, 53 W. L. B. 285; Troy Wagon Works Co. v. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. 16 Ohio Dec. 111, 3 Ohio N. P. N. S. 412; Rodefer v. Pittsburg, O. V. & C. R. Co. 72 Ohio St. 272, 70 L.R.A. 844, 74 N. E. 183.

The service performed by defendant was purely a switching, and not a transportation, service.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Wilson, 31 Ohio St. 555; Dixon v. Central of Georgia R. Co. 110 Ga. 173, 35 S. E. 369.

The penalty provided is not so enormous or so severe as to prevent the defendant from making the defense that the rate is unreasonable.

Wadley Southern R. Co. v. Georgia, 235 U. S. 651, 59 L. ed. 405, P. U. R. 1915A, 106, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 214; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Tucker, 230 U. S. 340, 347, 57 L. ed. 1507, 1509, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 961; Minnesota Rate Cases (Simpson v. Shepard) 230 U. S. 352, 57 L. ed. 1511, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1151, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 729, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 18; Portland R. Light & P. Co. v. Portland, 210 Fed. 667; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Anderson, 233 U. S. 325, 58 L. ed. 983, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 599; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Jackson Vinegar Co. 226 U. S. 217, 57 L. ed. 193, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 40; Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Seegers, 207 U. S. 73, 52 L. ed. 108, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 28; Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 52 L. ed. 714, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 932, 28 Sup.

Ct. Rep. 441, 14 Ann. Cas. 764; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 29 L. ed. 463, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Gill, 156 U. S. 649, 39 L. ed. 567, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 484.

The statute to the extent that it gives double damages is valid.

Missouri P. R. Co. v. Tucker, 230 U. S. 340, 57 L. ed. 1507, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 961; Cincinnati, S. & C. R. Co. v. Cook, 37 Ohio St. 265; Iron R. Co. v. Lawrence Furnace Co. 49 Ohio St. 102, 30 N. E. 616; Toledo & O. C. R. Co. v. Wren, 78 Ohio St. 137, 84 N. E. 785.

Messrs. Harmon, Colston, Goldsmith, & Hoadley, for defendant in error:

The statute confers no rights upon any shipper.

T. B. Townsend Brick & Contracting Co. v. Central Trust Co. 109 C. C. A. 381, 187 Fed. 63.

The service performed by defendant was a transportation, not switching.

Dixon v. Central of Georgia R. Co. 110 Ga. 173, 35 S. E. 369; Sparta Gas & Electric Co. v. Illinois Southern R. Co. 155 Ill. App. 283, affirmed in 247 Ill. 346, 93 N. E. 312; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Michigan R. Commission, 198 Fed. 1009, 231 U. S. 457, 58 L. ed. 310, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152.

The statute under which this suit is brought is unconstitutional.

Missouri P. R. Co. v. Tucker, 230 U. S. 340, 57 L. ed. 1507, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 961; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Polt, 232 U. S. 165, 58 L. ed. 554, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 301.

Messrs. Morison R. Walte and John R. Schindel, for Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co.:

The service was a transportation service.

Dixon v. Central of Georgia R. Co. 110 Ga. 173, 35 S. E. 369; Sparta Gas & Electric Co. v. Illinois Southern R. Co. 155 Ill. App. 283; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Michigan R. Commission, 198 Fed. 1009, 231 U. S. 457, 58 L. ed. 310, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152; T. B. Townsend Brick & Contracting Co. v. Central Trust Co. 109 C. C. A. 381, 187 Fed. 63.

The penalty prescribed renders § 9002 as applied to the facts in this case unconstitutional.

Missouri P. R. Co. v. Tucker, 230 U. S. 340, 57 L. ed. 1507, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 961.

Newman, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Section 8998, General Code, requires a railroad company, whose tracks lie contiguous to sidetracks suitable for loading or unloading, to switch the cars of other railroad companies, at the request of such companies or shippers, over and upon the tracks so lying by such sidetracks, for the purpose L.R.A.1916D.

of unloading freight into or from such side tracks without demurrage, for forty-eight hours. Section 9000 fixes the amounts which a railroad company owning such tracks lying contiguous to sidetracks and within the proper terminals of a city shall receive from the company whose cars are so switched, loaded, or unloaded, at such sidetracks. For a distance over 2½ miles, and not exceeding 5 miles, the maximum charge that may be made is $2 per car.

Plaintiff in error, claiming to be an aggrieved party within the meaning of § 9002, predicates its right to recover the amount named in that section upon an alleged violation by defendant in error of the provisions of § 9000, in charging $6 for what is alleged by it (plaintiff in error) to be a switching service, instead of $2, the maximum amount fixed by law for the switching of a car a distance not exceeding 5 miles. If the service rendered by defendant in error, as shown by the pleadings, was not a switching service, within the meaning of § 9000, defendant in error is not liable under the provisions of § 9002.

The court of common pleas in reaching its conclusion proceeded upon the theory that the transportation of the car of lumber was completed when it reached the terminal limits of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, & St. Louis Railway Company. But was the court correct in this in view of the express allegations of the petition? It is alleged that plaintiff caused the car of lumber to be transported over the road of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, & St. Louis Railway Company from Fernbank to its siding in the city of Cincinnati, that it requested the shipment to be made to its switch, known as the "Doppes switch, Cincinnati, New Orleans, & Texas Pacific Railway," and that both of the railroad companies so transported it. It is true plaintiff calls the service rendered by defendant in error a switching service. It is equally true that it is termed transportation service by defendant in error. But the nature and character of the service is to be determined from the facts, regardless of the designation given it by the parties.

As we view it, the contract of carriage involved a transportation from Fernbank to Doppes switch, such a transportation as is provided for in § 8999, which reads: "When the tracks of two companies are so connected, either, when required, shall transport over its road to its destination thereon, any freight offered, in cars in which it is offered, at its local rates per mile as set forth in its freight tariff for the distance most nearly corresponding, and return the cars, with or without freight or unnecessary delay."

In this case the destination of the car was Doppes switch, and the fact that Doppes switch and Fernbank, from which the shipment originated, are both within the terminal limits of Cincinnati is immaterial. Mr. Justice McKenna, in Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Michigan R. Commission, 231 U. S. 457, 58 L. ed. 310, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152, in commenting on the decision of the United States court of appeals in the same case, uses the following language, which we think is in point here: "And it was remarked that the fact that the freight movement begins and ends within the limits of a city does not take from it its character 'of an actual transportation between two termini,' the other conditions obtaining. We concur in the conclusion of the court."

The United States court of appeals had held that a service does not cease to be a transportation merely because the movement begins and ends within a city, or is only between an intracity junction or team track or side track. (D. C.) 198 Fed. 1009.

In the present case the total amount charged for the shipment from Fernbank to Doppes switch was $13. As has been said by the Interstate Commerce Commission, it is immaterial to the shipper how the carriers divide the charge, provided it is reasonable. Whether or not it is reasonable in the case at hand is a matter with which we are not concerned, as plaintiff does not base its claim upon an excessive freight rate. It is to be presumed, however, that the railroad companies have followed the requirements of § 512, General Code, and that the rate charged for the transportation of the freight over the connecting lines was reasonable.

In Dixon v. Central of Georgia R. Co. 110 Ga. 173, 35 S. E. 369, it is held: "A switching or transfer service is one which precedes or follows a transportation service, and applies only to a shipment on which legal freight charges have already been earned, or are to be earned."

We approve and adopt this definition.

In the Georgia case, the court, in illustrating what would be a switching or transfer service, say that if the shippers had ordered freight over the Central Railway to be shipped to Savannah from Macon, Georgia, they would be liable for regular rates for transportation from that point to the railway terminal at Savannah; and the Central Railway Company, in shipping the freight from its depot over the spur track to the shipper's place of business, would simply be entitled to the rates fixed for such transfer service. Or, if the shippers desired the Central Railway Company to transport freight from their place of business in Savannah to Macon, and the Central Railway Company transported the goods over its spur track from the shipper's place of business to its depot, it could only charge additional, for this part of the transportation, simply the switching-service rate.

The court of common pleas did not seem to question the holding of the Georgia court, but was of the opinion that the rule announced there has no application here because of the fact that the transportation in the present case was completed when the car of the plaintiff reached its destination within the terminal limits of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, & St. Louis Railway Company. But, as we have said, the court was in error in this, for the car did not reach its destination under the contract of carriage until it was delivered at Doppes switch.

The word "switching" is synonymous with "transferring." We think that a switching service is rendered, within the meaning of § 9000, when a car is transferred from a sidetrack, over the tracks of a railroad lying contiguous thereto, to the line of the company which is to have what is termed the "line haul," or from the line of the company which has had the line haul, over the track of the company which delivers the freight, to the siding of the shipper. In such case the railroad company receiving the car from or delivering it to the company having the line haul would be limited in its charge to the amount fixed by statute for switching service.

We have no such case here. According to our view the movement of the car in question from Fernbank to Doppes switch was a transportation service for which a reasonable freight rate could be charged. The movement of the car by defendant in error was not incidental to the shipment as a whole, but was a part of it. Our holding is that the service rendered by the defendant in error was not a switching service, within the meaning of § 9000, and therefore there could be no violation of its provisions. In view of this holding it is unnecessary to consider the other questions raised by counsel for defendant in error.

Judgment affirmed.

Nichols, Ch. J., and Johnson, Donahue, Jones, and Matthias, JJ., concur.

Annotation—Carriers: what constitutes switching service.

As to duty of carrier to accept freight originating and terminating within city L.R.A.1916D.

limits, see note to Higdon v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 442.

The test of distinction between transportation service relatively to loaded freight cars for which a railway company can lawfully charge tonnage rate, and switching or transfer service for which it is restricted to a fixed charge per car, is not whether the movement of the cars involves the use of a portion of the company's main line or that of another; for there may be a transportation service over one or more spur tracks of the same company, if the contract of affreightment requires no movement over other tracks or lines of railway; whereas the switching or transfer service is one which precedes or follows a transportation service, and applies only to a shipment on which legal freight charges have already been earned or are to be earned. Dixon v. Central of Georgia R. Co. (1900) 110 Ga. 173, 35 S. E. 369. Approved in J. B. DOPPELSON LUMBER CO. v. CINCINNATI, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. ante, 452.

So, the fact that the entire service rendered by a railroad company is confined to spur tracks of the company will not prevent it from being transportation pure and simple. Dixon v. Central of Georgia R. Co. (Ga.) supra.

And so it was held that a contract of carriage from one point to another was a transportation service, although the entire service was on spur tracks and the distance was less than 3 miles, and was not a switching service within a rule of the Railroad Commission that "a charge of no more than $2 per car will be allowed for switching or transferring a car from any point on any road to any connecting road or warehouse within a space of 3 miles from starting point, without regard to weight or contents." (Ga.) Ibid.

So, also, the service rendered by a railroad company in hauling cars between a town on its road and a town on the opposite side of a river, the terminal of another road over which the cars had come or are to be forwarded, was held in Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. v. Railroad Commission (1915) — La. —, 69 So. 161, not to be a switching service within the definition of such a service, and should not be declared such by a Railroad Commission.

Movement of freight between points within switching limits in cities or at terminals constitutes transportation, where the shipment begins and ends within such district, and is not preceded or followed by a transportation service for which freight charges are assessed, and such movement will be treated as L.R.A.1916D.

transportation movement between separate shipping points. Railroad Commission v. Railroads (La. R. Com.) P.U.R. 1915E, 33.

So, also, where a railroad company moved coal from a coal mine to a point distant less than 2 miles, the service all being performed on its own rails with its own cars, no other railroad participating in the haul or delivery, it was held in Sparta Gas & Electric Co. v. Illinois Southern R. Co. (1910) 155 Ill. App. 283 (affirmed in (1910) 247 Ill. 346, 93 N. E. 312), to be a transportation service, and not a switching service, within the meaning of a rule of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission which reads as follows: "Switching includes the hauling of loaded cars from the station yards, sidetracks, elevators, or warehouses to the junctions of other railroads when not billed from stations on its own road to said junctions, and from junctions of other railroads to the stations, sidetracks, elevators, and warehouses situate on the tracks owned or controlled by the railroad company doing said switching; it is that transfer charge ordinarily made for moving loaded cars for short distances for which no regular waybill is made and which do not move between two regularly established stations on the same road." The court said that "all of the elements of a regular transportation service are found in the service rendered, such as the collection of the cars and placing them for loading, the haul after they were loaded, and the loss of two days' use of the cars at the end of the haul. The service contemplated by the rules is simply moving loaded cars to or from the junction of another railroad, the cars so moved usually belonging to another road, or, if belonging to the road doing the switching, it is usually paid a per diem for the use of its cars by the junction road, but does not share in the transportation charge of the junction road."

And in Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Michigan R. Commission (1912) 198 Fed. 1009, affirmed in (1913) 231 U. S. 457, 58 L. ed. 310, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 152, in upholding the validity of an order of the Railroad Commission requiring that railroads shall accept freight for transportation between two points within the same city, as against the contention that such a service was not transportation service but was switching service, the court said that "a service calling for the use of the so-called terminal facilities of a connecting railroad does not lose what would otherwise be the quality of transportation, from the mere facts either that the movement begins and ends within the switching or corporate limits of a city, or that the transportation is only between an intracity junction and team track or sidetrack."

Another test is whether the movement of cars is under the direction of the yard master or under orders from the train despatcher,—if the former, it is a switching service; if the latter, it is a transportation service.

Thus, a service upon a main line outside of a yard's limits, under orders as in cases of regular or special trains, was held in State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (1893) 88 Iowa, 445, 55 N. W. 331, not to be a switching service.

And so the court refused to sustain an order of the Railroad Commission requiring that a railroad transfer cars received at its yards from another railroad company to their destination, a place on its main line 1 mile beyond the yard limits, as a switching service. (Iowa) Ibid. J. H. B.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.
(Department No. 2.)

STATE OF OREGON, Resp't.,

v.

CHARLES L. WALLACE, Appt.

(— Or. —, 154 Pac. 430.)

Seduction — divorcee.

1. A divorced woman is within the operation of a statute imposing a penalty on one who, under promise of marriage, shall seduce an unmarried female of previous chaste character.

For other cases, see Seduction, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — corroboration — letters — identification.

2. Letters identified only by the testimony of prosecutrix are not admissible in evidence to corroborate her in a prosecution for seduction.

For other cases, see Evidence, IV. a; IV. k, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 25, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lane County convicting him of seduction. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. B. Dillard and L. Bilyeu, for appellant:

An unmarried woman within the intent of the statute is one that has never been married.

Jennings v. Com. 109 Va. 821, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 265, 132 Am. St. Rep. 946, 63 S. E. 1080, 17 Ann. Cas. 64; Kirk v. Long, 7 U. C. C. P. 365; State v. Meister, 60 Or. 474, 120 Pac. 406.

The evidence of the female alleged to be seduced must be corroborated as to all the material elements of the crime.

Burnett v. State, 76 Ark. 295, 113 Am. St. Rep. 94, 88 S. W. 957; State v. Burns, 110 Iowa, 745, 82 N. W. 325.

Note. — As to seduction of divorced woman or widow, see annotation following this case, post, 458.
L.R.A.1916D.

Conviction cannot be had on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice.

State v. Kelliher, 49 Or. 77, 88 Pac. 867; Barnard v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 76 S. W. 475.

Letters alleged to have been written by defendant must be proved to be his by some witness other than the prosecutrix, in order to be corroborative evidence.

Carrens v. State, 77 Ark. 16, 91 S. W. 30; Bishop v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 151 S. W. 821.

The prosecuting witness having had previous meretricious relations with the accused, she was not a chaste woman at the time of the act relied upon by the state for conviction, and the act charged in the indictment and relied upon for conviction could not constitute an offense.

People v. Nelson, 153 N. Y. 90, 60 Am. St. Rep. 592, 46 N. E. 1041; Knight v. State, 64 Tex. Crim. Rep. 541, 144 S. W. 969.

Messrs. J. M. Devers and J. F. Brumbaugh, for respondent:

The term "unmarried" in § 2076 of the statute is used in its full sense as to persons, and in a narrow sense as to time.

1 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 236; Jennings v. Com. 109 Va. 821, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 265, 132 Am. St. Rep. 946, 63 S. E. 1080, 17 Ann. Cas. 64; Pratt v. Mathew, 22 Beav. 328, 4 Week. Rep. 418.

Letters are proper corroborative evidence as introduced in the case at bar.

35 Cyc. 1355; 2 Enc. Ev. p. 694; State v. Bennett, 137 Iowa, 427, 110 N. W. 150; Weaver v. State, 142 Ala. 33, 39 So. 341; State v. Meister, 60 Or. 476, 120 Pac. 406; 11 Enc. Ev. 698; Harvey v. Territory, 11 Okla. 156, 65 Pac. 837.

A woman having had sexual relations with the accused before the date of the indictment is not necessarily unchaste.

State v. Meister, 60 Or. 485, 120 Pac. 406; Knight v. State, 64 Tex. Crim. Rep. 541, 144 S. W. 974; 3 Whart. Crim. Law, 11th ed. 2274; State v. Dacke, 59 Wash. 238, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 176, 109 Pac. 1050; Blair v. State, 72 Neb. 501, 101 N. W. 17.

Benson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is contended by appellant that, since it appears conclusively from the record that at the time of the commission of the alleged crime the prosecutrix was a divorced woman, she was not "an unmarried female" within the meaning of the statute, and that therefore the defendant was entitled to an instructed verdict of acquittal. The statute under which the prosecution is maintained provides that: "If any person, under promise of marriage, shall seduce and have illicit connection with any unmarried female of previous chaste character, such person, upon conviction, shall be punished," etc.

Our attention has been called to but one reported case directly in point, namely, Jennings v. Com. 109 Va. 821, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 265, 132 Am. St. Rep. 946, 63 S. E. 1080, 17 Ann. Cas. 64, in which it was held, under a statute practically identical with ours, that the phrase "an unmarried female" should be construed to mean a woman who has never been married, and that the seduction of a divorced woman is not a violation of the law. In Pratt v. Mathew, 22 Beav. 328, 4 Week. Rep. 418, it is said that the word "unmarried" does not necessarily mean "without having been married," and that no fixed meaning can be assigned to it, but it must be determined according to the circumstances of the case. This authority has been cited with approval by many of the courts, and indeed is approved in the case of Jennings v. Com. supra, in which case the court argues that since a divorced woman has necessarily had experience in the lecherous ways of men, she is immune from their wiles and does not need the protection of the law. We cannot agree with this interpretation, however, for the spirit of the law does not and cannot take into consideration the wisdom and experience of those whom it undertakes to protect from wrong. We entertain the view that law is intended for the safeguarding of the virtue of the chaste widow just as much as for that of the woman who has never been a wife.

Upon the trial the defendant requested the court to charge the jury as follows:

"That the letters alleged to have been written by the defendant to prosecutrix were not identified or proved to be letters of the defendant except by the prosecutrix's testimony; hence they do not afford evidence corroborating prosecutrix's testimony."

This instruction was refused, and such refusal is assigned as error. The record discloses that certain letters were introduced in evidence which, according to the testimony of prosecuting witness, were written by the defendant and received by her through the mails. No other evidence was offered as to the identity of the missives, and they were relied upon by the state to corroborate the prosecutrix as to the essential elements of the crime charged. We have found but few cases which discuss the question thus presented, but all of those to which our attention has been called support defendant's contention. In a case similar to the one under consideration the court of criminal appeals of Texas says: "The prosecuting officers evidently relied on the letters said to have been written by appellant and introduced in evidence. Miss Harrison testified that the letters were written by appellant, and this rendered them admissible in evidence; but could they be used to corroborate her, when she alone testified they were written by appellant? Eliminate her testimony, and the letters go with it. If it was desired to use the letters as corroborative testimony, some evidence, other than that of Miss Harrison, should have been introduced, tending to show that appellant wrote the letters. An accomplice cannot corroborate herself. And no testimony she gives can be so used. . . . This charge should have been given." Bishop v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 151 S. W. 821.

To the same effect are the cases of Smith v. State, 58 Tex. Crim. Rep. 106, 124 S. W. 919; Rogers v. State, 101 Ark. 45, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1198, 141 S. W. 491; Carrens v. State, 77 Ark. 16, 91 S. W. 30; James v. State, 72 Tex. Crim. Rep. 155, 161 S. W. 472. We conclude, then, that the court erred in refusing to give the instruction as requested, and the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

Moore, Ch. J., and Burnett and McBride, JJ., concur.

Annotation—Seduction of divorced woman or widow.

Earlier cases covering the question under annotation will be found in note to Jennings v. Com. 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 265.

STATE v. WALLACE, ante, 457, the prosecution in which is based on a statute practically identical with that in the L.R.A.1916D.

Jennings Case, is in direct conflict with that case. The court takes exception to the argument therein that, since a divorced woman has necessarily had experience in the lecherous ways of men, she is immune from their wiles and does not need the protection of the law; and adopts the view that law is intended for the safeguarding of the virtue of the chaste widow just as much as for that of the woman who has never been a wife.

This view finds support in People v. Weinstock (1912) 140 N. Y. Supp. 455, a prosecution under a statute similar to that in the WALLACE and Jennings cases. This was a preliminary examination to determine whether the crime of seduction had been committed and whether there was sufficient cause to believe defendant guilty. It seems that prosecutrix had been married, but had been deserted by her husband, and had neither heard from nor of him for over ten years, and so she claimed the protection of the statute as an unmarried woman, asserting that the presumption of death operated in her favor. The defendant contended that prosecutrix was a married woman, and therefore unchaste, and argued that the statute was enacted solely to protect females who had never been married. In denying this contention, and holding that a widow or a divorced woman was within the contemplation of the statute, the court said that "the main purpose of the statute is to protect all women who are single at the time of the perpetration of the wrong. The absurdity that a different construction would effect must be obvious. It seems reasonable that, if a woman once fallen from virtue . . . may upon proof of reformation be the subject of seduction, then a woman who has become a widow after a married life of virtue is entitled to no less protection than the female who at some time in the past has been guilty of illicit intercourse. It does not seem reasonable to me that the legislature ever intended any such result. I do not think that the word 'unmarried' should be construed in its narrow sense. . . . The foundations of civil society require a fair and broad meaning. The policy of the law is to protect. If previously married women are not included, it would be tantamount to saying that by marriage a woman loses the protection of the statute. Confidence and affection seem to play a great part in all cases of seduction, may not inducements lead even a previously married woman, not single, to consent?"

The only other reported case found considering the question under annotation is Cambridge v. Sutherland (1914) 20 D. L. R. 832, 7 Western Week. Rep. 1219, an action by a widow to recover damages for her own seduction. The only authority for bringing such an action by a person seduced was an ordinance giving such right to an "unmarried female." The court adopted the construction placed upon the term "unmarried female" in Kirk v. Long (1858) 7 U. C. C. P. 365, cited in earlier note, and held that it was intended to apply only to females who had never been married. This case, it will be seen, is opposed to STATE v. WALLACE, supra, and the Weinstock Case (N. Y.) supra, and is in harmony with Jennings v. Com.

It may be interesting in this connection to know that "the Roman law made penal the seduction of widows as well as virgins." 3 Whart. Crim. Law, 11th ed. p. 2268, note 2. J. H. B.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

A. T. ROCK, Resp.,
v.
L. P. EKERN, Appt.

(— Wis. —, 156 N. W. 197.)

Attorney and client — contract to assist prosecuting attorney — validity.

No recovery can be had on a contract between an attorney and a prosecuting witness to render assistance to the prosecuting attorney in a criminal case, although the court and prosecuting attorney acquiesce in the arrangement and the services are rendered at the preliminary examination of accused, since the contract is against public policy.

Note. — As to right of attorney to compensation from private employer for assisting in prosecution in criminal case, see annotation following this case, post, 462. L.R.A.1916D.

For other cases, see Contracts, III. c, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 1, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Douglas County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover for services rendered pursuant to contract in a criminal prosecution in which defendant was the complaining witness. Reversed.

Statement by Siebecker, J.:

This is an action brought by the plaintiff, an attorney at law, to recover for services rendered pursuant to a contract in a criminal prosecution in which defendant was the complaining witness.

One Fowler, treasurer of a company in which defendant was interested, was charged with having embezzled some of the company's money. Plaintiff was employed by the defendant to secure requisition from the governor for the return of the accused. After the requisition was issued the accused returned to the state in response to it. A short time before the preliminary hearing of the accused the defendant entered into a contract with the plaintiff by which the plaintiff was employed by the defendant privately to assist in the criminal prosecution of the accused. The district attorney consented to this assistance. The contract reads as follows:

February 26, 1914.

A. T. Rock, the undersigned, hereby agrees to assist the district attorney of Douglas county, Wis., in the prosecution of Homer T. Fowler so long as L. P. Ekern, the complaining witness, desires the services of said Rock therein, at and for the sum of twenty-five (25) dollars per day and his expenses when called from home in said prosecution, and said L. P. Ekern hereby agrees to pay said Rock for his services said sum of twenty-five (25) dollars per day for each and every day of his services, and pay his expenses when out of Superior or Duluth, Minn., in said work.

[Signed] A. T. Rock.

L. P. Ekern.

February 26, 1914.

Received from L. P. Ekern twenty-five (25) dollars as advance fees on above contract.

[Signed] A. T. Rock.

The plaintiff assisted in the preliminary examination of Fowler, and the court, the district attorney, the lawyers of the accused, and the accused acquiesced in the plaintiff's assisting the district attorney in the prosecution of the case. Plaintiff had full charge of the case and conducted the examination. At the conclusion of the hearing the municipal judge dismissed the complaint against the accused, and that terminated the prosecution. The defendant refused to pay the plaintiff for his services as per contract, and this suit was brought to recover payment for the services rendered under the contract. The following is an itemized statement of the amount plaintiff claims is due him from defendant:
L.R.A.1916D.

1913.

Feb. 25.	One-half day examining books of Fowler-Eimon-Oyaas Co., at $25 per day .....	$ 12.50
Feb. 26, 27, 28.	Examining books of Fowler-Eimon-Oyaas Co., at $25 per day .....	$ 75.00
Mar. 3 to 12.	Attending trial of State of Wisconsin v. Homer Fowler, 9 days at $25 per day .....	$225.00
April 3 and 4.	Attending court in case of L. P. Ekern v. Homer Fowler at $25 per day .....	$ 50.00
Total .....		$362.50

The court submitted a general verdict to the jury, who found for the plaintiff in the sum of $212.50. The verdict contains the statement: "Of the above sum nothing is found as fees in the civil suit."

This part of the verdict is not concerned on this appeal. The court, in accordance with the verdict, entered judgment for the plaintiff to recover the sum of $212.50, together with the costs and disbursements of the action. From such judgment this appeal is taken.

Messrs. Hanitch & Hartley, for appellant:

The contract of the plaintiff was unenforceable as against the public policy and statutes of the state.

Oborn v. State, 143 Wis. 249, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 966, 126 N. W. 737; Biemel v. State, 71 Wis. 444, 37 N. W. 244, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 556; State v. Russell, 83 Wis. 330, 53 N. W. 441; State ex rel. Durner v. Huegin, 110 Wis. 221, 62 L.R.A. 700, 85 N. W. 1046, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 332; Emery v. State, 101 Wis. 646, 78 N. W. 145; Income Tax Cases, 148 Wis. 456, L.R.A.1915B, 569, 134 N. W. 673, 135 N. W. 164, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1147; Smith v. State, 146 Wis. 111, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 463, 130 N. W. 894; Frederick v. Douglas County, 96 Wis. 411, 71 N. W. 798; Gebhardt v. Holmes, 149 Wis. 436, 135 N. W. 860; Coon v. Metzler, 161 Wis. 328, L.R.A.1916B, 667, 154 N. W. 377; Bryan v. Reynolds, 5 Wis. 200, 68 Am. Dec. 55; Wight v. Rindskopf, 43 Wis. 344.

Messrs. Dietrich & Dietrich for respondent.

Siebecke, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff sues upon the express contract he made with the defendant, which appears in the foregoing statement. It was agreed that the plaintiff was "to assist the district attorney of Douglas county, Wisconsin, in the prosecution of Homer T. Fowler so long as L. P. Ekern, the complaining witness, desires the services. . . . The evidence shows that the plaintiff rendered services under the contract by assisting the district attorney in conducting the preliminary examination in the municipal court for Douglas county. He claims there was due for nine days' services in attending court on such examination the sum of $225. The jury found $212.50 due him for such services, and included nothing for other services. The defendant challenges the right of plaintiff to recover under the contract, upon the ground that the contract is against the policy of the law and the statutes of this state and void, and that no recovery thereon will be permitted. The question of the policy of the state regarding such contracts as this was examined by this court in the case of Biemel v. State, 71 Wis. 444, 37 N. W. 244, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 556. In that case an attorney who had been employed and paid for his services by a private party was permitted by the court to assist the district attorney in the prosecution of the case. This court there held that the statutes of the state providing for the election of a district attorney to act as the public prosecutor, and prohibiting him from receiving "any fee or reward from or on behalf of any prosecutor or other individual, for services in any prosecution of business to which it shall be his official duty to attend; nor be concerned as attorney or counsel for either party, other than for the state or county, in any civil action depending upon the same state of facts upon which any criminal prosecution commenced but undetermined shall depend," together with the statute vesting in the judges of the courts the power to appoint attorneys to assist the district attorney whenever the court finds it necessary and proper in prosecuting felonies and prosecutions before grand juries,—declare a policy of the state which regulates and limits the appointment of such counsel to assist in such prosecutions to attorneys who are not employed and paid by private parties, and that such counsel must be appointed by the court and paid from the public fund, and thus place such assisting attorney in the same position of impartiality as the district attorney elected by the people. The court declared: "We think it is quite clear from the reading of our statutes on the subject, as well as upon public policy, that an attorney employed and paid by private parties should not be permitted either by the courts or by the prosecuting attorney to assist in the trial of such criminal cases."

L.R.A.1916D.

It is emphasized in the opinion that prosecutors in criminal cases should be free from prejudice and have no private interest in prosecution. In Wight v. Rindskopf, 43 Wis. 344, in speaking of the duties and function of prosecuting officers, the court states that: He "is a quasi judicial officer, retained by the public for the prosecution of persons accused of crime, in the exercise of a sound discretion to distinguish between the guilty and the innocent. . . . He is trusted with broad official discretion, generally subject, however, to judicial control."

These views are supported in the case of State v. Russel, 83 Wis. 320, 53 N. W. 441. These adjudications clearly establish that employment and payment of private counsel to assist the district attorney in the prosecution of persons for crime, by private parties, is against the public policy of this state. We are of the opinion that this policy has not been changed by subsequent legislation, and must be adhered to. From the facts and circumstances shown in this case it appears that plaintiff contracted with the defendant "to assist the district attorney of Douglas county, Wisconsin, in the prosecution of Homer T. Fowler so long as L. P. Ekern [defendant], the complaining witness, desires the services of said Rock [plaintiff] therein. . . ." It is without dispute that the amount of the recovery against defendant was for services plaintiff rendered under this contract in the preliminary examination of Fowler upon defendant's complaints. The contract as proved is against the public policy of this state, and the trial court erred in permitting the plaintiff to recover thereon. The acquiescence of the accused, the court, and the district attorney to allow plaintiff to assist in the prosecution of Fowler under his private employment by defendant, does not purge the contract of employment of its illegal character, and affords no excuse to enforce it. Wight v. Rindskopf, supra. In Melchoir v. McCarty, 31 Wis. 252, 11 Am. Rep. 605, it was held: "The general rule of law is that all contracts which are repugnant to justice, or founded upon an immoral consideration, or which are against the general policy of the common law, or contrary to the provisions of any statute, are void," even where such statute does not expressly declare them void.

It is argued that the plaintiff rendered the services here involved upon the preliminary examination, and hence they are not of the class of services which are prohibited to be performed by counsel employed by private parties under this public policy. We cannot accede to this claim. A preliminary examination of a person accused of crime is one step in the prosecution for the crime charged. It is so regarded and treated in the common law and the statutes. The court committed error in permitting the plaintiff to recover on the contract in this case.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded to the Superior Court for Douglas County, with direction to enter judgment dismissing plaintiff's complaint.

Annotation—Right of attorney to compensation from private employer for assisting in prosecution in criminal case.

As to right of accused to complain because prosecution is conducted or assisted by an unofficial member of the bar, see notes to State v. Bartley, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 564, and Flege v. State, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1106.

As to effect of appearance of special attorney or private counsel before the grand jury, see note to Hartgraves v. State, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 568.

As to right of prosecutrix in bastardy proceedings to private counsel, see note to State v. Smith, 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 463.

As to right of prosecuting attorney to compensation from individual, see note to Coggeshall v. Conner, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) 81.

The basis of the decision in ROCK v. EKERN, ante, 459, that no recovery can be had on a contract of employment between a private party and an attorney, for services of the latter in assisting at the trial of a criminal case, is the rule in that jurisdiction that it is against public policy for a privately employed counsel to assist in such trials, and it is probable that the same decision would follow as a matter of course in other jurisdictions where a similar rule prevails.

But in Price v. Caperton (1864) 1 Duv. (Ky.) 207, the only reported case found, aside from ROCK v. EKERN, which has considered the question under annotation, it was held that as it was not against public policy to permit a privately employed attorney to assist in a prosecution of a criminal case, an agreement to pay for such services could be enforced. The court in the course of its opinion said: "Such a contract, express or implied, though quite common, has never, so far as we know, been adjudged void as against public policy. And why it should be so considered we are not able to perceive. It may be possible that some such employed counsel may make improper efforts to convict, regardless of the guilt or innocence of the accused. But there is scarcely as much danger that such prostitution will convict the innocent as there is that the like abuses of forensic privilege, by counsel for the accused, may acquit the guilty. On each side all the counsel are under the control of the presiding judge, who should keep all equally in their proper track; and the aid to the official attorney may also be controlled, as he always should be, by him. In many cases of atrocious crime an array of able counsel in the defense may require, for justice to the commonwealth, some assistance to her official representative in the prosecution; and in such a case it would certainly be the privilege, and might even be the civic duty, of a patriotic lawyer to aid his country in bringing to condign punishment its public enemy. . . . We cannot see any consistent reason for denouncing the mere employment or withholding a reasonable compensation, either conventional or implied." The court added, as dictum however, that a contingent fee dependent on conviction ought never to be permitted to stimulate assistant counsel; and, so far, it might be the policy of the law to withhold its remedies for enforcing such a contract.

J. H. B.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

HENRY FREY

v.

J. T. STANGL, Appt.

(148 Iowa, 522, 125 N. W. 868.)

Appeal — refusal to compel election — substituted pleading.

1. Refusal to compel plaintiff to elect between several counts of his declaration is not reversible error where the declaration is superseded before verdict by an amended and substituted one.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. m, 7, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — As to right of vendee to recover back payment made upon a contract for the sale of land which does not satisfy the statute of frauds, see annotation following Cook v. Griffith, post, 468.

Statute of frauds — parol contract for real estate — recovering advance payment.

2. Where an oral agreement to convey real estate is not void, the vendee may recover the amount paid in part performance of it in case the vendor denies its existence, unless the vendor affirmatively shows that he is ready, willing, and able to perform on his part.

For other cases see Assumpsit, II. c, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Assumpsit — return of purchase money — demand.

3. Demand for return of money paid on an oral contract for sale of real estate is not necessary upon repudiation of the contract by the vendor, if circumstances show that it would have been unavailing.

For other cases, see Action or Suit, I. b, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Deposition — motion to strike — good in part.

4. A motion to strike an answer to an interrogatory in a deposition is properly overruled if a portion of it is admissible. For other cases, see Depositions, III. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(April 11, 1910.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Carroll County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover money paid on a contract for the purchase of land which had been repudiated by the vendor because not in writing. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Reynolds & Meyers, for appellant:

Plaintiff cannot recover back money paid on an oral contract without previously having made a demand therefor.

Abbott v. Draper, 4 Denio, 51, 2 Am. Dec. 139.

The oral understanding could have no effect on the previous written contract, which was required by the statute of frauds to be in writing.

Warren v. A. B. Mayer Mfg. Co. 161 Mo. 112, 61 S. W. 644; Bradley v. Harter, 156 Ind. 499, 60 N. E. 139; Browne, Stat. Fr. ¶¶ 409-414; Wood, Stat. Fr. ¶ 403.

The written contract is still in force, and before plaintiff can recover, he must show his willingness to comply with that contract, and default on the part of the defendant.

Hanson v. Gunderson, 95 Wis. 613, 70 N. W. 827.

Plaintiff was not entitled to recover until he showed defendant in default.

9 Cyc. 601; Nelson v. Plimpton Fireproof Elevating Co. 55 N. Y. 480; White v. Day, 56 Iowa, 248, 9 N. W. 210; Smith v. Cedar Rapids & M. R. Co. 43 Iowa, 239. L.R.A.1916D.

Messrs. W. C. Saul and Charles C. Helmer, for appellee:

Where a person has been guilty of fraud, he will not be permitted to shelter himself behind the statute of frauds.

Bazemore v. Mullins, 52 Ark. 207, 12 S. W. 474; Martin v. Martin, 170 Ill. 639, 62 Am. St. Rep. 411, 48 N. E. 924; Smelling v. Valley, 103 Mich. 580, 61 N. W. 878; Sathre v. Rolfe, 31 Mont. 85, 77 Pac. 431; Holliday v. Perry, 38 Ind. App. 588, 78 N. E. 877; Powell v. Yearance, 73 N. J. Eq. 117, 67 Atl. 892.

Where the vendor under an oral contract for the sale of land declines to perform, and sets up the statute of frauds, an action at law will lie against him for any part of the purchase price he has received.

Littell v. Jones, 56 Ark. 139, 19 S. W. 497; Pressnell v. Lundin, 44 Minn. 551, 47 N. W. 161; Whitaker v. Burrows, 24 N. Y. Supp. 1011; Durham Consol. Land & Improv. Co. v. Guthrie, 116 N. C. 381, 21 S. E. 952; Moore v. Powell, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 43, 25 S. W. 475; Welch v. Darling, 59 Vt. 136, 7 Atl. 547; Allen v. Richards, 83 Mo. 55; Tucker v. Grover, 60 Wis. 233, 19 N. W. 92; Nelson v. Shelby Mfg. & Improv. Co. 96 Ala. 515, 38 Am. St. Rep. 116, 11 So. 695; Interstate Hotel Co. v. Woodward & B. Amusement Co. 103 Mo. App. 198, 77 S. W. 114.

Ladd, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The parties hereto entered into a written contract March 11, 1904, by the terms of which plaintiff undertook to buy of the defendant, for the consideration of $16,000, 240 acres of land in Missouri. Therein he agreed to assume the payment of an indebtedness of $6,000 and another of $6,200, secured by trust deeds of the land, to execute a note to defendant for $2,300 upon taking possession of the same, with a deed of trust securing it, March 1, 1905, and presently to execute a note for $1,500, payable without interest on that day. The instrument contained no recitals of what was required of defendant. On the same day the plaintiff executed his note of $1,500, payable to defendant, and the latter, shortly thereafter, indorsed it to a local bank. The deal was never closed, but the plaintiff paid the note January 18, 1905, and in this action seeks to recover the amount so paid, with interest. The original petition was in three counts, but as this was superseded by an amended and substituted petition, after introduction of the plaintiff's evidence in chief, the defendant was in no wise prejudiced by the refusal of the court to require plaintiff to elect on which count of the original petition he would proceed. The issues as finally joined involved inquiries as to whether, because of misrepresentations as to the date of the maturity of the indebtedness secured by trust deeds, the written contract was abandoned, and an oral agreement modifying it or in lieu thereof was entered into, as to whether the note of $1,500 was paid by plaintiff to relieve himself of any obligation under the written contract or in part performance of the oral agreement, and as to whether, in the latter event, the statute of frauds of the state of Missouri operated to defeat recovery. The defendant expressly denied the making of any oral agreement for the sale of the land, and alleged that, if one was made, such statutes rendered it unenforceable.

That the written contract was abandoned and a subsequent oral agreement for the purchase of the land entered into which was not fully performed appears from the evidence. Whether the $1,500 was paid to release plaintiff from his obligation under the written contract or in part performance of the subsequent oral agreement was submitted to the jury, and rightly so, as the evidence bearing thereon was in conflict. There was also a conflict in the evidence as to whether, as a part of the oral agreement, plaintiff undertook to execute new trust deeds and deliver to defendant his note secured by trust deeds on the land, and, because of the exactions of the party holding these, refused to carry out the oral agreement, or whether under this defendant was to procure the extension of time of payment of the indebtedness either under the existing trust deeds or upon the execution of new ones, and, owing to said exactions, he did not comply. In other words, there was some conflict in the evidence as to which party was at fault in not executing the oral understanding between them.

The main contention of appellant in argument is that the evidence concerning the oral understanding of the parties was not admissible because of the statute of frauds of the state of Missouri, where the parol agreement was had. Conceding, without deciding, that the statute of that state is controlling, and that part payment did not operate as an exception thereto, it is to be said that the design of this action is not to enforce an oral modification of the written agreement or subsequent oral contract, but to compel the restitution of the money paid as part performance thereof. If the vendee paid the money on faith and in part performance of a nonenforceable oral agreement, the law implies a promise on the part of the vendor to repay the same, or else perform on his part. Tucker v. Grover, 60 Wis. 233, 19 N. W. 92; Littell v. Jones, 56 L.R.A.1916D.

Ark. 139, 19 S. W. 497; Pressnell v. Lundin, 44 Minn. 551, 47 N. W. 161; Welch v. Darling, 59 Vt. 136, 7 Atl. 547; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 836. These are decisions to the effect that the right of recovery depends solely upon whether the contract is binding on the vendor; holding that, if not, then recovery may be had for the part performance, regardless of who in fact repudiated the parol agreement. Reynolds v. Harris, 9 Cal. 338; Flinn v. Barber, 64 Ala. 193; Brandeis v. Neustadt, 13 Wis. 142. But the great weight of authority in this country, as well as in England, is to hold that where the vendee has repudiated a parol agreement, or where the vendor stands ready, able, and willing to perform his contract, the latter may successfully defend by setting up the express contract and his readiness to comply therewith. The difference in the rulings seems to depend on the wording of statutes, those construed in the cited cases declaring an oral contract for the sale of land void. In this state such contracts are valid; the statute merely prescribing the rule of evidence concerning their proof. As between the parties, such agreement may be enforced as fully as though in writing, unless denied by the pleading, and may be established by the testimony of the adverse party. Code, §§ 4627, 4628. What may be the procedure in Missouri does not appear from the record, but the rule as last stated prevails in that state. Lockett v. Williamson, 37 Mo. 388; Galway v. Shields, 66 Mo. 313, 27 Am. Rep. 351.

As the contract is not void, it is manifest that the vendee may not recover money paid in part performance, if he has elected to repudiate the agreement, or if the vendor is ready, able, and willing to perform the agreement on his part. The authorities in general so hold. Thus, in Shaw v. Shaw, 6 Vt. 69, the court said: "When one party has partly performed under such a contract, he cannot recover from what he has done, unless the other party insist upon the statute and refuse to perform. This is too obviously just to require comment, and to disregard it would do violence to every leading principle. The contract cannot be considered void as long as he for the protection of whose rights the statute is made is willing to treat and consider the contract good." Lane v. Shackford, 5 N. H. 130: "We are of opinion that the plaintiff is not at liberty to treat the contract for the sale of the land in this case as void, unless the defendant refused, or disabled himself, to perform it. If one man contracts with another to perform labor, and receive as a compensation the conveyance of a particular tract of land, although the contract to convey the land is not a proper foundation for an action, yet still common honesty and fair dealing require that he shall not be at liberty to refuse the land and demand money until the other party has refused to execute the contract. But we have no doubt that in general, when a contract within the statute of frauds has been in part executed by one party, there is a plain remedy for such party to a certain extent in a court of law, if the other party fraudulently refuse to execute the contract on his part. If money has been paid, it may be recovered back. If labor has been performed, a compensation for it may be recovered." Coughlin v. Knowles, 7 Met. 57, 39 Am. Dec. 759: "The provisions of the statute are not so broad as to entitle a party who has entered into an oral contract by which he is to receive a conveyance of land, and towards payment for which he has made advances in money, to set aside such contract as a nullity, and reclaim the money so advanced, the other party being no way in fault, but being both able and ready to perform his contract, and to make the conveyance in the manner stipulated by the oral agreement." See also Eaton v. Eaton, 35 N. J. L. 290; Day v. Wilson, 83 Ind. 463, 43 Am. Rep. 76; Crabtree v. Welles, 19 Ill. 55; Venable v. Brown, 31 Ark. 564, where it is said: "Where a party has paid money, or delivered property on a parol contract for the purchase of land, which is void by the statute of frauds, he cannot maintain an action . . . [to recover back] the money or property so paid or delivered, so long as the other party [to whom the money has been paid, or property delivered] is able and willing to perform." Richards v. Allen, 17 Me. 296.

The reason for the ruling is thus stated in Abbot v. Draper, 4 Denio, 51, 2 Am. Dec. 139: "When the vendor refuses to go on with the contract, or has parted with his title so that he cannot perform, he is then in the wrong, and, having himself put an end to the contract, there is no longer any consideration for the payments which have been made under it; and the law will imply a promise to restore the money. But how can the law imply a promise to refund the money so long as the vendor is not in default? The payment was a voluntary one, made with a full knowledge of all the facts. Every time a payment was made and received the parties virtually said, 'Although the law will not enforce this contract, we will go on and carry it into effect.' The money is not received as a loan, but as a payment; and, so long as the vendor is able and willing to perform the contract on his part, he holds the money as owner, and not as a debtor. The consideration upon which the money was paid has not failed; and there is nothing from which a promise to repay can be justly implied." See Brown on Statute of Frauds, § 122. It will be noted that defendant did not plead his readiness or ability to perform, and not only denied the making of the parol agreement, but interposed the statute of frauds of the state of Missouri as a defense. Though this did not constitute a defense to an action like this, it did indicate a denial of any obligation to perform the oral agreement if such there were; and surely in this state of the record it cannot be assumed that, had plaintiff performed his part, the defendant would have conveyed the land. Even though plaintiff did not perform as agreed, recovery of the money paid in part performance ought not to be denied, unless it affirmatively appear that defendant was ready, willing, and able to have performed on his part; otherwise, such part performance was without consideration. In other words, the denial of making the contract and the interposition of the statute of frauds amounted to a repudiation of the oral contract, if any there was, and, if the $1,600 was paid in part performance of the oral agreement, the plaintiff, in view of the condition of the pleadings, was entitled to recover. This in effect was what the jury were told in the eighth and ninth instructions. Ordinarily a previous demand is essential in such a case. Abbot v. Draper, supra. The circumstances, however, were such as to show conclusively that it would have been unavailing. Though defendant had a deed duly executed by his wife in his possession, he did not join therein to deliver the deed, but, without so doing or restoring the money to plaintiff, immediately left the state, and communicated with him no further. This conduct obviated the necessity of a demand, as it plainly demonstrated an intention to appropriate the money previously paid.

The motion to strike the entire answer to the second interrogatory propounded in the deposition of Flook was rightly overruled; for, conceding a part to have been improper, the remainder was admissible. No error appears in the ruling on the motion to suppress this deposition; the record not disclosing that the motion was filed in apt time. Code, § 4712. As the answer to the second interrogatory propounded to the witness Kirk was included in that to the first cross-interrogatory, the motion to suppress his deposition was rightly overruled. The papers in the attachment proceedings in the suit of the Bank v. Defendant were admissible as bearing on the arrangement in pursuance of which the note was paid.

We discover no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

HARVEY COOK

v.

JOHN R. GRIFFITH, Plff. in Err.

(— W. Va. —, 86 S. E. 879.)

Vendor and purchaser — noncompliance with contract — recovery of payments.

Where the vendor in an oral contract for the sale and purchase of land, voidable by the statute of frauds, is able, ready, and willing to execute the contract on his part by making, executing, and delivering to the vendee a good and sufficient deed for the land, upon payment to him of the balance of purchase money, or otherwise complying with his contract, the vendee cannot, in an action at law, recover back money paid the vendor on account of the purchase money.

For other cases, see Vendor and Purchaser, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 19, 1915.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Raleigh County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover back an amount paid by him to defendant under an oral contract for the purchase of an undivided interest in certain land. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. T. N. Read and John M. Anderson, for plaintiff in error:

Plaintiff, under the law, cannot recover money voluntarily paid to defendant with full knowledge of all the facts at the time he made such payment.

Beard v. Beard, 25 W. Va. 480, 52 Am. Rep. 219; Haigh v. United States Bldg. Land & L. Asso. 19 W. Va. 792; Richmond v. Judah, 5 Leigh, 305; Burton v. Burton, 10 Leigh, 600; West Virginia Transp. Co. v. Sweetzer, 25 W. Va. 443; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 600; 30 Cyc. 1298, 1313, 1322; 20 Cyc. 298; Clark, Contr. §§ 129, 134.

Plaintiff having repudiated the contract and refused to perform his part, and defendant being not in default, and at all times being ready, able, and willing to perform the contract on his part, plaintiff cannot recover money paid under the contract.

22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 632, 633, note 1; Richards v. Allen, 17 Me. 296; McKinney v. Harvie, 38 Minn. 18, 8 Am. St. Rep.

Headnote by MILLER, J.

Note. — As to right of vendee to recover back payments made upon a contract for the sale of land which does not satisfy the statute of frauds, see annotation following this case, post, 468.
L.R.A.1916D.

640, 35 N. W. 668; Galway v. Shields, 66 Mo. 313, 27 Am. Rep. 351; Cobb v. Hall, 29 Vt. 510, 70 Am. Dec. 432; Sims v. Hutchins, 8 Smedes & M. 328, 47 Am. Dec. 90; Coughlin v. Knowles, 7 Met. 57, 39 Am. Dec. 759; Galvin v. Prentice, 45 N. Y. 162, 6 Am. Rep. 58; 2 Page, Contr. § 740; Potts v. Fitch, 47 W. Va. 67, 34 S. E. 959; Mankin v. Jones, 68 W. Va. 422, 69 S. E. 981.

Messrs. File & File, for defendant in error:

The contract was within the statute of frauds and unenforceable.

Griffith v. Cook, 74 W. Va. 452, L.R.A. —, —, 82 S. E. 256; Dunphy v. Ryan, 116 U. S. 491, 29 L. ed. 703, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 486; Walker v. Herring, 21 Gratt. 678, 8 Am. Rep. 616.

The contention of defendant that he holds the title to one third of the lands purchased by him under this contract, in trust for the benefit of Cook, cannot be sustained.

Naah v. Jones, 41 W. Va. 769, 24 S. E. 592; McGraw v. Bower, 62 W. Va. 420, 59 S. E. 175; Perry, Trusts, 2d ed. § 133; Harris v. Elliott, 45 W. Va. 245, 32 S. E. 176.

The mere fact that this action is based on a different demand growing out of the same contract does not prevent this question from being res judicata.

West Virginia Nat. Bank v. Spencer, 71 W. Va. 678, 77 S. E. 269; Roller v. Murray, 71 W. Va. 161, L.R.A.1915F, 984, 76 S. E. 172, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1139; Custer v. Hall, 71 W. Va. 119, 76 S. E. 183.

This action is not on the contract, but on an implied promise to pay, and no demand was necessary.

4 Cyc. 336; Hoff's Pleading & Forms, § 93, p. 79; Mankin v. Jones, 68 W. Va. 422, 69 S. E. 981; Scott v. Bush, 26 Mich. 418, 12 Am. Rep. 311; Nelson v. Shelby Mfg. & Improv. Co. 38 Am. St. Rep. 117, and note p. 133, 96 Ala. 515, 11 So. 695.

Money paid on an oral contract for the purchase of land, which is within the statute of frauds, may be recovered under the common count in assumpsit as money had and received for the use of the purchaser, and a previous demand is not necessary, although demand is shown to have been made in this case.

Mankin v. Jones, 68 W. Va. 422, 69 S. E. 981; Scott v. Bush, 26 Mich. 418, 12 Am. Rep. 311; Nelson v. Shelby Mfg. & Improv. Co. supra; Dunphy v. Ryan, 116 U. S. 491, 29 L. ed. 703, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 486.

Money paid under a contract within the statute of frauds may be recovered, notwithstanding the willingness of the vendor to perform, because the statute of frauds was as much designed to protect the vendee as the vendor of land, and its primary effect is to prohibit an action for the breach of an oral contract falling within its terms, either against the vendor or vendee.

Brown v. Gray, 68 W. Va. 555, 70 S. E. 276; Hissam v. Parrish, 41 W. Va. 686, 56 Am. St. Rep. 892, 24 S. E. 600; Scott v. Bush, 26 Mich. 418, 12 Am. Rep. 311; Brown v. Pollard, 89 Va. 696, 17 S. E. 6; Dunphy v. Ryan, supra.

An oral contract within the statute of frauds cannot be made the ground of a defense any more than of a demand; the obligation of the plaintiff to perform the contract is no more available to the defendant in the former case than the obligation of the defendant to perform it would be to the plaintiff in the latter case.

Bernier v. Cabot Mfg. Co. 71 Me. 506, 36 Am. Rep. 343; Allen v. Booker, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 21, 19 Am. Dec. 33; 2 Page, Contr. § 740; 20 Cyc. 304; Thompson v. New South Coal Co. 135 Ala. 630, 62 L.R.A. 551, 93 Am. St. Rep. 49, 34 So. 31; Lemon v. Randall, 124 Mich. 687, 83 N. W. 994.

The right of the plaintiff to recover was a question of law, and not of fact; the law on the facts being for the plaintiff, it was the duty of the court to disregard the verdict of the jury, and render judgment for the plaintiff.

23 Cyc. 779; 4 Minor's Inst. pt. 1; pp. 946, 947; 1 Black, Judgm. § 16; Mason v. Harper's Ferry Bridge Co. 28 W. Va. 639.

Miller, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In the case of Griffith v. Cook, 74 W. Va. 452, L.R.A.—, —, 82 S. E. 256, Cook, by pleading and relying on the statute of frauds, defeated Griffith, in an action against him for the balance of purchase money claimed as due from Cook, for an interest in six several tracts of land sold him.

In the present suit Cook sued Griffith in assumpsit to recover back the amount of purchase money paid Griffith, as he claims, in full for an interest in one of said tracts, and which Griffith had refused to convey him, but as Griffith contends, in part payment for an interest in all six of said tracts, and which he was then and had been able, ready, and willing to convey him on payment of the balance of purchase money due him therefore.

On the trial below, on the defendant's plea of nonassumpsit, and two special interrogatories submitted to the jury on plaintiff's motion, to be answered and returned with their verdict, the jury found for the defendant, and the interrogatories and their answers thereto were as follows: "Question 1. Did Cook agree to take an interest in any lands other than the C. C. Moomaw tract?" Answer, "Yes." "Question 2. Was L.R.A.1916D.

the contract for an interest in all the tracts of land, as claimed by John R. Griffith?" Answer, "Yes."

By the judgment complained of, the court, on motion of plaintiff to set aside the verdict and, non obstante verdicto, enter judgment in his favor, and of defendant, to enter judgment on the verdict in his favor, adjudged that the motion of defendant be overruled, that the verdict for defendant be set aside; and, notwithstanding the verdict, the court finding independently of the jury that there was due and owing from defendant to plaintiff the sum of $1,690.77, it was thereupon considered and ordered that plaintiff recover of defendant said sum with interest from date, with the costs of the suit.

This action of the court on these motions was evidently based on the theory that the defense interposed by Griffith was bad and immaterial, and that, in view of the judgment against him in Griffith v. Cook, supra, no other or valid defense could be interposed by him. Mason v. Harper's Ferry Bridge Co. 28 W. Va. 639; 23 Cyc. 779; 1 Black, Judgm. § 16; 4 Minor's Inst. pt. 1, pp. 946, 947.

As the jury on the interrogatories submitted found against the plaintiff on the question whether his contract was for an interest in one of said tracts only, or for an interest in all six of said tracts, binding him, the single and decisive question now presented for decision is, can a vendee in a parol contract for the sale and purchase of land recover back money voluntarily paid by him to the vendor, when the latter is able and stands ready and willing, on payment of the balance of purchase money, to execute the contract on his part, by making, executing, and delivering to the vendee a good and sufficient deed for the property? Quite a long line of decisions answer this question in the negative. Coughlin v. Knowles, 7 Met. 57, 39 Am. Dec. 759; Sims v. Hutchins, 8 Smedes & M. 328, 47 Am. Dec. 90; Cobb v. Hall, 29 Vt. 510, 70 Am. Dec. 432; Galway v. Shields, 66 Mo. 313, 27 Am. Rep. 351; Day v. Wilson, 83 Ind. 463, 43 Am. Rep. 76; McKinney v. Harvie, 38 Minn. 18, 8 Am. St. Rep. 640, 35 N. W. 668; Ketchum v. Evertson, 13 Johns. 359, 7 Am. Dec. 384; Galvin v. Prentice, 45 N. Y. 162, 6 Am. Rep. 58. The rule is different, of course, where the vendor is unable or refuses to execute the contract on his part. In such case the vendee may recover, not upon the oral contract, but on a contract which the law implies to refund the amount paid as for money had and received to use of plaintiff. Blanchard v. Detroit, L. & L. M. R. Co. 31 Mich. 43, 18 Am. Rep. 142; Sims v. Hutchins, 8 Smedes

& M. 328, 47 Am. Dec. 90; Jellison v. Jordan, 68 Me. 373; Nugent v. Teachout, 67 Mich. 571, 35 N. W. 254.

There are decisions holding with the views of plaintiff's counsel, that money so paid may be recovered by the vendee, notably Brown v. Pollard, 89 Va. 696, 17 S. E. 6; Nelson v. Shelby Mfg. & Improv. Co. 96 Ala. 515, 38 Am. St. Rep. 116, 11 So. 695. In Alabama and Michigan, and in some of the other states, contracts falling within the purview of the statute of frauds are thereby declared to be absolutely void and unenforceable; while our statute amounts rather to a rule of evidence. Indeed, the subject of the chapter, chapter 98, Code 1913, is, "Of Written Evidence," and the subject of the first section (§ 4171) is: "When Written Evidence Required to Maintain Action," and it provides that "no action shall be brought in any of the following cases," naming them, and including among others the case of a contract for the sale of real estate or the lease thereof for more than a year. The Virginia statute is substantially like our own, but in the Virginia case last cited, following the Michigan cases, the court seems to treat the Virginia statute as rendering void contracts of this character. The decision in Nelson v. Shelby Mfg. & Improv. Co. supra, seems to be predicated, to some extent, at least, upon the statute of Alabama, declaring contracts for the sale and purchase of land, not in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith, absolutely void. Under our decisions, the statute of frauds, to constitute a defense, must be pleaded, and where there has been such partial performance thereof by one of the parties as to render it fraudulent on the part of the other to withhold performance, specific execution will be decreed. Miller v. Lorentz, 39 W. Va. 160, 19 S. E. 391, and the many cases collated and referred to by Judge Holt in his opinion, 39 W. Va. at pages 171 et seq. And some of our cases go so far as to decree specific performance of an oral contract for the sale and purchase of land where the pleadings admit the contract, and the statute of frauds is not pleaded or relied on. Moore, K. & Co. v. Ward, 71 W. Va. 393, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 390, 76 S. E. 807, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 263, and cases cited. After due consideration of the legal principles involved and the authorities cited, our conclusion is to hold with the majority of the decided cases, and to answer the question propounded above as decisive of the case, as those authorities do, in the negative.

The judgment below will, therefore, be reversed, and a judgment entered here reinstating the verdict, and that the plaintiff take nothing by his action, and that the defendant recover of the plaintiff his costs incurred in this court, as well as those incurred in the Circuit Court in this behalf expended.

Annotation—Right of vendee to recover back payments made upon a contract for the sale of land which does not satisfy the statute of frauds.

As to action for purchase price on contract for the sale of land where deed has been delivered, see note to Malzer v. Schisler, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 77; and see also Birch v. Baker (N. J.) post, 485.

A question closely analogous to that now under consideration is dealt with in the note to Jackson v. Stearns, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 639, on "Right to recover value of services rendered in consideration of a contract to convey or devise property which is void by the statute of frauds."

The right to compensation for improvements on land, made in good faith, under an oral contract or gift, is treated in the note to Luton v. Badham, 53 L.R.A. 337; and the liability of the purchaser for rents or for use and occupation where the vendor refuses to perform, in the note to Grainger v. Jenkins, L.R.A.1915E, 404.

The present note, of course, deals with the right of the vendee to recover back payments on the purchase price only so L.R.A.1916D.

far as it is affected by the statute of frauds. Generally as to rescission of contracts of sale of real property, see Index to L.R.A. Notes, under the title, "Vendor and Purchaser."

The question now under annotation presupposes that originally the agreement was within the statute of frauds, and not enforceable by or against either party. In most states, under a statute requiring the agreement to be signed by the "party to be charged," the contract may be enforced either at law or in equity against the vendee if signed by him, although not signed by the vendor (see notes in 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 680, and 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 410). In that case, of course, the vendee cannot, merely because of the statute of frauds, recover back what he has paid on the purchase price. However, in some jurisdictions, either because of an unusual construction of the phrase "party to be charged," or because of the express terms of the statute, it is necessary, in order to bind either party, that the contract or memorandum be signed by the party by whom the sale is to be made, and, if so signed, it is enforceable at law or in equity by or against either party (see notes in 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 680, and 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 410). In such case, of course, the question now under annotation cannot arise.

Where vendor is unable or unwilling to perform.

It is settled, with practically no dispute, that the purchaser of land, or an interest therein, under a contract which does not satisfy the statute of frauds, may recover, as upon an implied promise, the amount he has paid, as a deposit, or upon the purchase price, where, without fault on his part, the vendor refuses, or is unable, to perform the contract by conveying such title or interest as the contract calls for.

Fed.—Dudley v. Hayward (1882) 11 Fed. 543.

Ala.—Allen v. Booker (1829) 2 Stew. (Ala.) 21, 19 Am. Dec. 33; Head v. Sanders (1914) 189 Ala. 443, 66 So. 621.

Ark.—Littell v. Jones (1892) 56 Ark. 139, 19 S. W. 497.

Ga.—Jay v. Sweatt (1911) 8 Ga. App. 481, 70 S. E. 16.

Idaho.—Amonson v. Idaho Development Co. (1914) 25 Idaho, 615, 139 Pac. 352.

Ill.—Bergtold v. Worthy (1913) 182 Ill. App. 379.

Ind.—Barickman v. Kuykendall (1841) 6 Blackf. 21.

Kan.—Robertson v. Talley (1911) 84 Kan. 817, 115 Pac. 640; Sellers v. Bell (1901) 10 Kan. App. 581, 63 Pac. 457.

Ky.—Fox v. Longly (1818) 1 A. K. Marsh. 388; Hunt v. Sanders (1819) 1 A. K. Marsh. 552; Dougherty v. Goggin (1829) 1 J. J. Marsh. 374; Brown v. East (1827) 5 T. B. Mon. 405; Craig v. Prather (1841) 2 B. Mon. 9; McBrayer v. Thomas (1901) 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1179, 64 S. W. 906; Reid v. Reid (1911) 141 Ky. 402, 133 S. W. 219.

Me.—Richards v. Allen (1840) 17 Me. 296; Kneeland v. Fuller (1863) 51 Me. 518; Segars v. Segars (1880) 71 Me. 530; Harkness v. McIntire (1884) 76 Me. 201.

Md.—Colonial Park Estates v. Massart (1910) 112 Md. 648, 77 Atl. 275.

Mass.—Thompson v. Gould (1838) 20 Pick. 134.

Mich.—Wright v. Dickinson (1887) 67 Mich. 580, 11 Am. St. Rep. 602, 35 N. W. 164 (s. c. subsequent appeal (1889) 67 Mich. 590, 42 N. W. 849).

Minn.—Payne v. Hackney (1901) 84 L.R.A.1916D.

Minn. 195, 87 N. W. 608; Larson v. O'Hara (1906) 98 Minn. 71, 116 Am. St. Rep. 342, 107 N. W. 821, 8 Ann. Cas. 849.

Mo.—Andrews v. Broughton (1898) 78 Mo. App. 179 (s. c. on subsequent appeal (1900) 84 Mo. App. 640).

N. H.—Lane v. Shackford (1830) 5 N. H. 130; Luey v. Bundy (1838) 9 N. H. 298, 32 Am. Dec. 359.

N. Y.—Gillet v. Maynard (1809) 5 Johns. 85, 4 Am. Dec. 329; Whitaker v. Burrows (1893) 71 Hun, 478, 54 N. Y. S. E. 409, 24 N. Y. Supp. 1011.

N. C.—Ford v. Stroud (1909) 150 N. C. 362, 64 S. E. 1.

Ohio.—Buck v. Waddle (1824) 1 Ohio, 357.

Pa.—Hughes v. Heintzleman (1884) 2 Walk. 126; Milligan v. Dick (1884) 107 Pa. 259; Durham v. Wick (1904) 210 Pa. 128, 105 Am. St. Rep. 789, 59 Atl. 824, 2 Ann. Cas. 929.

R. I.—Arnold v. Garst (1887) 16 R. I. 4, 11 Atl. 167.

Tenn.—Pipkin v. James (1839) 1 Humph. 325, 34 Am. Dec. 652; Shied v. Stamps (1854) 2 Sneed, 175; Winters v. Elliott (1878) 1 Lea, 676.

Vt.—Hawley v. Moody (1852) 24 Vt. 603; Gifford v. Willard (1883) 55 Vt. 36; Bedell v. Tracy (1892) 65 Vt. 494, 26 Atl. 1031.

Wis.—Thomas v. Sowards (1870) 25 Wis. 631; Tucker v. Grover (1884) 60 Wis. 233, 19 N. W. 92; Miller v. Metz (1899) 103 Wis. 220, 79 N. W. 213.

Eng.—Gosbell v. Archer (1835) 2 Ad. & El. 500, 4 Nev. & M. 485, 1 H. & W. 31, 4 L. J. K. B. N. S. 78.

This rule is also assumed by the cases subsequently cited denying the purchaser's right to recover where the vendor is ready, able, and willing to perform his contract, and is sustained a fortiori by the cases upholding the purchaser's right to recover even in such circumstances. So, as shown in the note to Jackson v. Stearns, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 639, it is well settled that where services have been rendered in consideration of a contract to convey which does not satisfy the statute of frauds, and the vendor has either refused, or become unable, to perform on his part, the vendee may recover on a quantum meruit for the value of the services.

When the vendor refuses, or is unable, to perform the oral agreement, the rule which permits recovery by a purchaser of what he has paid upon the agreement applies whether the statute, like the 4th section of the original statute of frauds, declares that no action shall be brought on the agreement, or, like the statutes in Alabama, Michigan, New York, Wisconsin, and some other states, declares the oral agreement void.

It will be noted that the rule does not give effect to the oral agreement contrary to the statute; but the recovery rests upon an implied promise, raised by law, on the part of the vendor, to restore what he has received from the purchaser in consideration of the agreement, which cannot be enforced against him, and which he is unable or unwilling to perform.

As observed by the court in Craig v. Prather (1841) 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 9, referring to contracts within a statute which declares that no action shall be brought, such contracts, though not void, are not enforceable, and the failure or refusal of the vendor to perform renders the payment by the purchaser a payment without consideration, and it may be recovered back upon an implied promise to refund.

Assuming that the vendor is unable or unwilling to perform the contract, it is not important to inquire as to the precise nature and basis of the implied promise,—whether it arises in the first instance from the receipt by the vendor of money paid under an agreement which, by reason of the statute of frauds, cannot be enforced against him, or from his subsequent refusal or inability to perform,—but, as subsequently shown, that point becomes important when the vendor is ready, willing, and able to perform; and will be discussed in connection with that situation.

The rule stated in the beginning of the note was applied in Thompson v. Gould (1838) 20 Pick. (Mass.) 134, by upholding the vendee's right to recover back the purchase price paid, where, before the deed was tendered, the house on the property was destroyed by fire.

In Cross v. Iler (1906) 103 Md. 592, 64 Atl. 33 (a bill in equity), where land had been purchased with money furnished by plaintiff under an oral agreement to convey a portion of the same to her, which agreement could not be enforced because of the statute of frauds, it was held that the plaintiff might recover the money. See, to similar effect, Schroeder v. Loeber (1892) 75 Md. 195, 23 Atl. 279, 24 Atl. 226.

When one agrees orally that, for a certain sum to be paid him, he will procure a deed to another from the owner of a tract of land, and, under color of such agreement, delivers a paper purporting to be such a deed, and receives the stipulated amount, he is liable for a return of the money upon the instrument turning out to be a forgery, regardless of what he may have paid to the person of whom he obtained it, and notwithstanding his own good faith in the transaction. Robertson v. Talley (1911) 84 Kan. 817, 115 Pac. 640.

In Herriek v. Newell (1892) 49 Minn. 198, 51 N. W. 819, the rule was applied to an oral contract for the sale of timber, the vendor having disabled himself to perform by selling the real estate to another.

And in Arnold v. Garst (1887) 16 E. L. 4, 11 Atl. 167, it was held that an action in assumpsit would lie by the purchaser to recover back the excess over the agreed purchase price, which, by the vendor's misrepresentations, he was induced to pay, although the contract was by parol. The court observed that the action was not brought to charge defendant on his oral contract, but upon an implied contract to refund money which, in consequence of his misrepresentations, the plaintiff had paid in excess of the contract price.

And in Thayer v. Viles (1851) 23 Vt. 494, where property had been conveyed by a quitclaim deed, but the title was not good, it was held that the grantee might maintain an action upon an implied promise of the vendor in such case to return the money. Redfield, J., said: "If this action merely concerns the price of land, it is not a matter which, by the statute of frauds, is required to be in writing. It has often been decided that an action for the price of land which has already been conveyed might be maintained upon merely oral evidence." (See, as to latter point, note in 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 77.)

Where the vendor refuses to perform, the vendee may recover back the payments on the purchase price, even though he has acquired rights under a contract which a court of equity might recognize. Pressnell v. Lundin (1890) 44 Minn. 551, 47 N. W. 161.

So, in Davis v. Strobridge (1880) 44 Mich. 157, 6 N. W. 205, it was held that the vendee might recover, although he had taken possession, and the contract had been made valid by part performance, he having acquiesced in the vendor's measures to oust him.

And in Porter v. Citizens' Bank (1898) 73 Mo. App. 513, it was held that a purchaser may recover where the vendor is unable to convey such a title as was contemplated, notwithstanding that he took possession, which he abandoned as soon as he learned that the contract could not be performed.

In Jellison v. Jordan (1878) 68 Me. 373, it was held that the fact that the vendee is in possession of the premises will not defeat his recovery. It seems, however, from prior decisions in Maine, that part performance does not enable even a court of equity to compel specific performance. (See Patterson v. Yeaton (1859) 47 Me. 308.) There was, however, no allusion to that point in the Jellison Case.

In Johnson v. Puget Mill Co. (1902) 28 Wash. 515, 68 Pac. 867, there having been part performance, taking the contract out of the statute, the right of the vendee to recover back payments on the purchase price was denied, she having been the first to repudiate the contract, notwithstanding that the vendor, who declared itself ready and willing to perform, may have previously said it did not consider itself any longer bound.

In McDonald v. Beall (1874) 52 Ga. 576, the court said that to entitle the vendee under a parol contract, who has taken possession, to recover back the money he had paid, upon the ground that he had a right to treat the contract as rescinded, it was incumbent upon him to prove that he had been actually evicted from the possession by a legal title paramount to that of the vendor, or he should have shown such a legal paramount title as, in the judgment of law, amounted to an eviction; but in this case the vendee relied upon an eviction.

In Moore v. Powell (1894) 6 Tex. Civ. App. 43, 25 S. W. 472, the rule permitting recovery by the vendee was applied by upholding a plea of reconvention by the vendee in an action by the vendor to enforce specific performance.

Henrikson v. Henrikson (1910) 143 Wis. 314, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 534, 127 N. W. 962, quotes with approval the statements of Browne, on Statute of Frauds, 5th ed. § 118a, as follows: "The rule that where one person pays money or performs services for another upon a contract void under the statute of frauds, he may recover the money upon a count for money paid, or recover for the services upon a quantum meruit, applies only to cases where the defendant has received and holds the money paid or the benefit of the services rendered; it does not apply to cases of money paid by the plaintiff to a third person in execution of a verbal contract between the plaintiff and defendant, such as by the statute of frauds must be in writing. Such L.R.A.1916D.

payment is not a payment to the defendant's use in the sense of the rule. It is a payment to his use only if he chooses to abide by the contract, and it is his right to refuse to do that." The doctrine was applied in this case by holding that there was no adequate legal remedy by a purchaser under an oral agreement in respect of the value of improvements placed upon the property, since the party with whom he contracted owned only an undivided interest in the property, and the improvements benefited the entire property. (The general question as to the right of the vendee to recover for improvements is not covered in this note; but see note in 53 L.R.A. 337.)

For an other application of the principle stated in the above quotation, see Gazzam v. Simpson (1902) 51 C. C. A. 19, 114 Fed. 71 (a case on its facts not within the scope of the present note).

But in Johnson v. Krassin (1878) 25 Minn. 117, it was held that plaintiff could maintain an action, in the nature of the common-law action of assumpsit for money paid, to recover an amount which he had paid to a third person upon a contract for the purchase of real property, taken in the name of defendant, in reliance upon the latter's promise to assign the same to plaintiff when requested, the defendant having refused to comply with that promise, and, in disregard thereof, assigned the contract to another for a good and valuable consideration.

Where the money paid on a parol contract is to be given to a third person if the contract stands, the latter cannot, on rescission of the contract, insist upon the money, since it belongs to the party who paid it. Beaman v. Buck (1848) 9 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 207.

Where one gives his note as the price of land, relying upon a verbal promise to convey, if the vendor collects the note by judgment, and then refuses to make title, taking advantage of the statute of frauds, a court of equity will not allow him to keep the money, but will compel him to refund the amount, on the ground that the note was obtained by a fraudulent misrepresentation and a false promise; and in such case the purchaser may maintain a bill and require the vendor either to comply with the confidence reposed in him and make title, or else refund the money. Foust v. Shoffer (1867) 62 N. C. (Phil. Eq.) 242.

If, upon the faith of a parol contract, the purchase money in whole or in part has been paid, a court of equity, upon a bill for a specific performance to which the statute is set up as a defense, will decree that the money be refunded with interest, and, as against the vendors, it will be declared a lien on the land agreed to be conveyed; or at law the money may be recovered in an action of indebitatus assumpsit or debt. Sneed v. Bradley (1856) 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 301; Hilton v. Duncan (1860) 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 313.

In Love v. Burton (1900) — Tenn. —, 61 S. W. 91, holding the vendee entitled to a return of the purchase money where the vendor repudiated the contract, the suit was in equity for an undivided half interest in property under a verbal contract, or, in the alternative, if defendant refused the deed, for a decree for the amount paid.

So, under the united jurisdiction of law and equity the proper remedy by a vendee under a parol contract is an action for specific performance with a general prayer for relief, under which he may recover back what he has paid if the vendor admits the contract, but refuses to perform. Wilkie v. Womble (1884) 90 N. C. 254. But see cases next cited, in which there appears to have been no prayer for specific performance.

There is some apparent conflict among the earlier decisions in North Carolina, or at least some uncertainty, as to the right of the vendee to recover the amount paid on the purchase price and for the value of improvements where the defendant denies the parol contract (see Ellis v. Ellis (1830) 16 N. C. (1 Dev. Eq.) 402; Dunn v. Moore (1844) 38 N. C. (3 Ired. Eq.) 364; Albea v. Griffin (1838) 22 N. C. (2 Dev. & B. Eq.) 9), but the rule of that state was settled in Luton v. Badham (1900) 127 N. C. 96, 53 L.R.A. 337, 80 Am. St. Rep. 783, 37 S. E. 143, and Ford v. Stroud (1909) 150 N. C. 362, 64 S. E. 1 (an action at law), to the effect that the vendee may recover back not only the payments made on account of the contract, but also the value of the improvements to the extent they have enhanced the value of the land, less the profits made by him while in possession, notwithstanding that the vendor denies the contract. In the Ford Case, the contract was not actually denied, but the court said that even if it had been, the court would not have hesitated to follow the Luton Case. In view of the decisions in these cases it is unnecessary and unprofitable to undertake to deal with the apparent conflict and uncertainty arising from the earlier decisions in that state. L.R.A.1916D.

Where vendor is ready, able, and willing to perform.

According to the great weight of authority—although, as subsequently shown, there is some conflict on the point—the vendee under an agreement for the purchase of land which does not satisfy the statute of frauds may not recover back payments on the purchase price if the vendor has not repudiated the contract, and is ready, willing, and able to perform in accordance therewith, even though the contract could not be enforced against him either at law or in equity.

Fed.—Dudley v. Hayward (1882) 11 Fed. 543; York v. Washburn (1902) 118 Fed. 316 (affirmed in (1904) 64 C. C. A. 132, 129 Fed. 564; holding the question one of statutory construction, as to which the decisions of the Minnesota supreme court were controlling on the Federal court).

Ark.—Venable v. Brown (1876) 31 Ark. 564.

Cal.—Laffey v. Kaufman (1901) 134 Cal. 391, 86 Am. St. Rep. 283, 66 Pac. 471.

Ill.—Mitchell v. McNab (1878) 1 Ill. App. 297; Crabtree v. Welles (1878) 19 Ill. 55; Brockhausen v. Bowes (1893) 50 Ill. App. 98.

Ind.—Lingle v. Clemens (1861) 17 Ind. 124; Day v. Wilson (1882) 83 Ind. 463, 43 Am. Rep. 76.

Iowa.—Frey v. Stangl (Iowa) ante, 462.

Ky.—Dougherty v. Goggin (1829) 1 J. J. Marsh. 374; Bedinger v. Whittamore (1829) 2 J. J. Marsh. 552; Duncan v. Baird (1839) 8 Dana, 102; Lewis v. Whitnell (1827) 5 T. B. Mon. 191; Hill v. Spalding (1864) 1 Duv. 216 (arguendo).

Me.—Kneeland v. Fuller (1863) 51 Me. 518; Plummer v. Bucknam (1867) 55 Me. 105.

Mass.—Coughlin v. Knowles (1843) 7 Met. 57, 39 Am. Dec. 759; King v. Welcome (1855) 5 Gray, 41 (obiter); Congdon v. Perry (1859) 13 Gray, 3; Kenniston v. Blakie (1877) 121 Mass. 552.

Minn.—Sennett v. Shehan (1880) 27 Minn. 328, 7 N. W. 266; McKinney v. Harvie, (1887) 38 Minn. 18, 8 Am. St. Rep. 640, 35 N. W. 668; Keystone Iron Co. v. Logan (1893) 55 Minn. 537, 57 N. W. 156 (arguendo).

Miss.—Sims v. Hutchins (1847) 8 Smedes & M. 328, 47 Am. Dec. 90.

Mo.—Galway v. Shields (1827) 66 Mo. 313, 27 Am. Rep. 351; Lang v. Murphy (1909) 137 Mo. App. 217, 117 S. W. 665.

Mont.—Perkins v. Allnut (1913) 47 Mont. 13, 130 Pac. 1.

N. H.—Lane v. Shackford (1830) 5 N. H. 130; Ayer v. Hawkes, 11 N. H. 148; Hill v. Grosser (1880) 59 N. H. 513.

N. J.—Eaton v. Eaton (1871) 35 N. J. L. 290 (recognized).

N. Y.—Abbott v. Draper (1847) 4 Denio, 51; Allis v. Read (1871) 45 N. Y. 142 (rule recognized; contract related to sale of goods); Collier v. Coates (1854) 17 Barb. 471; Northrup v. Mead (1907) 121 App. Div. 385, 106 N. Y. Supp. 150; Quinto v. Alexander (1907) 123 App. Div. 1, 107 N. Y. Supp. 422; Graham v. Healy (1912) 154 App. Div. 76, 138 N. Y. Supp. 611; Torres v. Thompson (1899) 29 Misc. 526, 60 N. Y. Supp. 790; Gaglione v. Ciambone (1913) 79 Misc. 59, 139 N. Y. Supp. 85 (see infra for other New York cases).

N. O.—Clancey v. Craine (1833) 17 N. C. (2 Dev. Eq.) 363; Foust v. Shoffer (1864) 62 N. C. (Phill. Eq.) 242; Syme v. Smith (1885) 92 N. C. 338; Durham Consol. Land & Improv. Co. v. Guthrie (1895) 116 N. C. 381, 21 S. E. 952.

Okla.—Scheehinger v. Gault (1913) 35 Okla. 416, 130 Pac. 305, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 468; Weller v. Dusky (1915) — Okla. —, 151 Pac. 606.

Tenn.—Sneed v. Bradley (1856) 4 Sneed, 301; Hilton v. Dunan (1860) 1 Coldw. 314.

Vt.—Shaw v. Shaw (1834) 6 Vt. 69; Sutton v. Sutton (1841) 13 Vt. 71; Cobb v. Hall (1857) 29 Vt. 510, 70 Am. Dec. 432; Bedell v. Tracy (1892) 65 Vt. 494, 26 Atl. 1031.

Wash.—Johnson v. Puget Mill Co. (1902) 28 Wash. 515, 68 Pac. 867 (cites Browne on Statute of Frauds, 5th ed. § 122, to this effect; but in this case there had been part performance, and the same result might have been reached under the minority rule, infra).

W. Va.—Cook v. Griffith, ante, 466.

In Laws of England (Halsbury) vol. 25, p. 402, it is declared in the text that where a deposit has been made under a verbal contract for the sale of land, a vendor who resists the purchaser's action on the contract by the plea of the statute of frauds is liable to return the deposit as money had and received to the use of the purchaser; but it seems that if the purchaser sets up the statute in order to escape from his contract, he cannot recover the deposit. The case of Thomas v. Brown (1876) L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. (Eng.) 714, 45 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 811, 35 L. T. N. S. 327, 24 Week. Rep. 821, is cited infra to the latter portion of the text, and referred to as question-L.R.A.1916D.

ing Casson v. Roberts (1862) 31 Beav. (Eng.) 613, infra, contra.

As stated at the beginning of the note, the question as to the right to recover the value of services rendered in consideration of a contract within the statute of frauds, to convey real property, is not within the scope of the present note, it having been treated in the note to Jackson v. Stearns, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 339. It may be observed here, however, that the rule which precludes a recovery back of the payments of the purchase price where the vendor is ready, willing, and able to convey has been held to preclude recovery for the value of services rendered in consideration of the agreement. See Riley v. Williams (1878) 123 Mass. 506.

Upon the other hand, it is not apparent why such a case does not fall within the distinction made by the court in King v. Welcome, 5 Gray (Mass.) 41, holding that there may be a recovery on a quantum meruit for services rendered under an oral contract not to be performed within a year, although the plaintiff voluntarily left the service before the expiration of the term. The court there said: "In the case of the money paid upon a contract for the sale of land, the action fails because no failure is shown of the consideration from which the implied promise springs. In the case at bar, the defense fails because the contract upon which the defendant relies is not evidenced as the statute requires for its verification and enforcement." In other words, when the action is upon an implied contract for the return of the purchase price, the oral contract is one of the circumstances on which the plaintiff must rely to establish the implied contract; whereas, if the action is quantum meruit for the value of services rendered, proof of the services rendered with the assent of the defendant is sufficient to establish a prima facie case; the oral contract is a part of the defense, not of the cause of action.* (See, in this connection, note to Fabian v. Wasatch Orchard Co. post, —, as to recovery on quantum meruit for services under parol contract not to be performed within a year.)

The rule is reflected in decisions that the statute of limitations does not begin to run against an action by a vendee in a parol contract, to recover back the amount he has paid, until the vendor refuses to execute the contract. Elliott v. Walker (1911) 145 Ky. 71, 140 S. W. 51; Hilton v. Duncan (1860) 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 313.

The rule was applied in Durham Consol. Land & Improv. Co. v. Guthrie (1895) 116 N. C. 381, 21 S. E. 952, although the vendor had disposed of the land before the action, but more than twelve months after the purchaser, upon demand, had failed to comply with his contract.

The rule was applied in Sneed v. Bradley (Tenn.) supra, by holding that the vendee's creditors could not maintain a bill to reach the amount paid by him, there having been no repudiation of the contract by the vendor.

In Lane v. Shackford (1830) 5 N. H. 130, it was held that the vendor had not disabled himself from performing, so as to permit a recovery, by mortgaging the land to a third person, his right to redeem not having been foreclosed.

The grounds on which the rule rests are stated somewhat at length in the cases subsequently cited. In substance they amount to this: that the failure of consideration from which the law raises an implied promise when the vendor refuses, or is unable, to perform, is negatived if the vendor is ready, able, and willing to perform; and that in such case, while the statute would prevent the enforcement of the contract against the purchaser, he cannot employ it in order to show lack or failure of consideration as the basis of an action for the return of the purchase price.

In Mitchell v. McNab (1878) 1 Ill. App. 297, the court said: "The reason is, that in such cases the contract, although it cannot be enforced at law against the vendor by reason of the prohibition of the statute, is yet not void. It remains a lawful contract, resting upon a lawful consideration. The party who has performed has thereby put it out of his power to repudiate on his part,—the very idea of repudiation after actual performance being incongruous,—and he has no right or authority to repudiate it for the other, who might for himself, if he would, but chooses rather to perform. He must recover then, if at all, upon an implied agreement; but the law never implies an agreement in the presence of an express one, which is lawful, subsisting, covering the same subject-matter, and which the party sought to be charged is ready and willing to fulfil. He is therefore without remedy until he puts the other party in default, as he ought to be, since he has suffered no wrong. He has done no more than he lawfully and knowingly agreed to do, and may receive, if he will, all that he agreed to take."
L.R.A.1916D.

The real basis of an implied promise which supports the action by the purchaser to recover back the purchase price when the vendor refuses or is unable to perform, and its nonexistence when the vendor is ready, able, and willing to perform although he could not be compelled to do so, is well stated in Jarboe v. Severin (1882) 85 Ind. 496, where the court said: "It is also plain that where damages cannot be recovered for breach of an agreement, because of the statute of frauds, a party to it who has performed on his part must, in an action at law, recover upon an agreement implied by the law from the facts. But the implied agreement upon which the party who has performed his part of the contract recovers in such a case does not arise as supposed by counsel. Where, in pursuance of an express verbal contract for the purchase of land, the vendee has paid money, conveyed real estate, delivered personal property or performed service, and the vendor refuses to convey, the action, whatever its form, by which the vendee recovers, is, in fact, not based upon an implied promise of the vendor arising from the vendee's payment, conveyance, delivery, or rendering of service. These benefits were, in truth, conferred on the vendor and received by him under a special agreement, and 'the law . . . presumes a promise only where it does not appear that there is any special agreement between the parties.' 2 Greenl. Ev. § 103. The promise which, in such case, the law implies, is, that the vendor, unable or unwilling to perform his special agreement, will return whatever he has received thereunder or its value, as being held by him upon a consideration which has failed. Browne, Stat. Fr. § 118."

A New York case thus states the reasons and grounds of the rule: "When the vendor refuses to go on with the contract, or has parted with his title so that he cannot perform, he is then in the wrong; and having himself put an end to the contract, there is no longer any consideration for the payments which have been made under it; and the law will imply a promise to restore the money. But how can the law imply a promise to refund the money so long as the vendor is not in default? The payment was a voluntary one, made with a full knowledge of all the facts. Every time a payment was made and received the parties virtually said, although the law will not enforce this contract, we will go on and carry it into effect. The money is not received as a loan, but as a payment, and so long as the vendor is able and willing to perform the contract on his part, he holds the money as owner, and not as a debtor. The consideration upon which the money was paid has not failed; and there is nothing from which a promise to repay can be justly implied." Abbott v. Draper (1847) 4 Denio (N. Y.) 51.

In Coughlin v. Knowles (1843) 7 Met. (Mass.) 57, 39 Am. Dec. 759, holding that a vendee may not recover the purchase price paid, where the vendor is willing and able to perform, the court observed that the statute of frauds would be a good answer if the party offering proof of the contract had offered the same to sustain an action to enforce the contract and compel a conveyance of the land, or to recover damages for the failure to do so; but that the provisions of the statute are not so broad as to entitle a party who has entered into an oral contract by which he has received a conveyance of land and towards payment for which he has made advances in money, to set aside such contract as a nullity, and reclaim the money so advanced, the other party being in no way at fault, but being both able and willing to perform his contract, and to make the conveyance in the manner stipulated by the oral agreement.

Without denying the rule itself a recovery by the vendee was upheld in Reynolds v. Harris (1858) 9 Cal. 338, although he was in possession and had been evicted; but in this case the vendee demanded a deed and the vendor was unable to comply, having no title.

In Winkler v. Jerrue (1912) 20 Cal. App. 555, 129 Pac. 804, the vendee was allowed to recover because of fraud on the part of the vendor, although there had been a partial performance which would have taken the case out of the statute of frauds.

The vendor cannot, under the rule above stated, prevent recovery by offering to perform after the vendee has instituted his action to recover back the purchase money. Grace v. Gholson (1914) 159 Ky. 359, 167 S. W. 420.

In Barickman v. Kuykendall (1841) 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 21, it was held that in debitatus assumpsit would lie by the vendee to recover the amount paid on a parol contract for the purchase of land, although he had taken possession of the property under the contract, where the vendor had died, and one of the heirs was a minor, notwithstanding that the heirs of legal age were willing to convey the land agreeably to the contract, and L.R.A.1916D the guardian of the minor had offered to give bond with surety, conditioned that the minor should convey when he came of age. In reply to the contention that the vendee's payment of part of the purchase money, and his taking possession of the land under the contract, was such a part performance as took the case out of the statute of frauds, the court said that, supposing that to be the rule in a court of chancery, it had no application to a court of law. It will be observed, however, that from the statement of facts, this was not a case where those who succeeded to the interest of the vendor were able and willing to carry out the contract.

So, in Ritchie v. Bennett (1898) 35 App. Div. 68, 54 N. Y. Supp. 379, the court, while recognizing the rule that there can be no recovery back of the purchase money if the vendor is able and willing to perform, held that the purchaser is not bound to demand a deed from the heirs of the deceased vendor as a condition of maintaining his action, distinguishing the case, Fuller v. Williams (1827) 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 53, 17 Am. Dec. 498, where the contract was valid, upon the ground that in the latter case a conveyance by the heirs would be free from the claims of general creditors, the interest of the vendor being personal property, while in the case at bar a conveyance by the heirs would be subject to unknown and undisclosed liens of any creditors of the deceased, since the contract being invalid, the interest of the vendor was real property, and not personal property.

— minority rule.

In a few states the vendee is allowed to recover back the payments made on the purchase price under a contract which does not satisfy the statute of frauds, notwithstanding that the vendor is ready, able, and willing to perform, unless there has been such part performance, by possession or otherwise, as would take the contract out of the statute of frauds and enable the vendee to enforce it in equity against the vendor. This view, which is directly opposed to the majority rule, prevails in Alabama, Michigan, and Wisconsin, and has been recognized at least by obiter statements in Virginia. In the three states first named, the statute in force at the time of the decisions declared the oral contract void, departing in this respect from the form of the 4th section of the original statute of frauds (29 Car. II. chap. 3), which declared merely that no action should be brought on the contract. Most of the cases above cited in support of the rule denying recovery in such circumstances were decided under a statute following the original form, and, as subsequently shown, the Wisconsin supreme court expressed its approval of the majority rule under that form of statute, but held it inapplicable in a jurisdiction where the statute, like that of Wisconsin, declares the contract void.

In Frey v. Stangl (Iowa) ante, 462, sustaining the majority rule, it is said that the difference in the rulings seems to depend on the wording of the statutes; that the statutes in the cases upholding recovery declare an oral contract for the sale of land void, while, in Iowa, the statute merely prescribes the rule of evidence concerning the proof. The difference in the form of the statutes, however, does not altogether account for the difference in the decisions. In Minnesota and in North Carolina, which, as above shown, adhere to the majority rule denying recovery by the purchaser where the vendor is ready, willing, and able to perform, the statute declares the oral agreement void; and in California, Montana, and Oklahoma, which also adhere to that rule, the provision is that the oral agreement shall be "invalid," or that the agreement shall not be valid unless in writing.

Upon the other hand, in Virginia, where the minority rule seems to have been approved, at least in obiter expressions, the statute follows the original form and declares that no action shall be brought on the oral agreement. None of the cases in the states just referred to, however, discusses or even alludes to the distinction made by the Wisconsin supreme court.

The minority rule, which permits the vendee to recover the amount he has paid upon the purchase price under a contract which does not satisfy statute of frauds, notwithstanding that the vendor is ready, willing, and able to perform, unless there has been such part performance by possession or otherwise as to take the contract out of the statute, and enable the purchaser to enforce it in equity, is sustained by the following cases: Flinn v. Barber (1877) 59 Ala. 446, s. c. subsequent appeal (1879) 64 Ala. 193; Nelson v. Shelby Mfg. & Improv. Co. (1892) 96 Ala. 526, 38 Am. St. Rep. 116, 11 So. 695; Scott v. Bush (1873) 26 Mich. 418, 12 Am. Rep. 311; Brown v. Pollard (1893) 89 Va. 696, 17 S. E. 6 (see infra as to this case); Brand- L.R.A.1916D.

eis v. Neustadt (1860) 13 Wis. 143 (see infra as to this and other Wisconsin cases).

In Flinn v. Barber (1879) 64 Ala. 193, it was stated that the weight of authority, both English and American, confines the right of a vendee of land, who has entered into a verbal agreement of purchase, to recover money paid, or to reclaim any other consideration with which he has parted, to cases of the refusal or the inability of the vendor to complete the contract; but the court held that that doctrine did not prevail in Alabama, unless the vendee had received possession from the vendor and retained it undisturbed, so as to acquire an equity to compel the vendor to perform specifically.

Chief Justice Dixon in Brandeis v. Neustadt (1860) 13 Wis. 158, discussed the point at length, and expressed his opinion obiter, that the readiness and ability of the vendor to perform, there being no such part performance as would take the case out of the operation of the statute, would not prevent the purchaser from recovering back the money paid, under the Wisconsin statute, which does not follow the old statute, which declares that no action shall be maintained upon the contract, but provides that the contract shall be void. The learned justice agreed with the majority of the cases that, under the old form of statutes, which merely declare that no action shall be maintained on the agreement, and do not declare the contract void there can be no recovery if the vendor is willing and able to perform, but was of the opinion that the rule was inapplicable under a statute which declares the oral agreement void. He said, in this connection: "The parol contract, being void, furnishes no consideration for the payment. A consideration, to be sufficient, must be either a benefit to one party or a damage to the other. The purchaser can derive no benefit from the supposed contract. Nothing passes to him by virtue of it; he obtains no interest in the land, and no promise or agreement on the part of the seller to convey him any; and he can never derive any advantage from what has transpired, except it be as a matter of favor on the seller's part. . . . The reason given for not allowing the purchaser under the English statute, and those like it, to repudiate the agreement and recover back what he has paid, so long as the seller is in no default, is very obvious. But it cannot be given here. It is that the agreement is not void, but voidable; or, to speak more correctly, not actionable. . . . The repeal of the statute in such case would at once enable the purchaser to maintain his action upon the agreement. With us it is otherwise. Its repeal would leave him in no better situation than formerly. There is in that case a valid living contract between the parties, and though the remedy be suspended, it binds the conscience, and, until it has been broken, constitutes a sufficient consideration for the payment of the money. There being thus a good consideration, if the purchaser chooses to rely upon the honor of the seller for the performance of his contract, instead of putting it in such form that the courts can enforce it, it is no injustice to say to him that he shall not ignore it, at least until that honor has been violated. . . . Under our statute there is no contract; nothing which can be the foundation of any legal or equitable obligation; and how can the court create one? . . . So far as the law is concerned the whole affair is a mere false show, except the delivery of the money. It finds one party in the unexplained possession of the money of another, which he knowingly received without any legal equivalent, and not as a gift, and which he has no legal or equitable right to retain; and why should he not refund?"

The point was not involved in this case, and the opinion on the point was confessedly obiter. It seems, however, to have been recognized as expressing the rule in Wisconsin, although there appears to be no subsequent case in which the point is discussed and the conclusion distinctly reaffirmed.

In Thomas v. Sowards (1870) 25 Wis. 631, Chief Justice Dixon remarked that he was still of the opinion expressed in Brandeis v. Neustadt (Wis.) supra, as to the right of a purchaser to recover back moneys paid, and that his brethren were inclined to agree with him, but added that especially it must be held that the plaintiff was so entitled, since the jury had found that the vendor was in default.

And in Clark v. Davidson (1881) 53 Wis. 317, 10 N. W. 384, recognizing the right of a purchaser to recover for services in consideration of an oral agreement to convey, there was held to be a default on the part of the vendor. And that appears to have been the case in Taylor v. Thieman (1906) 132 Wis. 38, 122 Am. St. Rep. 943, 111 N. W. 229, also upholding a recovery for services; and in Tucker v. Grover (1884) 60 Wis. L.R.A.1916D.

233, 19 N. W. 92, and Miller v. Metz (1899) 103 Wis. 220, 79 N. W. 213, sustaining a recovery of the purchase price paid by the purchaser.

The point was not involved in Henrikson v. Henrikson (1910) 143 Wis. 314, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 534, 127 N. W. 962, but the court declares generally, without any qualification so far as the vendor's ability or willingness to convey is concerned, that one receiving money under a void contract for the sale of land is bound to return it, on the theory that it is money of the other party to the void contract.

Seifert v. Mueller (1914) 156 Wis. 629, 146 N. W. 787, is very briefly to the effect that a parol contract to convey real property to a broker in consideration of services being void, the broker may recover the reasonable value of his services. There is no discussion of the point, but there was evidence, apparently uncontradicted, that the vendor had tendered a deed, and there is no indication that there was any defect in the title. The result seems to be in accord with the opinion of Chief Justice Dixon in the Brandeis Case (Wis.) supra.

In Scott v. Bush (1873) 26 Mich. 418, 12 Am. Rep. 311, the court referred to the fact that the Michigan statute declares the contract void, and observed that it could not conceive of such a thing as a contract which cannot be enforced as a contract, and yet can be the foundation of legal obligations arising out of nothing else. The opinion further observed that some decisions have apparently disregarded the distinction between contracts made valid by part performance, and stipulations or arrangements which have never become binding; and added that an agreement made valid by part performance is, in law, as valid as in equity, for all purposes, except the remedy to enforce it; and that an equitable right is as good a consideration for a contract as a legal right. Further, the court remarked that had the plaintiff (the vendee) obtained possession from the defendant (the vendor) under a verbal arrangement, the contract would have been taken out of the statute, and would not have been void. Again the court said: "But as the case stands, we cannot see why, if the willingness of the vendor to convey entitles him to keep money paid and agreed to be forfeited, he would not equally be entitled to enforce a promise to pay a like sum, on the same conditions. There is no middle ground between binding contracts and the absence of any binding obligation."

In Brown v. Pollard (1893) 89 Va. 696, 17 S. E. 6, the court quoted from, and apparently approved, the opinion in Scott v. Bush (Mich.) supra, and observed that the purchaser in the case at bar could not have gone into equity and set up the alleged contract of the vendor to convey the land to her, and the payment of the purchase money as such part performance as would induce a court of equity to decree specific performance; and added that a mere parol contract which could not be enforced against the vendor could not bind the purchaser in favor of the vendor; mutuality of obligation and remedy must exist ab initio. The opinion on this point, however, seems to be obiter, since it was found that the notes for the recovery of which the action of detinue was brought were not delivered as a payment on the purchase price of property, and were never in fact delivered to the vendor. Moreover, the court, at the close of the opinion, added that, even if the purchaser had delivered the notes in payment for the parol purchase of land which the vendor was not able to convey and was not compellable to convey, he could not lawfully retain the notes.

There are other individual cases which apparently recognize and support the minority rule, that are explainable on other grounds, or are out of harmony with other decisions in the same state.

Thus, in Collins v. Thayer (1874) 74 Ill. 138, the court said that the purchaser can terminate the contract, and sue and recover back the payments made, and "this, too, without performing or offering to perform his part of the agreement." In this case, however, as pointed out in Mitchell v. McNab (1878) 1 Ill. App. 297, the vendor had given express notice that he no longer considered himself bound.

In Laub v. De Vault (1908) 139 Ill. App. 398, the court said that if the contract for the sale of land was oral and void, the vendee could sue and recover back the money under the common counts as money had and received, without offering any excuse for failure to take the land; but this was obiter, as the evidence showed that the contract was in writing; and the statement is opposed to the other Illinois cases.

In Burks v. Douglass (1913) 156 Ky. 462, 161 S. W. 225, it was said: "Appellant [vendor] does not deny the contract of sale, but seeks to avoid it by alleging that appellee [purchaser] 'relinquished the property on which the said $70 had been paid, and abandoned and left the property.' This allegation is no defense to an action to recover back the money paid on a verbal contract for the sale of land. The contract was not enforceable, and appellee had a right to elect to abandon the property and sue for the money paid." It is difficult to reconcile this language with the previous Kentucky cases cited in support of the majority rule. There is no discussion of the point or allusion to these cases, and this case can hardly be regarded as overturning the rule established by them.

In Blew v. McClelland (1860) 29 Mo. 304, it was held that the purchaser may recover where there has been no such part performance as will take the case out of the statute, and the building on the property has been burned. This was evidently upon the assumption that if the contract had been a valid one, the loss from the burning of the building would have fallen on the purchaser; and so the result seems to be opposed to the majority rule; but see other Missouri cases cited in support of that rule.

In Crippen v. Bearden (1844) 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 129, it was held that the purchaser could recover apparently without reference to the employer's willingness and ability to perform. The court said that there could be no obligation on either party to go on with the contract; and if money is advanced, it will be considered as a mere deposit to the use of the party making it. The case of Graham v. Weaver (1896) 97 Tenn. 485, 37 S. W. 221, was a bill by the vendor for the enforcement of a parol contract, or, if the defendant declined to confirm the sale, for the possession of the property. The court said that "the effect of the pleading was to tender to the defendants [purchasers] an option to confirm the parol sale and pay the [balance of the] purchase money, or to repudiate it and take their rights as fixed by law in such cases;" and it seems to be assumed that these would include the right to be reimbursed for the purchase price paid. But see other Tennessee cases previously cited in support of the majority rule.

There is some discrepancy among the New York cases on the point.

In Dowdle v. Camp (1815) 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 451, denying the right of the vendee to recover, the court observed that the payment of part of the purchase price was such part performance as to make the contract binding on the defendant, and a court of equity would compel a conveyance. This case, if it stood alone, could be reconciled with the minority doctrine. And in Rice v. Peet (1818) 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 503, the court apparently recognized the right of a party to a parol agreement for the exchange of land to recover though he was himself in default.

Even if the Rice Case were to be ignored and what was said in the Dowdle Case as to part performance were not to be regarded as a limitation of the doctrine of that case, it will be observed that the Dowdle Case was decided under the old form of the statute, which provided merely that no action shall be brought on the contract; the other form, declaring the contract void, not having been adopted until the Revision of 1830.

However, subsequently to the Revision of 1830, the opinion was expressed in Abbott v. Draper (1847) 4 Denio (N. Y.) 51, that so long as the vendor is not in default, but is ready to perform the contract on his part, there is no principle by which the vendee can recall the payments which he has made under the agreement. In the Abbott Case, the vendee had entered into possession and enjoyment of the land, and the court said there was nothing to show that he was not still in possession of it. There was no suggestion, however, that the rule denying the vendee the right to recover where the vendor is ready, willing, and able to perform should be limited to cases where there has been such part performance as to take the contract out of the statute, and permit its enforcement in equity against the vendor; and any such limitation was expressly repudiated in Collier v. Coates (1854) 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 471, which denied the plaintiff's right to recover in such circumstances. The court refused to distinguish the Dowdle and Abbott Cases on that ground. There were alternative grounds for the decision in the Abbott Case, in that plaintiff had not demanded repayment or surrendered possession, both of which were held necessary even if the ability and willingness of the vendor to perform were not a defense. Neither the Abbott nor the Collier Cases commented on the change in the statute, or considered the possibility of the distinction subsequently made in Brandeis v. Neustadt (1860) 13 Wis. 142, based upon the differences in the form of the statutes. Nor did either of these cases refer to Miller v. Pelletier (1843) 4 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 102, which was decided under the New York Revision of 1830, which declares a contract void unless signed by the person to whom the sale is to be made, and held that, as the vendor did not sign the contract, the vendee could recover back the deposits on the purchase price, notwithstanding the execution and tender of a deed by the vendor. The court said: "This was not making the contract of sale or the agreement for the sale to be made as contemplated by the statute, but it was the intended fulfillment of the previously made supposed contract. If the deed had been accepted, then it would have been an executed contract and all well enough; but the purchaser had a right to repose, as he did, upon the statute, and to repudiate the transaction." In Hellman v. Strauss (1858) 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 9, holding that the purchaser could recover where he was induced to enter into the parol contract by the fraud of the vendor, the court queried as to whether there can be a recovery where the contract is free from fraud and the vendor is able and willing to perform, and recognized an apparent conflict among the New York cases on the point.

The point, however, appears to have been finally settled in New York in favor of the majority rule, which denies the vendee's right to recover where the vendor is willing and ready to perform. It may be said, however, that the New York cases which sustain that rule do not consider the possible effect of the change in the form of the statute upon which the distinction in the Brandeis Case is based.

As implied in the statement of the minority rule, that rule does not permit the purchaser to recover back payments on the purchase price where the vendor is able to perform and has not refused to do so, if there has been such part performance by possession or otherwise as to take the contract out of the statute of frauds and render it enforceable in equity at the instance of the vendee, although the part performance would not render the contract enforceable at law. And so, even in jurisdictions committed to the minority rule, it has been held that there can be no recovery of the purchase price by the vendee where he has been in possession, and the vendor has not refused to perform the contract. Cope v. Williams (1842) 4 Ala. 362; Donaldson v. Waters (1857) 30 Ala. 175, s. c. subsequent appeal (1859) 35 Ala. 107; Nelson v. Shelby Mfg. & Improv. Co. (1892) 96 Ala. 515; Cilley v. Burkholder (1879) 41 Mich. 749, 3 N. W. 221 (possession and removal of timber).

In Casson v. Roberts (1862) 31 Beav. (Eng.) 613, holding that a purchaser under a contract which did not satisfy the statute of frauds could recover back his deposit, although the answer alleged the ability and willingness of the vendor to comply with the contract, the master of the rolls said that he could not conceive a more inconvenient process than that which would be inflicted on the court if, in a case in which the dealings for the purchase and sale of land did not amount to a valid contract on which an action or suit could be maintained, it should be the duty of the court to ascertain by whose default it came to pass that such invalid contract had not been carried into effect. But the authority of this case was seriously questioned in Thomas v. Brown (1876) L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. (Eng.) 714, 45 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 811, 35 L. T. N. S. 327, 24 Week. Rep. 821, although in that case there were alternative grounds for denying a recovery by the purchaser. And see supra, statement in 25 Laws of England (Halsbury) p. 402.

Property delivered or conveyed in payment.

As shown in the note to Malzer v. Schisler, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 77, where a parol contract for the sale of land has been executed as to the part within the statute of frauds by the delivery and acceptance of a deed of the premises, the vendor may recover the purchase price. But where the oral agreement is for an exchange of lands, the party who has conveyed may maintain an action to recover the value of the land conveyed by him, where the other party refuses to convey.

Thus, where a wife joined in a deed with her husband to land in consideration of a parol agreement to convey other land to her, it was held in Jarboe v. Severin (1882) 85 Ind. 496, that she could recover the value of her inchoate interest in the land conveyed where the other party refused to carry out the parol agreement. This was upon the ground that the law implies a promise that the vendor, unable or unwilling to perform his special agreement, will return whatever he has received thereunder or its value, as being held by him upon a consideration which has failed.

So, in Andrews v. Broughton (1899) 78 Mo. App. 179 (s. c. on subsequent appeal (1900) 84 Mo. App. 640), it was held that there could be a recovery of the value of a dower interest of a widow, not exceeding the contract price, where she had sold the same for a given sum, to be paid part in cash and part by a conveyance of other real estate, the contract not having been signed by the defendants, and so not enforceable against them as to the property to be conveyed by them.

L.R.A.1916D.

Where the vendor refuses or is unable to perform his parol agreement to convey, the vendee may recover the value of property delivered in consideration of that agreement. Wyvell v. Jones (1887) 37 Minn. 68, 33 N. W. 43; Boyden v. Crane (1873) 7 Alb. L. J. (N. Y.) 203.

Where one party to a verbal agreement for an exchange of land has conveyed to the other, but the latter has disabled himself from performing by conveying the other parcel to a third person, the former may recover the value of the property conveyed by him. Miller v. Roberts (1897) 169 Mass. 134, 47 N. E. 585.

In such a case, the declaration should be for the price or value of the land, and not for money had and received. Basford v. Pearson (1864) 9 Allen (Mass.) 387, 85 Am. Dec. 764. The court said, however, that the difference was technical rather than substantial, and the plaintiff could add a count in the latter form by amendment.

So, in Keith v. Patton (1817) 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 23, it was held that, after a purchaser delivered a horse, and the vendor refused to convey, the action must be detinue or trover, and not assumpsit.

In Miller v. Jones (1859) 3 Head (Tenn.) 525, where a purchaser sold personal property to the vendor, the price to be applied on the purchase price of real property, it was held that upon the purchaser's repudiation of the contract for the real property, the vendor might have rescinded the contract for the personal property by tendering it back, and in that case no action could have been maintained for the price; but, having failed to do so, he was liable for the price.

Where one refuses to perform an oral agreement within the statute of frauds for the transfer of an interest in real estate, his liability is for money had or for the value of a specific article which he has received as a payment on the purchase price, and it is not in his power, without the consent of the other party, to refuse the title of the specific thing and avoid liability for its value. Hawley v. Moody (1852) 24 Vt. 603. The court observed that the contract, although unenforceable, was not void; and that while either party may repudiate it so far as it is executory, it remains in full force so far as it has been executed.

However, the vendee cannot hold the vendor liable for the value of property delivered or conveyed in consideration of an oral agreement to convey, where the other party is ready and willing to convey. Green v. North Carolina R. Co. (1877) 77 N. C. 95; Torres v. Thompson (1899) 29 Misc. 526, 60 N. Y. Supp. 790.

In Baker v. Scott (1873) 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 606, it was held that a party to an oral agreement for an exchange of land who has conveyed may recover against the other party the amount or value of the unpaid consideration. But this seems to be opposed to the cases above cited, and the court apparently overlooked the distinction between a promise to pay a money consideration, not itself within the statute of frauds, and an agreement to convey other land in consideration, which is within the statute.

Action on note or check for purchase price.

A purchaser who has given a note or check for the purchase price cannot defend an action thereon upon the ground that the agreement to sell was within the statute of frauds, if the vendor is ready, willing, and able to convey in accordance with the oral agreement; at least, if the purchaser has been let into possession. Rhodes v. Storr (1845) 7 Ala. 346 (note); Gillespie v. Battle (1849) 15 Ala. 276 (note); Schierman v. Beckett (1882) 88 Ind. 52; Edelin v. Clarkson (1842) 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 31, 38 Am. Dec. 177 (note); Curnutt v. Roberts (1850) 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 42 (obiter, note); Hill v. Spalding (1864) 1 Duv. (Ky.) 216 (note); Ott v. Garland (1840) 7 Mo. 28 (note); McGowen v. West (1842) 7 Mo. 569, 38 Am. Dec. 468; Fleischman v. Plock (1897) 19 Misc. 649, 44 N. Y. Supp. 413 (check); Crutchfield v. Donathon (1878) 49 Tex. 691, 30 Am. Rep. 112.

The case of Bates v. Terrell (1844) 7 Ala. 129, is opposed, but that case is contrary to the other Alabama cases, and was expressly disapproved in Gillespie v. Battle (1849) 15 Ala. 276.

The case of Fite v. Orr (1886) 8 Ky. L. Rep. 349, 1 S. W. 582, is also apparently contrary to that rule unless it can be distinguished upon the point as to possession, previously referred to; but see later Kentucky cases above cited.

In Gillespie v. Battle (1849) 15 Ala. 276, holding that a vendee who has been let into possession cannot defend an action upon a promissory note given for the purchase price of land upon the ground that the contract to convey was void under the statute of frauds, the court conceded that an action at law could not be maintained on the parol contract, although there had been a partial performance of it. After showing that, apart from the question of consideration, it was plain that the statute could not be invoked against the contract in suit (the note), the court observed, with respect to the consideration, that although at law part performance of a parol contract for the sale of land will not take it out of the statute, it has that effect in equity, and that the consideration for the note would rest upon the fact that the vendor had put the vendee in possession, and placed himself in a position where the vendee, by paying the balance of the purchase price, could enforce specific performance in equity.

In Schierman v. Beckett (1882) 88 Ind. 52, the court said that the doctrine is based upon the same principle that prevents the vendee from recovering back the purchase money while the vendor is able and willing to convey according to his verbal agreement; the defense to the note in such case must be, not the statute of frauds, but want or failure of consideration; which cannot be made out if the vendor shows his ability and willingness to perform; the verbal contract for the sale of land is not void; the statute simply provides that no action shall be brought upon it; the action upon the vendee's note is not a suit upon the contract of sale; and the vendee's defense being want of consideration for the note, it would seem that he ought not to be permitted to assert as such defense the fact that the vendor might refuse performance, when the sole reason for the failure of the vendor to perform is the rejection by the vendee of offered performance.

In Edelin v. Clarkson (1842) 3 B. Mon. (Ky.) 31, the court said that the statute of frauds did not directly prohibit the action, because it was brought upon a note in writing, signed by a party charged in the action; and that the plea that the note was given in consideration of a sale of land, not evidenced by writing, was not a plea directly setting up the statute in bar of the action, but was nothing more or less than a plea of the want or failure of consideration; and that in the case at bar, a part of the contract of sale which formed the consideration of the note was that the possession should be delivered before the price was payable; and that part of the contract having been executed, defendant received a partial, but a very important, benefit from a partial performance of the contract or promise which formed the consideration of his promise; and that, although he cannot enforce full performance of the contract, the partial benefit which he has received and actually enjoyed precludes him from saying that there was either a total want or a total failure of consideration; and as a partial want of failure of consideration is not available as a defense at law, it followed that the plaintiff was entitled to recover.

A note given for the price of land under a verbal contract is not enforceable where the purchaser has derived no benefit from the contract and the vendor has sustained no loss or prejudice therefrom. Curnutt v. Roberts (1850) 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 42. The court conceded, however, that where a purchaser has executed a note for the purchase price, and has obtained possession of the land, it has been decided that if he be sued upon the note, the fact that the contract was verbal, and the vendor has not executed a writing evidencing the sale, does not furnish him with a legal defense to the action; because, as he has acquired possession of the land, and derived some benefit from the contract, there is not an entire failure of the consideration upon which the note was executed.

In McGowen v. West (1842) 7 Mo. 569, 38 Am. Dec. 468, the court said that it saw no difference in principle between a case where the vendee seeks to recover back payments actually made and where he seeks to avoid liability on a note.

In Fleischman v. Plock (1897) 19 Misc. 649, 44 N. Y. Supp. 413, the court said that whether the contract was voidable by the plaintiff or not, his readiness and willingness to perform it, as a contract binding upon him, furnished consideration for the defendant's promise to pay; and after alluding to the rule that a purchaser cannot recover back what he has paid where the vendor is prepared to perform, said that where the vendor holds himself ready to perform, his attitude, in so far as the statute of frauds affects it, is the same when he defends the action for the return of the purchase price as when he stands as a suitor upon the promise to pay; in neither situation is he required to produce and rely upon a contract in writing within the statute, since in each case the vendee, alleging a failure of consideration, either for his case in chief or for defense to the instrument, has the burden of establishing the fact, and the presence of the consideration is made to appear, in either aspect, through the vendor's readiness and ability to perform the actual agreement, which the statute does not operate to render infirm except at an election.

tion, the right to which, in this matter, is abandoned by the only party possessing it.

In Crutchfield v. Donathon (1878) 49 Tex. 691, 30 Am. Rep. 112, the court observed that, as the action was brought upon the note, and not upon the contract of sale, it was not a valid defense to plead that the sale of the lot in consideration for which the note was given was not evidenced by writing, as required by the statute.

With the exception of Schierman v. Beckett (1882) 88 Ind. 52; McGowen v. West (Mo.); Fleischman v. Plock (N. Y.); and Crutchfield v. Donathon (Tex.)—supra, the rule is stated in the foregoing cases in terms that apparently imply that one of its conditions is that the vendee shall have been let into possession of the property under the agreement. In view, however, of the fact as above shown, that the rule rests upon the same reasoning as does the majority rule which denies a recovery back of payments on the purchase price where the vendor is ready, willing, and able to perform, it is not apparent why possession should be insisted upon as a condition, except in jurisdictions like Alabama, which are committed to the minority rule that permits recovery back of payments on the purchase price, notwithstanding the vendor's ability and willingness to perform, unless there has been such part performance as to take the case out of the statute of frauds, so that the purchaser could have enforced it in equity.

Since, as above shown, the rule which permits the vendor to recover the amount of the note or check given for the purchase price rests upon the ground that the action rests upon the note or check, and not upon the oral agreement in relation to the real property, it is entirely independent of any question whether or not the note or check amounts to a memorandum of the agreement to convey sufficient to take the contract out of the statute; although in Crutchfield v. Donathon (Tex.) supra, where the note referred quite explicitly to the consideration, that was suggested as a possible alternative ground for the decision. It was, however, distinctly held, regardless of this point, that the action might be maintained on the ground previously stated.

For the reasons just suggested, a case like Oliver v. Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co. 82 Ala. 417, 2 So. 445, holding that the vendor might recover on a note for the purchase price, is not in point, since, although the contract to sell and purchase had not been signed by the vendor, and therefore could not be enforced against him, it had been signed by the purchaser, "the party to be charged," so that an action would lie on the contract itself against him, it not being necessary that it be signed by both parties (see note in 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 680).

So, a case like Caren v. Liebovitz (1906) 113 App. Div. 674, 99 N. Y. Supp. 952, holding that a vendor who had signed the contract might recover on a check given for the purchase price, is not in point here because the contract to sell had been signed by the vendor, and that satisfied the requirement of the New York statute that the contract be signed by the party by whom the sale or lease is to be made. In this case the contract was undoubtedly mutually enforceable (see note in 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 680).

On the other hand, a case like Moore v. Powell (1894) 6 Tex. Civ. App. 43, 25 S. W. 472, holding that the statute of frauds was not satisfied by the signing and delivery of a check for the purchase price, is not opposed to the rule permitting a recovery on the note or check where the vendor is willing and able to perform, since the action was not on the check, but was for the specific performance of the contract of sale and purchase.

Necessity of tender of performance by purchaser.

In jurisdictions committed to the majority rule, denying the vendee's right to recover back the payments on the purchase price where the vendor is ready, able, and willing to convey, it would seem that, as a condition of plaintiff's cause of action, he must allege and prove a tender of performance on his own part in order to put the vendor in default, unless such tender is excused.

Thus, to entitle the vendee, under a parol contract, to recover back the amount paid, he must allege and show that he has paid or offered to pay the balance of the consideration; an allegation of a refusal to convey is not sufficient, as it is not incumbent upon the vendor to convey until the consideration has been paid or there has been an offer to pay. Laffey v. Kaufman (1901) 134 Cal. 391, 86 Am. St. Rep. 283, 66 Pac. 471.

If a party who receives money or its equivalent under a parol contract to convey property afterwards repudiates it, the law will raise an assumption on his part to refund the payment received, for he shall not retain the money under the contract while he denies his obligation to L.R.A.1916D.

perform it; but until he refuses to perform it, the law will not imply a promise to refund the payment received under it. Crabtree v. Welles (1857) 19 Ill. 55. The vendee, therefore, has no cause of action to recover the part of the purchase price paid until he has placed himself in a proper position by demanding of the vendor that he go on and perform the parol agreement upon tendering the balance of the purchase price, and the vendor has thereupon refused to comply.

The vendee may not recover without showing that the vendor is either unable or unwilling to make title. Lewis v. Whitnell (1827) 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 191.

The vendee may not recover without showing that he was ready and willing to perform. Cave v. Osborne (1907) 193 Mass. 482, 79 N. E. 794.

In Northrup v. Mead (1907) 121 App. Div. 385, 106 N. Y. Supp. 150, it was held that plaintiff, who performed services in consideration of an agreement that certain real property should belong to him upon the death of the promisor, could not enforce a claim against the estate for the consideration rendered without demanding a deed or performance from the heirs of the vendor, to put them in default.

The vendee may recover if the vendor, on proper demand, refuses to perform. Bedell v. Tracy (1892) 65 Vt. 494, 26 Atl. 1031.

The vendee may not recover unless he shows a tender of compliance on his part, and a refusal of compliance on the part of the vendor. Commack v. Prather (1903) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 74 S. W. 354.

Tender of performance by the vendee is unnecessary where the vendor has brought ejectment to recover the land (Hairston v. Jaudon (1869) 42 Miss. 380); or has refused to perform (Welch v. Darling (1886) 59 Vt. 136, 7 Atl. 547; Cook v. Daggett (1861) 2 Allen (Mass.) 439); or has repudiated the contract (Durham v. Wick (1904) 210 Pa. 128, 105 Am. St. Rep. 789, 59 Atl. 824, 2 Ann. Cas. 929); or has conveyed to a third person (Bennett v. Phelps (1867) 12 Minn. 326, Gil. 216; Richards v. Allen (1840) 17 Me. 296; Bassett v. Bassett (1867) 55 Me. 127).

So, while ordinarily a previous demand for the return of the money is essential to a recovery, such a demand may be dispensed with where the circumstances show conclusively that it would have been unavailing. Frey v. Stangl (Iowa) ante, 462.

In Frey v. Stangl (Iowa) supra, it is stated that even though plaintiff does not perform as agreed, recovery of the money paid in part performance ought not to be denied, unless it affirmatively appears that the defendant was ready, willing, and able to perform on his part. In this case, however, defendant had interposed the statute of frauds against the establishment of the oral contract to convey, and so had in effect repudiated it.

In Bedinger v. Whittamore (1829) 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 552, the statement is that the vendee may not recover where the seller, by way of defense to the action, shows ability to perform and tenders performance of the contract; but it is apparently a mere accidental variation in the statement of the substantive rule, and probably is not intended to imply that ability and willingness to perform is an affirmative defense.

Lien.

Generally as to right of vendee under an executory contract to a lien on the land for the amount paid thereon where the contract fails or is rescinded, see note to Davis v. Rosenzweig Realty Operating Co. 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 175.

It is generally held that if the circumstances are such as to permit a recovery back by the purchaser of the payments of the purchase price, made under an agreement for the sale of land within the statute of frauds, he is entitled to a lien on the premises therefor if he is in possession. M'Campbell v. M'Campbell (1824) 5 Litt. (Ky.) 94, 15 Am. Dec. 48; Brown v. East (1827) 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 405; Usher v. Flood (1885) 83 Ky. 552; Asher v. Brock (1894) 95 Ky. 270, 24 S. W. 1070; Elliott v. Walker (1911) 145 Ky. 71, 140 S. W. 51; Padgett v. Decker (1911) 145 Ky. 227, 140 S. W. 152 (lien for payments and improvements); Rhinehart v. Kelley (1911) 145 Ky. 470, 140 S. W. 653 (lien for purchase money, with interest, and enhanced value by permanent improvements); Taylor v. Johnson (1882) 3 Ky. L. Rep. 615; Hieronymus v. Chenoweth (1886) 7 Ky. L. Rep. 610 (abstract); Hoskins v. Chapel (1886) 7 Ky. L. Rep. 611; Sewell v. Adams (1886) 7 Ky. L. Rep. 611 (abstract); Curnutte v. Curnutte (1900) 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1422, 55 S. W. 422 (lien for money paid, but not for interest, as vendee had use of property); Lyttle v. Davidson, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 2262, 67 S. W. 34; Hilton v. Duncan (1860) 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 314 (holding that equity has power, as an incident to the rescission, to declare a lien for the purchase money, distinguishing McNew L.R.A.1016D.

v. Toby (1845) 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 27); Chrisenberry v. Wylie (1899) — Tenn. —, 54 S. W. 49 (vendee has equitable lien for amount paid where vendor refused to convey); Vaughn v. Vaughn (1898) 100 Tenn. 282, 45 S. W. 677 (ejectment; vendee entitled to have a lien for payments, with interest, declared on the land).

Where one takes possession of land under a parol purchase, although he cannot defeat an action for its recovery by the holder of the legal title, or enforce a specific performance, he has a resisting equity which entitles him to a lien upon the land for the consideration paid for it, and the enhanced value given the land by such lasting and valuable improvements as he may, in good faith, have put upon it. But he is chargeable with rent during his occupancy thereof; and, in adjusting the rights of the parties in such a state of case, the correct rule as to the quantum of rents is that they should be regulated by the interest on the consideration and on the value of the improvements, being neither greater nor less than their united amount. Grace v. Gholson (1914) 159 Ky. 359, 167 S. W. 420. (The questions as to vendee's accountability for rent and his right to interest are not within the scope of the present note. See, as to rent, the note in L.R.A. 1915E, 405.)

So it has been held that a vendee who pays the purchase money and makes improvements cannot be ousted until the vendor repays the purchase money and makes compensation for the improvements. Daniel v. Crumpler (1876) 75 N. O. 184; Pass v. Brooks (1899) 125 N. O. 129, 34 S. E. 228 (modified in (1900) 127 N. C. 119, 37 S. E. 151, as to allowance for rental value,—a point not within the scope of this note). See as to protection of purchaser who has made improvements, note in 53 L.R.A. 337.

A vendee under a parol contract has the right to recover the purchase money paid, as for money had and received. Equity will not require him to surrender his possession until the purchase money is repaid to him, and he is entitled to a lien upon the land until he is reimbursed. Possession, however, is essential to the existence of the lien. The lien exists solely as a creature of equity, the chancellor refusing to enforce the vendor's legal rights until he has done equity by restoring the consideration which he has received upon his unenforceable agreement. But when the vendee is no longer in possession, it is not necessary for the vendor to resort to the chancellor or to a court of law to restore his property to him. When the vendee relinquishes possession, he abandons his lien; or rather, he voluntarily places himself in a situation where his right to have a lien enforced in his behalf ceases to exist, not because the moral right is changed, but because there is no legal warrant in the court to enforce it. He still has his legal right to recover the purchase money, not in the law's recognition of his void contract, but upon the principle that if he pays money to his vendor for a consideration which has failed, the latter then holds the money for him, and impliedly promises to repay it on demand. The obligation of the vendor is personal, and does not attach to the land except under the circumstances here stated. Wright

v. Yates (1910) 140 Ky. 283, 130 S. W. 1111.

So, in Sewell v. Adams (1886) 7 Ky. L. Rep. 611 (abstract), and Bishop v. Martin (1901) 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1494, 65 S. W. 807, it is declared that the vendee has no lien where he has not been placed in possession.

A party in possession of land under a parol contract, having paid the consideration, will be protected until the consideration is refunded, and he may interpose the defense whether the action of the vendor be at law or in equity; but his failure to interpose the defense at law affords no reason for his going into a court of equity. Hieronimus v. Chenowith (1886) 7 Ky. L. Rep. 610 (abstract).
G. H. P.

NEW JERSEY COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS.

FOSTER F. BIRCH, Appt.,

v.

WILLIAM H. BAKER et al.

(85 N. J. L. 660, 90 Atl. 297.)

Vendor and purchaser — oral promise to pay consideration — statute of frauds.

Where a written contract for the sale of land is executed by delivery and acceptance of a conveyance passing the title, a previous oral promise to pay the consideration, whether the conveyance be to the promisor or to his nominee, is not within the statute of frauds; for the consideration of the promise is executed, and the law implies a debt recoverable in assumpsit when there has been a previous request by the defendant to convey to him or his nominee, coupled with circumstances showing that both parties expected that the plaintiff would be recompensed for complying with such request; and the action is not limited to cases where money alone has been expended, but extends to those where money, securities, and land have been parted with on an previous express request. Such promise is taken out of the statute of frauds by an executed and accepted conveyance, for it is an assumpsit to pay for land, and not a contract for the sale of land.

For other cases, see Contracts, I. c, 6, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Gummere, Ch. J., and Minturn and Kalisch, JJ., dissent.)

Headnote by BERGEN, J.

Note.—As to action for purchase price on oral contract for sale of land where the deed has been delivered, see note to Malzer v. Schisler, 51 L.R.A. (N.S.) 77.

The right of vendee to recover back pay-L.R.A.1916D.

(March 16, 1914.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Moon's County Circuit of the Supreme Court granting a nonsuit in an action brought to recover, under an express oral promise, a certain amount in consideration of a conveyance by him under a written agreement for the sale of land. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. King & Vogt, for appellant:

This case is not within the prohibition of the statute of frauds and perjuries.

Browne, Stat. Fr. § 263; Boyd v. Stone, 11 Mass. 346; King v. Hanna, 9 B. Mon. 369; Doggett v. Paterson, 18 Tex. 158; Evans v. Hardeman, 15 Tex. 480; Natchez v. Vandervelde, 31 Miss. 706, 66 Am. Dec. 581; Miller v. Roberts, 18 Tex. 16, 67 Am. Dec. 688; Graves v. Graves, 45 N. H. 323; Ford v. Finney, 35 Ga. 258; Gwaltney v. Wheeler, 26 Ind. 416; Godden v. Pierson, 42 Ala. 374; Aicardi v. Craig, 42 Ala. 314; Wetherbee v. Potter, 99 Mass. 361; Dow v. Way, 64 Barb. 257; Felch v. Taylor, 13 Pick. 136; Gully v. Grubbs, 1 J. J. Marsh. 387; Wilkinson v. Scott, 17 Mass. 251; Pomeroy v. Winship, 12 Mass. 523, 7 Am. Dec. 91; Nibert v. Baghurst, 47 N. J. Eq. 207, 20 Atl. 252; Spengeman v. Palestine Bldg. Asso. 60 N. J. L. 358, 37 Atl. 723.

To give a consideration value sufficient for the support of a promise, it must be either such as deprived the person to whom the promise was made of a right which he before possessed, or else conferred upon the other party a benefit which he otherwise would not have had.

ments made upon a contract for the sale of land which does not satisfy the statute of frauds is considered in the annotation following Cook v. Griffith, ante, 468.

Conover v. Stillwell, 34 N. J. L. 54; Headley v. Leavitt, 65 N. J. Eq. 753, 55 Atl. 731.

An action can be maintained in assumption upon the contract of the defendants to pay.

Force v. Haines, 17 N. J. L. 386; Glover v. Collins, 18 N. J. L. 234; Smith v. Smith, 28 N. J. L. 208, 78 Am. Dec. 49; Cook v. Linn, 19 N. J. L. 11, 2 Mor. Min. Rep. 49; Hoyt v. Hoyt, 16 N. J. L. 146; Ainslee v. Wilson, 7 Cow. 662, 17 Am. Dec. 532; Gay v. Mooney, 67 N. J. L. 27, 50 Atl. 596.

Messrs. Benjamin W. Ellcott and Willard W. Cutler for appellees.

Bergen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff and the five defendants, being residents of the town of Dover, were interested in procuring the Sims-Kent Company to locate there a manufacturing plant, and to accomplish this entered into negotiations with the company, which resulted in a written agreement between the plaintiff and the defendants as joint contractors, and the company, in which the plaintiff and the defendants agreed "to secure and convey to said company in fee simple the title of said land and premises from the said Foster F. Birch," the premises being a tract of land in Dover belonging to the plaintiff. In consideration of this conveyance, to be without cost to it, the Sims-Kent Company agreed to erect its factory on the lands. The plaintiff subsequently conveyed the land to the company, and it erected thereon its factory. The plaintiff, claiming that the defendants, to induce him to make the conveyance to the Sims-Kent Company according to their contract, promised orally to pay him $2,000 of the consideration price and, upon their refusal to pay, brought this suit against the defendants on their oral promise. There was evidence from which it could be inferred that the defendants, to induce plaintiff to enter into the contract, and subsequently convey the land to the Sims-Kent Company, promised to pay him $2,000. The trial court ordered a judgment of nonsuit, from which plaintiff appeals, and the defendants now seek to sustain the nonsuit upon the ground that the oral promise was one concerning the sale of lands, and, not being in writing, void under the statute for the prevention of frauds and perjuries (Comp. Stat. 2610), § 5 of which prohibits an action to charge any person "upon any contract or sale of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest in, or concerning them," unless the L.R.A.1916D.

agreement be in writing, signed by the person charged.

This case was before the supreme court on a rule to show cause, where it was held that such a promise was within the statute (79 N. J. L. 10, 74 Atl. 151), and on the second trial, the judge at circuit, following the judgment of the supreme court, ordered the nonsuit. The plaintiff having appealed from the judgment of nonsuit, the question presented is whether a promise, not in writing, to pay the owner of lands an agreed consideration if he convey the land to one in performance of a written contract by the promisor to secure such conveyance, and the owner does convey as requested, relying upon such promise, is enforceable as not being barred by the statute of frauds.

That a vendor may recover in assumption upon an oral promise by the vendee to pay the consideration agreed upon for land conveyed, and that such promise is not within the statute, has the sanction both of legal reasoning and adjudged cases. It was so held by the supreme court of this state in Murray v. Schuldt, 73 N. J. L. 489, 63 Atl. 904, where the court said that, "the property having been conveyed to the defendant, the plaintiff's action was not upon the express contract of sale, but upon the debt which arose upon the conveyance," and that such promise was not within the statute.

So, in Spengeman v. Palestine Bldg. Asso. 60 N. J. L. 357, 37 Atl. 723, where the prosecutor, who was vendor's broker, induced the defendant in certiorari, the plaintiff below, to purchase real estate upon his oral promise that he would allow plaintiff his commission as broker in reduction of the purchase price, and after conveyance and payment of the purchase price, the prosecutor, having collected the commission from the vendor, refused to carry out his promise, and, being sued, set up, among other defenses, that his promise was a contract for "sale of lands, or an interest in or concerning them," and not enforceable because of the statute. In sustaining plaintiff's right to recover, Mr. Justice Dixon said: "The present action, according to our view, is maintained, not upon the express agreement, but to enforce an implied obligation arising in part from what the plaintiff did under the influence of that agreement."

In Bolles v. Beach, 22 N. J. L. 680, 53 Am. Dec. 263, Beach agreed in writing to sell a tract of land to two persons or their assigns who were to associate themselves with others and form a company to dispose of it in parcels at public auction, Beach to make conveyances to such persons as the so-called company might require, and upon their request he conveyed a portion to Bolles, subject to a mortgage previously given by Beach, the amount of which was allowed to Bolles by the company when they collected the consideration from him, and in the settlement with Beach deducted, from the price it had agreed to pay, the amount allowed Bolles, he having orally agreed to pay the mortgage. There was no contract for sale between the actual parties to the deed. The only written contract with the vendee, prior to the delivery of the deed, was the conditions of the sale made by the company which were carried out by the deed from Beach to their nominee, Bolles. The deed acknowledged payment of the consideration without reference to the mortgage, or written assumption of its payment, and, the vendee refusing to pay the mortgage, Beach, being obligated on his bond it was given to secure, was compelled to take care of the mortgage, and then brought his suit in assumpsit against Bolles to recover the sum "in part payment of the consideration money of the deed of conveyance." The defense set up was that Beach was estopped by the recitals in his deed to deny payment of the consideration, and that the agreement, not being in writing, was void under the statute of frauds. This court held, on error, that the evidence of the agreement did not affect the operation of the deed, but only the character and extent of the payment of the consideration, and was therefore not within the statute, and that the acknowledgment of payment of the consideration, while it could not be denied by the grantor for the purpose of destroying the effect and operation of the deed, it could be for the purpose of recovering the consideration money, and, further, that, although the consideration when paid became so much paid for the account of "the committee of speculators," yet, as it was to be paid to Beach as purchase money, he was the party in interest and entitled to sue. As there was no proof of any agreement by the vendee with the vendor to pay the consideration price, it would seem that the right of recovery was based either upon the promise of Bolles to pay the committee, or upon an implied promise to pay the vendor, upon conveyance, but in any event the committee, or the two contracting purchasers, were bound to pay the consideration to Beach when he conveyed to their nominee upon request, and the action affirmed simply avoided circuitry of action if based upon their contract with Bolles to appropriate the consideration money left in his hands for the discharge of the mortgage. While this case is not precisely like the one under review, it recognizes the principle that the consideration for lands conveyed may be recovered by the grantor from the vendee L.R.A.1916D.

without a previous written contract between them, and also that the promise to pay the consideration is not within the statute of frauds as a sale of land, or of an interest therein.

In Brackett v. Evans, 1 Cush. 79, it was held that "a party who receives a grant of land, on his promise to pay for it, cannot avoid payment by showing that the promise was not in writing."

In Bowen v. Bell, 20 Johns. 338, 11 Am. Dec. 286, the parties owned a tract of land as tenants in common,—one four sixths and the other two sixths,—which they agreed to divide equally, one party to pay the other one sixth. The conveyances were made, but the promisor refused to pay for the one sixth, for which the promisee brought suit in assumpsit. Proof of the promise to pay was objected to upon the ground that it was within the statute of frauds, but the supreme court held against this contention, for the reason that "this action is not on a contract for the sale of lands, or any interest in lands. The law raises a promise to pay, and in such case it is not within the statute of frauds, although it be raised from an agreement concerning an interest in lands,"—citing Shepherd v. Little, 14 Johns. 210, where it is held that assumpsit will lie to recover the consideration for lands sold and conveyed.

In Wetherbee v. Potter, 99 Mass. 354, two of four purchasers of real estate agreed to furnish the consideration price, and the two agreed that one should pay the entire sum upon the promise of the other that he would reimburse him to the extent of one half of the cost. In an action in assumpsit for the one half of the cost, the defendant set up the statute of frauds. The court held that, although the money was advanced for the purpose of purchasing real estate and upon an oral agreement to that effect, it is not of itself a contract for the sale of land, and if the money be in effect advanced before the request is revoked, an action upon such promise is not forbidden by the statute.

And also in Root v. Burt, 118 Mass. 521, it was held, in a suit to recover the price of land sold and conveyed, that as a contract for the sale of lands, it is taken out of the statute by an executed and accepted conveyance.

In Lewis v. Grimes, 7 J. J. Marsh. 336, the action was in assumpsit to recover part of the consideration promised by defendant, and the court held: "An assumpsit to pay for land is not a 'contract for the sale of land.' Neither the letter, policy, nor object of the statute of frauds and perjuries should be deemed to embrace or apply to a promise, express or implied, to pay for land which the vendor had conveyed or covenanted to convey. . . . Surely a conveyance of land, or a covenant to convey land, would be a legal and sufficient consideration for a binding promise to pay its actual or conventional value." A right of action to recover the consideration of land already conveyed, based upon an oral promise, is also declared in Thayer v. Viles, 23 Vt. 494. In the case under review, the defendants had in writing contracted to "secure and convey to said company in fee simple" land the title to which was vested in the plaintiff. This was a binding contract which the defendants fulfilled by inducing plaintiff to convey upon their oral promise to pay him a portion of the consideration money. He, relying upon that promise, parted with his land to the party the defendants had contracted with, thus completing for them the sale they had in writing agreed to secure, and thereby relieving them from their obligation to the vendee concerning the sale of the land, or of any interest therein, which is a sufficient and legal consideration for their promise. Having by their promise to plaintiff been enabled to fulfil their written obligation, binding under the statute, it would further the perpetration of a fraud of most flagrant character to allow the defendants to escape carrying out their bargain with the landowner, and this ought not to be permitted, unless their promise is barred by the statute, and we think it is not. If the conveyance had been made to the defendants, their promise, although oral, to pay the consideration, would not be within the statute, and their legal obligation to the vendor is not altered because he conveys to their nominee instead of to them; for they get a benefit from the conveyance in either event, and it is illogical to argue that what the plaintiff did for the defendants at their request was not a performance of their contract by the plaintiff, who advanced his land for their exoneration. Whether it was money or land which they had contracted to supply, and which the plaintiff supplied for them, is of no consequence, for, as was well said by Chief Justice Hornblower in Cook v. Linn, 19 N. J. L. 11, 2 Mor. Min. Rep. 49, whenever the plaintiff has discharged an obligation of the defendant "to any other person, by applying his own money, goods, chattels, securities, or lands to such discharge, he may recover the amount so paid or satisfied, in an action of general indebitatus assumpsit for money paid."

In Woodward v. Smith, 7 Ala. 112, S. agreed with O. to sell him a tract of land, but when the conveyance was about to be made, it was discovered that the title to a part of the tract was in the vendor's son, L.R.A.1916D.

who at his father's request conveyed his tract to O. In a suit for money had and received by the son to recover compensation from his father's estate for the land conveyed at his father's request, it was held that the promise of the father to pay the son was not within the statute. "Indeed we cannot perceive any sound distinction between a conveyance to the bargainee of land and a conveyance to one at his nomination; and we have heretofore held that assumpsit might be brought when a deed had been executed and accepted, although the contract of purchase was oral only."

To the same effect is Follmer v. Dale, 9 Pa. 83, where Dale conveyed to one Garman, in consideration of the oral promise of Follmer that he would pay the consideration if conveyance was made to Garman. The deed was made, Garman entered into possession, and Dale brought suit against Follmer as guarantor. The defense was that the promise to pay the consideration was not in writing, and therefore void under the statute. The court held in effect that, as Dale would not have conveyed without the promise of Follmer to pay, the promise was not within the statute, and said: "To enable Follmer to cut himself loose from the contract would encourage, not prevent, fraud." We have no doubt that where a sale of land is executed by delivery and acceptance of a conveyance passing the title, a previous oral promise to pay the consideration, whether the conveyance be to the promisor or to his nominee, is not within the statute of frauds, for the consideration of the promise is executed, and the law implies a debt recoverable in assumpsit, when there has been a previous request by the defendant to convey to him, or to his nominee, coupled with circumstances showing that both parties expected that plaintiff would be recompensed for complying with such request, and the action is not limited to cases where money alone has been expended, but extends to those where goods, securities, or land have been parted with on a previous express request.

It is not without significance that these defendants, in the contract they made with the Sims-Kent Company, required it to deposit in the bank a sum of money subject to their order, or to the order of a majority contracting to convey, as a guaranty that after conveyance that company would proceed to erect the factory on the land. The sum required to be deposited was not the full consideration named in the deed, but only $2,000, which was the precise sum which plaintiff's case shows they promised to pay him, and the inference is permissible that this was required to secure the defendants for the cost of the land, if the Sims-Kent Company did not make the agreed use of it.

It further appears that these defendants subsequently assented to the withdrawal of the $2,000 by the depositing company when it had, to their satisfaction, complied with the terms of its contract with them, which may be taken, until otherwise explained, as an indication that the consideration which defendants contracted for as the price of the conveyance of the land had been fulfilled by their nominated vendee to their satisfaction, which would justify the inference of an accepted performance of the covenant contained in the contract of sale beneficial to them.

In this case there was testimony from which may be inferred, not only a request to convey, but a promise by the defendants to pay a part of the value of the land which at their request the plaintiff conveyed to their nominee in satisfaction of their contract; and when plaintiff advanced his land to relieve these defendants, at their request, the law raised an implied promise by the defendants so benefited to reimburse him, a promise which has no concern with the sale of land or of any interest therein. The sale was closed when plaintiff conveyed, and nothing remained to be done to complete the sale of the land. The promise which induced the conveyance became a debt of those who agreed to pay the consideration, enforceable as an implied obligation arising in part from what the plaintiff did under the influence of the contract. Spengeman v. Palestine Bldg. Asso. 60 N. J. L. 357, 37 Atl. 723.

The appellant devotes a portion of his brief to the question whether the promise was a joint obligation or several, arguing that it was joint, but the defendant does not suggest or argue this question in his brief, nor was the motion for nonsuit put upon that ground, but, assuming that it is raised in this case, there was evidence from which a jury might find the promise to be joint, or joint and several, and therefore that question should have been left to them as a question of fact. On this question the plaintiff testified that when the effort to induce the local improvement association to purchase plaintiff's land proved to be unsuccessful, he proposed that five or six of the citizens, of whom he was one, should pay for the land, and thereupon the defendants and plaintiff agreed with each other to purchase the land from plaintiff for the Sims-Kent Company; that the price was finally fixed at $2,500, of which plaintiff was to contribute $500, and the balance, $2,000, to be paid to him by the other five parties. An inference of a joint obligation to pay may be drawn from this, and therefore, even if this question was relied upon by defendant, a nonsuit would not have been proper, but the question whether the obligation was joint or several, depending upon the testimony, was a jury question.
L.R.A.1916D.

There was some evidence tending to show that, as between the promisors, they expected each to contribute $400 towards the fund, but that would not of itself destroy their joint obligation to pay the whole sum to the plaintiff, if a joint promise existed.

The argument is advanced that oral proof of a promise to pay the consideration, if the vendor, upon request of the promisor, would convey to a third party, with whom the promisor had contracted to secure a conveyance of land to the vendee, would subject an alleged promisor to the danger of false testimony tending to establish such promise; but that danger is inherent in every case where it is sought to enforce a promise or fix the legal liability of a party in the case of any engagement clearly not within the statute. And if, as we hold, the promise to pay the consideration for an executed conveyance, under the circumstances present in this case, is not within the statute, proof of such promise is subject to the veracity of witnesses as in all cases of like character.

The judgment under review is reversed.

White, J., concurring:

The purpose of the statute of frauds is to prevent fraud. The question of its applicability is largely dependent upon this purpose. The statute is therefore not permitted to be invoked to perpetrate an equitable fraud. Vreeland v. Vreeland, 53 N. J. Eq. 387, 32 Atl. 3, and cases there cited.

I think that it is because of this well-established doctrine that a parol contract for the sale of real estate, which has been executed by a conveyance by the vendor and an acceptance by the vendee, will support an action by the vendor against the vendee for the agreed purchase price. 20 Cyc. 231, and cases there cited.

I am aware that in Murray v. Schuldt, 73 N. J. L. 489, 63 Atl. 904, the supreme court said that the recovery would be, not upon the express contract, but upon an implied contract, to pay for the land so conveyed; but what that case really decided was that it was error for the trial judge to exclude evidence of the price agreed upon in the express parol contract, which seems to me to substantiate my view rather than the one expressed in the opinion filed in that case. I cannot think that a man who has received and accepted a conveyance of real estate in pursuance of a parol contract to pay therefor the sum of $10,000 may escape with a payment of $3,000 by proving that to be the real value of the land; nor that a man who has received a conveyance of real estate in pursuance of a parol contract to pay $3,000 therefor may be required to pay $10,000 upon proof that such was the real value of the property conveyed. Of course, it is true that where the parol contract to sell real estate has not been carried out by the conveyance, money paid for or on account of the purchase price may be recovered back, or services, properly measurable in money value, may be recovered for on a quantum meruit, both upon an implied contract. Smith v. Smith, 28 N. J. L. 208, 78 Am. Dec. 49; Cooper v. Colson, 66 N. J. Eq. 328, 105 Am. St. Rep. 660, 58 Atl. 337, 1 Ann. Cas. 997; Gay v. Mooney, 67 N. J. L. 28, 50 Atl. 596. But the reason for this is that the parol contract to sell the real estate, not having been performed, is barred by the statute, and, consequently, the payment or the performance of services, being without consideration, and under circumstances negating a gratuity, raises an implied contract. Where the parol contract to sell real estate has been performed, however, by the conveyance, the payment of the price, as it seems to me, is compelled, not upon the theory of the nonexistence of the parol contract, but in pursuance and enforcement of it. Under this view, obviously, a tender to the vendee of the conveyance, duly executed by the vendor, is not enough, although that is all the vendor can do, and the contract may, in a sense, be said to be performed so far as he is concerned. But in the absence of acceptance of the conveyance by the vendee, the statute interposes an absolute barrier to the enforcement of the contract. When, however, the vendee has accepted the benefit of performance of the contract by the vendor, a new element intervenes. To permit the vendee to then say that the contract could not be enforced against him because of the statute would be to permit him to invoke the statute in order to perpetrate the fraud of procuring a benefit on the faith of the promise to pay for it, and then, while retaining the benefit, repudiating that promise. The all-important element, therefore, is the acceptance by the vendee of the benefit of the performance. Without this acceptance there is no fraud, and mere performance by the vendor is without effect upon the barrier interposed by the statute.

I am for this reason unable to agree with that portion of the foregoing opinion which states that a conveyance by the vendor to, and an acceptance of the conveyance by, a third party, to whom, by the terms of the verbal contract of sale the conveyance was to be made, without further act on the part L.R.A.1916D.

of the other party to the verbal contract, the vendee, will suffice to take the case out of the prohibition of the statute, so that the price may be recovered from such vendee. All that he did was to enter into a verbal contract for the sale of land. The statute made that contract unenforceable against him, unless he, by some other act, accepted the benefit of performance of that contract, in which case it would be a fraud for him to invoke the statute. He did not accept such benefit. Where is his fraud? What has he done to estop him from claiming a protection (the statute) to-day after the conveyance to the third party which admittedly he had a perfect right to claim yesterday, before such conveyance? He has not accepted anything, nor has he received any benefit. I am unable to see that he is estopped from asking the protection of the statute.

That the situation presents an apt case for the application of the statute goes almost without saying. It is difficult to imagine a more appropriate subject for such application than one presented by the picture of an anxious seller and an obliging impecunious friendly buyer uniting, for mutual interests, in a conveyance from the former to the latter, and in a story of a verbal contract by the former with a financially responsible third party, whereby the payment of the price is foisted upon such third party. Surely a statute to prevent fraud has excellent ground for application here. Its terms seem quite broad enough to cover it. In fact it would seem to have covered it twice; once, as to the contract itself in the prohibition against a verbal contract for the sale of real estate, and again, as to the theory (viz., acceptance of benefit by a third party) upon which the exception is proposed to be grounded, in its prohibition of a verbal contract to pay the debt of another.

It may be that where the vendee comes in and admits the verbal contract and a request by him to convey to the third party, which was done, he may be estopped from setting up the statute because he has waived its protection by admitting the absence of what it is the purpose of the statute to prevent; but, where he admits nothing and simply invokes the statute, I think there is every justification for its intervention.

I concur, however, in a reversal of this judgment because in this case there was an act of acceptance by the vendee, the defendants, of performance by the vendor of the verbal contract of sale. That acceptance consisted in their joining in a perfectly legal and binding written contract with the third party (the Sims Company), whereby they obligated themselves to procure the conveyance in question to be made, and the subsequent execution and delivery by the verbal vendor of that conveyance to the benefit of such vendees in the discharge of their said legal obligation. The vendees legally bound themselves to procure the making of this conveyance by the vendor, who then, at their request, discharged their obligation by making it. Clearly they have accepted performance of the verbal contract of sale, and have received the benefit of such performance. They now propose to retain that benefit, and, by invoking the statute, to decline to pay what they agreed to pay for it. That to permit them to do so would be to sanction a use of a statute for the prevention of fraud to perpetrate a fraud is equally clear.

This view, which appears not to have been presented, or evidently was overlooked, when this case was before the supreme court on rule to show cause (79 N. J. L. 10, 74 Atl. 151), leads me to concur in the reversal of the judgment; but I dissent from the much wider declaration contained in the majority opinion, not only because I think it is not involved in the decision of this case, but because it leaves wide open one of the doors leading to the perpetration of fraud, which, in my judgment, it was the expressed purpose of the statute to close.

Gummere, Ch. J., and Minturn and Kallsch, JJ., dissent.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

LUTHER C. BAILEY

v.

CITY OF TOPEKA et al.

(97 Kan. 327, 154 Pac. 1014.)

Parks — restrictions — concessions — validity.

1. The action of a city in granting to individuals, for pay, exclusive rights within a public park to operate refreshment and lunch stands, and to rent boats and bathing suits and towels and dressing rooms, does not constitute a use of the park for other than public purposes, nor is it in conflict with provisions of the deed of gift by which the city acquired the property, to the effect that it should be used for the benefit of the public, and should be inalienable by deed, gift, lease, or other method.

For other cases, see Dedication, I. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Municipal corporation — regulation of parks — concessions.

2. Sufficient power for the purpose indicated is conferred by statutes authorizing the city authorities to "regulate" parks.

For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, II. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 12, 1916.)

ORIGINAL action in the nature of quo warranto to oust defendants from the power which they are undertaking to exercise of using the park for other than public

Headnotes by MASON, J.

Note. — As to what use of squares, parks, or commons amounts to diversion from the use for which they were dedicated, see notes to Daughters v. Riley County, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 938, and Hopkinsville v. Jarrett, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 465. L.R.A. 1916D.

purposes and in such manner as to violate the terms of its dedication. Judgment for defendants.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. M. Harvey and J. E. Addington, for plaintiff:

The city has no right to abandon the sovereign power given to it, and substitute therefor business activities.

Leavenworth v. Norton, 1 Kan. 435; Leavenworth v. Rankin, 2 Kan. 357; State ex rel. Atwood v. Hunter, 38 Kan. 581, 17 Pac. 177; Steele v. Boston, 128 Mass. 583; Malchow v. Leoti, 95 Kan. 787, L.R.A. 1915F, 568, 149 Pac. 687.

The power claimed by defendants violates dedication.

Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 26 L. ed. 197; Codman v. Crocker, 203 Mass. 147, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 980, 89 N. E. 177; Franklin County v. Lathrop, 9 Kan. 453; Armstrong v. Portsmouth Bldg. Co. 57 Kan. 69, 45 Pac. 67; Board of Education v. Kansas City, 62 Kan. 374, 63 Pac. 600; Franklin County v. Lathrop, 9 Kan. 453; Feizel v. First German Soc. 9 Kan. 592; Miami County v. Wilgus, 42 Kan. 457, 22 Pac. 615; McAlpine v. Chicago G. W. R. Co. 68 Kan. 207, 64 L.R.A. 85, 75 Pac. 73, 1 Ann. Cas. 452; Jefferson County v. Oskaloosa, 80 Kan. 587, 102 Pac. 1095; Hutchinson v. Danley, 88 Kan. 437, 129 Pac. 163; Hopkinsville v. Jarrett, 156 Ky. 777, 50 L.R.A. (N.S.) 465, 162 S. W. 85; Church v. Portland, 18 Or. 73, 6 L.R.A. 260, 22 Pac. 528; Clark v. Waltham, 128 Mass. 569; Steele v. Boston, 128 Mass. 583; Codman v. Crocker, 203 Mass. 148, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 980, 89 N. E. 177; Lincoln v. Boston, 148 Mass. 578, 3 L.R.A. 257, 12 Am. St. Rep. 601, 20 N. E. 329; Ward v. Field Museum, 241 Ill. 496, 89 N. E. 731; South Park Comrs. v. Montgomery Ward & Co. 248 Ill. 300, 93 N. E. 910, 21 Ann. Cas. 127; Clark v. Provi- dence, 1 L.R.A. 725, and note, 16 R. I. 337, 15 Atl. 763; Sturmer v. County Ct. 42 W. Va. 724, 36 L.R.A. 300, 26 S. E. 532; Douglas v. Montgomery, 118 Ala. 599, 43 L.R.A. 376, 24 So. 745; Rowzee v. Pierce, 75 Miss. 846, 40 L.R.A. 404, 65 Am. St. Rep. 625, 23 So. 307; State ex rel. Wood v. Schweickardt, 109 Mo. 496, 19 S. W. 47; Sherburne v. Portsmouth, 72 N. H. 539, 58 Atl. 38; People ex rel. Park Comrs. v. Detroit, 28 Mich. 227, 15 Am. Rep. 202; Dill. Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 72; Gushee v. New York, 42 App. Div. 37, 58 N. Y. Supp. 967.

Messrs. George P. Hayden and A. C. Bartell, for defendants:

The city of Topeka has the right to grant concessions and privileges in Gage park.

Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 196, 6 L. ed. 70; 28 Cyc. 938; Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 1096; State ex rel. Wood v. Schweickardt, 109 Mo. 496, 19 S. W. 47; Harter v. San Jose, 141 Cal. 659, 75 Pac. 344; Gushee v. New York, 42 App. Div. 37, 58 N. Y. Supp. 967.

Mason, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The city of Topeka accepted a tract of land given to it for the purpose and on the condition that it should be used as a public park, "for the benefit of the health, comfort, and recreation of the citizens of Topeka and their friends, and such other orderly persons as may resort thereto." The deed of gift contained a provision that "said real estate shall be inalienable by said city of Topeka, either by way of deed, conveyance, lease, or in any other manner, and shall be forever held and used for the purposes aforesaid." Luther C. Bailey, who owns land facing on that referred to, brings an original action in this court in the nature of quo warranto, asking that the city and its officers be ousted from the power which they are undertaking to exercise of using the park for other than public purposes, and in such a manner as to violate the terms of its dedication. The case is submitted upon the pleadings.

Prior to answering, the city filed a motion to dismiss, on the grounds: (1) That the court had no jurisdiction to hear the case; (2) that the allegations of the petition did not show an illegal exercise of power; and (3) that the plaintiff had no peculiar or specific interest different from the citizens of Topeka as a whole. The motion was overruled; the first ground being regarded as not well taken, and the others as involving the sufficiency of the petition, and proper to be raised rather by a demurrer than by a motion to dismiss. Whether the plaintiff has or claims any such peculiar interest in the use to which the park is put as to enable him to maintain an action to restrain the city from wrongful conduct in its management may well be doubted. An abutting owner may sometimes sue to prevent a diversion of public property from the uses for which it was acquired. Franklin County v. Lathrop, 9 Kan. 453; note in 1 L.R.A. 725. But whether the plaintiff is within that rule need not be determined, by reason of the conclusion reached on the other branch of the case.

1. The action of the city of which complaint is made consists of the granting to individuals, for pay, of exclusive rights within the park to operate refreshment and lunch stands, and to rent boats and provide suits, towels, and rooms for bathers, at fixed prices. A free dressing pavilion is provided for bathers using their own suits and towels. Apparently there is nothing to prevent anyone from using his own boat on the pond, should he so desire. We see nothing in the conduct referred to that is inconsistent with the public character of the park, or that conflicts with the terms of the gift. The exclusive character of the privilege conferred is not the basis of any legitimate objection; for, as no one has a right to engage in the activities referred to except by permission of the city, no one is wronged by the monopoly created. The concessions granted do not amount to the leasing of any part of the park. State ex rel. Wood v. Schweickardt, 109 Mo. 496, 19 S. W. 47. Nor do they involve the loss of control over it by the public officers. Clearly it is not inconsistent with the conditions imposed by the donor of the property, that visitors to the park should be afforded facilities for obtaining refreshments, for boating, and for bathing. No reason exists why they should not pay a fair price for what they eat or drink, or for the boating or bathing equipment they use. The city might, through its employees, furnish these conveniences directly, collecting reasonable charges therefor. The fact that a profit resulted would not render the transaction objectionable. The incidental revenue would not characterize the transaction as commercial rather than governmental. Substantially the same result is accomplished by authorizing certain individuals to attend to the business of supplying the wants of the public with respect to the matters referred to, retaining so much of the proceeds as will fairly compensate them for their services and investment, and turning the residue over to the city. The following text, and the cases supporting it, are in point at least to the extent of indicating that the facilities undertaken to be supplied are appropriate to the conduct of a public park: "Under a power to control and regulate parks the municipal authorities may provide for the pleasure, amusement, confort, and refreshment of persons frequenting them, which in their discretion they may do by granting privileges to private persons to furnish food or refreshments, or means of innocent entertainment, with the right to erect necessary structures incident thereto which will not interfere with the rights of the public, and may give a license to use a building in a park for the purpose of a restaurant, which rights and privileges may be made exclusive, the municipality in all cases retaining the right of regulation and control over the manner of conducting the business." 28 Cyc. 938.

The suggestion is made that, if the present course of the city officers is held to be legitimate, there is nothing to prevent them at their pleasure from turning the park into a mere amusement resort, abounding in alluring catchpenny devices and dominated by a spirit of commercialism. This does not follow. That the power of regulation and management might be so abused as to warrant the interference of a court may be conceded. But we find in what has already been done no close approach to the danger line.

2. It is argued that special statutory authority would be required to enable the city to pursue the course of which complaint is made. A member of the city commission is designated as the "commissioner of parks and public property." Gen. Stat. 1909, § 1235, amended by Laws 1913, chap. 84, § 2. The commission is empowered to "regulate" parks. Gen. Stat. 1909, § 1280. "A park may be devoted to any use which tends to promote popular enjoyment and recreation." 3 Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 1096, p. 1749. The furnishing of the conveniences referred to is a proper incident to the management of the park, and the method followed is so naturally adapted to the desired end that it must be regarded as a matter of administrative detail, not necessary to be specifically authorized by the legislature.

Judgment is rendered for the defendants.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

FIDELITY & COLUMBIA TRUST COMPANY, Exr., etc., of Gertrude K. Barret, et al., Appts.,

v.

A. HITE BARRET et al.

(— Ky. —, 179 S. W. 396.)

Power — to will estate — nonexclusive.

1. Under a will providing that the share of a beneficiary as it shall exist at his death "shall pass as he may direct by last will, to his wife and heirs at law," he has no authority to exclude either the wife or any heir at law from participation in his will.

For other cases, see Powers, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — illusory exercise of power — validity.

2. The exercise of a nonexclusive power to appoint an estate valued at $150,000 among four persons, by giving three $1,000 each and the other the remainder, is merely illusory as to the former, and therefore without effect.

For other cases, see Powers, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Estoppel — acceptance of illusory appointment.

3. The acceptance of the sum representing an illusory appointment by will does not, if it is returned within a reasonable time, estop the beneficiary from contesting the validity of the will because of failure properly to exercise the power, although in reliance upon the appointment another beneficiary has made a will which might have been different had he been promptly advised that the appointment was void.

Note. — As to nonexclusive powers and illusory appointments, see annotation following this case, post, 498.
L.R.A.1916D.

For other cases, see Estoppel, III. k, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(October 26, 1915.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Chancery Branch, First Division, of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County, directing the defendant trust company to turn over to plaintiffs one half of the estate in its possession as executor and trustee under the will of Gertrude K. Barret, deceased. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs Bruce & Bullitt and Grover G. Sale, for appellants:

In cases where powers have been held to be nonexclusive, the power of appointment has been limited to "children," a class easily ascertainable and usually small in number, and where it is more easily inferable that the maker of the power intended each child to have something. But where the class is wider and more indefinite than children, the tendency is to hold that the donee has the power of selection.

Re Veale, L. R. 4 Ch. Div. 61; Spring ex dem. Titcher v. Biles, 1 T. R. 435, note; Levi v. Fidelity Trust & S. V. Co. 121 Ky. 82, 88 S. W. 1083; Falcoun v. Flannery, 74 Minn. 38, 76 N. W. 954; Lippincott v. Ridgway, 11 N. J. Eq. 526; Thrasher v. Ballard, 35 W. Va. 524, 14 S. E. 232; Inglis v. McCook, 68 N. J. Eq. 27, 59 Atl. 630; McGibbon v. Abbott, L. R. 10 App. Cas.

653, 54 L. J. P. C. N. S. 39, 54 L. T. N. S. 138.

No case can be found in America, whether in Kentucky or elsewhere, in which the old doctrine of "illusory appointments" has been applied, and an appointment held void because the amount given to some person was not enough.

Kemp v. Kemp, 5 Ves. Jr. 850, 5 Revised Rep. 182; Gibson v. Kinven, 1 Vern. 66; Ray v. Sweney, 14 Bush, 1, 29 Am. Rep. 388; Spencer v. Spencer, 5 Ves. Jr. 362; Butcher v. Butcher, 9 Ves. Jr. 383, 12 Revised Rep. 193, 1 Ves. & B. 79; Mocatta v. Lousada, 12 Ves. Jr. 123; McGibbon v. Abbott, L. R. 10 App. Cas. 653, 54 L. J. P. C. N. S. 39, 54 L. T. N. S. 138; Hawthorn v. Ulrich, 207 Ill. 430, 69 N. E. 885; Graeff v. De Turk, 44 Pa. 527; Ingraham v. Meade, 3 Wall. Jr. 32, Fed. Cas. No. 7,045; Lines v. Darden, 5 Fla. 51; Fronty v. Godard, Bail. Eq. 519; McGaughey v. Henry, 15 B. Mon. 383; Degman v. Degman, 98 Ky. 717, 34 S. W. 523; Clay v. Smallwood, 100 Ky. 212, 38 S. W. 7.

Plaintiffs, the brothers and sister of Lewis Barret, are in no position to dispute the validity of his will. They have long since accepted, and for years have enjoyed, the provisions made for them by that will, and cannot now insist that it is void.

White v. Mayhall, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 830, 25 S. W. 881; McElwain v. Smith, 165 Ky. 496, 177 S. W. 244.

Plaintiffs are bound by their election to take under this will, even though they were ignorant of their rights.

Logsdon v. Haney, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 245, 74 S. W. 1073; Light v. Light, 21 Pa. 407.

Messrs. Humphrey, Middleton, & Humphrey, for appellees:

The power of appointment conferred upon Lewis Barret was a nonexclusive power, under the terms of which he could not exclude any member of the class.

Watson v. Watson, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 348, 51 S. W. 1105; Faloon v. Flannery, 74 Minn. 38, 76 N. W. 954; Lippincott v. Ridgway, 11 N. J. Eq. 526; Inglis v. McCook, 68 N. J. Eq. 27, 59 Atl. 630; Thrasher v. Ballard, 35 W. Va. 524, 14 S. E. 232; 31 Cyc. 1066.

The execution of the power of appointment by Lewis Barret is void because the appointments made to the appellees herein—his sole heirs at law—are unsubstantial and illusory.

McGaughey v. Henry, 15 B. Mon. 383; Degman v. Degman, 98 Ky. 717, 34 S. W. 523; Clay v. Smallwood, 100 Ky. 212, 38 S. W. 7; Levi v. Fidelity Trust & S. V. Co. 121 Ky. 82, 88 S. W. 1083.

The following cases do not substantiate L.R.A.1916D.

the statement that the illusory appointment doctrine was not applied in them:

Lines v. Darden, 5 Fla. 51; Hawthorn v. Ulrich, 207 Ill. 430, 69 N. E. 885; Graeff v. De Turk, 44 Pa. 527; Van Syckel's Estate, 9 Pa. Dist. R. 367; Fronty v. Godard, Bail. Eq. 517.

The English chancellors applied this doctrine to cases to which it should not have been applied, and dissatisfaction arose. The doctrine was abolished in 1830 by an act of Parliament known as the illusory appointment act.

Vanderzee v. Aclom, 4 Ves. Jr. 771; Spencer v. Spencer, 5 Ves. Jr. 363; Mocatta v. Lousada, 12 Ves. Jr. 123; Butcher v. Butcher, 9 Ves. Jr. 382, 12 Revised Rep. 193; Wilson v. Piggett, 2 Ves. Jr. 351, 2 Revised Rep. 246.

The doctrine has been applied in Kentucky with its proper limitations, and up to this time no dissatisfaction has been expressed concerning it.

Levi v. Fidelity Trust & S. V. Co. 121 Ky. 82, 88 S. W. 1083.

A share of $1,000, compared to a share of $147,000, is manifestly unsubstantial and illusory.

Bax v. Whitbread, 16 Ves. Jr. 15; Kemp v. Kemp, 5 Ves. Jr. 849, 5 Revised Rep. 182.

The will of Lewis Barret violates the expressed intention of the will of Thomas L. Barret.

Morgan v. Halsey, 97 Ky. 789, 36 L.R.A. 716, 31 S. W. 866.

The facts in this case did not impose upon the appellees a duty to elect, because Lewis Barret did not dispose of any property of his own; hence the appellees are not estopped.

40 Cyc. 1959; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 65; Bispham, Eq. §§ 298, 301; Brosenne v. Schmitt, 91 Ky. 465, 16 S. W. 135; Huhlein v. Huhlein, 87 Ky. 247, 8 S. W. 260; McQuerry v. Gilliland, 89 Ky. 434, 7 L.R.A. 454, 12 S. W. 1037; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 478; Bristow v. Warde, 2 Ves. Jr. 336, 2 Revised Rep. 235, 21 Eng. Rul. Cas. 356; Re Fowler, 27 Beav. 362; Re Brookabank, L. R. 34 Ch. Div. 160, 56 L. J. Ch. N. S. 82, 55 L. T. N. S. 593, 35 Week. Rep. 101; White v. White, L. R. 22 Ch. Div. 555, 52 L. J. Ch. N. S. 232, 48 L. T. N. S. 151, 13 Week. Rep. 451; Reid v. Reid, 25 Beav. 469.

The will of Lewis Barret is void, and the appellees took nothing under it or against it.

Landers v. Landers, 151 Ky. 206, 151 S. W. 386, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 223; Truett v. Funderburk, 93 Ga. 686, 20 S. E. 260; Leach v. Prebster, 39 Ind. 492; Staples v. Hawes, 24 Misc. 475, 53 N. Y. Supp. 860, affirmed in 39 App. Div. 548, 57 N. Y.

Supp. 452; Re Beales [1905] 1 Ch. 256, 74 L. J. Ch. N. S. 67, 53 Week. Rep. 216, 92 L. T. N. S. 268, 21 Times L. R. 101; Re Oliver [1905] 1 Ch. 191, 74 L. J. Ch. N. S. 62, 53 Week. Rep. 215, 21 Times L. R. 61.

Assuming, for the purpose of the argument, that the appellees were compelled to make an election, and did elect, they are not bound by the election because they did not act advisedly.

Kentucky Title Sav. Bank & T. Co. v. Langan, 144 Ky. 46, 137 S. W. 846; Polites v. Barlin, 149 Ky. 376, 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1217, 149 S. W. 828; Redwine v. Redwine, 160 Ky. 282, 169 S. W. 864; 40 Cyc. 1985, 1977, 1978; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 512; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 97; Gore v. Stevens, 1 Dana, 201, 25 Am. Dec. 141; White v. Mayhall, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 830, 25 S. W. 881; Tomlin v. Jayne, 14 B. Mon. 160; Bannon v. P. Bannon Sewer Pipe Co. 136 Ky. 556, 119 S. W. 1170, 124 S. W. 843; Young v. Young, 51 N. J. Eq. 491, 27 Atl. 627; Packard v. De Miranda, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 146 S. W. 211; Owens v. Andrews, 17 N. M. 597, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1072, 131 Pac. 1004; Medill v. Snyder, 61 Kan. 15, 78 Am. St. Rep. 306, 58 Pac. 962; Re McFarlin, 9 Del. Ch. 430, 75 Atl. 281; Eddy v. Eddy, 93 C. C. A. 586, 168 Fed. 590.

It was incumbent upon the trust company to see to it that the property of Thomas L. Barret was disposed of as directed by his will.

Adams v. Cowen, 177 U. S. 471, 44 L. ed. 851, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 668.

Hannah, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Thomas L. Barret died in 1896 domiciled in Louisville, Kentucky. He had five children, A. Hite Barret, Theodore L. Barret, Virgie Barret Bridges, Irwin T. Barret, and Lewis Barret. By his will, after making a few minor bequests, he devised the bulk of his property to a trustee, directing that it be divided into five equal parts, one part to be held in trust for each of the above-mentioned children. In the case of each of the four sons it was provided that his part should be held for his benefit during life, with power in the trustee to pay over the principal or any part thereof if, in the judgment of the trustee and an advisory committee nominated by the will, it was deemed wise to do so; and it was further provided that at the death of each of said sons "the share, as it then exist, shall pass as he may direct by last will, to his wife and heirs at law, and in the absence of a will, to his widow, if he leaves one, and to his heirs at law, in the same proportion as if he had died owning the same in fee simple, according exactly to the law of L.R.A.1916D.

descent and distribution as it then be in force in the state of Kentucky."

The trustee never paid over to Lewis Barret any part of the principal of his share, which at his death amounted to $150,000. He died in 1910, survived by his widow, Gertrude Ketcham Barret, no children having been born to them. In the meantime one of the brothers, Irwin T. Barret, had died intestate, and that portion of the estate held for him was distributed, one half to his widow and the other half to his brothers and sister. By will Lewis Barret appointed to his sister, Virgie Barret Bridges, and to his brothers, A. Hite Barret and Theodore L. Barret, the sum of $1,000 each; the remaining $147,000 he devised to a trustee for the use and benefit of his widow for life, with the power to dispose of the estate by will.

In 1913 the widow, Gertrude K. Barret, died, leaving a will devising the $147,000 appointed to her by her husband, Lewis Barret, to a trustee for the use and benefit of her mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Ketcham, her brother, James B. Ketcham, and her sister, Grace Ketcham. This action was thereupon instituted in the Jefferson circuit court by A. Hite Barret, Theodore L. Barret, and Virgie Barret Bridges against Gertrude Ketcham Barret's executor and trustee under the will and the beneficiaries thereunder as above mentioned, to require the executor and trustee to turn over to them one half of the estate in its possession. The plaintiffs, having theretofore received and accepted the $1,000 so appointed to each of them by the will of Lewis Barret, paid the same into court. The court below having rendered a judgment in accordance with the prayer of the petition, the defendants are here upon appeal.

This action was brought upon the theory that the will of Lewis Barret did not constitute a valid exercise of the power of appointment granted to him by the will of his father, Thomas L. Barret, which provided that his share, "as it then exist, shall pass as he may direct by last will, to his wife and heirs at law;" that the power of appointment thus granted was a nonexclusive power; that, being such, the donee, in order to execute the power in a valid manner, must have appointed to each member of the designated class a substantial share of the fund subject to the power; that the appointment of only $1,000 to the heirs at law of the donee of the power, and of $147,000 to the widow, was such that the appointments to the heirs were merely illusory; and that therefore the will of Lewis Barret was void for failure to conform to the power of appointment in execution of which it was made, and his heirs at law should take as if no will had been made by him.

1. Powers of appointment to a class are "exclusive" or "nonexclusive,"—"exclusive" when there is granted to the donee of the power the right to exclude entirely any members of the designated class; and "non-exclusive" when no such right of selection or exclusion is granted. In the case of "nonexclusive" powers, the exclusion of any member of the designated class in making the appointments will invalidate the attempted exercise of the power.

2. And, as a corollary of the rule of the invalidation of a nonexclusive power by the exclusion of a member of the designated class of appointees, there has been developed the further doctrine that the donee of a nonexclusive power must not only not exclude any member of the designated class, but he must also give to each a substantial share of the fund to be appointed, the failure to do which constitutes it an illusory appointment, and invalidates the attempted execution of the power in the same manner as does an entire exclusion of such member of the designated class. Under the illusory appointment doctrine, a nonexclusive power cannot be legally exercised except by giving to each appointee a beneficial interest in the fund, fairly proportioned to the amount for distribution; and the appointment of a nominal share to a beneficiary is illusory. 31 Cyc. 1137.

3. So, as the ultimate question of law in this connection is whether the will of Lewis Barret is void under the illusory appointment doctrine, the first inquiry is whether the power granted to him by the will of his father was an exclusive or non-exclusive power.

In McGaughey v. Henry, 15 B. Mon. 383, it was said, upon the authority of Kemp v. Kemp, 5 Ves. Jr. 850, 5 Revised Rep. 182, that the power of appointment is nonexclusive where there is no express power of selection or exclusion.

In Degman v. Degman, 98 Ky. 717, 34 S. W. 523, a power of appointment was conferred upon the donor's widow to dispose of the property devised "among my children as she may think best." This was held to be a nonexclusive power.

And in Clay v. Smallwood, 100 Ky. 212, 38 S. W. 7, a daughter of the testator was given the power to dispose of one half of the estate to the donor's "other children as she may direct." This was likewise held to be a nonexclusive power.

In Levi v. Fidelity Trust & S. V. Co. 121 Ky. 82, 88 S. W. 1083, the widow of the testator was given the power to "will or distribute to her relations and to my relations any property, real or personal, as L.R.A.1916D.

she may choose or desire them to have," the testator further stating: "I am satisfied that she will act justly in this matter." This was held to be an exclusive power.

A consideration of the foregoing cases and of the rule that, where there is no express power of selection or exclusion, the power of appointment is nonexclusive, is sufficient, we think, to demonstrate that the power granted under the will of Thomas Barret was a nonexclusive power.

4. The power of appointment conferred upon Lewis Barret by the will of his father being, therefore, a nonexclusive one, we are confronted with the question whether the appointments made by him to his brothers and his sister were illusory; that is, whether Lewis Barret appointed to his brothers and sister a substantial share in the fund when he gave to them the sum of $1,000 each, and to his widow the remaining $147,000. It seems to us that the mere statement of the proposition carries with it the answer that the sums so appointed were not sufficient to constitute a substantial compliance with the requirements of the illusory appointment doctrine. True it is that $1,000 is a substantial sum of money in itself; but the question here is, as we think, its relation to the whole of the amount to be distributed pursuant to the power. Viewed from that standpoint, or even from the standpoint of that disposition of the estate which would have been effected had Lewis Barret failed to exercise the power of appointment of which he was the donee in virtue of his father's will, it may readily be seen that the sense of proportion is grossly violated by such an execution of the power. So, if the illusory appointment doctrine is the law in Kentucky, as contended by appellees and denied by appellants, the will of Lewis Barret was clearly not a valid execution of the power of appointment here involved.

5. It may be conceded that the illusory appointment doctrine, although it originated in England, has been the subject of much criticism by able English jurists, and that it was abrogated in 1830 by Lord St. Leonard's act (1 Wm. IV. chap. 46), and that in 1874, by Lord Selborne's act (37, 38 Vict. chap. 37), the distinction between exclusive and nonexclusive powers was practically abolished. In McGibbon v. Abbott, L. R. 10 App. Cas. 653, 54 L. J. P. C. N. S. 39, 54 L. T. N. S. 138, the English privy council, in referring to the course of decision in respect of this doctrine, said that it had been swept away by the legislature as fraught with inconvenience and mischief.

It seems to us, however, without desiring to lay ourselves open to a charge of the undue assumption of superior powers of discrimination, that a careful review of the English authorities will produce the conviction that the mischief arose, not from any fault of the illusory appointment doctrine, or of the rules establishing the distinction between powers exclusive and non-exclusive, but rather because of a too liberal construction of certain powers of appointment as nonexclusive, when, in point of fact, the evident intention of the testator was to grant an exclusive power. In its real and proper sense, the illusory appointment doctrine does not involve the substitution of the opinion of the chancellor for the discretion vested in the donee of the power, in respect of the extent of the appointments made in execution thereof; for, where the power is nonexclusive, then of necessity the donee of the power has no discretion except such as is involved in a distribution of the estate to the appointees after the giving to each of the class a substantial share, and with that discretion the doctrine mentioned does not interfere. But an unlimited, uncontrolled discretion on the part of the donee of the power in respect of the value of the shares so distributed to the appointees would be nothing more and nothing less than the abolition of the distinction between exclusive and nonexclusive powers; and that is a distinction which this court will not abolish. To do so would be to take from the testator the right to require that the donee of the power of appointment shall recognize all the members of the designated class of appointees in the execution of the power.

On the other hand, so long as the distinction between powers exclusive and powers nonexclusive is preserved, so long as there is such a thing as a nonexclusive power, it inevitably follows that the illusory appointment doctrine must likewise be preserved. Otherwise the donee of a nonexclusive power, while not permitted to exclude entirely any member of the designated class of appointees, might just as effectually do so by means of an illusory appointment. It is manifest, therefore, that the enforcement and maintenance of the distinction between powers exclusive and nonexclusive of necessity raise the doctrine of illusive appointments, requiring that, where the power of appointment to a class is nonexclusive, it must be executed according to its terms, and that the donee of such a power shall not be permitted to thwart the intention of the donor of the power under the guise of an illusory appointment entirely out of proportion to the estate appointed.

It has been said that the doctrine is founded upon no principle, and that it is an arbitrary one, subject to no restraint or limitation, but in this we do not concur, L.R.A.1916D.

for it is grounded upon the principle that, where a testator and donor of a power of appointment has confided to the donee thereof a nonexclusive power to dispose of the estate to the members of a designated class, the donee must fairly and reasonably execute the power and justify the confidence reposed in him, and that equity will nullify any attempt to betray the trust thus created. Nor is the doctrine an arbitrary one, subject to no restraint or limitation; for, if the appointments made in execution of the power are fairly and reasonably proportioned to the estate so distributed, there is a valid execution of the power, notwithstanding that the members of the designated class are not made equal in the distribution. If such a rule is arbitrary, then most, if not all, of the rules of equity, possess the same attribute.

It may be conceded that in the Kentucky cases heretofore mentioned the illusory appointment doctrine was not directly involved. In McGaughey v. Henry, 15 B. Mon. 383, was stated to be "the rule," but recognized as not therein applicable. In Degman v. Degman, 98 Ky. 717, 34 S. W. 523, it was again stated to be "the well-settled doctrine," though in that case the direct question was the effect of exercising the power in securing to the donee thereof a personal benefit, rather than the making of an illusory appointment. And in Clay v. Smallwood, 100 Ky. 212, 38 S. W. 7, it was also stated "to be a well-recognized rule in equity," though in that case there was involved an entire exclusion of one of the members of the designated class; the power of appointment being nonexclusive. If an analysis of these cases leaves any doubt, however, that the illusory appointment doctrine is the law of this state, we have no hesitation now in adopting it as a competent rule in the testing of the execution of nonexclusive powers.

It follows, therefore, that the will of Lewis Barret is void for failure to conform to the power of appointment in execution of which the will was made.

6. But it is contended by appellants that, as appellees accepted the $1,000 appointed to each of them by the will of Lewis Barret, they are now estopped from questioning the failure to conform to the power of appointment given to him by the will of his father; this contention being based upon the well-known doctrine that one cannot take under a will and at the same time contest its validity.

We find but little merit in this contention in the instant case. The appointments so made to, and accepted by, appellees, were manifestly illusory. The money received was in reality their own, and we have been unable to see anything in the acceptance thereof that would render inequitable their present attack upon the validity of the Lewis Barret will because of his failure to properly exercise the power of which he was the donee. Estoppel rests largely upon injury or prejudice to the rights of him who asserts it; and appellants have not been injured by the temporary acquiescence of appellees. It is argued, however, that, had Mrs. Gertrude K. Barret, by an assertion upon the part of appellees of their present attack upon the will of Lewis Barret, been advised that she had but one half of the $150,000 to dispose of by will, she would have made a different disposition of it. She devised the $147,000 in trust, one half of the income to go to her mother during life, and the other half of the income to be divided between her brother and her sister during life, the whole of the income to be divided between them in the event of the death of her mother, and upon the death of her brother and sister the principal of the estate to be divided per stirpes among their issue. But this alleged injury or prejudice seems to us entirely too speculative to bring it within the class of detriments which render an estoppel operative.

In this state the doctrine of estoppel by acquiescence or by acceptance of benefits under a will has not been freely applied. Deppen v. Deppen, 132 Ky. 755, 117 S. W. 352; Smith v. Smith, 6 Ky. L. Rep. 453; Pinkston v. Pinkston, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 206; Brown v. Brown, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 840, 58 S. W. 993.

In Kasey v. Fidelity Trust Co. 131 Ky. 604, 115 S. W. 737, this court undoubtedly recognized by implication the right of one to contest a will notwithstanding a previous acceptance of benefits thereunder. In that case, however, the contesting beneficiary was the sole heir at law of the testator, and had given to the executor express written authority to pay certain special legacies, and had herself accepted the property devised to her. The court held that under this state of facts she could not contest the will for mental incapacity of the testator, especially without returning what she had received.

In the well-considered case of Stone v. Cook, 179 Mo. 534, 64 L.R.A. 287, 78 S. W. 801, it was said: "The sum of the matter then is that, as a general rule, one who has received a benefit under a deed, will, or other instrument, cannot thereafter contest its validity; but the general rule is subject to this qualification: That, if the benefit was received without a knowledge of his right to elect between the benefit so conferred and of his right to the property outside of the deed, will, or instrument, or if he was induced by fraud or deception to accept the benefit conferred by the instrument, he may revoke the election and contest the validity of the instrument and claim under the law, provided that innocent third persons will not suffer by a revocation, and provided that there has been no unreasonable delay in exercising the right of revocation, and provided he pay into court the benefits received."

It is here conceded that appellees accepted the $1,000 each, and under a misapprehension as to their legal rights. No one has suffered by their acceptance of the appointments. There has been no unreasonable delay in asserting their rights, and they have paid into court the sums so received by them. They are thus brought within the rule of the case mentioned, and are not estopped to contest the validity of the exercise of the power of appointment vested in Lewis Barret by the will of his father.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

Annotation—Nonexclusive powers and illusory appointments.

The general question of what is a sufficient execution by will, of a power of appointment, has already been covered.<sup>1</sup>

History of the doctrines in England.

At common law, if the donor of the power named a class of persons as objects of the power without naming the individuals, and expressly provided that there might be exclusions, of course, an appointment was not invalid on the ground that a member or members of the class received nothing.<sup>2</sup> But if he did not expressly provide that exclu-

<sup>1</sup> See note to Lane v. Lane, 64 L.R.A. 849.

<sup>2</sup> Bland v. Plummer (1864) 9 L. T. N. S. (Eng.) 825; Chamberlain v. Napier (1880) L. R. 15 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 634, 49 L. J. Ch. N. S. 628, 29 Week. Rep. 194; Macey v. Shurmer (1739) 1 Atk. (Eng.) 389; Spring ex dem. Titcher v. Biles (1784) 1 T. R. (Eng.) 435, note; Swift ex dem. Huntley v. Gregson (1786) 1 T. R. (Eng.) 432; Thomas v. L.R.A. 1916D.

Thomas, (1705) 2 Vern. (Eng.) 513; Turner v. Bryans (1862) 31 Beav. (Eng.) 303; Re Veale (1877) L. R. 5 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 622, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 799, 36 L. T. N. S. 634; Wollen v. Tanner (1800) 5 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 218.

It was held in Thomas v. Thomas (1705) 2 Vern. (Eng.) 513, that a power to give a fund to one or more of testator's children sions or selections could be made, the appointment was invalid unless each member of the class received some share under it.<sup>3</sup> At law, the appointment of any share, however small, proportionally or intrinsically, was a valid appointment.<sup>4</sup> The courts of chancery, however, then living, in such manner as the donee should think fit, is an exclusive power.

A will leaving money "upon trust to pay and apply all the same trust moneys, and to assign and transfer the security and stock in and upon which the same shall be then invested, to and amongst my other children or their issue in such parts, shares, and proportions, manner and form, as my said daughter . . . shall by deed or will direct, limit, and appoint; and in default of such direction, limitation, and appointment, I direct that the same shall fall into and form part of my residuary personal estate," grants an exclusive power. Re Veale (1877) L. R. 5 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 622.

<sup>3</sup> Alexander v. Alexander (1755) 2 Ves. Sr. 640, 2 Eng. Rul. Cas. 415; Barry v. Barry (1876) Ir. Rep. 10 Eq. 397; Barron v. Barron (1836) 2 Jones (Ir.) 226; Beere v. Prendergast (1833) Hayes & J. (Ir.) 384; Bulteel v. Plummer (1870) L. R. 6 Ch. (Eng.) 160, 23 L. T. N. S. 753; Re Aplin (1865) 13 Week. Rep. (Eng.) 1062; Burleigh v. Pearson (1749) 1 Ves. Sr. (Eng.) 281; Cloves v. Awdry (1850) 12 Beav. (Eng.) 604; Coleman v. Seymour (1748) 1 Ves. Sr. (Eng.) 209; Donoghue v. Brooke (1875) Ir. Rep. 9 Eq. 489; Fowler v. Hunter (1829) 3 Younge & J. (Eng.) 506; Kemp v. Kemp (1801) 5 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 849, 5 Revised Rep. 182; Lloyd v. Lance (1845) 14 L. J. Ch. N. S. (Eng.) 456; Pocklington v. Bayne (1785) 1 Bro. Ch. (Eng.) 450; Ranking v. Barnes (1864) 3 New Reports (Eng.) 660, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 539, 10 Jur. N. S. 463, 12 Week. Rep. 565; Robinson v. Sykes (1856) 23 Beav. (Eng.) 40, 26 L. J. Ch. N. S. 782, 2 Jur. N. S. 895; Stolworthy v. Sanicroft (1864) 10 Jur. N. S. (Eng.) 762, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 708, 10 L. T. N. S. 223, 12 Week. Rep. 635; Spencer v. Spencer (1800) 5 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 362; Strutt v. Braithwaite (1852) 5 De G. & S. (Eng.) 369, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 609, 16 Jur. 882; White v. Wilson (1852) 1 Drew. (Eng.) 298, 22 L. J. Ch. N. S. 62, 17 Jur. 15, 1 Week. Rep. 47; Young v. Waterpark (1842) 13 Sim. (Eng.) 199, 11 L. J. Ch. N. S. 367, 6 Jur. 656.

The power to distribute money left "upon trust to pay the rents to A for life, and after her decease, 'in case she should leave issue, upon trust to dispose of his said estate in such manner, amongst such issue' as A should by deed or will appoint, with gifts over in default of such issue," is a nonexclusive power. Stolworthy v. Sanicroft (1864) 10 Jur. N. S. (Eng.) 762.

A marriage settlement vesting in trustees for the husband and wife successively for life, certain hereditaments, and on the death of the survivor of them to pay the rent in maintenance of all and every the child or interfered with an appointment of a merely nominal sum as a share, on the ground that a fraud had been perpetrated upon the donor of the power.<sup>5</sup> They held such an appointment illusory and invalid.<sup>6</sup> In the earlier times the chancery courts took from the donee children, until such child or children should attain twenty-one, and as such child or children respectively should attain twenty-one, upon trust to convey unto such child or children as the parent should appoint, and in default of appointment to convey all the same premises unto and among such children equally, gives to the donee a non-exclusive power. Strutt v. Braithwaite (1852) 5 De G. & S. (Eng.) 369, 21 L. J. Ch. N. S. 609, 16 Jur. 882.

It was held in Robinson v. Sykes (1856) 23 Beav. (Eng.) 40, 26 L. J. Ch. N. S. 782, 2 Jur. N. S. 895, that a power to appoint "unto and amongst such child or children of the marriage, or unto and amongst the issue of such child or children," is a non-exclusive power.

A power to dispose of a fund "amongst her children as she shall think proper," is a nonexclusive power. Kemp v. Kemp (1801) 5 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 849, 5 Revised Rep. 182.

<sup>4</sup> Bax v. Whitbread (1809) 16 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 15, affirming (1804) 10 Ves. Jr. 31; Butcher v. Butcher (1804) 9 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 382, 12 Revised Rep. 193, affirmed in (1812) 1 Ves. & B. 79; Re Capon (1879) L. R. 10 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 484, 48 L. J. Ch. N. S. 355, 27 Week. Rep. 376; Kemp v. Kemp (Eng.) supra; Spring ex dem. Titcher v. Biles (1784) 1 T. R. (Eng.) 435, note; Vanderzee v. Aclom (1797) 4 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 771; Preamble to Lord St. Leonard's Act, 1 Wm. IV. chap. 46; 2 Sugden, Powers, p. 181.

<sup>5</sup> Butcher v. Butcher (1804) 9 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 382, 12 Revised Rep. 193, affirmed in (1812) 1 Ves. & B. 79; Kemp v. Kemp (1801) 5 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 849, 5 Revised Rep. 182; Vanderzee v. Aclom (1797) 4 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 771; Wall v. Thurborne (1686) 1 Vern. (Eng.) 355; 2 Sugden, Powers, p. 181.

<sup>6</sup> Alexander v. Alexander (1755) 2 Ves. Sr. 640, 2 Eng. Rul. Cas. 415; Kemp v. Kemp (1801) 5 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 849, 5 Revised Rep. 182; Lysaght v. Royse (1804) 2 Sch. & Lef. (Ir.) 151; Pocklington v. Bayne (1785) 1 Bro. Ch. (Eng.) 450; Spencer v. Spencer (1800) 5 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 362; Vanderzee v. Aclom (1797) 4 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 771. In the following cases the doctrine was recognized, but not applied: Bax v. Whitbread (1809) 16 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 15; Bristow v. Warde (1794) 2 Ves. Jr. 336, 2 Revised Rep. 235, 21 Eng. Rul. Cas. 356; Burrell v. Burrell (1768) 2 Amb. (Eng.) 660; Dyke v. Sylvester (1806) 12 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 126; Hockley v. Mawbey (1790) 1 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 150, 1 Revised Rep. 93; Long v. Long (1800) 5 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 445, 5 Revised Rep. 101; Wilson v. Piggott (1794) 2 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 351, 2 Revised Rep. 246.

all discretion, and made the appointment on what they considered the merits of the case. Of course, the donee had Hobson's choice, i. e., the choice of distributing the funds equally among the members of the class, or of letting the court make the appointment. Unless the shares were equal, equity would

In Kemp v. Kemp (1801) 5 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 868, there is an excellent review of the earlier decisions from the point of view of a court that felt bound by the doctrine to decide contrary to its convictions. It is there said: "I will now state the cases that have occurred upon this subject, chronologically, and see how far the opinions upon this question of illusory appointment—and I lament extremely that it has ever found its way into this court—have been carried. The case that settled this is Gibson v. Kinven (1682) 1 Vern. (Eng.) 66, determined by that great judge, Lord Nottingham, styled the Father of Equity. It was contended in that case that anyone might have been excluded. It is said in the report to have been the opinion of Chief Justice Pemberton, then at the bar, that a ring might have been given to one; and so it might, if this would be good; but the appointment was set aside by Lord Nottingham for inequality. How can the words in that case be distinguished from 'amongst her children?' Lord Nottingham was of opinion it was necessary to give some part to each, and a nominal part would not satisfy the object of the power. That case was followed by Wall v. Thurborne, reported in two places in Vernon (1 Vern. (Eng.) 355, 414); but that book is unfortunately so inaccurate that I do not know upon which statement to rely. If I take the first statement, it is very near this case. Two other cases are quoted there, by whom determined I do not know. Cragrave v. Perroset and Swetnam v. Woolaston. Upon the first I rather think the court would have paused before they would have set that aside, but for the peculiar circumstances. But Swetnam v. Woolaston, if it is to have any authority, would be against the decision in Gibson v. Kinven. It is a decision departed from in the principal case, and by whom determined I do not know. Therefore it is not entitled to be considered as of any authority. Clarke v. Turner (1694) Freem. Ch. (Eng.) 198, was, I believe, determined by Lord Somers. Whether or not the court was struck with the extent of the word 'relations' and the subject being land, they took upon themselves to execute the trust, and decreed it to the heir at law. The next case is a very extraordinary one. Warburton v. Warburton (1702) 4 Bro. P. C. (Eng.) 1,—a power to two of the testator's daughters, whom he appointed his executors, to dispose to the use of themselves, their brothers and sister, or to such of them and in such proportions as they should judge fit and convenient according to their needs and necessities. There the Lord Keeper Wright and the House of Lords seem to have thought that the trust devolved upon the court. The reason is a very odd one. I hope they did not lay much stress upon his being bred to the law. It is hardly to be collected what construction they put upon it. It seems as if they exercised the power themselves,—a power which of late the court has disclaimed; and I hope that always will be followed. If the power is not executed properly, the rule now is to set aside the execution and give the fund equally. But I suppose the construction there was that it was a general trust, to be exercised for their own benefit; and therefore the court was very jealous, and completely controlled it. The next cases are Thomas v. Thomas (1705) 2 Vern. (Eng.) 513, referred to in Swift ex dem. Huntley v. Gregson and Astry v. Astry (1706) Prec. in Ch. (Eng.) 256. The former could admit no doubt; and it was determined that the fund might be given to one. The power being to give to one or more, there was no room for the court to interfere. In Astry v. Astry the power was to divide among his three daughters in such proportions as the wife should think fit; and the court was of opinion it must be equally, unless a good reason appeared. That I take not to be the rule of the court now. However, it is perfectly clear that under words of this sort, if some very good reason does not appear which I admit might be given in the particular case, for giving a very small sum to one, such a disposition cannot be allowed. Then we come to some cases more modern, and upon which the rule is settled as it now stands. In Menzey v. Walker (1800) Forrest (Eng.) 72, notwithstanding the reason given, viz., the provision from the grandfather, yet Lord Talbot thought, under the words in that case, everyone must have a share; and not an illusory share. The next case is Maddison v. Andrew (1747) 1 Ves. Sr. (Eng.) 57. The principal point does not bear upon this; but this was held clearly, that each of the objects living were entitled to a share, and that no discretion in such a case devolved upon the court. Then in Coleman v. Seymour (1748) 1 Ves. Sr. (Eng.) 209, it was held that a share must be given to each, and that a share not illusory. The next is a case very often quoted, Alexander v. Alexander (1755) 2 Ves. Sr. (Eng.) 640, which seems almost to decide upon such words as these. Under a power to appoint unto and among such children begotten between them, and in such proportion as she shall direct, etc., Sir Thomas Clark held that each must have some share, and that must not be a nominal share. The last case I shall take notice of, is that which has been so much commented upon. Burrell v. Burrell (1768) 2 Amb. (Eng.) 680. The testator gave all his real and personal estate to his wife, to the end that she might give his children such fortunes as she should think proper, or they best deserve, to whom he charged his sons and interfere,<sup>7</sup> inquire into the behavior of the beneficiaries, their circumstances, etc.,<sup>8</sup> and adjust the amount of the shares.<sup>9</sup> But the chancery courts later gave up this practice, interfering only in case a share was merely nominal in amount.<sup>10</sup> And then they merely declared the appointment invalid and distributed the fund as if no appointment had been made. Fraud is a very questionable ground for interference by the chancery court.<sup>11</sup> Aside from this, how-daughters to be dutiful and obedient, and loving and affectionate to each other. The son had an estate of £400 a year. The wife gave two daughters £200 each; to the son a guinea; and the remainder to two other daughters. It is impossible to suppose that Lord Camden laid any stress upon the guinea. I cannot conceive that he considered that as anything, for it is not too well settled, and it is imposed on every judge as an obligation, whatever may be the inclination of his own opinion, that, though a gift of any part is a good execution at law, yet in equity, unless it is substantial and real, it is the same as no execution. The words of the report leave it a little doubtful. It states two reasons, and concludes that Lord Camden being of the same opinion, the bill was dismissed. Lord Camden, as I conceive, was of the opinion that these words were so ample that if she thought fit to give nothing to one, she might so execute her power. I will not say what my own opinion would have been. I am willing to subscribe to that of Lord Camden upon such a doubtful question; being perfectly satisfied that in setting aside these appointments, criticizing upon the words 'to and amongst,' etc., and the rule as to illusory shares, the court goes against the intention. I must therefore think that under the words of that will, Lord Camden thought the wife might have given the whole to one child, and had a right to exclude any who in her opinion did not want it. Then ought that to have any effect upon these words? I think not. My inclination is strong to support the execution of this power, if I could consistently with the rules I find established. Finding those rules established, I must consider these words with reference to those rules. This is a trust beyond all question. What is the effect of the words 'amongst her children?' Is it necessary to say 'all and every?' Alexander v. Alexander and the cases quoted in Swift ex dem. Huntley v. Gregson plainly show that, if it was not for the word 'such,' the word 'amongst' would require a distribution so that everyone must take some share. A court of law says a share, however little, will be sufficient. The power must be executed according to the words. If not, it will be bad at law. I shall mention Pocklington v. Bayne in order to show that Lord Thurlow's opinion was the same. His Lordship held an acre given to two for their lives was illusory, evidently adopting the rule, which is too firmly established for a judge to extricate himself from it. I wish to consider these cases as going upon the ground of fraud. I do not notice the late cases, principally because most of them were determined by L.R.A.1916D.

me; but all of them (Bristow v. Warde (1794) 2 Ves. Jr. 336, 2 Revised Rep. 235, 21 Eng. Rul. Cas. 356; Wilson v. Piggott (1794) 2 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 351, 2 Revised Rep. 246, and Vanderzee v. Aclom (1799) 4 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 771) are upon the same principle."

In McGibbon v. Abbott (1885) L. R. 10 App. Cas. (Eng.) 653, the court says: "It would be lamentable if their Lordships, in a case arising in Lower Canada and to be determined by the law of that country, should feel themselves bound by a course of English decisions which have been swept away by the legislature as fraught with inconvenience and mischief, and thus be driven to such a construction of the will of William as would form a precedent in future cases of a similar nature, and thereby introduce into Lower Canada all those difficulties and inconveniences which it required the force of an act of Parliament in England to remove." And it was held that the doctrine never had a place in the law of Lower Canada.

<sup>7</sup> Astry v. Astry (1706) Prec. in Ch. (Eng.) 256; Clarke v. Turner (1694) Freem. Ch. (Eng.) 198; Gibson v. Kinven (1682) 1 Vern. (Eng.) 66; Thomas v. Thomas (1705) 2 Vern. (Eng.) 513.

<sup>8</sup> Kemp v. Kemp (1801) 5 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 849, 5 Revised Rep. 182.

<sup>9</sup> Clarke v. Turner (1694) 2 Freem. (Eng.) 198; Astry v. Astry (1706) Prec. in Ch. (Eng.) 256; Gibson v. Kinven (1682) 1 Vern. (Eng.) 66; Thomas v. Thomas (1705) 2 Vern. (Eng.) 513; Kemp v. Kemp (Eng.) supra.

<sup>10</sup> Kemp v. Kemp (1801) 5 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 849, 5 Revised Rep. 182.

<sup>11</sup> "In the case of Butcher v. Butcher (1804) 9 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 383, 12 Revised Rep. 193, affirmed in (1812) 1 Ves. & B. 79, a question arose whether, under a power to appoint to children, equity could relieve against an appointment under which a share merely illusory was given to one child. The master of the rolls said, in terms, the power, though limited as to objects, is discretionary as to shares. A court of law says no object can be excluded; but there it stops. It does not attempt to correct any the extremest inequality in the distribution; and yet if that is a fraudulent execution of the power, why is it not void at law? A fraudulent act has no more validity in a court of law than in a court of equity; and if it is not a fraudulent execution, upon what principle does a court of equity deny it effect? It is sometimes said this court interferes for the purpose of carrying into effect the intention of the party creating the power, who must have meant that each object should derive the ever, there is the difficulty of formulating any rule of law or equity for determining what is an illusory appointment. The chancery courts themselves could not formulate any rule that would be certain; and certainty is the only merit of the law of nonexclusive appointments,<sup>12</sup> including the right to give a nominal share. The evils resulting from the illusory appointment doctrine became so glaring that the chancery courts themselves condemned it.<sup>13</sup> Some of them practically nullified it by holding any share to be substantial for lack of precedent in which a share in the exact amount had been held to be illusory.<sup>14</sup> same real benefit from the execution of the power. Now, every instrument must receive the same construction from every court. Whatever is its true meaning must be its meaning everywhere. If, then, the true meaning of the power, however discretionary in terms, be that each object shall have what is called a substantial share, it is not executed according to its true meaning, and therefore it is not well executed, by an appointment that does not give to each object a substantial share. A court of equity may, in the exercise of its own particular jurisdiction, supply defects in the execution of a power. But he could not well understand how the question whether a power is well or ill executed could receive different determinations in different courts. If it is not executed according to its true import, how can a court of law say it is well executed? And if it is executed according to its true import, how can a court of equity say it is ill executed? Upon questions like that in the last case, the jurisdiction exercised by equity is infinitely more strong than the common relief in case of fraud. If a man having a power to appoint to A or B appoint to A in consideration of a sum paid by him, equity will relieve against the fraud, and the courts of law would refuse to interfere, on the ground that they have not the same means of enforcing the discovery of fraud, and of relieving against it. But where, as in Butcher v. Butcher, a man has a power over a fund which it is admitted will at law enable him to give any share, however trifling, to one party, and he without fraud exercise that power accordingly, equity, by interposing its authority, actually puts a different construction on the instrument to what it must receive in a court of law; and yet if a power gives a clear right to appoint to several persons, or any of them exclusively of the others, equity can grant no relief against the bona fide exercise of it in favor of some of the objects, excluding the others. But however strange this doctrine may seem, it was well established that where the power did not authorize an exclusive appointment, equity would relieve against any appointment of an illusory share, although this relief can no longer be administered." 2 Sugden, Powers, p. 182.

In 1830 Parliament came to their relief by enacting that no appointment should be held to be invalid on account of its being merely nominal, illusory, or unsubstantial.<sup>15</sup> This statute merely compelled the chancery courts to follow the law.<sup>16</sup> It did not change the rule that an exclusion is invalid unless there is an express power of selection or exclusion contained in the instrument,<sup>17</sup> and under it the appointment of any share, however small, was good both in law and in equity.<sup>18</sup> In 1874 exclusions were legalized,<sup>19</sup> avowedly for the reason that many appointments were declared invalid because the donee had in good faith ment of an illusory share, although this relief can no longer be administered." 2 Sugden, Powers, p. 182.

<sup>12</sup> See footnote 27, infra.

<sup>13</sup> Butcher v. Butcher (1804) 9 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 382, 12 Revised Rep. 193, affirmed in (1812) 1 Ves. & B. 79; Fowler v. Hunter (1829) 3 Younge & J. (Eng.) 506; Kemp v. Kemp (1801) 5 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 849, 5 Revised Rep. 182; Mocatta v. Lousada (1806) 12 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 123; Spencer v. Spencer (1800) 5 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 362.

<sup>14</sup> Butcher v. Butcher (1804) 9 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 382, 12 Revised Rep. 193, affirmed in (1812) 1 Ves. & B. 79; Mocatta v. Lousada (1806) 12 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 123.

<sup>15</sup> Lord St. Leonard's Act, 1 Wm. IV. chap. 46.

In Re Capon (1879) L. R. 10 Ch. Div. (Eng.) 484, in construing the act the court said: "What the act meant by an 'unsubstantial, illusory, or nominal' appointment was an appointment that had the mere shadow or appearance of an appointment; and as to such appointments it says they shall be valid in equity as well as at law."

In Minchin v. Minchin (1853) 3 Ir. Ch. Rep. 167, it was held that the statute "made the appointment of a nominal or illusory share, which was a valid appointment at law, also valid in equity; but it did not make that which was an invalid appointment, both at law and in equity, because some of the objects of the power were excluded, valid in equity."

In Moynan v. Moynan (1878) L. R. I. R. 1 Eq. (Ir.) 382, the appointment was made by will before the passage of the statute of 1874 which legalized exclusions, and the donee died after the passage of the statute. It was held that the power was non-exclusive and that the appointment was void for an exclusion, the statute of 1830 and the common law being the rule that controls the decision.

See citation of later cases under footnotes 3 and 4, supra.

<sup>16</sup> See cases cited under 15, supra.

<sup>17</sup> See later cases cited under 3, supra.

<sup>18</sup> See cases cited under 16, supra.

<sup>19</sup> Lord Selborne's Act, 37, 38 Vict. chap. 37.

excluded a member of the class entirely.<sup>20</sup> These appointments, of course, ought not to fail because of the donee's ignorance of the law. But under this statute the donee of such a power cannot exclude all the objects of the power and give the fund to persons who are not objects of the power.<sup>21</sup> The chancery courts can interfere if there is fraud, in the proper sense of that term, just the same as they could before the statute was enacted.<sup>22</sup>

The doctrines in the United States.

What the English chancery courts really did was to interfere with the law court's interpretation of the instrument.<sup>23</sup> Suppose a case in which the testator has expressly declared that there shall be no exclusion, but that an appointment of 1 cent shall be valid. The chancery courts would, no doubt, uphold an appointment of 1 cent under the express power. At law the express power is the exact equivalent of a power in which donee had discretion to divide among members of the class.<sup>24</sup> But the chancery courts interfered with this interpretation. Obviously there is no fraud in giving a nominal share under this class of powers, any more than in giving a nominal share in the supposed case, if the law courts interpreted the powers correctly. Any interference by equity with the law court's interpretation of a class of instruments must naturally create friction.

The doctrine of nonexclusive powers, including the power to give a merely nominal share, has its defects in actual practice, which will be stated; but it has one merit, i. e., certainty. It furnishes a clear-cut definite rule or guide for making, executing, and interpreting powers. One who, knowing the law, gives another the power to distribute a fund so unequally that one member of the class may get $1,000 while another gets $1, and prohibits an exclusion, cannot with good grace ask a court to deprive the donee of the discretion with which he has been clothed, or to extend the discretion so as to permit a total exclusion. The beneficiary has no cause of complaint, for the donor has done indirectly only that which the law would permit him to do directly. Theoretically, the intention of the donor is strictly carried into effect, as the donor when he wrote the power, and the donee when he executed it, knew the law and acted with reference thereto. If this law is deprived of its certainty, it not only becomes useless, but it carries its harsh features to a class of cases that were originally not within its purview.

One defect in the law of nonexclusive appointments, when the right to give a nominal share is included, is that it is too rigid when applied to cases where there has been an exclusion. It compels too much attention to the mere wording of the particular clause, and appears almost, if not entirely, to shut out other considerations that may indicate more clearly the intention of the testator.<sup>25</sup> It developed into law at a time when the courts construed wills almost wholly upon the technical wording of the particular clause in question. This objection furnishes a strong reason why the whole doctrine of nonexclusive powers in its technical form should be abolished,<sup>26</sup> and an equally strong reason why its scope should not be extended to include cases not within it, by adopting the illusory appointment doctrine. And, it is said that the law makes the decisions turn upon the giving or not giving of a mere trifle, so that no practical effect can be given to the law of nonexclusive appointments if the donee can satisfy the law by giving a merely nominal share. Theoretically, this objection would appear to be based upon the assumption that the donor does not know the law and that the donee does. But whatever force the objection has, it should be directed against the whole doctrine of nonexclusive powers. Adopting the illusory appointment doctrine makes matters worse, both practical-the remainder to himself. He had no children; and the chancery court, at the instance of the third person, set the conveyance aside for fraud.

<sup>20</sup> The purpose of the legislation is disclosed in the preamble to the statute.

<sup>21</sup> Re Enever [1912] 1 I. R. (Ir.) 511.

<sup>22</sup> Tharp v. Tharp [1916] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 142. In this case the donee of the power induced the testator to destroy a codicil which would have deprived donee of the power, by means of a promise that he would so exercise the power that a certain third person should take a remainder after donee's life estate in default of issue. After testator's death the donee attempted to execute the power which had been restored by the destruction of the codicil, by conveying L.R.A.1916D.

<sup>23</sup> See footnote 11, supra.

<sup>24</sup> See footnote 4, supra.

<sup>25</sup> See footnote 29, infra, for wording of clauses that have been held nonexclusive.

<sup>26</sup> A study of the English cases cited supra, and the American cases cited under footnote 29, infra, shows that the decisions were, under the rule, made to turn upon the technical wording of the clause in question. For example, if the testator said, ly<sup>26a</sup> and theoretically.<sup>26b</sup> When that part of the law that permits the giving of a nominal share is stricken down, by the adoption of the illusory appointment doctrine, the law is deprived of its principal merit, i. e., its certainty. Neither the donor, the donee, nor the court can know in advance of a trial how much must be given to make the appointment valid.<sup>27</sup> The scope of the law is extended "to be divided among the children as he may see proper," the power was always held to be nonexclusive; but if he happened to use the term "such children," the power was held to be exclusive.

<sup>26a</sup> See "History of the Doctrine in England," supra, and observe the practical results of this practical method of giving the doctrine of nonexclusive powers a practical effect. See also quotations under footnote 27, infra.

<sup>26b</sup> See quotations under footnote, 27 infra.

<sup>27</sup> The court in Ingraham v. Meade (1855) 3 Wall. Jr. 32, Fed. Cas. No. 7,045, said: "The theory on which the English chancellors have acted in setting aside certain appointments as 'illusory' is apparently founded in equity and justice. But like many other theories which are very plausible in the abstract, experience has shown this one to be difficult in application. The term 'illusory' is vague and indefinite, depending on uncertain discretion or opinion of the person using it. Where a power is given by the donor to another to distribute, it is for the purpose of inequality, which future and unknown events may make just and judicious. The donor might do with his own as he pleased,—give a penny to one, and ten thousand to another. He has a right to intrust his power to another by substitution. The objects of his bounty are now all equally worthy (infants perhaps); if the division were made now, there is no reason for inequality. But before the time arrives for distribution, there may be a thousand reasons why the distribution should be unequal. When a chancellor undertakes to decide that any degree of inequality is a fraudulent exercise of the power, he is assuming to himself a knowledge of the secret wish and intention of the donor not expressed in the deed, and undertaking to exercise a discretionary power not intrusted to him, but to another. It would perhaps have been better originally to have adopted the adage, 'stet pro ratione voluntas,' in such cases, than to have assumed this indefinite, discretionary, and therefore dangerous power over men's property. However much the chancellor may laud his great principle that equality is equity, how does he know that even extreme inequality was not the very purpose and object of the power? I certainly concur with the scruples expressed on this subject in the English chancery cases of Kemp v. Kemp (1801) 5 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 849, 5 Revised Rep. 182; Butcher v. Butcher (1804) 9 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 393, 12 Revised Rep. 193; and Bax v. Whitbread (1809) 16 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 15."

In Hawthorn v. Ulrich (1904) 207 Ill. 430, 69 N. E. 885, the court said: "Certain difficulties in the way of the practical enforcement of this doctrine would cause us to hesitate about adopting it, even if it had received the unquestionable approval of courts of last resort in other states. The only basis upon which a court of equity could interfere would be that the power had not been executed as the testator intended, for the reason that he intended each of the beneficiaries to receive a substantial portion of his bounty. Manifestly he did not intend that they must receive equal portions, or the power to decide what portion each should receive would not have been given another. If, now, a court of chancery determines that the appointment made is a fraud upon the power and shall be set aside for the reason that the donor's purpose has been thwarted, what, then, shall be done with the property? Shall it be distributed equally? That, too, in the absence of a direction to that effect from the donee of the power, would be as manifestly a perversion of his will, and it would seem to be impossible, by any investigation, to determine just what portion each must receive to make the final distribution conform to the desires of the testator. Equity cannot do better than to leave the power of distribution where the testator left it, and refuse to interfere where the power has been executed by conveying to each intended beneficiary some portion, however small, of the testator's property."

In Lines v. Darden (1853) 5 Fla. 51, the court said: "It cannot be denied but that the English courts have assumed jurisdiction even over discretionary powers. And in this view, there is nothing in this doctrine of illusory appointment which commends itself to the favorable consideration of the court, and we feel but little disposition to adopt a rule which is never mentioned but with distrust as to its soundness, and regret that it ever was established. Butcher v. Butcher (1804) 9 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 391. It is a mistake that the doctrine flows from a trust, or is connected with it. In the case of discretionary powers, there is no principle to guide a court in determining when an appointment is illusory, and when it is not. The rule itself is founded upon no principle. It is an arbitrary one, subject to no restraint or limitation. It is going too far to say that the exercise of the power which a testator has reposed in the honesty, good faith, and discretion of another shall be controlled by the court. It is fair to conclude that the testator had no fixed purpose of his own, and to control the judgment of the donee is to do violence to the intention of the testator, and leave the execution of the power to the discretion of the court who tries the case; and that of itself is a sufficient answer to the soundness of to,—no one knows where,—and it then applies to, many cases that were not within it.

Several American courts have adopted the whole law, including the right to give a nominal share, and rejected the illusory appointment doctrine.<sup>22</sup> Others have adopted the doctrine of nonexclusive appointments without indicating—it being unnecessary to indicate—what position they would take if there had been a merely nominal share given and no exclusion.<sup>23</sup> Others; while holding exclusions invalid, have uttered dicta that the doctrine. See Fronty v. Godard (1833) Bail. Eq. (S. C.) 517."

In Fronty v. Godard (S. C.) supra, the court said: "The doctrine of illusory appointments, which in England, has been carried to a most unwarrantable length, and is reprobated by the wisest judges, is nevertheless predicated on the ground that the power given has not been executed according to the intention of the testator. This, if it had been confined to plain and palpable violations of the intention, as indicated by the words of the power, could have produced no conflict between law and equity. But when it attempted to control a discretionary power of distribution among children, by saying that each must receive a substantial part, it is to substitute the discretion of the court for the discretion of the person to whom the power is confided. It is creating an equity against and above the law, when it is our duty to follow and obey the law; to declare it, not to make it."

In Graeff v. De Turk (1863) 44 Pa. 527, the court said: "There is no doubt that Philip De Turk has executed the power intrusted to him, however harsh and cruel its execution may appear to those who regard females as well as males as entitled to the equal regard and affection of their parents. The only question is, Had he the power to make such an unequal division as is presented to us? The words of the will of Martin Shenkel are large enough to authorize it, and the question is, Is there any rule of law in Pennsylvania restraining him from so doing? Such a distribution was always good at law, and we see no reason for introducing the equitable rule of an illusory appointment, which was found in England so unsatisfactory and so difficult to administer that an act was passed (1 Wm. IV. chap. 46) on the 16th July, 1830, making the rule in equity the same as at law. And for this statute restoring the common-law rule, that great equity lawyer and judge, Lord St. Leonards, says he is responsible. As the rule in equity has never been sanctioned by any decisions in this state (Ingraham v. Meade (1855) 13 Phila. Leg. Int. (Pa.) 372, Fed. Cas. No. 7,045, per Justice Grier), we do not feel inclined to depart from the common-law rule, but reject the exploded equitable English doctrine of illusory appointments."

And see footnote 6, supra.

<sup>22</sup> Lines v. Darden (1853) 5 Fla. 51; Hawthorn v. Ulrich (1904) 207 Ill. 430, 69 N. E. 885; Graeff v. De Turk (1863) 44 Pa. 527; Neilson's Estate (1885) 17 W. N. C. (Pa.) 158, rehearing in (1886) 17 W. N. C. 326; Van Syckel's Estate (1900) 24 (Pa.) Co. Ct. 241; Fronty v. Godard (1833) 1 L.R.A.1916D.

Bail. Eq. (S. C.) 517 (dictum); Ingraham v. Meade (Pa.) supra.

In Hawthorn v. Ulrich (1904) 207 Ill. 430, 69 N. E. 885, the court said: "In view of the fact that this doctrine was long discredited and reluctantly enforced by the English courts of equity, until the steadily increasing dissatisfaction was recognized by a statute entirely forbidding its application, and in view of the further fact that no case, as it seems, can be found in which it has ever been applied by an American court, we are of the opinion that in the light of the authorities above cited from Pennsylvania and other states, and in consideration of the reasons which make against the rule and its enforcement, we would not be warranted in ingrafting this doctrine of illusory appointment upon the laws of Illinois." The property was "to be divided between her heirs in the manner in which she may decide."

And see quotations under footnote 27, supra.

<sup>23</sup> Hatchett v. Hatchett (1893) 103 Ala. 556, 18 So. 550; Melvin v. Melvin (1854) 6 Md. 541 (an indirect holding); Falloon v. Flannery (1898) 74 Minn. 38, 76 N. W. 954; Lippincott v. Ridgway (1854) 10 N. J. Eq. 164; Wright v. Wright (1886) 41 N. J. Eq. 382, 4 Atl. 855; Den ex dem. Micheau v. Crawford (1825) 8 N. J. L. 90; Cochran v. Elwell (1890) 46 N. J. Eq. 333, 19 Atl. 672; Cameron v. Crowley (1907) 72 N. J. Eq. 681, 65 Atl. 875; Shannon v. Pickell (1886) 2 N. Y. S. R. 160; Stuyvesant v. Neil (1883) 67 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 16; Kemp v. Kemp (1901) 36 Misc. 79, 72 N. Y. Supp. 617; Little v. Bennett (1859) 58 N. C. (5 Jones, Eq.) 156; Stableton v. Ellison (1871) 21 Ohio St. 527; Shank v. Dewitt (1886) 44 Ohio St. 237, 6 N. E. 255; McKonkey's Appeal (1850) 13 Pa. 259; Graeff v. De Turk (1863) 44 Pa. 527; Russell v. Kennedy (1870) 66 Pa. 248; Neilson's Estate (1885) 17 W. N. C. (Pa.) 158, rehearing in (1886) 17 W. N. C. 326; Seibels v. Whatley (1837) 2 Hill, Eq. (S. C.) 605; Hudson v. Hudson (1819) 6 Munf. (Va.) 352; Carrington v. Belt (1819) 6 Munf. (Va.) 374; Morris v. Owen (1801) 2 Call. (Va.) 520; Knight v. Yarbrough (1820) Gilmer (Va.) 27; Thrasher v. Ballard (1891) 35 W. Va. 524, 14 S. E. 232.

In Cowles v. Brown (1803) 4 Call. (Va.) 477, the court said: "Power is given to the husband to distribute the slaves among the nephews and nieces of the testatrix 'in such manner and proportion as he shall think proper;' and there is nothing in the will to show that an equal division was intended. Of course, it was left to him to make the appointments according to his own discretion; and then, what right has the court to control the execution? The latitude which has been sometimes taken by chancellors in England has been reprobated, and a different course is beginning to manifest itself there (2 Fonbl. Eq. 201) which meets with my own approbation. Consequently, as the power was general in the present case, and the husband has given part of the slaves to each of the legatees, without any proof of fraud, I concur with the rest of the judges, that the decree ought to be affirmed."

A nonexclusive power is granted by the following language: "I give and bequeath all my property, both real and personal, that I die possessed of, both in the state of New Jersey and the city of New York (after my funeral expenses and debts shall be paid), to my wife, . . . to use or dispose of in any manner that she may think proper during her lifetime, and at her death may by will dispose of the same between my children and grandchildren as she may think proper." Wright v. Wright (1886) 41 N. J. Eq. 382, 4 Atl. 855.

The words, "and I do further authorize my wife after my death to dispose of all the above said property to my heirs as she thinks best," constitute a nonexclusive power. Shank v. Dewitt (1886) 44 Ohio St. 237, 6 N. E. 255.

A will in which testator "devised to his wife, Martha Pennock, the use, benefits, and profits of my real estate, during her natural life; and also all my personal estate of every description, including ground rents, bank stock, bonds, notes, book debts, goods and chattels, absolutely; having full confidence that she will leave the surplus to be divided at her decease justly amongst my children," grants a nonexclusive power. McKonkey's Appeal (1850) 13 Pa. 253.

One empowered by the will of his deceased wife to dispose of all her property for his own or the children's benefit during his lifetime, and at his death to dispose of it, "or what remains of the same, among our children and grandchildren by will in such proportions to each as he may choose, hereby giving him the same authority and power to divide my estate among our heirs, children, and grandchildren which I myself have," does not have power to absolutely exclude any child or grandchild. Hatchett v. Hatchett (1893) 103 Ala. 556, 16 So. 550.

A will giving "full power . . . [after it] to dispose by last will and testament of his or her part or share of the said residuary estate among his or her children and grandchildren, if any, in such shares and proportions, and on such terms, as he or she may deem fitting and proper," grants a nonexclusive power. Neilson's Estate (1885) 17 W. N. C. (Pa.) 158, rehearing in (1886) 17 W. N. C. 326.

Where a testator directed that his estate should be divided equally among his four children, their heirs and assigns, and one of his children died without issue, the appointment of a fund equally among the three surviving children is not a valid execution of the power. Bryce's Estate (1913) 238 Pa. 519, 86 Atl. 286.

A will reading, "full power by will to divide all my real and personal estate among my children as she shall see proper, giving to each such a share as her judgment shall dictate," grants a nonexclusive power. Darling v. Edson (1897) 4 Pa. Super. Ct. 498.

A testator who bequeathed to his wife certain slaves during her life, and directed that the same should be by her disposed of among his children, after her death, as she should think proper," granted a nonexclusive power. Hudson v. Hudson (1819) 6 Munf. (Va.) 352.

The power to distribute personal property "among my children as she thinks proper" is a nonexclusive power. Morris v. Owen (1801) 2 Call. (Va.) 520.

A power in a will giving to testator's widow property "to live upon, pay my debts, and dispose of among my children and grandchildren as she pleases, and should she find it necessary to sell all or either of the lands, to convey and make titles thereto, to any person or persons whatsoever, which title so made shall be valid to all intents," etc., gives the widow a nonexclusive power. Knight v. Yarbrough (1820) Gilmer (Va.) 27.

Under a nonexclusive power to distribute among those who would inherit the property in default of execution of the power, an appointment of part of the property to one beneficiary, leaving the balance to descend to all, is a valid appointment. Russell v. Kennedy (1870) 66 Pa. 248.

But an exclusive power is granted by language in a will as follows: "I hereby empower my wife, in case she shall continue my widow during her life (but not otherwise), to make a will, or other writing in the nature thereof, directing my said estate to be divided to and among such of my children or their issue in such shares and proportions as she may see proper and best." McNeile's Estate (1907) 217 Pa. 179, 66 Atl. 328.

And a will which gives an estate "to be divided among her surviving heirs, or by her last will and testament, if she executed one," is an exclusive power. Horner's Estate (1887) 4 Pa. Co. Ct. 189.

The power to distribute "to any of her children or grandchildren that she may think proper to bequeath the same to" is an exclusive power. Cochran v. Elwell (1890) 46 N. J. Eq. 333, 19 Atl. 672.

Giving the share to a married daughter by a will, "to her sole and separate use free from the control of her husband," instead of the fee free from the trust, does not invalidate the appointment made by a widow having a life estate by her deceased husband's will with power "to give and to divide among our children the property I may leave, or the proceeds thereof, in such proportions as she shall think just and expedient." Friend v. Oliver (1855) 27 Ala. 532.

A deed to a third person by Daniel would indicate an intention to adopt the illusory appointment doctrine.<sup>30</sup> But in no state except Kentucky has any American court actually declared an appointment invalid on the ground that it was illusory. This would seem to indicate that all the American courts to which the question has been presented have felt obliged or willing to adopt the law of nonexclusive powers, and that all ex-

Stoner, in trust for his wife, giving to her the power of appointment by will with reference to the property conveyed, "to give such portion thereof as she may think proper to the said Daniel Stoner, or the children which they now have, or any which they may have," gives a nonexclusive power. Thrasher v. Ballard (1891) 35 W. Va. 524, 14 S. E. 232.

<sup>30</sup> In holding that there was no exclusion, for the reason that an advancement had been made, the court in Hatchett v. Hatchett (1893) 103 Ala. 556, 16 So. 550, said: "The law requires that in executing a power of this character and scope, each person sharing in the benefits of its execution is entitled to receive, not of right an equal proportion with the others, but some substantial part." The action was an ejectment, and the court also held that the illusory appointment doctrine had no place in a court of law.

In a replevin suit to recover two sleighs alleged to belong to an estate, for the distribution of which an unexecuted nonexclusive power exists, a member of the class of beneficiaries is not disqualified, on account of interest, as a witness for the plaintiff. Melvin v. Melvin (1854) 6 Md. 541. In discussing this question the court said: "Although, under the power, if executed, she must have given a part to each, she might have given to each any part she pleased, provided it was not an illusory portion, and was under no obligation to give to the witness any of the property in dispute."

Two Virginia cases, Rhett v. Mason (1868) 18 Gratt. (Va.) 541, and McCamant v. Nuckolls (1888) 85 Va. 331, 12 S. E. 160, have sometimes been cited as adopting the illusory appointment doctrine. In the former case the court said: "The doctrine of illusory appointments does not apply to this case, but only to a case in which the appointment is to be made among persons of a certain class, so as to entitle each one of the class to a substantial portion of the subject." And in the latter case it was found as a fact that a substantial amount had been given, although the shares were by no means equal. While these cases give color to the belief that the court might adopt the doctrine on proper occasion, they are by no means convincing of that fact. There is no careful consideration of the merits of the doctrine or of its binding force.

In Cruse v. McKee (1858) 2 Head (Tenn.) 1, 73 Am. Dec. 186, the court said: "This does not fall under the head of illusory appointments. That only applies to a case where one invested with a power to appportion property amongst a class, with full discretion as to the amount to be given to each, gives to one a merely nominal share. L.R.A.1916D.

That will be set aside as illusory, as a fraud upon the donor of the power, as he certainly intended by making all the objects of his bounty, or of the power, that each should have a substantial share. 1 Am. Lead. Cas. (Hare & W.) 332. But in this case she had full power to give all to one or two or more, with an unrestricted discretion. It was not to his children as a class, without discretion, but she might exclude one or more if she chose, entirely. Not so in cases to which illusory appointment applies; though in these cases discriminations may be made, yet not to the entire exclusion of anyone, or a nominal share to one."

In Herrick v. Fowler (1902) 108 Tenn. 410, 67 S. W. 861, the court, in holding that an appointment to the surviving member of the class, with only $100 to the children of the deceased member, was a good execution of a nonexclusive power, said: "In addition, when it appears that Henry Y. Herrick had been provided for by F. C. Herrick, the donee of the power, out of his own means, or that of his wife, Harriet R. (and it does not matter which), the rule of illusory appointments does not apply, and a merely nominal amount would suffice to be given to the party thus provided for. And hence, if Henry were alive, he could not claim as against the will of said F. C. Herrick and the appointment thereunder. Bristow v. Warde (1794) 2 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 336, 2 Revised Rep. 235, 21 Eng. Rul. Cas. 356; Long v. Long (1800) 5 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 445, 5 Revised Rep. 101; Mocatta v. Lousada (1806) 12 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 123; Kemp v. Kemp (1801) 5 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 849, 5 Revised Rep. 182; Vanderzee v. Aclom (1797) 4 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 771; Spencer v. Spencer (1800) 5 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 362."

In Thrasher v. Ballard (1891) 35 W. Va. 524, 14 S. E. 232, the court, by way of argument in holding an appointment invalid for an exclusion, said: "But it may be said that under this discretion Mrs. Stoner might give one child substantially all the estate, and give another only a nominal amount. This is not so, for this would be what is in equity called an illusory appointment. At law any share, however nominal, as a ring or a shilling out of £100,000, was a valid appointment under the power, but in equity it would be illusory and void. An equal distribution in amount is not, however, required, and very large latitude of discretion is allowed the appointer. 2 Minor Inst. 743; Rhett v. Mason (1867) 18 Gratt. (Va.) 541; 2 Lomax, Dig. 170, 172; 2 Greenleaf's Cruise, on Real Prop. 257, 2 Sugden, Powers, 581."

And see Kentucky cases cited in FIDELITY & C. TRUST CO. v. BARRET, ante, 493.

cept the Kentucky court,<sup>31</sup> to which the question of illusory appointments has been directly presented, have been unwilling to adopt it. The question was presented in Ohio,<sup>32</sup> but not decided for the reason that the record showed an attempt to dispose of the property for the benefit of the donee, and the appointments were held invalid on this ground alone, the court avoiding the question of illusory appointments. The Kentucky court<sup>33</sup> skilfully presents the arguments in favor of adopting the illusory appointment doctrine. The objections to its adoption have already been pointed out.

<sup>31</sup> FIDELITY & C. TRUST CO. v. BARRET.

<sup>32</sup> Shank v. Dewitt (1886) 44 Ohio St. 237, 6 N. E. 255. This case furnishes a good example of invalidity of appointments for fraud. The court said: "That her own personal, pecuniary benefit was in the contemplation of the parties to the transactions, seems too clear for discussion. We may well suppose that those heirs of the testator who were practically excluded from all benefits of the power conferred would have substantially shared in the disposition of the property but for these appointments made for her own benefit. It was clearly the intention of the testator that his widow should not share in the estate beyond the life interest which the will bestowed upon her; and in seeking to derive a substantial benefit for herself from the estate, which was intended to be appointed to the heirs of the testator, she exceeded and abused the power conferred."

<sup>33</sup> FIDELITY & C. TRUST CO. v. BARRET.
J. W. M

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

RUSSELL O'CONNELL, by Next Friend,
Appt.,
v.

MERCHANTS' & POLICE DISTRICT
TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

(167 Ky. 468, 180 S. W. 845.)

Municipal corporation — contractor for public work — exemption from liability for negligence.

One contracting with a city to convey its prisoners to and from jail, and its sick and injured to the hospitals, is not entitled to the city's exemption from liability for injuries to pedestrians due to his negligence in the performance of that duty.

For other cases, see Negligence, I. d., in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 17, 1915.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Common Law and Equity Division of the Circuit Court for Kenton County sustaining a demurrer to a petition filed to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. B. F. Graziani for appellant.

Mr. C. B. Thompson for appellee.

Miller, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court.

The appellant, Russell O'Connell, a minor, who sues by his next friend, appeals from a judgment of the circuit court that sustained a demurrer to his petition. The petition, in substance, states that the defendant, the Merchants' & Police District Telegraph Company, was at the time the plaintiff was injured a private corporation, engaged in the business of running and operating a wagon for the purpose of carrying persons to and from the jail, and to and from the hospital, or carrying the injured or sick from the streets, highways, and buildings of the city of Covington, to their homes, hospitals, or jails; that on March 20, 1913, while plaintiff was traveling along Madison avenue near the intersection of Sixth street, in Covington, the defendant, with gross and wanton carelessness and negligence upon the part of its servants, ran its team and wagon over the plaintiff, severely and permanently injuring him in the several ways detailed in the petition, to his damage in the sum of $5,000; that at the time it inflicted the injuries upon the plaintiff the defendant was hired by the city of Covington and paid a sum of money under contract for its services, and was operating its team and patrol wagon, through its agents and officers, for a payment of money and gain.

The circuit court rested its judgment sustaining the demurrer to the petition upon the authority of the case of the Bluegrass Traction Co. v. Grover (1909) 135 Ky. 685, 135 Am. St. Rep. 498, 123 S. W. 264, and similar cases, which hold that, where a county performed its governmental functions through a contract with another, the contractor was not liable for negligence in the performance of the work, when the county would not have been liable if it had performed the work through its own employees. See also Schneider v. Cahill, —

Note. — As to right of contractor with public to immunity which latter enjoys from liability for damages, see annotation following this case, post, 511.
L.R.A.1916D.

Ky. —, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1009, 127 S. W. 143.

It is generally held that, where one contracts with a municipal corporation to keep its streets in repair, he takes upon himself the duty of the city towards the public, and, if the municipality would be liable for its negligence in such a case, so is the contractor, whose negligence caused the injury.

But the converse of that proposition, which exempts the contractor from liability for his own negligence in case the city would not be liable if it had been guilty of negligence in doing the same work, is of comparatively late origin, and this rule is by no means universal in its application. There are many exceptions to it; and the consequences of extending the doctrine of nonliability while in the performance of governmental functions makes us unwilling to say that all the various functions of municipal government can be performed by agents or contractors without liability to persons injured through their negligence in the performance of such work. An instance of an exception to the rule is found in the liability to individuals of water companies performing the governmental function of furnishing water for fire protection. This liability has been upheld in this state as resting upon the breach of the contract made for the benefit of the individual. Graves County Water Co. v. Ligon, 112 Ky. 775, 66 S. W. 725; Terrell v. Louisville Water Co. 127 Ky. 77, 105 S. W. 100.

In Bluegrass Traction Co. v. Grover, supra, the traction company had built a bridge over the Southern Railway Company's track, under an agreement with the fiscal court of the county to maintain the bridge forever, free of cost to the county. The bridge formed a part of the county road. The traction company permitted the bridge to get out of repair, with the result that a valuable horse belonging to Grover was injured while crossing the bridge. Grover recovered a judgment against the traction company, which was reversed by this court, upon the theory that since the county being an arm of the state government, and exercising a part of the powers of the state, and created by the legislature for that purpose, neither it nor any of its officials could be held liable for damages in the performance of that duty, the traction company, which had taken over that duty, was likewise not liable. In the course of the opinion the court said: "To hold that the county is not responsible for a defect in the highway, but that the contractor who agrees with the county to discharge the duty which the law places upon the county is responsible to a traveler injured by a defect in the highway, would be to overlook the reason upon which the rule rests; for, if such liability existed, the county would be unable to make contracts for the keeping in repair of its highways on as reasonable terms as it can where it must only pay a reasonable price for the necessary work, because, if the contractor assumes the greater liability, he must necessarily take this into consideration in fixing the price for which he may do the work."

The court further said: "The bridge was a part of the county highway, and, unless the traction company became liable by reason of its contract with the fiscal court, or by some other fact shown in the case, then it is not liable to Grover for an injury to his mare while traveling on the public highway by reason of a defect in it."

The opinion then quotes the contract between the traction company and the county at length, and closes as follows: "To hold the traction company liable for such damages on a contract to maintain the bridge free of cost to Fayette county would be to extend the obligation of the contract beyond the fair and natural meaning of its terms."

It will be observed that the conclusion there reached is based entirely upon the idea, which is emphasized, that the traction company's relation with the county was contractual only, and that it was therefore liable in the same way and to the same extent, and no further, than the county would have been liable. Grover sought a recovery by reason of the contractual relation of the traction company.

But, conceding that the city of Covington would not have been liable to the plaintiff for the accident inflicted upon him in this case if the city had been operating the wagon, because it would then have been performing a governmental function, does it follow that the appellee is not liable for its own negligence in performing that work? We think this question is answered by the opinion of this court in Jones & Co. v. Ferro Concrete Constr. Co. 154 Ky. 52, 156 S. W. 1060. In that case Jones & Co. and the Ferro Company were building separate portions of the sewers of the city of Louisville, under separate contracts with its commissioners of sewerage, a corporation created for the purpose of installing an extended system of sewers for and on behalf of the city of Louisville. In prosecuting its work the Ferro Company damaged the work of the Jones Company, whereupon the Jones Company sued the Ferro Company and the commissioners of sewerage for damages. This court exempted the commissioners of sewerage from liability, under the well-known doctrine that it was not liable for negligence in performing a governmental function; that the money in its hands was a fund created by taxation for the purpose of supplying the city with an adequate system of sewers, and which, under the mandate of the Constitution, could not be diverted to any other purpose. But, in holding the Ferro Company liable for its negligence and consequent damage to the Jones Company, the court had this to say in explanation of the opinion in Bluegrass Traction Co. v. Grover, supra: "That was a suit upon the contract, and the question decided was simply that the damages sued for were not within the reasonable contemplation of the parties to the contract, and not covered by its terms. If this was a suit upon the contract made by the Ferro Concrete Construction Company with the sewerage commission, and damages were claimed by reason of a breach of the terms of that contract, then the two cases would be similar. But this is not a suit for a breach of a contract. It is a suit to recover damages for negligence. If in that case the traction company had negligently thrown a timber from its bridge and injured Grover's horse beneath, then the two cases would be parallel. No such question was presented by that record, and the opinion of the court is limited to the effect of the contract. The court did not have before it in that case the question of the liability of the traction company for negligence independently of its contract with the fiscal court."

From the above extract it will be observed that the court was careful to point out the distinction that the Grover Case was a suit upon the contract between the traction company and the county, and that, if in the Grover Case the traction company had negligently thrown a timber from its bridge and injured Grover's horse beneath, then the two cases would be parallel. The distinction between the liability of the contractor under a contract with the municipality and his liability for his negligence independently of his contract is clearly drawn. In the first class of cases the contractor is not liable because the municipality would not be liable; in the second class of cases the contractor is liable because he is sued for his own negligence independently of his contract with the municipality.

In Appleby v. State, 45 N. J. L. 165, the distinction above made was recognized, and stated as follows: "A duty the breach of which is an actionable wrong, may arise from a contract, or be imposed by positive law, independent of contract. In the first case the party to the contract only can sue.

. . . In the other case any person injured may sue if he be one of the class of L.R.A.1916L.

persons for whose benefit the duty is imposed."

Solberg v. Schlosser, 20 N. D. 307, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1111, 127 N. W. 91, is directly in point. In that case the drainage board of a county let a contract to build a drain across a highway, and reserved no right of supervision. The contractor negligently piled earth on the roadway, thereby causing the injury to the plaintiff. In a suit against him for his negligence the contractor answered that he was an agent of the drainage board, and that, as the drainage board was not liable, neither was he. But in holding him liable the court said:

"We do not agree with the defendant's contention as to the cause of action set forth in the complaint. It is not a cause of action for damages growing out of a breach of contract. It is one for damages growing out of the defendant's tort in rendering the highway dangerous through his negligence in leaving the dirt thereon in piles, and not leveled off. The contract is not set forth in the complaint nor mentioned therein. It was not offered in evidence by the plaintiff, but by the defendant. . . .

"In this case, although there existed a contract between the drainage board and the defendant, still the liability, as pleaded, does not depend on the contract, but arises out of a legal duty devolving upon the defendant, as well as the public in general, not to obstruct or make the highway dangerous for travel. Such a duty, being to the public generally, may be enforced by anyone, if damages occur on account of the failure to perform that duty. The liability in this case arises by reason of the fact that the defendant negligently placed a nuisance in the highway, which rendered it dangerous for travel, and a violation of § 8641, Rev. Codes 1905, Comp. Laws 1913, § 7228. Inasmuch as the liability pleaded is not based upon a contract, it is not necessary for us to determine whether there was a breach of the contract in this case. In support of our conclusion that the complaint in this case properly alleged a cause of action growing out of a breach of duty on the part of the defendant, see Nye v. Dibley, 88 Minn. 465, 93 N. W. 524; Elzig v. Bales, 135 Iowa, 208, 112 N. W. 540. . . .

"The defendant also urges that he was engaged in excavating the drain as the agent of the drainage board, and contends that no liability can be upheld against him as agent, as his principal would not be liable as a matter of law. So far as this case is concerned, it is immaterial whether the drainage board could be held for damages or not, as it clearly appears that the relation of principal and agent did not exist between the defendant and the drainage board by virtue of the contract. A reading of that contract shows that the defendant independently contracted to dig the drain in accordance with plans and specifications which were made a part of the contract. The drainage board exercised no control or supervision over the work or over the defendant while engaged in doing the work."

The reason for exempting a municipality from damages for injuries inflicted in the performance of its governmental functions is one of public policy, to protect public funds and public property. Taxes are raised for certain specific governmental purposes; and, if they could be diverted to the payment of damage claims, the more important work of government, which every municipality must perform regardless of its other relations, would be seriously impaired, if not totally destroyed. The reason for the exemption is sound and unobjectionable. But, when an individual or private corporation, for compensation, undertakes to perform work for a municipality, the reason for the rule ceases. It has become a maxim that, when the reason for a rule of law ceases, the rule itself should cease. To hold the contractor liable for his negligence in no way jeopardizes the public funds of the municipality. To say that holding the contractor liable for his own negligence would prevent the municipality from securing contractors to do its work at a reasonable price is entirely too fanciful and farfetched in its application to the practical affairs of life to receive serious consideration. This difficulty does not arise in work done for individuals; indeed, experience shows that individuals usually get the same character of work done for lower prices than are paid by municipalities. If, on the contrary, it should be announced as a rule of law that a contractor doing work for a municipality is not to be held liable for his own negligence, it would not only be a deplorable rule that would put a premium upon negligence, but the contractor would, in all probability, and because of the application of the rule to his case, have to pay enhanced wages for the enhanced danger thereby incurred by the laborer, and thereby increasing the cost of the work. If we were permitted to speculate as to the results to be obtained in giving or denying the exemption from liability to contractors doing municipal work of a governmental character, we would conclude that it would be to the interest of the municipality, as well as the laborer, to deny the exemption. Nobody but the contractor would profit by granting the exemption, while the life and property of the citizen would be exploited for the contractor's benefit.

We have heretofore called attention to the language of the opinion in the Jones Case, where the court, in referring to the Grover Case, said that "if in that case the traction company had negligently thrown a timber from its bridge and injured Grover's horse beneath," it would have been liable for its own negligence.

Clearly, that is the case we have before us. The petition charges that the appellee, through the gross carelessness and negligence of its servants, ran over the appellant and injured him. If that be true, and we must so take it upon the demurrer, this case comes squarely within the rule announced in Jones & Co. v. Ferro Concrete Constr. Co. above cited, and the appellee is responsible in damages.

Judgment reversed, and case remanded, with instructions to overrule the demurrer to the petition, and for further proceedings.

Annotation—Right of contractor with public to immunity which latter enjoys from liability for damages.

The present question, of course, cannot arise except in those jurisdictions where the public enjoy an immunity from liability for damages arising from the performance by the public authorities of a governmental function. Consequently those cases in which the public is excused from liability upon the ground that the performance of a governmental function has been delegated to an independent contractor do not fall within the scope of the annotation, and are not treated herein.

The cases involving the liability of a highway contractor for dangerous conditions where the municipality, county, or town is not liable are treated in the L.R.A.1916D.

annotations to Schneider v. Cahill, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1009, and Ockerman v. Woodward, L.R.A.1916A, 1005, and should be examined in connection with the present annotation.

The general rule seems to be that where the act or failure to act which causes an injury complained of is one which the contractor was employed to do, and the injury results not from the negligent manner of doing the work, but from the doing of or failure to do it at all, the contractor is entitled to the immunity from liability which the public enjoys, but, on the other hand, is not entitled to such immunity where the injury arises from the negligent manner of performing the work. In other words, one contracting with the public is generally not liable for incidental or unavoidable injury necessary to the performance of the work, but is liable for damages arising from casual or collateral negligence, negligence being casual or collateral when it arises incidentally in the course of the performance of, and not directly from, the act authorized.

Thus it has been held that independent contractors constructing drainage improvements are not liable for damages which do not result from negligence or unskillfulness in performing the contract, or, in other words, for damages necessarily inflicted in doing the work. Wood v. Drainage Dist. (1913) 110 Ark. 416, 161 S. W. 1057, holding that one contracting with a drainage district was not liable for injuries to adjoining lands where no negligence was established; Timothy J. Foohey Dredging Co. v. Lovewell (1914) — Ark. —, 170 S. W. 1012, citing Wood v. Drainage Dist. with approval; Timothy J. Foohey Dredging Co. v. Mabin (1915) 118 Ark. 1, 175 S. W. 400, holding that one contracting for the construction of a drainage ditch was not liable for damages caused by acts necessary to the construction of the ditch. So, it was held in Hanrahan v. Baltimore (1911) 114 Md. 517, 80 Atl. 312, that contractors for the construction of a public sewer were in the precise position of the public contractee with respect to liability for incidental and unavoidable injury done in constructing the sewer. And in De Baker v. Southern California R. Co. (1895) 106 Cal. 257, 46 Am. St. Rep. 237, 39 Pac. 610, where a levee was constructed pursuant to a contract with a city, it was held that the contractor was entitled to the immunity of the city for indirect and consequential damages, such as the cutting away by a flood of land on the side of the stream opposite the levee, the plans and location of the levee being such as to exonerate the city, and no negligence being attributed to the contractor in the construction of the work. So, in Salliotte v. King Bridge Co. (1903) 65 L.R.A. 620, 58 C. C. A. 466, 122 Fed. 378, writ of certiorari denied in (1903) 191 U. S. 569, 48 L. ed. 306, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 841, where a riparian owner sought to hold a contractor for the erection of a bridge across a navigable river liable for injury to his land caused by the turning of the current against same by the deepening of the channel, the court held the contractor entitled to all the immunities of the public, and not liable in the instant L.R.A.1916D.

case because the injury in question was incidental to a valid exercise of the public authority. And in Bennett v. Mt. Vernon (1904) 124 Iowa, 537, 100 N. W. 349, where it became necessary to destroy a private drain in laying water mains, it was held that neither the town nor the contractor was liable for the resulting damages, the work having been done in a proper and lawful manner.

But contractors for the construction of public drains are liable if, in exercising the rights conferred by contract, by negligence, unskillfulness, or acts performed for mere convenience, they injure the property of another, although the drainage district itself is not liable for negligence. Wood v. Drainage Dist. (dictum); Timothy J. Foohey Dredging Co. v. Lovewell (dictum); and Timothy J. Foohey v. Mabin (Ark.) supra (holding that a contractor for the construction of a drainage ditch was liable for injury to an adjoining landowner for damages resulting from the damming up of a ditch, where such act was not a necessary part of the construction work which the contractor had undertaken to do). And it has been held that an independent contractor for the laying of a water main would be liable for damages caused by the destroying of a private drain if the injury were the result of doing the work contracted for in an unreasonable and negligent manner. Bennett v. Mt. Vernon (Iowa) supra. So, in Thompson v. Polk County (1838) 38 Minn. 130, 36 N. W. 267, it was held that a contractor for the construction of a public ditch was liable for injuries due to his negligence, although the county itself was not liable therefor. And in Turner v. Degnon-McLean Contracting Co. (1904) 99 App. Div. 135, 90 N. Y. Supp. 948, affirmed on prevailing opinion below in (1906) 184 N. Y. 525, 76 N. E. 1111, it was expressly held that a contractor for the construction of a tunnel under city streets does not stand in the same position as would the city were it doing the work without the intervention of a contractor, as regards injuries caused by striking a pedestrian lawfully on the public street, with a stone thrown in negligent blasting, and, therefore, that the contractor was not immune from liability. And see Bates v. Holbrook (1902) 171 N. Y. 460, 64 N. E. 181, affirming (1901) 67 App. Div. 25, 73 N. Y. Supp. 417, which reversed (1901) 35 Misc. 342, 71 N. Y. Supp. 1013, wherein it was held that a contractor who in constructing a public improvement, such as a subway, unnecessarily damaged property by maintaining at one point and for his own convenience machinery and other appliances which could as well have been located where they would not have caused damage, was liable for such damage. And see also Dow v. Oroville (1913) 22 Cal. App. 215, 134 Pac. 197, wherein a contractor for the construction of a city sewer system was held liable for injuries caused by a pedestrian falling into an unguarded trench, and in which the complaint was dismissed as to the city. In the latter case, however, the ground upon which the city was excused from liability is not shown, but the court did say that a mere recital in the complaint of contractual relations subsisting between the city and the contractor would not relieve the latter from liability for the consequence of any negligence in performing the work called for by the contract.

And a similar conclusion has been reached in a case (Green v. Eden (1900) 24 Ind. App. 583, 56 N. E. 240) somewhat similar as regards its facts to O'CONNELL v. MERCHANTS' & POLICE DIST. TELEG. Co. ante, 508, it being held that one contracting with a city to furnish and operate a hospital ambulance in response to all calls from the city dispensary was liable for injuries to a pedestrian caused by his servant's negligence in performing the contract duty, notwithstanding the contract with the city, which successfully defended the action as against itself. It does not appear, however, that the city defended upon the ground that, being a public entity, it was entitled to immunity from liability.

And where the public is held to be immune from liability for negligence in performing a governmental function, a further refinement of the above discussed general rule has been made by drawing a distinction between actions founded upon the negligent performance or nonperformance of duties arising under the contract with the public, and actions bottomed upon liability of the contractor for his negligence independently of his contract. This distinction is clearly laid down in O'CONNELL v. MERCHANTS' & POLICE DIST. TELEG. Co. supra, which sets out at length and quotes with approval the earlier Kentucky case of Jones & Co. v. Ferro Concrete Constr. Co. (1913) 154 Ky. 47, 156 S. W. 1060, wherein a similar distinction was made, it being held that where the action is upon the contract the contractor is entitled to the immunity from liability even for negligence which the public enjoys, but that the contractor cannot escape liability by pleading public immunity where he has been guilty of negligence independently of his contract. This distinction is also indicated in the opinion of the court in Solberg v. Schlosser (1910) 20 N. D. 307, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1111, 127 N. W. 91, which is set out in both the O'CONNELL CASE, and in the note on "Liability of highway contractor" in 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1009. But in connection with the above cited Kentucky cases the reader should also examine Schneider v. Cahill (1910) — Ky. —, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1009, 127 S. W. 143, and Ockerman v. Woodward (1915) 165 Ky. 752, L.R.A.1916A, 1005, 178 S. W. 1100, in both of which highway contractors were held entitled to the immunity enjoyed by the public in actions founded upon the independent negligence of the contractor and not upon the omission or commission of duties imposed by the contract itself. The Ockerman Case does not advert to the distinction laid down in Jones & Co. v. Ferro Concrete & Constr. Co., which, as above stated, is approved and applied in the O'CONNELL CASE, which was decided subsequently to Ockerman v. Woodward, and the latter case is not cited in the O'CONNELL CASE. Moreover, the annotator is unable to reconcile the decisions in the two cases last cited, the latter of which seems to necessarily overrule the former. See also the criticism of Ockerman v. Woodward contained in the annotation to that case on page 1006 of L.R.A.1916A.

And that phase of the above discussed rule which declares that where the action is founded upon breach of a duty arising out of a contract to do something which the contractee would not be liable for failure to do, the contractor is entitled to the immunity which the former enjoys, was laid down in Williams v. Stillwell (1889) 88 Ala. 332, 6 So. 914, wherein it was held that one who contracted to keep county bridges in repair was not liable to a traveler injured by a defective bridge which the contractor had failed to repair, the court saying that the county itself was not liable for the injury in question, and that it knew of no authority which would authorize "A to maintain an action against B for an alleged injury suffered from the latter's failure to comply with a contract made with C." And upon the lack of privity of contract phase of the case, see Chopin v. Louisiana Levee Co. (1878) 30 La. Ann. 345, wherein a suit against contractors with the state for the construction and repair of a levee, based upon a breach of the contract, was dismissed upon exceptions that there was no privity of contract between the complainant and the contractors, and that the petition disclosed no cause of action. But this rule regarding the necessity of privity of contract is not of universal application. For example, it has been held that an independent contractor for a public improvement is in privity with the public at large so as to render him liable for his negligence. Casey v. Wrought Iron Bridge Co. (1905) 114 Mo. App. 47, 89 S. W. 330.

Another case of possible interest in connection with the present question is Lee v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. (1901) 57 App. Div. 378, 68 N. Y. Supp. 407, wherein it was held that a statute exempting towns from liability to one injured by the breaking of a bridge across which he is taking a load of over 4 tons applies to a railroad bridge necessarily constructed to carry a highway over its tracks, and relieves the railroad from liability to the same extent as the town. G. J. C.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
J. A. JOHNSON.

(168 Ky. 351, 182 S. W. 214.)

Carrier — lease — liability for injury to passenger.

1. The owner of a railroad is liable for injury negligently inflicted by a lessee upon a passenger on a train operated by the latter.

For other cases, see Railroads, I. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

New trial — judgment non obstante veredicto — denial of peremptory instruction.

2. The court cannot, after erroneously denying a motion for peremptory instruction, grant a motion for judgment non obstante veredicto, but must grant a new trial.

For other cases, see Judgment, I. e, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Carrier — duty to assist passenger out of car.

3. A carrier is not bound to go into a car and assist to the exit a passenger who is able to walk about, although he has lost some fingers and toes, so as to be liable for injury to him through his attempting to alight from the moving train which has stood at the station the regular time to discharge and receive passengers.

For other cases, see Carriers, II. j, 1, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 8, 1916.)

Note. — For right to judgment non obstante veredicto, because of failure of proof, see note to Kirk v. Salt Lake City, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1021.

As to liability of lessor of railroad for injuries caused by negligence of another company using the road under a lease, license, or other contract, see note to Caruthers v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 44 L.R.A. 737; and see later cases, Harden v. North Carolina R. Co. 55 L.R.A. 784; L.R.A.1916D.

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Franklin County overruling defendant's motion for new trial of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Shelby, Northcutt, & Shelby and T. L. Edelen, for appellant:

Defendant was entitled to a judgment notwithstanding the verdict because of the failure to reply to the plea of contributory negligence.

Evans v. Stone, 80 Ky. 78; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Copas, 95 Ky. 460, 26 S. W. 179; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Mayfield, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 224, 35 S. W. 924; Louisville R. Co. v. Hibbitt, 139 Ky. 43, 139 Am. St. Rep. 464, 129 S. W. 319.

The necessity for a reply to the plea of contributory negligence is not affected by the fact that the petition contains a statement that plaintiff was in the exercise of due care.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Copas, 95 Ky. 460, 26 S. W. 179; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Paynter, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 761, 82 S. W. 412.

The fact that a motion for a peremptory instruction was made and overruled at the trial does not deprive the defendant of its right to a judgment upon the pleadings under § 386, Civil Code.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Copas, supra; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Beauchamp, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1429, 77 S. W. 1096; Louisville & N.

Chicago & G. T. R. Co. v. Hart, 66 L.R.A. 75; Hamilton v. Louisiana & N. W. R. Co. 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 787; Clinger v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 998; and Johnson v. Louisiana R. & Nav. Co. 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 887.

As to duty of carrier to assist passenger boarding or alighting, see note to Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Dyer, 48 L.R.A.(N.S.) 816, and other notes there referred to.

R. Co. v. Cox, 145 Ky. 716, 141 S. W. 59; Connecticut F. Ins. Co. v. Moore, 154 Ky. 18, 156 S. W. 867, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1106; Western & Southern L. Ins. Co. v. Quinn, 130 Ky. 397, 113 S. W. 456.

The alleged failure to render plaintiff increased aid and assistance could not be regarded in any event as the proximate cause of the accident.

Cooley, Torts, § 76; Wharton, Neg. § 134; Setter v. Maysville, 114 Ky. 68, 69 S. W. 1074; Wight v. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 137 Ky. 302, 125 S. W. 718.

Defendant is in no event responsible for the negligence of its lessee in respect of the latter's passengers.

Swice v. Maysville & B. S. R. Co. 116 Ky. 253, 75 S. W. 278; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Sheegog, 126 Ky. 252, 103 S. W. 323; Mahoney v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co. 63 Me. 68.

Messrs. O'Rear & Williams for appellee.

Thomas, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On November 8, 1913, the appellee, J. A. Johnson (whom we shall hereafter designate as plaintiff), at about 4:15 P. M., boarded a train at Winchester, Kentucky, to go to Frankfort, Kentucky, which train was that of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company. In due time the train arrived at Frankfort, but, according to the testimony, something like five minutes later than its schedule time, and, while attempting to alight from the train at the latter place, the plaintiff fell, and in some manner one of his legs got caught under the train and was run over by the front trucks of one of the coaches and had to be amputated. There was an injury to the knee of the other leg which appears to have rendered it almost, if not, stiff, and there was a slight wound about the head which seems not to have been very serious, but more or less painful and annoying at the time. He was carried to a hospital in Frankfort, and, after remaining there for quite a while, he recovered sufficiently to be able to, with the assistance of an artificial limb, travel about to some extent. He filed this suit in the Franklin circuit court on December 13, 1913, against the appellant, Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company (whom we shall hereafter refer to as defendant), seeking to recover against it as damages for his injury the sum of $25,500. Upon the first trial of the case there was a verdict and judgment against the defendant for the sum of $15,000, but the trial court granted to the defendant a new trial and set aside that verdict, and upon a second trial there was a verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $6,000, and defendant's J.R.A.1916D.

motion for a new trial having been overruled, it prosecutes this appeal.

Before considering the merits of the case, there are two preliminary questions urged upon us by defendant which we deem necessary to dispose of. They are:

(1) That the defendant was not operating the train upon which the plaintiff took passage, but that same was being operated by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company over a track of railroad from Lexington to Louisville owned by the defendant, but which had been long previously leased to the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company for the purpose of operating upon it between said points trains exclusively owned by it, and that the injury to plaintiff, if produced by any negligence at all, was that of the latter company as lessee of defendant, and for which the defendant is not at all liable.

(2) At the close of the plaintiff's testimony at the first trial the defendant moved the court to peremptorily instruct the jury to return a verdict in its behalf, which was overruled and exceptions taken, and the same motion was renewed at the close of all of the testimony which was heard upon that trial, with the same result, and after the returning of the verdict, and before a rendition of the judgment thereon, the defendant entered a motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict; this being based upon the fact that its answer contained, in addition to a general denial, a plea of contributory negligence on behalf of plaintiff, and which plea of contributory negligence was not denied either by pleading or being controverted of record.

Considering these questions in the order named, it appears that the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company owns a line of railroad from Lexington, Kentucky, eastward, and that the defendant owns a line of railroad from Lexington through Frankfort and running into the city of Louisville, and that this condition existed on the 23d day of March, 1895. On that day, in consideration of certain agreements and counter agreements, there was a written lease entered into between defendant and the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company by which, for the considerations stated, the latter company was given the privilege to operate its trains between Lexington and Louisville running through intermediate stations, including Frankfort, over the tracks of the defendant, and it is claimed in this case that, notwithstanding this lease, inasmuch as the injuries complained of were inflicted by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, this defendant is not liable.

It would serve no useful purpose to set out in this opinion any of the stipulations or conditions of that lease contract, because on a previous occasion it was before this court wherein a similar question was presented, and the contention now made by defendant was then denied by this court. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Breeden, 111 Ky. 729, 64 S. W. 667. It was therein determined that, although it might appear that both the lessor and lessee of a railroad track had authority to enter into such a contract, still the lessor company could not relieve itself by such a lease of the duties which it owed to the public to maintain and operate its railroad in such a way as the law demands of it, which is in a reasonable, prudent, and careful manner, and without negligence resulting in the injury or hurt of any member of the public, and, if any member of the public shall through the negligence of the lessee sustain injuries from which damages result, the lessor would be liable for such damages to the injured party as much so as if the same had been the result of acts of it or any of its agents or servants. See also McCabe v. Maysville & B. S. R. Co. 112 Ky. 861, 66 S. W. 1054; Swice v. Maysville & B. S. R. Co. 116 Ky. 253, 75 S. W. 278; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Sheegog, 126 Ky. 252, 103 S. W. 323.

It was furthermore determined in the Breeden Case, supra, that "the contract above quoted [which is the same herein involved] is nothing more than a traffic arrangement. The two companies jointly maintained the roadbed."

It is insisted, however, that inasmuch as the injured parties in the cases referred to were not at the time passengers upon the lessee's train, this rule should not apply herein, because the relationship of the plaintiff as passenger to the lessee was contractual, and is to be governed by the same rule applicable as between the employees of the lessee and it, and the effort is made to bring a passenger of the lessee in the same category with an employee of the lessee. This is wholly untenable. The very foundation of the rule which relieves the lessor of liability for injuries to the employees of the lessee is that such employees established their relationship to the lessee by a voluntary act on their part. Not so with the passenger. While in one sense he voluntarily becomes a passenger on that particular train, yet in a still further sense he is compelled to take that particular train if he wants to go to a point on that road at that particular time, and, because he assumes voluntarily the position of passenger towards the lessee carrier, he does not thereby and for the time being cease to be a member of the public to whom the lessor owes certain specified duties in carrying out the purposes of its charter. The contention of the defendant upon this point is unsound, and cannot be upheld.

Second. It is urged that the motion for a judgment non obstante veredicto at the close of the first trial should have prevailed, and that the trial court erred in granting a new trial, thereby giving an opportunity for the plaintiff to reply to the plea of contributory negligence, and we are asked to reverse the judgment and direct the lower court to enter a judgment for the defendant. This we cannot do. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Thieman, 96 Ky. 509, 29 S. W. 357; The Blue Wing v. Buckner, 12 B. Mon. 248; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Copas, 95 Ky. 460, 26 S. W. 179; Mast v. Lehman, 100 Ky. 466, 38 S. W. 1056; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schweitzer, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 856; Schulte v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 128 Ky. 631, 108 S. W. 941; Louisville R. Co. v. Hibbitt, 139 Ky. 44, 139 Am. St. Rep. 464, 129 S. W. 319; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Tuggle, 151 Ky. 412, 152 S. W. 270; Connecticut F. Ins. Co. v. Moore, 154 Ky. 20, 156 S. W. 867, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1106.

The direct question of practice under consideration was presented to this court in the case of Mast v. Lehman, 100 Ky. 466, 38 S. W. 1056, and decided contrary to the present contention of the defendant; and this case is referred to with approval in this court's opinion in the case of Connecticut F. Ins. Co. v. Moore, 154 Ky. 20, 156 S. W. 867, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 1106, in which latter case this court upon the question said: "It is the rule that, where a party asks for a peremptory instruction which should have been given, he is not thereafter entitled to a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, but only to a new trial for the error of the court in refusing the peremptory,"—citing both the Lehman and Hibbitt Cases.

In the case of Louisville R. Co. v. Hibbitt, 139 Ky. 44, 139 Am. St. Rep. 464, 129 S. W. 319, almost the precise question of practice herein involved was before this court, and, denying the present contention, this court, quoting with approval from the Lehman Case, said: "The motion for a peremptory instruction should have been sustained, and certainly the company ought not to suffer because of the error of the court committed over its objection and after it had done everything it could do to save its rights. This precise question was before us in Mast v. Lehman, supra, in which the petition was so fatally defective as not to entitle the plaintiff to a verdict. The court said: 'At the conclusion of the trial the defendant moved the court to peremptorily instruct the jury to find for the defendant. This motion of defendant should have been sustained by the court, and would have been sustained if the court had been aware of the true condition of the pleadings. It is true the plaintiffs objected to the instruction; but, in our opinion, such objection did not relieve the court of its obligation to properly instruct the jury as to the law of the case based upon the pleadings and the proof. If the court had sustained this motion, as it was clearly his duty to do, it would necessarily have brought to the attention of the plaintiffs the defense which had been so carefully concealed from the very beginning of the case. And before the submission of the case to the jury he would have had an opportunity to have offered an amendment curing the defects in his petition, which, in furtherance of justice, it would have been the duty of the court to have allowed to be filed."

See also the very recent case of Lancaster Electric Light Co. v. Taylor, 168 Ky. 179, 181 S. W. 967.

To hold in accordance with this rule does not say that the asking for a peremptory instruction is a waiver of the right to move for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The one is universally recognized as challenging the sufficiency of the evidence, while the other is a challenge directed to the sufficiency of the pleading; but, when a motion for a peremptory has been made, whether for an insufficiency of pleading or evidence, and which should have been given, but was not, a subsequent motion for a non obstante judgment, if sustained, would place the right to a hearing by the adverse party beyond repair, and the court in furtherance of the general principle that it is preferable that cases should be disposed of on their merits, rather than upon technicalities, should in such cases as we are here dealing with reconsider his ruling in denying the motion for a peremptory instruction and grant a new trial, rather than sustain the motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. If the motion for a peremptory instruction had not been made in such cases, there would be no error which the trial court could correct by the granting of a new trial, and he would then be compelled to sustain the motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. We are, however, confronted with no such conditions in this instant case. We therefore hold that there was no error in refusing the motion for a verdict made by the defendant under the facts presented. This brings us to a consideration of the merits of the case.

It appears that a year or more previous to this accident the plaintiff, on account of being exposed to the cold weather, had sustained injuries by frost bite whereby he lost some of his fingers to both hands and some of the toes to both of his feet, but he does not seem to have been otherwise seriously injured; and it is insisted that upon boarding the train upon the occasion involved at Winchester he explained to an agent and servant of the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company his crippled condition, and requested special aid in alighting from the train upon the arrival at his destination, which he says was promised to him, and which he claimed was not rendered. It is not clear, however, that the petition charges this failure to be a causal act resulting in the injury to plaintiff, but for the purpose of this case we will treat the allegations as being broad enough to cover this point. It is also charged that the railroad company suffered other passengers to crowd upon the train when it arrived at Frankfort, and thereby prevented plaintiff from alighting, and that through its negligence and carelessness the train at the time plaintiff was about to alight was caused to make an unusual or unnecessary jerk, whereby he was thrown to the platform and injured; the entire part of the petition setting up the facts constituting plaintiff's grounds for recovery being as follows: "Plaintiff says that of their gross negligence and carelessness the defendant, its agents, servants, and employees in charge of said train, failed and refused to give him the increased care or attention made necessary by his condition, or any care or attention, but, upon the contrary, when the train arrived at Frankfort, of their gross carelessness and negligence suffered new passengers to crowd upon the train and into the doorways and aisles of the coach before plaintiff could alight, and whilst plaintiff was on the platform of one of defendant's coaches preparatory to alighting, and whilst using due care for his own safety considering his condition, the said defendant's said agents and employees, by their gross negligence and carelessness, caused an unusual and unnecessary jerk of the train, whereby the plaintiff was suddenly thrown from the platform and steps of said train under its wheels."

It will be observed that the failure of those in charge of the train to render to him the increased aid which he insists that his crippled condition demanded is not clearly charged as the producing cause of his injury.

The proof shows that, notwithstanding the crippled condition of the plaintiff, he was perfectly able to walk about and go wheresoever he pleased. He resided with his daughter about 4 miles from Winchester, and in going to town frequently walked part of the way, and sometimes all the way, and on the day that he made this trip he started from his home with a grip, or suit case, and, after walking perhaps one half of the way, he rode into town in a vehicle with a traveler on the turnpike. He deposited his grip in a saloon, where he drank a milk punch, and, after leaving the saloon and visiting some places in town, he returned and drank another milk punch, and later on, after engaging in other travel about the city, and about 11 o'clock, he returned to the saloon and drank a third milk punch. At this time he purchased two pints of whisky and put them in his grip, or suit case. He then went to the home of one Mr. Dougherty, where he had his dinner, and about 3:30 o'clock he left this place and went to the saloon, and took out one of the pints of whisky and put it in his pocket, and then went to the depot and purchased his ticket, and subsequently boarded the train. He took his seat on the left-hand side of the rear end of the smoking car; the next car following being the day coach, or ladies' car. He put his grip on the seat immediately in front of the one he was occupying, and there was sitting beside him a young man whose name does not seem to be known to anyone testifying in the case, and who was not introduced as a witness. Other passengers, however, and indeed it is admitted by plaintiff, say that en route plaintiff offered to this fellow passenger a drink, and at the same time took one himself. Plaintiff claims that his companion passenger accepted the drink, while other passengers did not see this, but testified that the plaintiff's offer was refused. However this may be, within a comparatively short while a controversy arose between the plaintiff and this passenger, and the former became so loud and boisterous in his talk that it attracted the attention of other passengers in the car; the language used by him, as testified to by the witnesses, being by no means the most elegant. As a consequence of this he changed his place in the car, and by the time he got to Frankfort he was unable to locate his grip, or suit case, and according to the proof made no effort either to find it or to alight from the train until after all of the passengers had gotten off and all those desiring to take passage had gotten on, and many, if not all of them, had secured seats in the respective coaches. About this time someone suggested to him that the train had arrived at Frankfort, whereupon he began a search for his grip, and after finding it, and after he got within 3 or 4 feet of the smoking car door going out, the train made the usual start without any jerk unusual or otherwise, and by the time plaintiff got out upon the platform the train was cleverly started, and he, over the protests of the brakeman and that of a Mr. Wilson, who is a citizen of Frankfort, and whose testimony is both intelligent and convincing, L.R.A.1916D.

undertook to jump off the car, which was then moving at a speed of from 2 to 3 miles per hour, and in so doing fell, and thereby sustained the injuries for which he sues.

There is no dispute but that at the usual place the station of Frankfort was announced in the usual way, and no testimony showing that the train did not stop upon this occasion the usual time, which was about three minutes. There is absolutely no proof that any unusual number of passengers crowded on to the car, and there was such an utter failure to produce evidence of any jerking start of the train that the plaintiff himself abandons this theory by failing to offer any instruction upon it.

The court, in submitting the case to the jury by its instruction (No. 1), did so solely upon the theory that the plaintiff was physically impaired by reason of being crippled, and that, if the defendant and its agents and servants knew this, it was their duty to render to him aid in alighting from the train beyond that ordinarily accorded other passengers, and that, if the jury believed that the agents and servants negligently failed to do this, and by reason thereof the plaintiff was injured, it would be the duty of the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff. Other parts of the instruction set forth in apt terms the rule as to the measure of damages. There is no doubt in this state as to the rule fixing the degree of care which a carrier owes to its passengers. This is the highest degree of care, and this duty exists until the relationship of passenger and carrier ceases, and it has been time and again decided that such relationship did not cease until after the passenger had alighted from the train and had gotten off of the railroad premises by the means provided by the carrier for a departure from the station. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Vivion, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 687, 41 S. W. 580, 3 Am. Neg. Rep. 28.

It is an equally well-established rule that a physically disabled passenger shall receive such care as is commensurate with his infirmities, if such infirmities disable him from properly caring for his own safety, provided the carrier has knowledge of such infirmities. But we are unable to find any authority, either in this state or elsewhere, nor have we been cited to one, where, when a passenger was able to walk and move around, as the plaintiff undoubtedly was in this case according to the testimony, the carrier should give him the extra care of going into the coach and specially calling his attention to the arrival of the train, and to assist him to the steps in order for him to alight, and to see that he presented himself for the purpose of making his exit before the arrival of the time for the train to depart, after it stopped a sufficient length of time to have enabled him to have done this of his own accord with safety. If, as contended in this case, the physical condition of plaintiff rendered it unsafe for him to attempt to alight from the train unassisted, and such was known by the agents and servants in charge of the train, it would have been their duty to have rendered such assistance as his physical necessities required after he had presented himself at the platform and steps for the purpose of alighting. But we have no such case here. The plaintiff neglected to present himself within the time which the law allowed him to do so, and no such assistance could be rendered him, and the only dereliction, if any, that the testimony shows on the part of the carrier, is that its agents and servants failed to go into the coach, and find plaintiff's baggage, and lead him to the steps, and assist him off the train. This they were not required to do. To hold that to a passenger in the physical condition of the plaintiff is due from the carrier such duties would be violating all adjudicated rules upon the subject, both in this state and other jurisdictions, so far as we have been able to discover. As stated, numbers of passengers, including those already on the train, as well as those who boarded the train at Frankfort, testify as to the length of time which the train stopped, and that the train was going from 2 to 3 miles per hour when the plaintiff attempted to alight; that some of the passengers' hollowed out, "Don't let that old man jump off the train!" and the witness Wilson admonished him not to do so, as did the brakeman, and the latter, in order to prevent the plaintiff from being injured, pulled the whistle cord to signal the engineer to stop, which was done within a moment's time, but in the meantime plaintiff had, by his own act, sustained the injuries in the manner hereinbefore stated. The brakeman urged him to wait till the train could be stopped.

We think the evidence clearly shows that this unfortunate accident was the result of the acts of the plaintiff in not making an effort to alight from the train while it was standing, which, as we have seen, was of sufficient length to have amply enabled him to do so, and to have presented himself at the steps so that he could have been rendered what assistance, if any, he needed. If he had been injured while attempting to alight while the train was standing without any extra aid, he might have been entitled to recover under the facts disclosed by the record, but no such conditions are shown to have existed in this case. His failure to make any efforts in this regard, and his attempting to alight after the expiration of the stopping time of the train and while it was moving, were, beyond question, the causes of the accident and of his resulting injuries, and were in no wise produced by any acts of commission or omission on the part of the carrier.

It results, therefore, that the peremptory instruction to find for the defendant should have been given, and, if the facts are substantially the same upon another trial, the motion should prevail.

Judgment reversed, with directions to proceed in accordance with this opinion.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
Respt.,
v.
HANS SCHMIDT, Appt.

(216 N. Y. 324, 110 N. E. 945.)

New trial — newly discovered evidence — perjured confession.

1. Evidence that one who confessed to murder, feigning insanity as a defense, was not guilty but did so to shield persons who performed a criminal operation which caused the victim's death, is not within a statute permitting a new trial if evidence discovered since the trial, not cumulative and the failure to produce which was not

Note. — For knowledge that one's act is contrary to law as affecting defense of insanity, see annotation following this case, post, 527.

L.R.A.1916D.

owing to want of diligence, would, if received, have probably changed the verdict. For other cases, see New Trial, IV. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Criminal law — insanity — absence of knowledge of moral wrong.

2. One acting under the insane delusion that God has appeared to and ordered the commission of a crime by him is, although he knows his act to be contrary to the law of the state, within the exception to the statute providing that a person is not excused from criminal liability as insane except at the time of committing the criminal act he was laboring under such a defect of reason as not to know that the act was wrong.

For other cases, see Criminal Law, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — error in instructions — immateriality.

3. Error in the instructions upon the question of insanity is not ground for reversal of a conviction where accused concedes that his defense of insanity was a fraud.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. m, 4, a (1) in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(November 23, 1915.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of a Trial Term, part I. Criminal Branch, of the Supreme Court for New York County, convicting him of murder in the first degree, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Alphonse G. Koelble, for appellant:

While this court has been loath (and properly so) to exercise this power, still it has never failed to set aside a verdict of murder in the first degree, where it has appeared that injustice had been done to a defendant.

People v. Corey, 157 N. Y. 332, 51 N. E. 1024, 11 Am. Crim. Rep. 487; People v. Driscoll, 107 N. Y. 414, 14 N. E. 305; People v. Lyons, 110 N. Y. 618, 17 N. E. 391; People v. Filippelli, 173 N. Y. 509, 66 N. E. 402; Platt v. Munroe, 34 Barb. 291; Barret v. 3d Ave. R. Co. 45 N. Y. 628; People v. Benham, 30 Misc. 466, 63 N. Y. Supp. 923; People v. Lane, 31 Hun, 13; People v. Hovey, 1 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 324; People v. Shea, 16 Misc. 119, 38 N. Y. Supp. 821; Smith v. Matthews, 21 Misc. 150, 47 N. Y. Supp. 96; Sistare v. Olcott, 22 N. Y. S. R. 564, 5 N. Y. Supp. 114.

The court erred in failing to charge correctly the law as to insanity.

People v. Waltz, 50 How. Pr. 204; Casey v. People, 31 Hun, 158, 2 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 190; Moett v. People, 85 N. Y. 373; People v. Krist, 168 N. Y. 30, 60 N. E. 1057.

Mr. Robert C. Taylor, with Mr. Charles Albert Perkins, for respondent:

The trial judge correctly stated the legal test of responsibility and then defined the word "wrong," as meaning "criminal, contrary to the laws of the state."

People v. Gaimari, 176 N. Y. 84, 68 N. E. 112; Moett v. People, 85 N. Y. 373; People v. Katz, 154 App. Div. 44, 139 N. Y. Supp. 137, affirmed in 209 N. Y. 311, 103 N. E. 305, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 501.

There is no inherent power to grant a new trial.

Quimbo Appo v. People, 20 N. Y. 531; People v. Greenwall, 115 N. Y. 520, 22 N. E. 180; People ex rel. Jerome v. Court of General Sessions, 112 App. Div. 424, 98 N. Y. Supp. 557, affirmed in 185 N. Y. 504, 78 N. E. 149; People v. Hovey, 30 Hun, 354; Boyd v. Boyd, 130 App. Div. 161, 114 N. Y. Supp. 361; Brown v. Newell, 132 App. Div. 548, 116 N. Y. Supp. 965.

Retraction is not newly discovered evidence. L.R.A.1916D.

dence, inasmuch as it merely tends to impeach or to contradict the witness.

People v. Priori, 164 N. Y. 469, 58 N. E. 668; People v. Patrick, 182 N. Y. 131, 74 N. E. 843; People v. Eng Hing, 212 N. Y. 373, 106 N. E. 96; People v. Becker, 215 N. Y. 126, 109 N. E. 127.

The so-called newly discovered evidence is in no sense newly discovered within the meaning of Code Crim. Proc. § 465, subdiv. 7. Defendant knew of it all the time, and wilfully concealed it from his attorneys in order that he might be able to make a defense of shammed insanity.

Quimbo Appo v. People, 20 N. Y. 531; People v. Becker, 91 Misc. 329, 155 N. Y. Supp. 107.

Cardozo, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In September, 1913, the dismembered body of Anna Aumuller was found in the Hudson river. Suspicion pointed to the defendant. He was arrested, and confessed that he had killed the woman by cutting her throat with a knife. He repeated this confession again and again. He attempted, however, to escape the penalty for murder by the plea that he was insane. He told the physicians who examined him that he had heard the voice of God calling upon him to kill the woman as a sacrifice and atonement. He confessed to a life of unspeakable excesses and hideous crimes, broken, he said, by spells of religious ecstasy and exaltation. In one of these moments, believing himself, he tells us, in the visible presence of God, he committed this fearful crime. Two physicians of experience, accepting as true his statement that he was overpowered by this delusion, expressed the opinion that he was insane. Other physicians of experience held the view that his delusion was feigned, and his insanity a sham. The jury accepted this latter view, and by their verdict found him guilty of murder in the first degree.

The defendant was condemned to death in February, 1914. In July, 1914, he made a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. In his affidavit, upon that motion, he tells a most extraordinary tale. He now says that he did not murder Anna Aumuller, and that his confession of guilt was false. He says that she died from a criminal operation, and that to conceal the abortion, to which he and others were parties, he hacked the dead body to pieces, and cast the fragments in the river. His crime, he now says, was not murder, but manslaughter. He tells us why he chose to charge himself with the graver offense. He believed that he could feign insanity successfully, and that after a brief term in an asylum he would again be set at large. To confess to the abortion would implicate his confederates, and bring certain punishment to everyone. To confess to murder, but at the same time feign insanity, might permit everyone to go free. The compact was then made, he says, between himself and his confederates, that he would protect them from suspicion, and play the madman himself. The men and the woman who are said to have been the confederates deny that such a compact was made. Whether they were parties or not to the fraud upon the court is of little moment at this time; in any event, the defendant now tells us that he was sane; that the tale which he told the physicians, the tale of monstrous perversions and delusions, was false; and that he did not hear the Divine voice calling him to sacrifice and to slay. He asks that he be given another opportunity to put before a jury the true narrative of the crime.

There is no power in any court to grant a new trial upon that ground. The statute says that a new trial may be granted "when it is made to appear, by affidavit, that upon another trial the defendant can produce evidence such as, if before received, would probably have changed the verdict; if such evidence has been discovered since the trial, is not cumulative; and the failure to produce it on the trial was not owing to want of diligence." Code Crim. Proc. § 465, subdiv. 7. The power to order a new trial in criminal causes is created and measured by the statute. People ex rel. Jerome v. Court of General Sessions, 112 App. Div. 424, 98 N. Y. Supp. 557; Id., 185 N. Y. 504, 78 N. E. 149; People v. Hovey, 30 Hun, 354; Id., 93 N. Y. 651; Id., 1 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 477, 479; Quimbo Appo v. People, 20 N. Y. 531. The defense now offered by the defendant was not "discovered since the trial." It was known to him, on his own showing, from the beginning. He chose to withhold it, because he had faith in his ability to deceive the courts of justice. We do not attempt to determine how much of his present tale is true. Even if the entire tale is true, the courts are powerless to help him. A criminal may not experiment with one defense, and then, when it fails him, invoke the aid of the law which he has flouted, to experiment with another defense held in reserve for that emergency. It would be strange if any system of law were thus to invite contempt of its authority. The statute withholds that power from us, if we were otherwise disposed to exercise it. Code Crim. Proc. § 465, subdiv. 7. The remedy and the one remedy available to a criminal who finds himself thus enmeshed in a trap of his own making is not in the processes of courts or the machinery of law; it is by appeal to the clemency of the governor. Strange to say, with all its incongruous features, the defendant's tale supplies a plausible explanation of some of the mysteries of this tragedy. We do not mean to express a belief that the tale is true. All that we say is that in an appropriate proceeding it would merit earnest scrutiny. We do not doubt that such scrutiny will be given to it, and that right will be done, if hereafter an appeal for clemency is made to the executive.

The defendant shifts his ground, however, and insists that even though his motion for a new trial was properly denied, we must none the less reverse the judgment for error in the charge. The error is said to have been committed in the definition of the degree of insanity that relieves from responsibility for crime. The rule of our statute is that "A person is not excused from criminal liability as an idiot, imbecile, lunatic, or insane person, except upon proof that, at the time of committing the alleged criminal act, he was laboring under such a defect of reason as: (1) Not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing; or (2) Not to know that the act was wrong." Penal Law, § 1120.

The learned trial judge said to the jury that "wrong" in this definition means "contrary to the law of the state." The jury was instructed in pointed and impressive terms, that even if the defendant believed in good faith that God had appeared to him and commanded the sacrifice of Anna Aumuller, and this belief was a delusion, the result of a defect of reason, the defendant must none the less answer to the law if he knew the nature and quality of the act, and knew that it was wrong, in the sense that it was forbidden by the law of the state. We think that is the fair meaning of the whole charge as the jury must have understood it. For brevity, we quote its substance rather than its exact language. It is true that adopting with a proviso a request of the defendant's counsel, the court did say that "if the jury believe that at the time of the commission of the act, the defendant was completely obsessed by the delusion that he was acting under a Divine command, and that every other thought was excluded from his mind at the time, they must acquit the defendant, provided that the jury are satisfied that at the time he committed that act he was laboring under such a defect of reason as either not to know the nature and quality of the act he was committing, or that it was wrong."

This left the meaning of the word "wrong" still obscure, and the judge had already told the jury that it meant an offense against the law of the state. If, however, the jury could have supposed that he intended to modify his previous instructions, that belief must have been dispelled by the instructions that immediately followed. The counsel for the people said: "The only matter I would ask your Honor to charge again to the jury is based on the last request of the defendant, that the term 'wrong' as used in your Honor's charge means 'wrong according to the law of the state of New York.'" And to this the court responded: "I so charge you, gentlemen." The defendant saved his rights by appropriate exceptions.

We are unable to accept the view that the word "wrong" in the statutory definition is to receive so narrow a construction. We must interpret the rule in the light of its history. That history has been often sketched. In the beginning of our law the madman charged with murder was not acquitted. A special verdict was given that he was mad, and then the King pardoned him. 2 Stephen, History of Crim. Law, p. 151; 2 Pollock & M. History of English Law, p. 478; 3 Holdsworth, History of English Law, 395, 396. There was the same need of the royal pardon for homicide by misadventure or in self-defense. Stephen, supra.

"The man who commits homicide by misadventure or self-defense deserves but needs a pardon." 2 Pollock & M. History of English Law, p. 477.

"If the justices have before them a man who, as a verdict declares, has done a deed of this kind, they do not acquit him, nor can they pardon him, they bid him hope for the King's mercy." Id. p. 477.

Then came the age of what has become known as the "wild beast test." The law of that age and of later days has been adequately stated by Judge Doe in State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 399, 6 Am. Rep. 533, and by Judge Ladd, writing for the same court, in State v. Jones, 50 N. H. 369, 9 Am. Rep. 242.

The defendant was not excused unless he was totally deprived of his reason, understanding, and memory, and did not know what he was doing any more than a wild beast. Arnold's Case, 16 How. St. Tr. 764.

As late as 1800, in Hadfield's Case, 27 How. St. Tr. 1288, that test was announced as law. The first departure from the ancient rule came in 1812. Parker's Case, Collinson, Lunacy, p. 477; Bowler's Case, Id. p. 673; Bellingham's Case, Id. p. 636. The capacity to distinguish right from wrong was then put forward as another test. As propounded in these cases, it meant a capacity to distinguish right from wrong, not with reference to the particular act, but generally or in the abstract. Sometimes it was spoken of as a capacity to distinguish between "good and evil." Bellingham's Case, supra. See also Com. v. Winnemore, 1 Brewst. (Pa.) 356; Re Ball, 2 N. Y. City Hall Rec. 85. Wrong was conceived of as synonymous, not with legal, but rather with moral, wrong. Lord Mansfield told the jury in Bellingham's Case: "It must be proved beyond all doubt that at the time he committed the atrocious act, he did not consider that murder was a crime against the laws of God and nature."

That became for many years the classic definition. It was followed by Lord Lyndhurst in Reg. v. Oxford, 9 Car. & P. 533. Its phraseology, as we shall see, has survived with little variation in charges and opinions of our own day.

Then in 1843 came the famous decision of the House of Lords in M'Naghten's Case, 10 Clark & F. 200. It is idle to look to this decision for precise and scientific statement. The judges passed, not on a concrete case, but on hypothetical questions addressed to them by the lords. Five questions were answered, of which three only are material for present purposes. The second and third questions, which were answered together, were:

"What are the proper questions to be submitted to the jury when a person alleged to be afflicted with insane delusion respecting one or more particular subjects or persons is charged with the commission of a crime (murder, for example), and insanity is set up as a defense?"

And: "In what terms ought the question to be left to the jury as to the prisoner's state of mind at the time when the act was committed?"

To this the judges responded (p. 210): "That the jurors ought to be told in all cases that every man is to be presumed to be sane, and to possess a sufficient degree of reason to be responsible for his crimes, until the contrary be proved to their satisfaction, and that to establish a defense on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that, at the time of the committing of the act, the party accused was laboring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or, if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong. The mode of putting the latter part of the question to the jury on these occasions has generally been, whether the accused at the time of doing the act knew the difference between right and wrong; which mode, though rarely, if ever, leading to any mistake with the jury, is not, as we conceive, so accurate when put generally and in the abstract, as when put with reference to the party's knowledge of right and wrong, in respect to the very act with which he is charged. If the question were to be put as to the knowledge of the accused solely and exclusively with reference to the law of the land, it might tend to confound the jury, by inducing them to believe that an actual knowledge of the law of the land was essential in order to lead to a conviction; whereas the law is administered upon the principle that everyone must be taken conclusively to know it, without proof that he does know it. If the accused was conscious that the act was one which he ought not to do, and if that act was at the same time contrary to the law of the land, he is punishable; and the usual course, therefore, has been to leave the question to the jury, whether the party accused had a sufficient degree of reason to know that he was doing an act that was wrong; and this course we think is correct, accompanied with such observations and explanations as the circumstances of each particular case may require."

The definition here propounded is the one that has been carried forward into our statute. The judges expressly held that a defendant who knew nothing of the law would none the less be responsible if he knew that the act was wrong, by which, therefore, they must have meant, if he knew that it was morally wrong. Whether he would also be responsible if he knew that it was against the law, but did not know it to be morally wrong, is a question that was not considered. In most cases, of course, knowledge that an act is illegal will justify the inference of knowledge that it is wrong. But none the less it is the knowledge of wrong, conceived of as moral wrong, that seems to have been established by that decision as the controlling test. That must certainly have been the test under the older law when the capacity to distinguish between right and wrong imported a capacity to distinguish between good and evil as abstract qualities. There is nothing to justify the belief that the words "right and wrong," when they became limited by M'Naghten's Case to the right and wrong of the particular act, cast off their meaning as terms of morals, and became terms of pure legality.

Another answer in M'Naghten's case, the answer to the first question, is yet to be considered. That question was: "What is the law respecting alleged crimes committed by persons afflicted with insane delusion in respect of one or more particular subjects or persons; as, for instance, where, at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, the accused knew he was acting contrary to law, but did the act complained of with a view, under the influence of insane delusion, of redressing or revenging some supposed grievance or injury, or of producing some supposed public benefit?"

And to this the answer was: "Assuming that your Lordships' inquiries are confined to those persons who labor under such partial delusions only, and are not in other respects insane, we are of opinion that notwithstanding the party accused did the act complained of with a view, under the influence of insane delusion, of redressing or revenging some supposed grievance or injury, or of producing some public benefit, he is nevertheless punishable, according to the nature of the crime committed, if he knew at the time of committing such crime that he was acting contrary to law, by which expression we understand your Lordships to mean the law of the land."

Many judges have pointed out that this answer introduces "an entirely new element." Ladd, J., in State v. Jones, 50 N. H. 369, 9 Am. Rep. 242; Maudsley, Responsibility in Mental Disease, p. 105. "How," it is asked (State v. Jones, supra), "are these two rules to be reconciled? It would seem to be plain that they are in hopeless conflict, and cannot both stand." See also 2 Stephen, History of Crim. Law, pp. 154, 159, 160, 162. It is not the answer to the first question, but the answer to the second and third, that has become embodied in our statute. In case of conflict, therefore, the first answer must give way. But the truth, we think, is that the conflict is more apparent than real. The answer to the first question, though it seems to make the knowledge of the law a test, presupposes the offender's capacity to understand that violation of the law is wrong. It applies only to persons who "are not in other respects insane." We must interpret the answer in the light of the assumptions of the question. A delusion that some supposed grievance or injury will be redressed, or some public benefit attained, has no such effect in obscuring moral distinctions as a delusion that God himself has issued a command. The one delusion is consistent with knowledge that the act is a moral wrong, the other is not.

"The questions are so general in their terms, and the answers follow the words of the questions so closely, that they leave untouched every state of facts which, though included under the general words of the questions, can nevertheless be distinguished from them by circumstances which the House of Lords did not take into account in framing the question." 2 Stephen, History of Crim. Law, p. 154.

The real point of the inquiry was whether a defendant who knew that the act was wrong was excused because he had an insane belief that either personal or public good would be promoted by the deed. There was no thought of any conflict between the commands of law and morals.

We have still another guide to help us to a sound construction of M'Naghten's Case and of the statutory rule derived from it. That guide is found in the practice of judges by whom the decision has been applied. We refer to a few instances among many. In Reg. v. Townley, 3 Fost. & F. 839, Martin, B., left it to the jury to say whether the prisoner knew that the act was "contrary to the law of God and punishable by the law of the land." In Reg. v. Layton, 4 Cox, C. C. 149, Rolfe, B., said that the jury must determine whether the prisoner's delusion "had the effect of making him incapable of understanding the wickedness of murdering his wife." See also Reg. v. Law, 2 Fost. & F. 836. In many cases, both in our own courts and in those of sister states, the language of Lord Mansfield in Bellingham's Case, 27 How. St. Tr. 636, is adopted with trifling changes, and the test is said to be whether the defendant understood that the act was forbidden "by the laws of God and man." People v. Walts, 50 How. Pr. 204, 232; People v. Pine, 2 Barb. 566, 570; Casey v. People, 31 Hun, 158, 161. In Com. v. Rogers, 7 Met. 500, 41 Am. Dec. 458, Shaw, Ch. J., in expounding the rule, assumed for illustration an insane delusion that God had commanded a crime. He told the jury that a defendant, to be responsible, "must have sufficient power of memory to recollect the relation in which he stands to others, and in which others stand to him; that the act he is doing is contrary to the plain dictates of justice and right, injurious to others, and a violation of the dictates of duty;" and then, to explain the delusions that will relieve a man from criminal liability, he said: "A common instance is where he fully believes that the act he is doing is done by the immediate command of God, and he acts under the delusive but sincere belief that what he is doing is by the command of a superior power, which supersedes all human laws and the laws of nature."

In Guiteau's Case (D. C.) 10 Fed. 161, these words were quoted approvingly, and supplemented by other illustrations. The court instanced the case of a man known to be an affectionate father, who "insists that the Almighty has appeared to him and commanded him to sacrifice his child." Of these and like cases, the court said (p. 182): "If a man insanely believes that he has a command from the Almighty to kill, it is difficult to understand how such a man can know that it is wrong for him to do it."

Such a man is no less insane because he knows that murder is prohibited by human law. Indeed, it may emphasize his insanity that, knowing the human law, he believes that he is acting under the direct command of God.

Cases may be found where, in explaining what is meant by knowledge that an act is wrong, the courts have blended the elements of legal and moral wrong, but none, we believe, can be found in which the element of moral wrong has been excluded. Thus, in Willis v. People, 32 N. Y. 715, the trial judge had charged the jury that the defendant must have known that the act was a violation of law, and wrong in itself. There was no question in that case of an insane belief that God had commanded the defendant to override the law. This court held that the charge was sufficiently accurate, but said that it would have been more precise and discriminating to have charged that the defendant must have known that the act was "unlawful and morally wrong." In Moett v. People, 85 N. Y. 373, the decision was that where the trial judge had laid down the test of criminal responsibility in the language of the statute, it was not error to refuse to amplify the charge by expounding to the jury the meaning of the word "wrong." That decision would be applicable here if the trial judge had limited himself to the statutory definition. The difficulty is that he went beyond the definition, and undertook of his own motion to explain what is meant by knowledge that an act is wrong. A remark of this court in the Moett Case is quoted by the people as sustaining the charge, but we think it fails of that effect. The remark which they quote is this: "When it is said that a prisoner must, at the time of the alleged criminal act, have sufficient capacity to distinguish between right and wrong with respect to such act, it is implied that he must have sufficient capacity to know whether such act is in violation of the law of God, or of the land, or of both." p. 380.

But no question of any conflict in the mind of the prisoner between the law of God and man was involved in that case; and nothing that was said can be deemed to have adjudged the rule of liability, where, because of an insane delusion, such a conflict has arisen. To the reported cases in which the word "wrong" in the statutory definition has been used as importing a moral wrong, there may be added a multitude of unreported cases. As an illustration we may refer to a case recently decided by this court. People v. Purcell, 214 N. Y. 693, 109 N. E. 1087. There the trial judge

(Nott, J.) in a careful and able charge told the jury that knowledge of the nature and quality of the act has reference to its physical nature and quality, and that knowledge that it is wrong refers to its moral side; that to know that the act is wrong, the defendant must know that it is "contrary to law, and contrary to the accepted standards of morality," and then he added, with a slight variation of the words of Lord Mansfield, that it must be known to be "contrary to the laws of God and man."

In the light of all these precedents, it is impossible, we think, to say that there is any decisive adjudication which limits the word "wrong" in the statutory definition to legal as opposed to moral wrong. The trend of the decisions is indeed the other way. The utmost that can be said is that the question is still an open one. We must, therefore, give that construction to the statute which seems to us most consonant with reason and justice. The definition of insanity established by the statute as sufficient to relieve from criminal liability has been often and harshly criticised. See, e. g., State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 399, 6 Am. Rep. 539; State v. Jones, 50 N. H. 369, 9 Am. Rep. 242; Parsons v. State, 81 Ala. 577, 60 Am. Rep. 193, 2 So. 854, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 266. Some states reject it altogether. Parsons v. State, supra, and cases there cited. A recent case in Massachusetts (Com. v. Cooper, 219 Mass. 1, 5, 106 N. E. 545) says that an offender is not responsible if he was "so mentally diseased that he felt impelled to act by a power which overcame his reason and judgment, and which to him was irresistible." That is not the test with us. Flanagan v. People, 52 N. Y. 467, 11 Am. Rep. 731; People v. Taylor, 138 N. Y. 398, 34 N. E. 275; Penal Law, § 34. Whatever the views of alienists and jurists may be, the test in this state is prescribed by statute, and there can be no other. People v. Silverman, 181 N. Y. 235, 240, 73 N. E. 980. We must not, however, exaggerate the rigor of the rule by giving the word "wrong" a strained interpretation, at war with its broad and primary meaning, and least of all, if in so doing we rob the rule of all relation to the mental health and true capacity of the criminal. The interpretation placed upon the statute by the trial judge may be tested by its consequences. A mother kills her infant child to whom she has been devotedly attached. She knows the nature and quality of the act; she knows that the law condemns it; but she is inspired by an insane delusion that God has appeared to her and ordained the sacrifice. It seems a mockery to say that, within the meaning of the statute, she knows that the act is wrong. If the definition propounded by the trial judge is right, it would be the duty of a jury to hold her responsible for the crime. We find nothing either in the history of the rule, or in its reason and purpose, or in judicial exposition of its meaning, to justify a conclusion so abhorrent. No jury would be likely to find a defendant responsible in such a case, whatever a judge might tell them. But we cannot bring ourselves to believe that in declining to yield to such a construction of the statute, they would violate the law.

We hold, therefore, that there are times and circumstances in which the word "wrong" as used in the statutory test of responsibility ought not to be limited to legal wrong. A great master of the theory and practice of the criminal law, Sir James Fitz-James Stephen, in his General View of the Criminal Law of England (pages 79, 80), casts the weight of his learning and experience in favor of that view. See also 2 Stephen, History of Crim. Law, p. 168. Knowledge that an act is forbidden by law will in most cases permit the inference of knowledge that, according to the accepted standards of mankind, it is also condemned as an offense against good morals. Obedience to the law is itself a moral duty. If, however, there is an insane delusion that God has appeared to the defendant and ordained the commission of a crime, we think it cannot be said of the offender that he knows the act to be wrong.

It is not enough, to relieve from criminal liability, that the prisoner is morally depraved. Wharton, Crim. Law, 11th ed. § 63. It is not enough that he has views of right and wrong at variance with those that find expression in the law. The variance must have its origin in some disease of the mind. People v. Carlin, 194 N. Y. 448, 455, 87 N. E. 805. The anarchist is not at liberty to break the law because he reasons that all government is wrong. The devotee of a religious cult that enjoins polygamy or human sacrifice as a duty is not thereby relieved from responsibility before the law. Guiteau's Case (D. C.) 10 Fed. 161, 175, 177; Parsons v. State, 81 Ala. 577 at 594, 60 Am. Rep. 193, 2 So. 854, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 266; Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. ed. 244; People ex rel. Hegeman v. Corrigan, 195 N. Y. 1, 13, 87 N. E. 792. In such cases the belief, however false according to our own standards, is not the product of disease. Cases will doubtless arise where criminals will take shelter behind a professed belief that their crime was ordained by God, just as this defendant attempted to shelter himself behind that belief. We can safely leave such fabrications to the common sense of juries.

We have considered the charge of the trial judge upon the subject of insanity, because the question is in the case, and the true rule on a subject so important ought not to be left in doubt. But, even though we hold that there was error in the charge, we think the error does not require us to disturb the judgment of conviction. It is of no importance now whether the trial judge charged the jury correctly upon the question of insanity, because in the record before us the defendant himself concedes that he is sane, and that everything which he said to the contrary was a fraud upon the court. It is of no importance now whether the defendant would be relieved of guilt if his diseased mind had revealed the Divine presence to his eyes and the Divine command to his ears, because he tells us that he never saw the vision and never heard the command. He concedes, therefore, that the issue of his sanity was correctly determined by the jury; he concedes that even if there was error in the definition of insanity no injustice has resulted; and his position is that, having fabricated a defense of insanity in order to deceive the trial court, it is now the duty of another court to give him a new trial because his fabricated defense was imperfectly expounded.

The law does not force its ministers of justice to abet a criminal project to set the law at naught. This court is a court of review, and cannot, of course, go beyond the record, but the confession that the defense of insanity was fabricated is part of the record (People v. Priori, 163 N. Y. 99, 57 N. E. 85), and the defendant himself has invited us to consider it as a basis for our judicial action. The principle is fundamental that no man shall be permitted to profit by his own wrong. It enters, by implication, into all contracts and all laws. Riggs v. Palmer, 115 N. Y. 506, 5 L.R.A. 340, 12 Am. St. Rep. 819, 22 N. E. 188. We cannot ignore it in the application of a statute which commands us to do justice without reference to technical defects. Code Crim. Proc. § 542. We cannot listen to a claim of error which is conceded to have no relation to anything except a fraudulent defense. The refusal to give ear to such a claim does not need the sanction of express statute. The power is implied in the very function of courts of justice.

We hold, therefore, that the defendant has forfeited the right to avail himself of the error in the charge. There is nothing to show that he is mentally incompetent to conduct the appeal, to advise with counsel, or to understand the meaning and the consequences of his own affidavit. If that is his state of mind, if the confession is only another manifestation of disease, the law provides a remedy. People v. Skwirsky, 213 N. Y. 151, 107 N. E. 47. The court would then refuse to hear the appeal at all until the defendant regained his sanity. Such a state, if it exists, must be proved; it is not to be presumed. The defendant's counsel has no misgivings on the subject. On the contrary, he expressly conceded the defendant's sanity both in his printed brief and in his oral argument. In such a situation we must take the defendant at his word. It is argued that we ought not to accept his statement that his defense of insanity was a sham, and reject his statement in the same affidavit that the victim died from a criminal operation. But that is not an accurate description of our attitude. We neither accept nor reject the defendant's present statement of his participation in the crime. We merely say that if it is true, it does not make out a case of newly discovered evidence. We find the statement coupled with a confession that the defense of insanity was a fraud upon the court, and we hold that while that confession remains before us, the defendant who made it, who still adheres to it, and who must be presumed to have sufficient mind to be responsible for it, will not be suffered by a court of justice to take advantage of his wrong.

In thus holding we do not overlook the rule that "a conviction shall not be had upon a plea of guilty where the crime charged is or may be punishable by death." Code Crim. Proc. § 332. The defendant's counsel invokes the protection of that statute, but we think it has no application to the case before us. The defendant has not been convicted upon a plea of guilty. He has been tried before a duly organized court (Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128); and even though there may have been error, there has been no denial in any fundamental sense of due process of law. After conviction upon such a trial, we think that the requirements of that statute have been satisfied. The defendant was not compelled by law to appeal at all; and as he had the right, at his pleasure, to forego the privilege of an appeal, so also he had the right to limit the scope and effect of his appeal. In jurisdictions where the statute is silent, a plea of guilty is allowable though the punishment is death. Re Opinion of Justices, 9 Allen, 585; Green v. Com. 12 Allen, 155. Even where the law forbids such a plea, there are many rights which a defendant may still renounce upon his trial. Pierson v. People, 79 N. Y. 424, 429, 35 Am. Rep. 524; People v. Guidici, 100 N. Y. 503, 508, 3 N. E. 493, 5 Am. Crim. Rep. 455. If he may renounce them upon the trial, he may renounce them upon appeal. We cannot extend the statute to the situation now before us, and we will not aid the defendant in his effort to gain the benefit of a fraudulent defense.

The judgment of conviction should be affirmed.

Hiscock, Chase, Cuddeback, Hogan, and Pound, JJ., concur. Willard Bartlett, Ch. J., concurs in result.

An ex parte motion for reargument having been made, the following Per Curiam response was handed down on January 7, 1916 (216 N. Y. 762, 111 N. E. 1095):

This motion is irregular, since such an application requires notice to the district attorney, and we have no evidence that the prescribed notice has been given (rule XX. of rules of the court of appeals). Notwithstanding this irregularity, in view of the fact that the execution of the judgment is fixed for the week beginning next Monday, we have looked carefully into the merits and find nothing which would justify us in granting a reargument. In affirming the judgment, this court held that the defendant was not harmed by an error relating to a defense which he alleged and admitted under oath to be fraudulent and a sham. His counsel now insists that by so holding we deprived him of rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. We can perceive no basis for this assertion. The request of counsel for a certificate that a Federal question was involved in the appeal cannot be complied with, for it is not the fact. The motion for a reargument must be denied.

All concur.

Annotation—Knowledge that one's act is contrary to law as affecting defense of insanity.

Many other phases of the subject of criminal responsibility as affected by mental condition are treated in notes cited in Index to L.R.A. Notes under the title "Criminal law, mental condition as affecting criminal responsibility."

While there are numerous cases in which the courts, in defining the legal test of insanity, loosely include expressions indicating that knowledge on the part of the accused that the act charged is in violation of the law of the land is a part of the test, there are but few cases like PEOPLE v. SCHMIDT, ante, 519, in which the court actually discusses the propriety of including it.

In Kearney v. State (1890) 68 Miss. 233, 8 So. 292, an instruction that the defendant was responsible for his act if the jury believed at the time of the killing that "the mind of the defendant was capable of knowing that if he shot the deceased, not in his own self-defense, he was committing an offense against the law of the land, and it will not matter what the jury believe was the moral conception of the defendant of the act at the time," was held to be such a departure from the right and wrong test as to be reversible error, the court saying: "It will not avail to contend that one who has sufficient capacity to know that he is violating a human law must also know that the act also violates a Divine or moral law."

In Harrison v. State (1902) 44 Tex. Crim. Rep. 164, 69 S. W. 500, a prosecution for bigamy, it was held that the fact that defendant acted under a belief that he had a direct revelation from God that his first marriage was wrong, and that he would do no wrong by getting married again without a divorce, would not excuse him from responsibility, where he knew that his act was in violation of the law of the state.

The converse question was presented in Bell v. State (1915) — Ark. —, 180 S. W. 186, where counsel for defendant contended that instructions given to the jury were wrong because they did not tell the jury that the defendant should be acquitted if the preponderance of evidence showed that, at the time of the killing, he did not know that the act of killing was a violation of law. The court said that the counsel "are mistaken in their contention that mental incapacity to know that one's acts are in violation of the law shall also be included in the alternative as one of the tests of insanity. It is true that this is frequently loosely stated in the conjunctive with the right and wrong test, but it is not recognized separately as one of the tests of insanity."

The following cases are cited, without attempting to make the list exhaustive, as illustrative of the class of cases mentioned above in which the courts, apparently without carefully considering the matter, have included expressions which would seem to indicate that lack of knowledge that the act is contrary to law is properly a part of the test of insanity:—against the laws of God and his country (McAllister v. State (1850) 17 Ala. 434, 52 Am. Dec. 180; Boswell v.

State (1879) 63 Ala. 307, 35 Am. Rep. 20); against the laws of God and man (Blackburn v. State (1872) 23 Ohio St. 146); that the act is wrong and unlawful (State v. Branton (1899) 33 Or. 533, 56 Pac. 267); wrong and criminal (Com. v. De Marzo (1909) 223 Pa. 573, 72 Atl. 893; Bond v. State (1914) 129 Tenn. 75, 165 S. W. 229); to distinguish moral or legal right from moral or legal wrong, to recognize the particular act charged as morally or legally wrong (State v. Jackson (1910) 87 S. C. 407, 69 S. E. 883); that the act was wrong, was prohibited by the laws of the land, and would entail punishment (People v. Oxnam (1915) — Cal. —, 149 Pac. 165); that the act was wrong and criminal, and would subject him to punishment (People v. Willard (1907) 150 Cal. 543, 89 Pac. 124; Com. v. Rogers (1844) 7 Met. (Mass.) 500, 41 Am. Dec. 458; Bovard v. State (1856) 30 Miss. 600; State v. Summons (1852) 1 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 416, 9 West. L. J. 407; Com. v. Lewis (1908) 222 Pa. 302, 71 Atl. 18; Sayres v. Com. (1879) 88 Pa. 291; United States v. Holmes (1858) 1 Cliff. 98, Fed. Cas. No. 15,382); that he will be subject to punishment (People v. Klein (1845) 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. (N. Y.) 13; Oborn v. State (1910) 143 Wis. 249, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 966, 126 N. W. 737).

R. L. S.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

JOHN EATON, Appt.,
v.

ED DELAY et al., Respts.

(32 N. D. 328, 155 N. W. 644.)

Bills and notes — alteration — negotiable instruments law.

1. Under the negotiable instruments law in force in this state, any change or addition which changes the date; the sum payable, either for principal or interest; the time or place of payment; the number or the relations of the parties; the medium or currency in which payment is to be made; adds a place of payment where no place of payment is specified; or alters the effect of the instrument in any respect,—is a "material alteration."

For other cases, see Alteration of Instruments, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — memorandum on margin.

2. A promissory note is not materially altered where the holder, at or after the maturity thereof, writes on its margin the words, "May 1st, 1913," as a reference memorandum of a promise made by him to the principal maker, at the time the words were written, to extend the time of payment from December 1, 1912, to May 1, 1913.

For other cases, see Alteration of Instruments, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 22, 1915.)

Headnotes by CHRISTIANSON, J.

Note. — As to whether memorandum on negotiable instrument constitutes an alteration, see annotation following this case, post, 533.

Other questions in relation to alteration of instruments may be found by consulting the Index to L.R.A. Notes, under the title, "Alteration of Instruments."
L.R.A.1916D.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Ramsey County, granting defendants' motion for judgment notwithstanding a verdict for plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. R. Goer and J. B. Wineman, for appellant:

Accommodation makers are primarily liable.

Wolstenholme v. Smith, 34 Utah, 300, 97 Pac. 329; Northern State Bank v. Bellamy, 19 N. D. 509, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 149, 125 N. W. 888; Dow v. Lillie, 26 N. D. 512, L.R.A. 1915D, 754, 144 N. W. 1082; Richards v. Market Exch. Bank Co. 81 Ohio St. 348, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 99, 90 N. E. 1000; Union Trust Co. v. McGinty, 212 Mass. 205, 98 N. E. 679, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 525; Vanderford v. Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank, 105 Md. 164, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 129, 66 Atl. 47; National Citizens' Bank v. Toplitz, 81 App. Div. 593, 81 N. Y. Supp. 422, affirmed in 178 N. Y. 464, 71 N. E. 1; Cellers v. Meachem (Sellers v. Lyons) 49 Or. 186, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 133, 89 Pac. 426, 13 Ann. Cas. 997; Murphy v. Panter, 62 Or. 522, 125 Pac. 292; Bradley Engineering & Mfg. Co. v. Heyburn, 56 Wash. 628, 134 Am. St. Rep. 1127, 106 Pac. 170; Hunter v. Harris, 63 Or. 505, 127 Pac. 786; Fritts v. Kirchdorfer, 136 Ky. 643, 124 S. W. 832; Rouse v. Wooten, 140 N. C. 557, 111 Am. St. Rep. 875, 53 S. E. 430, 6 Ann. Cas. 280; Lumberman's Nat. Bank v. Campbell, 61 Or. 123, 121 Pac. 427.

The indorsement of a mere memorandum on a note is not a material alteration of the instrument.

Richards v. Market Exch. Bank Co. 81 Ohio St. 348, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 99, 90 N. E. 1000; 2 Cyc. 142; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, ants Jones and Dunn answered, asserting as a defense that they executed the note only as sureties for the accommodation of the defendant Delay, and in no other capacity; that the note was never presented to them for payment, and that on the day the note became due the plaintiff accepted a payment from the defendant Delay in the sum of $375, and agreed with said Delay to extend the balance due on said note until May 1, 1913; that shortly thereafter the defendant Delay paid the further sum of $45 in consideration of such extension, and that on or about May 1, 1913, the time of payment was again extended until September 1, 1913; that all of such extensions were granted without the knowledge or consent of the answering defendants. The cause came on for trial upon such pleadings. At the close of the testimony defendants' counsel moved for a directed verdict. The motion was denied, and after the denial of such motion defendants' counsel asked leave to amend the answer by inserting therein the defense that the note was materially altered by changing the time of payment thereof. This motion was granted. No further evidence was offered, nor was the motion for a directed verdict renewed after the answer was amended.

Digitized by Google

The court submitted the issues framed by the pleadings to the jury, and the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the full amount claimed by him. Subsequently defendants moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. This motion was granted, and this appeal is from the judgment thereafter entered in favor of the defendants Jones and Dunn.

Defendants' counsel no longer relies upon the defense interposed in the original answer, but concedes that under the decision of this court in First Nat. Bank v. Meyer, 30 N. D. 388, 152 N. W. 657, the defendants Jones and Dunn were primarily liable, and hence were not discharged by an extension of time of payment. The only defense relied upon by defendants' counsel on this appeal is the one presented by the amendment, viz., that the note was materially altered by plaintiff's inserting in the margin thereof the words "May 1st 1913;" and that such alteration avoided the note as against the defendants Jones and Dunn, under the provisions of § 7009, Compiled Laws 1913.

A "material alteration," under the negotiable instruments law, is: "Any alteration which changes: (1) The date. (2) The sum payable, either for principal or interest. (3) The time or place of payment. (4) The number or the relations of the parties. (5) The medium or currency in which payment is to be made. Or which adds a place of payment where no place of payment is L.R.A.1916D.

specified, or any other change or addition which alters the effect of the instrument in any respect." Comp. Laws 1913, § 7010.

No objection was made to the introduction of the note in evidence on the ground of alteration, or that it constituted a contract different from that signed by the defendants, or upon any other grounds. Defendants' answer alleges that the agreement to extend payment of the note was made on the day it fell due, but the evidence shows that the interest payment was not received or indorsed on the note until three days after the note matured. There is no contention either in the pleadings or in the proof that the extension was made or the notation written in the margin of the note until after it became due.

The space wherein the notation was made constituted no part of the note. It was separated from the body of the note, in a manner, and the printed portions thereof were such as to indicate clearly that this space was to be utilized by the holder of the note for memoranda for his convenience and guidance. It is true that courts have held that under certain circumstances memoranda made on the back or in the margin of a note may constitute a part of the contract. But we are aware of no authority holding a notation of the character, and made under the circumstances, involved in the case at bar, to be a part of the contract, or the addition or erasure thereof to constitute a material alteration.

In Bay v. Shrader, 50 Miss. 326, the court said: "The test of the materiality of such memoranda or indorsement on the back of the instrument is the time and the intent and purpose of it. If made before or at the time of the execution of the instrument, it may be parcel of it, and may control the obligation in some important particular. . . . If such memoranda are at the foot or on the back of the note or other instrument, when executed, they constitute a part of the contract. But being disconnected from the body of the instrument to which the maker's name is signed, it forms no original part of it, until shown to have been upon it when executed."

And in Theopold v. Deike, 76 Minn. 121, 77 Am. St. Rep. 607, 78 N. W. 977, the supreme court of Minnesota, speaking through the distinguished jurist Judge Mitchell, said: "To constitute a mutilation of a note or other contract which will avoid it, there must be some change of alteration in the writing constituting the evidence of the contract so as to make it another and different instrument, and no longer evidence of the contract which the parties made. The ground upon which the doctrine rests is that such an alteration avoids the instrument; that it destroys the identity of the contract. A memorandum of a payment indorsed by the holder on the back of a promissory note is no part of the contract of the parties. The original note, which constituted the evidence of their contract, remains intact. The memorandum of payment is merely evidence against the holder of the fact of the payment, and is of no more effect than if made on a separate piece of paper. Cambridge Sav. Bank v. Hyde, 131 Mass. 77, 41 Am. Rep. 193. Writing on the back of an instrument may be such as to form a part of the contract itself, and in such a case an alteration of the indorsement would constitute an alteration of the written evidence of the contract of the parties; but a memorandum of a partial payment indorsed by the holder on the back of a promissory note is not of this character. It is neither a contract nor any part of a contract, but a mere acknowledgment, in the nature of a receipt of payment, which is open to contradiction or explanation by parol."

The reasoning of the supreme courts of Mississippi and Minnesota in the two cases above cited is entirely applicable to the case at bar. The notation in the margin of the note was made after it became due. The contract evidenced by the note signed by the defendants remained unchanged. The contractual effect of the note, and the rights and liabilities of the makers thereof, were in no manner affected. The contract remained exactly the same as it was at the time of its execution and delivery. The notation in the margin did not become a part of the contract, or affect the defendants in any particular. The only party affected was the holder of the note. As an indorsement of payment on a note is evidence against the holder, tending to show such payment, so the notation in the margin in the case at bar, in case of dispute, would have been some evidence (as an admission against his interest) against the holder of the note, tending to establish an agreement for extension, but it would not of itself have been evidence against or established any such agreement against the makers. The notation in the margin does not purport to be a part of the contract signed by the defendants. It clearly shows that it was merely a memorandum for the convenience and guidance of the holder of the note, and had reference to some understanding outside, and subsequent to the delivery, of the note. "A promissory note is not materially altered by writing thereon a memorandum which is purely collateral to, and independent of, the promise or contract which it contains. And the placing of a mere reference memorandum on a promissory note will not constitute a material alteration of the instrument." 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 227, 228.

See also Carr v. Welch, 46 Ill. 88; Merritt v. Boyden, 191 Ill. 136, 85 Am. St. Rep. 246, 60 N. E. 907; Howe v. Thompson, 11 Me. 152; Bay v. Shrader, 50 Miss. 326; Krouskop v. Shontz, 51 Wis. 204, 37 Am. Rep. 817, 8 N. W. 241; Cambridge Sav. Bank v. Hyde, 131 Mass. 77, 41 Am. Rep. 193; Horton v. Horton, 71 Iowa, 448, 32 N. W. 452; Johnston Harvester Co. v. McLean, 57 Wis. 258, 46 Am. Rep. 39, 15 N. W. 177; Fisk v. McNeal, 23 Neb. 726, 8 Am. St. Rep. 162, 37 N. W. 616; Maness v. Henry, 96 Ala. 454, 11 So. 410; Richards v. Market Exch. Bank Co. 81 Ohio St. 348, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 99, 90 N. E. 1000; State Solicitors' Co. v. Savage, 39 Fla. 703, 23 So. 413; Moore v. Macon Sav. Bank, 22 Mo. App. 684; Bachelor v. Priest, 12 Pick. 399; American Nat. Bank v. Bangs, 42 Mo. 450, 97 Am. Dec. 349; Morrill v. Otis, 12 N. H. 466; Mente v. Townsend, 68 Ark. 391, 59 S. W. 41; 1 Enc. Ev. 787; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 227; 2 Cyc. 210; 2 C. J. 1212, 1213.

While not material to a determination of this action, it may be observed, in passing, that the cause was submitted to the jury on the theory that the answering defendants were secondarily liable, and that hence any extension of the time of payment by the holder would relieve them from liability, provided such agreement of extension was supported by a consideration. The court submitted to the jury the question of whether there was any consideration for the extension, and the jury found that there was no consideration therefor.

Defendants' counsel places great reliance upon the decision of the Minnesota supreme court in the case of Flanigan v. Phelps, 42 Minn. 186, 43 N. W. 1113, which, it is asserted, is direct authority in support of their contention that the note involved in this case was materially altered. An examination of that decision shows that it is not susceptible of the construction for which defendants' counsel contends. In that case the contract itself was altered by the insertion of the following stipulation in the body of the note, above the signatures of the makers: "Privilege of extension for 30 days after maturity given." It seems too clear for argument that the decision in that case can have absolutely no bearing upon the question presented in the case at bar.

In that case the contract itself was changed by the insertion of a stipulation over the signatures of the contracting parties whereby the time of payment was extended conditionally for thirty days.

The defendants also rely upon the decision of the supreme court of Washington in the case of Washington Finance Corp. v. Glass, 74 Wash. 653, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1043, 134 Pac. 480. In that case the contract itself was changed, in this: that the accommodation makers signed a note for $15,000, with the understanding that a loan for this amount was to be made by the payee named in the note, to the principal maker. After the execution by the accommodation makers, but before delivery, the contract was changed and the loan reduced to $11,000. And in order to effect this change, an indorsement was made on the note of a fictitious payment of $4,000, thereby in effect changing the note from a note for $15,000 to a note for $11,000. In discussing the effect of the indorsement, the court said: "Whether an indorsement, made in good faith after the instrument has been given currency, would be a material alteration, we are not called upon to decide. We are quite clear, however, that the indorsement of a fictitious payment as a condition precedent to the acceptance, negotiation, discount, or delivery of a note to the original payee or lender of the money changes 'the effect of the instrument,' as well as the sum payable, and is an act proscribed by the statute."

It is unnecessary for us to enter into any further discussion of the Washington decision, or express any opinion as to the soundness of the conclusions there reached. But it is obvious that that decision can have no application to the facts in the case at bar. In that case the effect of the contract itself was changed by the indorsement on the note prior to its delivery. In that case the terms and legal effect of the contract were changed after it was signed by the accommodation makers. The memorandum or indorsement on the contract was made for the express purpose of changing the legal effect of the contract as signed. The note which the holder sought to enforce against the accommodation makers was in effect a note for $11,000; the note they signed was a note for $15,000. The note had no contractual effect until delivered. The contract signed by the accommodation makers was changed in amount before it was delivered. That is not the condition here. In the case at bar, it is conceded that the notation was made after the note had become due, and then only as a memorandum of plaintiff's gratuitous promise to the defendant Delay to extend the time of payment of the note until May 1, 1913.

Respondents also cite and rely on Woodworth v. Bank of America, 19 Johns. 391, 10 Am. Dec. 239, as an authority in point. That case involved the liability of an indorser. No place of payment was mentioned in the note, and the material alteration found consisted of the following words, written in the margin of the note: "Payable at the Bank of America." That case, under the then-existing practice in New York, was decided by the state senate. The majority opinion was written by Senator Skinner and concurred in by seventeen other senators. An extended minority opinion was prepared by that great jurist, Chancellor Kent, and concurred in by nine senators. In the minority opinion, Chancellor Kent said: "To conclude, then, I think that the following propositions are well founded: . . . That such a memorandum, made out of the body of the note, and being a mere intimation of the place of payment, was no part of the contract; but it was sufficient to justify the holder to call at such a place for payment, and, being refused, he had a right to look to the indorser. This is a clear, settled rule in England, and it has been repeatedly recognized in this country, and in this state."

No good purpose would be served by any further discussion of the various authorities bearing on this question. We are agreed that the notation made in the margin of the note in the case at bar formed no part of the note, and in no manner altered it, but was a mere memorandum.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the trial court is directed to vacate the same and reinstate the judgment entered on the verdict.

A petition for rehearing having been filed, Christianson, J., handed down the following additional opinion:

Respondents have filed a petition for rehearing herein. A consideration of such petition and the authorities therein cited only more fully confirms our belief in the correctness of our former opinion upon the merits of the appeal, and we are therefore entirely agreed that the petition for rehearing should be denied.

But in the former opinion certain questions of practice were discussed, and in their petition for rehearing defendants' counsel request that, even though a rehearing be denied, the former opinion be modified by eliminating therefrom that portion relating to such questions of practice. While we have no reason to doubt the correctness of our views upon such questions of practice as expressed in the former opinion, still, in view of the fact that consideration thereof is not necessary to a determination of the merits of this appeal, we have decided to grant the request of defendants' attorneys. The former opinion has therefore been modified and the portion relating to such practice questions eliminated therefrom.

In order to avoid any misunderstanding, it may be stated that the original opinion has not been reported, and the foregoing opinion constitutes the decision of this court in this case.

Annotation—Making memorandum on negotiable instrument as an alteration.

The question whether a writing which amounts to an alteration is material or immaterial is beyond the scope of this note, which, as indicated in the title, is confined to a discussion of whether the making of a memorandum upon a negotiable instrument amount to an alteration thereof.<sup>1</sup> It is assumed that the memorandum is made after the instrument has been delivered.

The decision in EATON v. DELAY, ante, 528, is in accord with the general rule as to memoranda on negotiable instruments; that is, a writing which is manifestly a mere memorandum, not incorporated into the body of the instrument, nor intended to modify it, does not amount to an alteration.<sup>2</sup> Thus, memoranda as to interest after due,<sup>3</sup> the residence of parties to the instrument,<sup>4</sup> place where pay-

<sup>1</sup> As to the effect of detachment of paper attached to a bill or note, and modifying the terms thereof, upon the rights of subsequent bona fide purchaser, see note to Bothell v. Schweitzer, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 263.

As to the indorsement of payment on a bill or note as a material alteration, see note to Washington Finance Corp. v. Glass, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1043.

As to alteration of date of note, see note to Lombardo v. Lombardini, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 515, and that to Barton Sav. Bank & T. Co. v. Stephenson, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 346.

<sup>2</sup> A memorandum made on a bill to the effect that it is "left with Mr. B. as collateral" is not an alteration. "It was a memorandum of a collateral agreement," says the court, "between the maker and the indorsee, which did no more affect the liability of the parties to the note than it would have done had it been made on a separate paper." Bachelor v. Priest (1832) 12 Pick. (Mass.) 399.

Words added at the foot of a note, below the signature of the maker, were held in Culver v. Yocum (1887) 9 Ky. L. Rep. 148, to be nothing more than memoranda, and not to affect the liability of the maker. The words that were added do not appear in the abstract of this case.

In Smith v. Smith (1849) 1 R. I. 398, 53 Am. Dec. 652, the figures, "$175.94," upon the margin of a bill stated in the body thereof in words to be for $375.94 were changed by the clerk of the bank discounting the bill, so as to agree with the body of the bill. This is stated to be a mere marginal notation, not constituting any part of the bill, but simply a memorandum or abridgment of the contents of the bill for convenience of reference. It was held that the contract could not be altered by these marginal figures. L.R.A.1916D.

A written indorsement upon the margin of a promissory note payable upon condition, of the performance of the condition, is not a material alteration of the note. Jackson v. Boyles (1884) 64 Iowa, 428, 20 N. W. 746.

<sup>3</sup> An unexplained memorandum on a note, below and apart from the signatures, to the effect that "when due to draw 15 per cent," does not affect the note. Knoles v. Hill (1861) 25 Ill. 288.

The words "ten per cent after due," written in red ink on the face of a note in black ink, apart from the body of the instrument, the first two words being on one line and the last two on the line below, at the right-hand lower corner of the note, do not constitute a material alteration, but are a mere memorandum for the guidance of the holder of the note, very probably having reference to some verbal understanding between himself and the maker. Carr v. Welch (1867) 46 Ill. 88. No evidence was offered on either side in regard to these words.

<sup>4</sup> The noting of the residence of drawers and indorsers of a bill, after their names does not affect the identity of the bill, nor avoid it as to any of the parties to it. It is in the nature of a memorandum for the notary, that he may know how to address notices of protest. It does not vary the tenor of the bill, nor add to the responsibility of indorsers. Struthers v. Kendall (1861) 41 Pa. 214, 80 Am. Dec. 610.

The insertion in the left-hand corner of a mortgage note, in a blank space attending the words "postoffice address," of the name of one of the successive purchasers of the property covered by the mortgage, by way of a memorandum, does not amount to an alteration of the note. Schafer v. Jackson (1912) 155 Iowa, 108, 135 N. W. 622.

able,<sup>5</sup> and purpose for which given,<sup>6</sup> have all been held immaterial.

The fact that it is in a different colored ink than that with which the note is written is a circumstance which, in the absence of explanatory evidence, tends to show that it is a mere memorandum, which does not amount to an alteration.<sup>7</sup>

Writings on the back of notes, which are mere memoranda, do not amount to an alteration.<sup>8</sup> Thus, memoranda as to the residence of parties<sup>9</sup> to the instrument, or residence and capacity in which a party is charged,<sup>10</sup> as to interest<sup>11</sup> and <sup>5</sup> The words, "at Goodyear Bros. & Durrant's, New York, Jan. 10-13," placed at the foot of a note, to the left of the signature, without the knowledge or consent of the makers, was held, in American Nat. Bank v. Bangs (1868) 42 Mo. 450, 97 Am. Dec. 349, to be a mere memorandum, and therefore immaterial.

An alteration by the acceptor of a bill of exchange which he had originally accepted, payable at his own house, by making the bill payable at another place, is held to be a mere memorandum, not affecting the acceptor's liability in an action against him, in Walter v. Cubley (1833) 2 Crompt. & M. (Eng.) 151, 4 Tyrw. 87, 3 L. J. Exch. N. S. 2; and the writing on a bill of exchange of, "When due at the Crosskeys Blackfriars Road," is held, in Trapp v. Spearman (1800) 3 Esp. (Eng.) 57, to be an alteration in an immaterial part of the bill, and therefore not to invalidate it.

The memorandum at the bottom of a note, "Payable at the domicile of B.," was held not to prevent the introduction of the note in evidence, in Nugent v. Delhomme (1812) 2 Mart. (La.) 307.

See Woodworth v. Bank of America, infra, note 23.

<sup>6</sup> The addition below the body of a note given by the president of a corporation for a corporate debt, of the words, "Given on account of International M. & D. Co.," is held to be immaterial memoranda or notations, not amounting to a material alteration. Pitt v. Little (1910) 58 Wash. 355, 108 Pac. 941.

The words, "receipt No. 124," written at the end of the note, the purport of which was that the receipt was a security for the payment of the money for which the note was executed, were held not material, in First Nat. Bank v. Wolff (1889) 79 Cal. 69, 21 Pac. 551, 748.

In Maness v. Henry (1892) 96 Ala. 454, 11 So. 410, the words, "On D. H. Shield's debt," written in pencil on the margin of the face of a note, were held not to render it inadmissible in evidence. The objection here was to the admission of the note unless the plaintiff would erase the writing; this objection was overruled and the note admitted without such erasure, the court stating that the writing in pencil on the note was manifestly a mere memorandum, and could not be mistaken for an attempted alteration.

<sup>7</sup> Carr v. Welch (1867) 46 Ill. 88. After referring to the manner in which the words appeared on the face of the note, as stated above, the court states that this circumstance and the still more convincing fact that the words are in red ink show clearly L.R.A.1916D.

that they were designed by the deceased holder of the note as a mere memorandum for his own guidance.

In Yost v. Watertown Steam-Engine Co. (1894) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 24 S. W. 657, a note to secure which a mortgage was afterwards given had written on the margin in red ink, presumptively by some holder of the note, without the knowledge of the maker, the words, "secured by mortgage number 173 on machinery, stock," etc. There was also written in red ink just below the figure showing the amount of the note, in the left-hand corner, the following, "Int. 20. 19," and just above and to the right of the amount the following, "$432.69," and at the bottom of the note, "S -21." The court states that it is apparent from an inspection of the note that none of the red ink entries were ever intended to become a part of the note itself. Evidence of a bank cashier was given in this case that the red ink entries were of frequent occurrence and form no part of the note, but were made as memoranda and merely for reference.

<sup>8</sup> There was held to be no ground for the objection that a bill of exchange was mutilated because of a memorandum indorsed on it by a commissioner for the purpose of identification when it was attached as an exhibit to the deposition of a witness, in Manning v. Maroney (1888) 87 Ala. 563, 13 Am. St. Rep. 67, 6 So. 343.

<sup>9</sup> The words "Glens Falls, N. Y.," written in pencil by the manager of a bank, below an indorser's signature upon the note, as a mere memorandum, pursuant to a custom of the bank to do so where the address of the indorser was not known, for the purpose of direction to the clerks in the bank in keeping their record, does not amount to an alteration of the indorser's contract. Merchants' Bank v. Brown (1903) 86 App. Div. 599, 83 N. Y. Supp. 1037.

See Struthers v. Kendall (1861) 41 Pa. 214, 80 Am. Dec. 610, supra, note 4.

<sup>10</sup> The pencil notation, "818 Security Bldg. comaker," after the name of an indorser on a promissory note, placed there by the holder at the time suit was begun, and at the request of the justice, who desired to know the address of the indorser and the capacity in which he was sought to be held, is not an alteration of the note. Johnson v. Parker (1901) 86 Mo. App. 660.

<sup>11</sup> A memorandum made by the holder on the back of a promissory note to the effect that the interest after a certain day shall be at a rate less than that stated in the body of the note is not an alteration of the note, and does not discharge the maker. Reed v. Culp (1901) 63 Kan. 595, 66 Pac.

place of payment,<sup>12</sup> have been held immaterial.

Writings evidencing separate contracts, but made on a note, have been held not material.<sup>13</sup> Thus, a writing evidencing an extension of time, made on the back of a note, is separate and apart from the note.<sup>14</sup> Neither an agreement to pay a different rate of interest,<sup>15</sup> nor a guaranty of a note upon the back thereof<sup>16</sup> amounts to an alteration. The general question of indorsement of a supplemental agreement, however, is beyond the scope of the present note; at least, where not treated as a memorandum.

616. Nor does such a memorandum amount to an alteration which will discharge a surety, especially where the parties did not intend to release the principal debtor or the sureties from their obligation to pay the note, but only to remit a portion of the interest payable under it for the use of the money. Cambridge Sav. Bank v. Hyde (1881) 131 Mass. 77, 41 Am. Rep. 193.

<sup>12</sup> Writing the place of payment on the back of a note after the maker's death, and after the payee had been appointed his administratrix, does not amount to a material alteration. Horton v. Horton (1887) 71 Iowa, 498, 32 N. W. 452. See discussion of this case in note in 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 645.

See Woodworth v. Bank of America, infra, note 23.

<sup>13</sup> A writing at the foot of a bond for the payment of money, in the words, "The above notes are to bear interest from the date given under my hand and seal this 24th of April 1832," and signed and sealed by the principal obligor in the bond, was held not to release the sureties, in Tremper v. Hemphill (1836) 8 Leigh (Va.) 623, 31 Am. Dec. 673.

See Bachelor v. Priest (1832) 12 Pick. (Mass.) 399, supra, note 2.

<sup>14</sup> The indorsement on the back of a non-negotiable instrument of a memorandum of an agreement between the maker and the holder to this effect: "Compound interest to be allowed on the within every six months," and signed by the maker, was held, in an action against the surety, not to be an alteration of the instrument, but to be a mere memorandum outside of the note. Moore v. Macon Sav. Bank (1886) 22 Mo. App. 684. Although the indorsement above set forth says nothing about an extension of time, it is treated by the court as a memorandum of such agreement.

<sup>15</sup> An agreement indorsed upon a note to pay a higher rate of interest after the date of the agreement, and signed by the principal maker, does not amount to an alteration of the note. Huff v. Cole (1873) 45 Ind. 300; Bucklen v. Huff (1876) 53 Ind. 474.

A memorandum made and signed by one joint maker—whether before or after delivery does not appear—of a note payable L.R.A.1916D.

As shown in some of the cases supra, the objection was to the admission of the note as evidence. Where the note is declared on as originally written, its introduction in evidence with the memorandum has been objected to as a variance. If the memorandum takes the form of a marginal notation, it cannot be considered as part of the contract, and the introduction of the note in evidence is not a variance.<sup>17</sup>

In some instances writings in the body of the instrument have been held mere memoranda, and not to amount to an alteration.<sup>18</sup> An insertion of the place of payment in the body of a note by a

"on demand with interest," that "interest on above note to be nine per cent," is held not to be a material alteration as to the other joint maker. Littlefield v. Coombs (1880) 71 Me. 110. The fact that it was signed by only one of the joint makers is stated to show that the parties did not intend to change the joint promise, but to treat it as an independent undertaking by the joint maker so signing.

<sup>16</sup> Hutches v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. (1896) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 35 S. W. 60.

<sup>17</sup> Becker v. Hofsommer (1914) 186 Ill. App. 553 (notation at the bottom of a note, below the signature, that it is "payable at Bellville, Ill. No. . . . due demand").

<sup>18</sup> Light v. Killinger (1896) 16 Ind. App. 102, 59 Am. St. Rep. 313, 44 N. E. 760. Upon the sale of a note to one who desired to know the bank at which a previous indorser did business, this fact was ascertained and the name of the bank inserted in a blank space left for that purpose. Upon dishonor, the note was returned to the vendor, who brought suit upon it as it was before the insertion of the name of the bank. It was urged that the insertion of these words constituted a material alteration and defeated the right of recovery, either in its original or altered form. It is stated that there was evidence from which the court might legitimately have found that the words were inserted as a mere memorandum to enable the purchasers to present it for payment when it became due, inasmuch as the indorser's residence was a considerable distance from their office. The words were written in pencil, and there appears to have been no attempt to indorse the note to an innocent purchaser or to defraud or impose upon anyone. It could easily have been seen at a glance that the words were written by a different hand from those written in ink in the body of the note. No harm resulted to the maker or any other person from the placing of the words in the blank space. The action upon the note in its original form was accordingly sustained.

The insertion of a pencil memorandum in a blank left in a premium note given in lieu of prepayment of the cash premium on an insurance policy, of the number of the clerk in the employ of the holder, but without the holder's authority or consent, so that it amounted to the act of a third party, has been held a spoliation, and not to release the maker of liability.<sup>19</sup> But a writing in the body of the instrument is not usually treated as a memorandum,<sup>20</sup> and such writings have, in general, been excluded from this note.

Where the writing is intended to modify the instrument it ceases to be a memorandum and is an alteration which, if material, avoids the instrument. Thus, statements as to interest rate,<sup>21</sup> or manner of payment,<sup>22</sup> or place of payment of note,<sup>23</sup> which are intended to modify the instrument, have been held material alterations.

policy, is not such an alteration as to invalidate the note or cause its rejection as evidence, where there is no question as to the identity of the note given, or of any fraud. Hipp v. Fidelity Mut. L. Ins. Co. (1907) 128 Ga. 491, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 319, 57 S. E. 892.

<sup>19</sup> Port Huron Engine & Thresher Co. v. Sherman (1901) 14 S. D. 461, 85 N. W. 1008.

<sup>20</sup> Crossing out the date of a note, and writing another above it, cannot be regarded as a mere memorandum of the time from which interest is to be figured, rather than an alteration of the instrument. Barton Sav. Bank & T. Co. v. Stephenson (1914) 87 Vt. 433, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 346, 89 Atl. 639.

It was held in Baldwin v. Haskell Nat. Bank (1911) 104 Tex. 122, 133 S. W. 864, 134 S. W. 1178, that an interlineation in pencil in a blank space in a note after the word "maturity" of the word "date," in case of a dispute as to whether the note bore interest from maturity or from date, could not be treated as a mere memorandum for information or convenience.

<sup>21</sup> The addition in one corner of a note of the words, "Interest at six per cent per annum," is a material alteration which releases a nonconsenting maker. Warrington v. Early (1853) 2 El. & Bl. (Eng.) 763, 2 C. L. R. 398, 23 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 47, 18 Jur. 42, 2 Week. Rep. 78. The note was drawn with lawful interest. Upon the payee desiring to know the meaning of lawful interest, the above writing was added by one of the makers. This writing is stated to be a part of the contract. Had it been inserted in the body of the note, there would be no question, and though it was inserted in the corner, if that had been done before the note was signed, it would have bound the maker. It is then stated that the naming of a place of payment in the corner does not make that a part of the contract, not because the writing is in the corner, but because what is there written is, from mercantile usage, a mere memorandum for the convenience of the parties.

An addendum written below the signatures on a sealed note bearing interest at 7 per cent, saying, "The above note is to be accounted for with interest at 8 per cent per annum," and signed by the principal obligor on the note, constitutes a material alteration which will avoid the note as against a surety thereon who did not consent to the alteration. Sanders v. Bagwell, (1890) 32 S. C. 238, 7 L.R.A. 743, 10 S. E. 946.

<sup>22</sup> Likewise the addition immediately under the body of a note of the words, "Int. to be paid semi-annually," in pursuance of an agreement to that effect between the holder and principal debtor, releases the surety. Dewey v. Reed (1863) 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 17.

<sup>23</sup> A memorandum written on the margin of a note, namely, "Payable at the Bank of America, James Kane," is a material alteration, assuming that it is given effect as making the instrument payable at the place designated. Woodworth v. Bank of America (1821) 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 391, 10 Am. Dec. 239. It is further stated that if the memorandum did not alter the contract it would be equally fatal to a recovery against the indorsers, since no demand of payment was made upon them, as required by law, the demand having been made at the designated bank instead of upon the indorsers personally.

See cases in notes 5 and 12, supra.

As to the alteration of notes by inserting place of payment, see note to Diamond Distilleries Co. v. Gott, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 643.

W. A. E.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

J. C. STONE, Appt.,
v.

FIDELITY & CASUALTY COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

(133 Tenn. 672, 182 S. W. 252.)

Insurance — accident — loss of sight.

Loss of sight because of a blood clot on the retina of the eye due to a sudden intentional movement of the hand to reach a desired object when in a weakened condition from the taking of purgatives, and L.R.A.1916D.

under a high blood pressure, is not within a policy insuring against injury through accidental means.

For other cases, see Insurance, VI. b, 3, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 17, 1916.)

A PPEAL by complainant from a judgment of the Chancery Court for Hamilton County sustaining a demurrer to a

Note. — As to when death or injury may be deemed to have been caused by accidental means, though the voluntary act of the in-complaint filed to recover the amount alleged to be due under a policy of accident insurance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Spears & Spears for appellant.

Messrs. Thompson, Williams, & Thompson, Creed F. Bates, and James B. Wright, for appellee:

To constitute an injury sustained through accidental means there must be some slip, jerk, twist, or other involuntary or accidental movement in the act which produces the injury, and unless there is such a movement the means are not accidental, although the result may be.

Clidero v. Scottish Acci. Ins. Co. 19 Rettle, 355, 29 Scot. L. R. 303; Re Scarr [1905] 1 K. B. 387, 2 B. R. C. 358, 92 L. T. N. S. 128, 21 Times L. R. 173, 74 L. J. K. B. N. S. 237, 1 Ann. Cas. 787; McCarthy v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 8 Biss. 362, Fed. Cas. No. 8,682; Niskern v. United Brotherhood, C. J. 93 App. Div. 364, 87 N. Y. Supp. 640; Smouse v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Assn. 118 Iowa, 436, 92 N. W. 53; Feder v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Assn. 107 Iowa, 538, 43 L.R.A. 693, 70 Am. St. Rep. 212, 78 N. W. 252; Cobb v. Preferred Mut. Acci. Assn. 96 Ga. 818; 22 S. E. 976; Shanberg v. Fidelity & C. Co. 143 Fed. 651, affirmed in 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1206, 85 C. C. A. 343, 158 Fed. 1; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Selden, 24 C. C. A. 92, 42 U. S. App. 253, 78 Fed. 285; Southard v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. 34 Conn. 576, Fed. Cas. No. 13,182; Hastings v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 190 Fed. 258; Appel v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 86 App. Div. 83, 83 N. Y. Supp. 240; Lehman v. Great Western Acci. Assn. 155 Iowa, 737, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 563, 133 N. W. 752; Smith v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 219 Mass. 147, L.R.A.1915B, 872, 106 N. E. 607; United States Mut. Acci. Assn. v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100, 33 L. ed. 60, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 755; Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Schmaltz, 66 Ark. 588, 74 Am. St. Rep. 112, 53 S. W. 49; Reynolds v. Equitable Acci. Assn. 59 Hun, 13, 1 N. Y. Supp. 738; Pervanger v. Union Casualty & Surety Co. 85 Miss. 31, 37 So. 461; Atlanta Acci. Assn. v. Alexander, 104 Ga. 709, 42 L.R.A. 188, 30 S. E. 939, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 616; Bailey v. Interstate Casualty Co. 8 App. Div. 127, 40 N. Y. Supp. 513; Rodey v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 3 N. M. 543, 9 Pac. 348; McGlinchey v. Fidelity & C. Co. 80 Me. 251, 6 Am. St. Rep.

190, 14 Atl. 13; Stout v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 130 Cal. 471, 62 Pac. 732; Taylor v. General Acci. Assur. Corp. 208 Pa. 439, 57 Atl. 830; Accident Ins. Co. v. Bennett, 90 Tenn. 256, 25 Am. St. Rep. 685, 16 S. W. 723; Union Casualty & Surety Co. v. Harroll, 98 Tenn. 591, 60 Am. St. Rep. 873, 40 S. W. 1080.

Fancher, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Complainant sued to recover under the terms of a policy which was to insure him against bodily injury sustained during the term of one year, through accidental means, and resulting directly, independently, and exclusively of all other causes, in immediate, continuous, and total disability. The injury complained of is stated as follows: "Complainant would now show the court that some time in November, 1913, he went to Nashville, Tennessee, to attend the football game between Vanderbilt and Sewanee; that the day was rather cool, and the ground was rather damp; he attended the game on the afternoon of November 27, 1913, and at that time contracted a cold, resulting in lumbago; that he stayed in Nashville all night, and sat up until about 12 o'clock, returning home the next day, the 28th. On the morning of the 28th he awoke with a cold and lumbago, and in the evening came home and went to bed, and was confined to his room and bed for seven consecutive days. He consulted Dr. Mitchell and told Dr. Mitchell that he was going to take some medicine known as 'black draught,' thinking by this means to clean out his system and thus restore his health. This medicine was composed of two thirds of a pint of whisky and a box of 'black draught,' which was a very strong liver medicine. These were poured together so as to make the whole in quantity above 1 quart. The effect of this medicine was to purge the system. Complainant took a dose of this medicine on the morning of the 3d of December, before supper, and continued this treatment, taking it before each meal until the following evening. The consequence of taking this medicine was to debilitate the system, and this resulted in a very weak physical condition. This condition obtained until Thursday, when complainant was lying on the bed, and had had a short nap, up to about 8 o'clock. Thereupon he called his wife to bring him the sured was the primary cause thereof, see notes to Fidelity & C. Co. v. Carroll, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 657; Hutton v. States Acci. Ins. Co. L.R.A.1915E, 127; and New Amsterdam Casualty Co. v. Johnson, L.R.A. 1916B, 1021.

A somewhat analogous question is treated in the note to Lehman v. Great Western L.R.A.1916D.

Acci. Assn. 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 562, on "Injury or disability from strain as within provision as to external, violent, and accidental means." Other related questions are treated in notes cited in the Index to L.R.A. Notes, under the title, "Insurance," subtitle, "Risks and causes of loss, injury, or death."

Nashville Banner, and asked her to turn on the light at the head of the bed so that he might read the paper. Complainant then reached for the paper and raised it above his head, and the light was turned on, when he found he had lost the sight of his left eye. On raising his hands he felt some change had come over his left eye. On consulting a physician he was informed that the loss of his left eye was due to the fact that in his weakened condition resulting from the purging of the 'black draught,' that he raised his hand suddenly to get the paper, and that his blood pressure was strong and rushed to his head, causing a blood rupture of the retina,—that is, causing a little clot of blood to rest on the nerve of the eye or in the retina, thereby destroying his sight. Complainant charges that the loss of his left eye resulted wholly from accidental means."

The demurrer which the chancellor sustained raises the point that the injury or disability suffered was caused by sickness or disease, and not through accidental means, resulting directly, independently, and exclusively of all other causes.

The general rule is that an injury is not produced by accidental means, within the meaning of this policy, where the injury is the natural result of an act or acts in which the insured intentionally engages. A person may do certain acts the result of which produces unforeseen consequences resulting in what is termed an accident; yet it does not come within the terms of this contract. The policy does not insure against an injury that may be caused by a voluntary, natural, ordinary movement, executed exactly as was intended.

Therefore, to determine the matter, we look, not to the result merely, but to the means producing the result. It is not sufficient that the injury be unusual and unexpected, but the cause itself must have been unexpected and accidental. Re Scarr, [1905] 1 K. B. 387, 2 B. R. C. 358, 92 L. T. N. S. 128, 21 Times L. R. 173, 74 L. J. K. B. N. S. 237, 1 Ann. Cas. 787; Clidero v. Scottish Acci. Ins. Co. (1892) 19 Rottie, 355, 29 Scot. L. R. 303; Smith v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (1914) 219 Mass. 147, L.R.A.1915B, 872, 106 N. E. 607; Feder v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Asso. 107 Iowa, 538, 43 L.R.A. 693, 70 Am. St. Rep. 212, 78 N. W. 252; Shanberg v. Fidelity & C. Co. (C. C.) 143 Fed. 651, affirmed in 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1206, 85 C. C. A. 343, 158 Fed. 1; Lehman v. Great Western Acci. Asso. 155 Iowa, 737, 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 563, 133 N. W. 752; Smouse v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Asso. 118 Iowa, 436, 92 N. W. 53; McCarthy v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 8 Biss. 362, Fed. Cas. No. 8,682; Niskern v. United Brotherhood, C. J. L.R.A.1916D.

93 App. Div. 364, 87 N. Y. Supp. 640; Hastings v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (C. C.) 190 Fed. 258; Cobb v. Preferred Mut. Acci. Asso. 96 Ga. 818, 22 S. E. 976; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Selden, 24 C. C. A. 92, 42 U. S. App. 253, 78 Fed. 285; Southard v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. 34 Conn. 576, Fed. Cas. No. 13,182.

Attention is especially directed to the very excellent notes on the subject in 42 L.R.A.(N.S.) 563, and 1 Ann. Cas. 787. These notes illustrate the subject by statements of the facts.

In the foregoing cases no liability was found, because the injury was not produced by accidental means.

In Cobb v. Preferred Mut. Acci. Asso. 96 Ga. 818, 22 S. E. 976, the plaintiff was in a feeble condition, and in carrying his baggage a short distance it was found that his eye was affected, finally resulting in blindness. The plaintiff had not fallen nor received any shock, blow, or jar, and there was nothing unusual in the manner of carrying the baggage or his movement while so doing. It was considered that the means producing the injury were not accidental.

In Feder v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Asso. 107 Iowa, 538, 43 L.R.A. 693, 70 Am. St. Rep. 212, 78 N. W. 252, a rupture of an artery occurred while the insured was reaching in an ordinary way over a chair to close some window shutters, and he did not fall or lose his balance. Every thing was done as was intended. It was held the rupture was not sustained through accidental means.

The same doctrine is announced in other cases, but a recovery had because the injury was sustained through accidental means. These cases are Standard Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Schmaltz, 66 Ark. 588, 74 Am. St. Rep. 112, 53 S. W. 49; Atlanta Acci. Asso. v. Alexander, 104 Ga. 709, 42 L.R.A. 188, 30 S. E. 939, 4 Am. Neg. Rep. 616; McGlinchey v. Fidelity & C. Co. 80 Me. 251, 6 Am. St. Rep. 190, 14 Atl. 13; Reynolds v. Equitable Acci. Asso. 59 Hun, 13, 1 N. Y. Supp. 738; Pervangher v. Union Casualty & Surety Co. 85 Miss. 31, 37 So. 461; Bailey v. Interstate Casualty Co. 8 App. Div. 127, 40 N. Y. Supp. 513; Rodey v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 3 N. M. 543, 9 Pac. 348; Taylor v. General Acci. Assur. Corp. 208 Pa. 439, 57 Atl. 830; Stout v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 130 Cal. 471, 62 Pac. 732; United States Mut. Acci. Asso. v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100, 33 L. ed. 60, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 755.

The following authorities are in conflict with those above cited: North American Life & Acci. Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. 43, 8 Am. Rep. 212; Horsefall v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. 32 Wash. 132, 63 L.R.A. 425, 98 Am. St. Rep. 846, 72 Pac. 1028; Young v. Railway Mail Asso. 126 Mo. App. 325, 103

S. W. 557; Rose v. Commercial Mut. Acci. Co. 12 Pa. Super. Ct. 394; Patterson v. Ocean Acci. & Guarantee Corp. 25 App. D. C. 46.

Now, looking to the particular facts here alleged, we find the cause alleged to have produced the injury was a natural and ordinary movement. Complainant was lying quietly on the bed, and called to his wife to bring him the Nashville Banner that he might read it. He then reached for the paper and raised it above his head, and the light was turned on, when he found he had lost the sight of his left eye. He was informed by his physician that the loss of the eye was due to the fact that in his weakened condition, resulting from the purgative he had taken, he raised his hand suddenly to get the paper, and that his blood pressure was strong and rushed to his head, causing a blood rupture of the retina, thereby destroying his sight. The weakened condition due to the purgative was not accidental, nor was the excessive blood pressure; both being physical conditions produced from natural causes. The movement of the hand suddenly to get the paper was executed exactly as intended. It was a simple and ordinary movement. The rushing of the blood with excessive pressure, rupturing the retina, was therefore caused by natural means. While the result was not foreseen, the causes producing that result were not accidental. It is well in line with the cases above cited sustaining the majority rule, which we adopt. This rule affords a reasonable interpretation of the contract.

The position here taken is not in conflict, as we view it, with the opinion of our court in Accident Ins. Co. v. Bennett, 90 Tenn. 256, 25 Am. St. Rep. 685, 16 S. W. 723, when the facts of that case are properly considered.

We deem it unnecessary to pass upon the next point raised by demurrer, namely, that if the injury may be said to have resulted through accidental means, yet it did not so result "directly, independently, and exclusively of all other causes." The learned chancellor sustained the demurrer in this respect also, and there is strong authority for his position. But, inasmuch as the foregoing is decisive of the case, and the question of proximate cause and what contributing facts would be too remote to be considered as entering into the accidental means producing the injury must depend upon the facts of each case, discussion on that point is omitted.

Affirmed.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

F. W. COOMBS, Respt.,

v.

SOUTHERN WISCONSIN RAILWAY COMPANY, Appt.

(— Wis. —, 155 N. W. 922.)

Carrier — duty of passenger to leave vestibule.

A street car passenger cannot recover damages for the attempt of the conductor to eject him from the car because of his refusal to comply with the conductor's request to obey a rule forbidding passengers to stand in the vestibule, if there is in fact standing room in the aisle, although from the vestibule the aisle appears to be filled with passengers.

For other cases, see Carriers, II. h, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 11, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Dane County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by an attempted wrongful ejection of plaintiff from a street car by defendant's servant. Reversed.

Statement by Siebecker, J.:

This is an action to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been caused by an attempted wrongful ejection of plaintiff by one of defendant's conductors from a street car. Plaintiff alleges that his hand was cut and torn, and that he suffered great mortification and injury to his feelings by reason of such unlawful assault and battery.

The defendant operates a street car system in the city of Madison. The plaintiff, a man about forty-four years of age, boarded one of defendant company's "pay as you enter" street cars, at the corner of Ingersoll and Jenifer streets of the city. Five other persons boarded the car at this point. The plaintiff was the last of this group of persons to step into the vestibule of the car. The other passengers paid their fares and passed from the vestibule into the car. The plaintiff, after paying his fare, stepped back into the left-hand portion of the rear vestibule and remained standing there. The conductor asked the plaintiff to step into the car, but the plaintiff indicated that there was no room in the car, and stated that he would remain where he was. The conductor then told plaintiff to step into the car or get off, and that, if plaintiff did neither, he would stop the car and eject plaintiff. The plaintiff made no response to this remark of the conductor, but declined to step into the car. The evidence is not clear as to whether the conductor attempted to eject plaintiff at the next crossing (Brearly street) or at the following crossing (Livingston street). The testimony as to the number of people standing in the aisle of the car varies widely. One witness estimates it as high as from twelve to fifteen; while other witnesses estimate it at a less number. The conductor stopped the car at one of these crossings and told the plaintiff to get inside or he would put him off. Plaintiff refused to step into the car, whereupon the conductor signaled for the motorman to come to the rear platform, and then took hold of plaintiff and attempted to eject him from the car. He did not succeed because of the resistance offered by the plaintiff. The motorman advised letting the matter rest for the present and reporting it to the inspector upon reaching the business district of the city. The conductor then desisted in his effort, and the plaintiff rode about a mile to his destination in the rear vestibule, where the conductor reported the entire matter to the inspector. The evidence tends to show that several passengers got on the car within the next two or three blocks after the plaintiff had boarded the car, while only a possible two left the car, and that all of these passengers found standing room inside of the car. It also appears that there was standing room in the aisle of the car for at least eight to ten more passengers when plaintiff was requested to step into the car, though the aisle appeared to be filled near the entrance where the plaintiff stood.

Note. — As to ejection of passenger for refusal to comply with rule or direction of carrier as to place on car or train, see annotation following this case, post, 542. L.R.A.1916D.

The court submitted the case to the jury, who rendered a special verdict finding: (1) That Mr. Coombs under the circumstances was not, as a reasonably prudent man, required to step into the car when asked to do so by the conductor; (2) that the conductor used more force than was reasonably necessary to eject plaintiff from the car; (3) that the conductor was actuated by malice and vindictiveness in attempting to eject the plaintiff; (4) that the defendant company ratified such malicious and vindictive action; (5) that such malicious or vindictive action on the part of the conductor was not within the scope of his employment; (6) assessed plaintiff's compensatory damages at $350; and (7) assessed plaintiff's punitive damages at $50. The court denied the right to punitive damages, and judgment was entered for the plaintiff in the sum of $350 compensatory damages, together with the costs and disbursements of this action. From such judgment, this appeal is taken.

Messrs. Jones & Schubring, for appellant:

It is the duty of the person in charge of a car to enforce a rule, and for the passenger to submit to its enforcement, and no liability against the defendant arises from such enforcement.

Yorton v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 54 Wis. 234, 41 Am. Rep. 23, 11 N. W. 482, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 678; Montgomery v. Buffalo R. Co. 165 N. Y. 139, 58 N. E. 770, 9 Am. Neg. Rep. 124; Kiley v. Chicago City R. Co. 189 Ill. 384, 52 L.R.A. 626, 82 Am. St. Rep. 460, 59 N. E. 794, 9 Am. Neg. Rep. 476; Dobbins v. Little Rock R. & Electric Co. 79 Ark. 85, 95 S. W. 794, 9 Ann. Cas. 84; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Motes, 117 Ga. 923, 62 L.R.A. 507, 97 Am. St. Rep. 223, 43 S. E. 990, 14 Am. Neg. Rep. 13.

Where a passenger violates a reasonable rule and the conductor has the right to eject him, and is proceeding to do so in a lawful manner, the passenger has no right to resist, and if in doing so he receives injury, he will have no one to blame but himself.

Yorton v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 54 Wis. 234, 41 Am. Rep. 23, 11 N. W. 482, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 678; McMillan v. Federal Street & P. V. Pass. R. Co. 172 Pa. 523, 33 Atl. 560; Townsend v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 56 N. Y. 295, 15 Am. Rep. 419, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 531; Murphy v. Union R. Co. 118 Mass. 228, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 405; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Daniels, 90 Ill. App. 154; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Moody, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 22 S. W. 1009; Ft. Clark Street R. Co. v. Fbaugh, 49 Ill. App. 582; 6 Cyc. 564; Hall v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 15 Fed. 57; Monnier v. New York, C. & H. R. R. Co. 175 N. Y. 281, 62 L.R.A. 357, 96 Am. St. Rep. 619, 67 N. E. 569, 14 Am. Neg. Rep. 423; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Connors, 112 Ill. 295, 54 Am. Rep. 238; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Casazza, 83 Ill. App. 421; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Louthan, 80 Ill. App. 579; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Lee, 49 Ill. App. 75; Randell v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 102 Mo. App. 342, 76 S. W. 493; Peoria & P. Terminal R. Co. v. Hoerr, 120 Ill. App. 65; Morrill v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 103 Minn. 362, 123 Am. St. Rep. 341, 115 N. W. 395; Kiley v. Chicago City R. Co. 189 Ill. 384, 52 L.R.A. 626, 82 Am. St. Rep. 460, 59 N. E. 794, 9 Am. Neg. Rep. 476.

Messrs. Olin, Butler, Stebbins, & Stroud, for respondent:

No rule of defendant justified the conductor in threatening and attempting to eject plaintiff under the circumstances of this case.

Plaintiff could not reasonably be required to force a passage into defendant's car.

Ward v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 102 Wis. 215, 78 N. W. 442; Bass v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 36 Wis. 451, 17 Am. Rep. 495.

Plaintiff was justified in resisting the efforts of defendant's conductor to throw him off the car.

Huggard v. Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co. 158 Wis. 1, 147 N. W. 1020; Bass v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. supra; English v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 66 N. Y. 454, 23 Am. Rep. 69; Ellsworth v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 95 Iowa, 98, 29 L.R.A. 173, 63 N. W. 584, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 252; McDonald v. Central R. Co. 72 N. J. L. 280, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 505, 111 Am. St. Rep. 672, 62 Atl. 405, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 378; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wolfe, 128 Ind. 347, 25 Am. St. Rep. 436, 27 N. E. 606; Hufford v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 53 Mich. 118, 18 N. W. 580, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 430; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Winter, 143 U. S. 60, 73, 36 L. ed. 71, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 356, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 690.

Resistance on the part of a passenger to an attempted wrongful ejectment in no wise prevents his recovery for all indignities, humiliation, and injuries to his feelings which he may have suffered; but such resistance may be considered only in mitigation of damages suffered by reason of such resistance.

Hall v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 15 Fed. 57; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Connell, 112 Ill. 295, 54 Am. Rep. 238; Kiley v. Chicago City R. Co. 189 Ill. 384, 52 L.R.A. 626, 82 Am. St. Rep. 460, 59 N. E. 794, 9 Am. Neg. Rep. 476.

Stiebecker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant company had adopted the following as one of its regulations for the conduct of its business: "The conductor shall request passengers to enter the car and move forward, endeavoring to keep the rear platform clear at all times."

Mr. Montgomery, vice president and superintendent, testified that this rule was promulgated and enforced to promote safety of passengers and efficiency in service in the conduct of the business. An orderly and expeditious management is essential to carry on a street car business, and the requirements imposed on passengers by this rule tend to promote these objects. Yorton v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 54 Wis. 234, 41 Am. Rep. 23, 11 N. W. 482, 8 Am. Neg. Cas. 678; Bass v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 36 Wis. 450, 17 Am. Rep. 495. The provisions of the regulation are therefore proper and reasonable, and passengers must conform therewith under all circumstances and conditions, that its requirements can be reasonably enforced. The question arises: Was L.R.A.1916D.

the plaintiff justified in refusing to comply with the conductor's attempted enforcement of the rule at the time here in question? It was held in the Yorton Case that the conductor in charge of a railroad passenger train had the right to eject a passenger from the car when such passenger refuses to comply with a reasonable regulation that is sought to be enforced for the proper, safe, and efficient conduct of the business. Responsibility for the enforcement of such regulation must rest with those who are in control of the business. In this case such duty was imposed on the conductor who was in charge of the car, and it devolves upon passengers to comply with the conductor's enforcement of the rule if they can reasonably do so.

"In such cases, as in others, it would not comport with the comfort and convenience of the passengers, nor always with their safety, for some of them to assert their rights with a strong hand. And the safety and comfort of the passengers generally are not to give way to the safety or convenience of one or of a few." Bass Case, 36 Wis. 462, 17 Am. Rep. 495.

It is plain that the conductor of the street car in question was vested with authority of the company to enforce the provisions of this regulation, and that it was incumbent on plaintiff to comply with the conductor's request to step into the car, unless the facts and circumstances of the case show that he could not do so. The trial court submitted the inquiry to the jury whether the plaintiff "ought, as a reasonably careful and prudent person, to have entered the car" when the conductor requested him to do so. This direction to the jury is the equivalent of vesting the plaintiff with the right to determine whether or not ordinary care and prudence required him to comply with the regulation under the facts and circumstances, and runs counter to the right and authority of the conductor to enforce the regulation. The facts and circumstances shown by the record did not justify plaintiff to refuse to comply with the request of the conductor to step into the car. It appears without contradiction that the car in question had an inside aisle capacity of standing room for at least thirty passengers, and that, at the most, not to exceed fifteen passengers occupied this space when plaintiff refused to comply with the regulation. It also appears that the four passengers who entered the car with the plaintiff readily passed into the aisle, and that other passengers entered the aisle immediately after plaintiff refused to comply with the conductor's request, and occupy room which had not been occupied by passengers leaving the car. If is obvious that there was standing room for plaintiff in the aisle of the car when the conductor requested him to step in. Under the conditions it was his duty to comply with the conductor's request or leave the car, and his wilful refusal to do either authorized the conductor to remove him from the car, and the attempted ejection under the circumstances was not an unlawful act on the part of the conductor. It is manifest that the conductor wholly failed to use sufficient force to overcome plaintiff's resistance, and that plaintiff made no case for a wanton and reckless assault upon him.

It is considered that the evidence fails to establish a cause of action, and that the complaint must be dismissed.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded to the Circuit Court, with direction to award judgment dismissing plaintiff's complaint.

Annotation—Carriers: ejection of passenger for refusal to comply with rule or direction of carrier as to place on car or train.

Various other questions arising from the ejection of passengers are treated in notes cited in the Index to L.R.A. Notes, under the title, "Carriers," subtitle, "Ejection."

As to duty of carrier to provide passenger with seat, see note to Cave v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. L.R.A.1915B, 915.

Generally speaking, it is the undoubted right of carriers of passengers to make reasonable rules and regulations for the proper conduct of their business and for the safety and comfort of their passengers, and it is equally well established that, for noncompliance with a reasonable rule of the carrier regarding tickets or personal behavior, a passenger may be ejected from the carrier's conveyance, provided such ejection be effected at a proper place and in the proper manner. 5 R. C. L. § 752. If, however, in ejecting a passenger for the violation of a rule or regulation, a servant uses more force than is necessary, the carrier will generally be liable for resulting injuries.

A regulation forbidding passengers to stand upon the front platform being reasonable and proper, it is the duty of a passenger who is standing on the platform to go inside the car, if there is standing room inside, although there are no vacant seats; and if a passenger refuses to comply with such request when there is room inside the car which can conveniently be reached, the servants of the company may lawfully eject him from the car. Dobbins v. Little Rock R. & Electric Co. (1906) 79 Ark. 85, 95 S. W. 794, 9 Ann. Cas. 84.

So, a conductor may without excessive force expel a passenger from a street car, who is standing on the platform in violation of a regulation, although the passenger gives as an excuse that he is nauseated and liable momentarily to vomit. Montgomery v. Buffalo R. Co. (1900) 165 N. Y. 139, 58 N. E. 770, 9 L.R.A.1916D.

Am. Neg. Rep. 124, affirming (1897) 24 App. Div. 454, 48 N. Y. Supp. 849.

On an appeal in this case, the court of appeals (1900) 165 N. Y. 139, 58 N. E. 770, 9 Am. Neg. Rep. 124, rejected the contention of counsel for plaintiff that, conceding the reasonableness of the rule forbidding passengers to ride on the platform, the question whether or not it was reasonable to enforce it on the particular occasion in view of the plaintiff's condition was a question for the jury. Gray, J., said: "I am unable to assent to the proposition. I think that, if the rule was a reasonable one, the passenger was bound to submit to it, and that it was the duty of the conductor to enforce it. Therefore, in ejecting him from the car upon his refusal to submit, the conductor was acting lawfully in the discharge of his duty. The passenger, by his conduct, had forfeited his right to be carried any further. . . . The plaintiff, if in the physical condition described by him upon the day in question, was not obliged to travel upon the defendant's street car; but if he chose to do so, he was bound to submit to its regulations. He has no sufficient reason in law for complaining because the conductor performed his duty and compelled him to leave the car."

In COOMBS v. SOUTHERN WISCONSIN R. Co. ante, 539, the passenger was not justified in refusing to comply with the rule forbidding passengers to stand on the rear platform, although from the vestibule the aisle appeared to be filled with passengers; and the conductor in attempting to eject him wholly failed to use sufficient force to overcome the passenger's resistance, so that no case for a wanton and reckless assault was made out.

In Ft. Clark Street R. Co. v. Ebaugh (1893) 49 Ill. App. 582, a passenger, in violation of a rule of the company, took a position on the rear platform of an electric car when there was plenty of standing room within and the aisle was clear; the conductor told him he must either go in the car or get off, and refused to proceed until the passenger should comply; the latter thereupon left the car, no violence being used toward him. The court said: "It is difficult for us to understand upon what theory the plaintiff is entitled to damages. The rule which he refused to comply with, and because of the enforcement of which he was denied passage on the car, was established for the safety of passengers and the convenience of employees operating the car. It was a reasonable and proper rule. He saw fit to stand out in defiance of it, evidently from sheer stubbornness, or to invite an assault from the conductor. A street car company has the right to require of passengers the observance of all reasonable rules tending to promote the safety and convenience of passengers and the successful conduct of its business. So long as a passenger observes such rules, the company is bound to carry him; but when he wantonly refuses to obey them, the company has the right at once to expel him, using no more force than may be necessary for that purpose. Appellee contends that he had not sufficient knowledge of the rule. We do not think it was necessary for the conductor to have exhibited a rule, or told appellee in terms that the company had adopted such a one."

So, a recovery was denied in McMillan v. Federal Street & P. V. Pass. R. Co. (1896) 172 Pa. 523, 33 Atl. 560, where a passenger knowing of the rule forbidding passengers to stand on the platform refused to comply with the conductor's request to go inside the car, where vacant seats were pointed out to him and, upon being asked by the conductor how far he was going, merely said, "Not far," whereupon the conductor put him off, placing his foot in such a position that he could not again get on the car, although he did not strike or kick him. The court said: "The rule of the company was a reasonable one, intended to secure the safety and comfort of passengers. It was the duty of the plaintiff to obey it, and the right of the company to enforce it. Cases might arise in which it would seem that the rule should not be rigidly enforced, or an immediate compliance with it required, as where the passenger was at the point of alighting and his presence for a few moments on the platform would not endanger or inconvenience anyone. But the necessity for the enforcement of the rule is not to be determined by the passenger. A rule that might be suspended at his will would cease to be a rule. The management of the car in all matters which relate to the conduct of passengers is with the conductor, and ordinarily the enforcement or suspension of a rule must rest with him. A passenger in any event would have no right to complain of the enforcement of a reasonable rule, unless he had stated to the conductor an adequate reason for its suspension in his case. This the plaintiff did not do. He testified that he told the conductor that he was not going far enough 'to justify' him in going into the car, because if he went in and sat down he would have to come right out again; that he would be at his stopping place, and there was no use in his going in; that he 'was not going far enough to go in,' and 'it was not worth while to go in.' When asked by the conductor how far he was going his only reply was, 'Not far.' This was coupled with the assertion that he would not go in. His statement that he was not going far, with his refusal to say how far, gave the conductor no information. He might have meant a square or a mile. That he rode some distance during the controversy before the car was stopped, and afterwards attempted to get on and finish his journey, cast serious doubt upon his good faith, and confirmed the suspicion of want of candor which his previous conduct had indicated. He undertook to make himself the judge of the necessity for the enforcement of the rule. In this he was wrong."

So, where a person was ejected from the platform and steps of a passenger coach, the court, in Whittington v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. (1915) — Del. —, 93 Atl. 563, instructed the jury that if plaintiff refused to pay the customary and usual fare, or refused to comply with the rule of the company that passengers should not stand on the platforms of the cars while the train was in motion, or both, the conductor in charge of the train had the right to eject her from the train, and prevent her from again boarding it, provided in doing so he used no more force than was necessary.

It is held in Kirk v. Seattle Electric Co. (1910) 58 Wash. 283, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 991, 108 Pac. 604, that a passenger on a street car who refuses to obey a rule forbidding riding on the platform loses his rights as a passenger, including the right to a transfer to another car.

It seems that a custom on the part of a street railway company to permit passengers to ride in the vestibules of cars is immaterial on the question of due care of a passenger in refusing to obey a direction of the conductor to go inside the car in accordance with a rule of the company, since, upon notice of intention to enforce the rule, the custom ceases to operate; and one who has paid his fare and been received as a passenger on a crowded street car has not, as matter of law, a right to ride in the vestibule against the order of the conductor, until he can with reasonable diligence gain admission inside the car, but he must comply with the request either to go inside or to get off the car. Liversidge v. Berkshire Street R. Co. (1911) 210 Mass. 234, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 993, 96 N. E. 665.

On the other hand, if a conductor, in ejecting a passenger who is standing on the front platform of a street car in violation of a rule of the company, acts so negligently or maliciously as to injure the passenger, the company will be liable. Meyer v. Second Avenue R. Co. (1861) 8 Bosw. (N. Y.) 305.

So, without reference to any rule or regulation, a carrier was held liable in Moritz v. Interurban Street R. Co. (1903) 84 N. Y. Supp. 162, where a motorman struck a passenger violently in the chest as he ordered him off the steps of a street car.

Where a passenger was riding without objection upon the front platform of a street car, and the driver threw him off because he "rang up the conductor," the company was, in Lyons v. Broadway & 7th Ave. R. Co. (1890) 32 N. Y. S. R. 232, 10 N. Y. Supp. 237, held liable; the court observing that the driver was in charge of the front platform of the car, had the power to keep any improper person from it, and had the right to put any disorderly person off it. He was not bound to ask the conductor to do this, or consult him about doing it. If he put the wrong person off, it was a mistake for which the master was liable. Having the power, as servant of the corporation, to expel improper persons from the platform, and the master being liable for his mistakes committed in the exercise of this authority, the defendant is answerable though the act was willfully done. Nothing is said in this case about any rule forbidding passengers to ride on the platform.
*L.R.A.*1916D.

In Smith v. Manhattan R. Co. (1892) 18 N. Y. Supp. 759, a passenger, having paid his fare to a certain station, boarded a train by leaping on the rear platform, in violation of a rule of the company; when the train reached the next station he got off to get his valise, which had been tossed on the platform; he then properly entered the train, whereupon servants of the railway company attempted to eject him; the railway company was held liable for the injuries resulting from the attempted ejection, the court stating that, having originally a right to conveyance by that train, and being now on it by no breach of regulation or other misconduct, the attempt to eject him was an utterly inexcusable outrage, for which the defendant might well have been chastised by a much heavier verdict than that of which, without reason, it complains. The court further observed that the adjudication that the wrongful presence of a passenger at a forbidden locality on the vehicle does not forfeit his right to transportation negatives the proposition that his right to carriage when aboard is lost by a breach of regulation in getting aboard.

Where a passenger standing on the back platform of a street car accidentally stepped on the end of the trolley rope, causing the pole to leave the wire, and the conductor thereupon violently assaulted and ejected him from the car, the company was, in Tanger v. Southwest Missouri Electric R. Co. (1900) 85 Mo. App. 28, held liable, the court stating that, while the mere removal of plaintiff might have been justifiable or lawful, yet when done by excessive force, evidenced by violence and unnecessary beating, it became unlawful, and gave plaintiff a cause of action, though he was without the right to remain longer on the car.

Where a passenger, while occupying a place on a vessel in violation of the regulation established for deck passengers, was ejected therefrom with such force as to seriously injure him, the carrier was, in New Jersey S. B. Co. v. Brockett (1887) 121 U. S. 637, 30 L. ed. 1049, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1039, held liable on the ground that it was bound to protect its passengers against the misconduct of its own servants engaged in executing the contract of carriage when acting within the general scope of their employment.
J. D. C.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

WILLIAM TRUAX, Sr., et al., Appts,
v.

MIKE RAICH.

(239 U. S. 33, 60 L. ed. —, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 7.)

States — suit against state officers.

1. A suit by an alien to restrain the attorney general and county attorney from enforcing, to his injury, an anti-alien labor law which he asserts is repugnant to the Federal Constitution, cannot be regarded as a suit against the state.

For other cases, see State, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Injunction — restraining criminal proceedings.

2. Equity has jurisdiction to restrain the criminal prosecution of an employer under an anti-alien labor law at the instance of an alien employee who alleges that the act violates the Federal Constitution, and that its enforcement will result in his immediate discharge from employment, although such employment may be one at will, rather than for a term.

For other cases, see Injunction, I. i, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Constitutional law — equal protection of the laws — discrimination against aliens.

3. The discrimination against aliens lawfully resident in the state, which is produced by a statutory provision that every employer of more than five workers at any one time, "regardless of kind or class of work, or sex of workers, shall employ not less than 80 per cent qualified electors or native-born citizens of the United States or some subdivision thereof," renders the statute invalid under U. S. Const. 14th Amendment, as denying the equal protection of the laws, and such statute cannot be justified as an exercise of the power of the state to make reasonable classifications in legislating to promote the health, safety, morals, and welfare of those within its jurisdiction.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. a, 2, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Mr. Justice McReynolds dissents.)

(November 1, 1915.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court of the United

Note. — As to prohibiting or restricting employment of aliens, see annotation following People v. Crane, post, 569.

As to when action against officers is deemed to be action against the state, see note to Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Burr, 44 L.R.A.(N.S.) 189, and later case, Lankford v. Schroeder, L.R.A.1915F, 623, and footnote referring to Lankford v. Platte Iron Works Co. 235 U. S. 461, 59 L. ed. 316, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 173. L.R.A.1916D.

States for the District of Arizona, enjoining the enforcement of the Arizona anti-alien labor law. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Leslie C. Hardy, Wiley E. Jones, Attorney General of Arizona, George W. Harben, J. Addison Hicks, and W. B. Cleary, for appellants:

The servant cannot complain, for the master, of a threatened injury to the latter by public officers of the state of Arizona, and to this extent an injunction against the institution of criminal proceedings against the master at the instance of the servant is contrary to the powers of a court of equity.

McCabe v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 235 U. S. 151, 59 L. ed. 169, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 69; Davis & F. Mfg. Co. v. Los Angeles, 189 U. S. 207, 47 L. ed. 778, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 498.

The law in question is a valid exercise of the police power of the state because it is a law enacted to preserve the safety and welfare of the state and its citizens.

Patsone v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138, 58 L. ed. 539, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 40 L. ed. 793, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600; Blythe v. Hinckley, 180 U. S. 333, 45 L. ed. 557, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24 L. ed. 248; United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. ed. 588; Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 575, 55 L. ed. 112, 341, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1062, 1065; 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186, 299, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487.

Messrs. Alexander Britton, Evans Browne, and Francis W. Clements, for appellee:

The 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States is not confined to the protection of citizens of the United States, but is universal in its application to all citizens within the territorial jurisdiction without regard to any difference of race, color, or nationality, and the promise of equal protection of the law is equivalent to the pledge of the protection of equal laws.

Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356-369, 30 L. ed. 220-226, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27-31, 28 L. ed. 923-925, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Missouri v. Lewis (Bowman v. Lewis) 101 U. S. 22, 25 L. ed. 989.

Among the rights so guaranteed to resident aliens, as well as citizens, is that of freely contracting to render service and perform labor, and to follow any ordinary lawful vocation. No impediment should be interposed to these rights of everyone, except such as are applied to the same pursuits by others under like circumstances and conditions.

People v. Williams, 189 N. Y. 131, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1130, 121 Am. St. Rep. 854, 81 N. E. 778, 12 Ann. Cas. 798; Lockner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 937, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133; Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746-762, 28 L. ed. 585-588, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. ed. 832, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678-684, 32 L. ed. 253-256, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394; Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 59 L. ed. 441, L.R.A.1915C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240.

The law of Arizona contravenes the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and is not a proper exercise of the police power of the state.

People v. Crane, 165 App. Div. 449, 150 N. Y. Supp. 933; Henderson v. New York (Henderson v. Wickham) 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. ed. 543.

This is not necessarily a suit in equity to enjoin a criminal proceeding, but in any event it is fully justified in order to prevent the invasion of the rights of property of appellee by the enforcement of an unconstitutional law, the enforcement of which works a direct injury and irreparable harm to him.

Re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 200, 31 L. ed. 402, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 482; Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & T. Co. 154 U. S. 362, 38 L. ed. 1014, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 560, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1047; Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 52 L. ed. 714, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 932, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441; McCabe v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 235 U. S. 151, 59 L. ed. 169, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 69; Re Tiburcio Parrott, 6 Sawy. 349, 1 Fed. 481; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 320, 18 L. ed. 362; Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 550.

Mr. Justice Hughes delivered the opinion of the court:

Under the initiative provision of the Constitution of Arizona (art. 4, § 1) there was adopted the following measure which was proclaimed by the governor as a law of the state on December 14, 1914:

An Act to Protect the Citizens of the United States in Their Employment against Noncitizens of the United States, in Arizona, and to Provide Penalties and Punishment for the Violation Thereof.

Be it enacted by the People of the State of Arizona:

Section 1. Any company, corporation, partnership, association or individual who is, or may hereafter become an employer of more than five (5) workers at any one L.R.A.1916D.

time, in the state of Arizona, regardless of kind or class of work, or sex of workers, shall employ not less than eighty (80) per cent qualified electors or native-born citizens of the United States or some subdivision thereof.

Sec. 2. Any company, corporation, partnership, association or individual, their agent or agents, found guilty of violating any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be subject to a fine of not less than one hundred ($100) dollars, and imprisoned for not less than thirty (30) days.

Sec. 3. Any employee who shall misrepresent, or make false statement, as to his or her nativity or citizenship, shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not less than one hundred ($100) dollars, and imprisoned for not less than thirty (30) days. Laws of Arizona, 1915. Initiative Measure, p. 12.

Mike Raich (the appellee), a native of Austria, and an inhabitant of the state of Arizona, but not a qualified elector, was employed as a cook by the appellant William Traux, Sr., in his restaurant in the city of Bisbee, Cochise county. Truax had nine employees, of whom seven were neither "native born citizens" of the United States nor qualified electors. After the election at which the act was passed Raich was informed by his employer that when the law was proclaimed, and solely by reason of its requirements and because of the fear of the penalties that would be incurred in case of its violation, he would be discharged. Thereupon, on December 15, 1914, Raich filed this bill in the district court of the United States for the district of Arizona, asserting, among other things, that the act denied to him the equal protection of the laws and hence was contrary to the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. Wiley E. Jones, the attorney general of the state, and W. G. Gilmore, the county attorney of Cochise county, were made defendants in addition to the employer Truax, upon the allegation that these officers would prosecute the employer unless he complied with its terms, and that in order to avoid such a prosecution the employer was about to discharge the complainant. Averring that there was no adequate remedy at law, the bill sought a decree declaring the act to be unconstitutional and restraining action thereunder.

Soon after the bill was filed, an application was made for an injunction pendente lite. After notice of this application, Truax was arrested for a violation of the act, upon a complaint prepared by one of the assistants in the office of the county attorney of Cochise county, and as it appeared that by reason of the determination of the officers to enforce the act there was danger of the complainant's immediate discharge from employment, the district judge granted a temporary restraining order.

The allegations of the bill were not controverted. The defendants joined in a motion to dismiss upon the grounds (1) that the suit was against the state of Arizona without its consent; (2) that it was sought to enjoin the enforcement of a criminal statute; (3) that the bill did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in equity; and (4) that there was an improper joinder of parties, and the plaintiff was not entitled to sue for the relief asked. The application for an interlocutory injunction and the motion to dismiss were then heard before three judges, as required by § 266 of the Judicial Code [36 Stat. at L. 1162, chap. 231, Comp. Stat. 1913, § 1243]. The motion to dismiss was denied and an interlocutory injunction restraining the defendants, the attorney general and the county attorney, and their successors and assistants, from enforcing the act against the defendant Truax, was granted. 219 Fed. 273. This direct appeal has been taken.

As the bill is framed upon the theory that the act is unconstitutional, and that the defendants, who are public officers concerned with the enforcement of the laws of the state, are about to proceed wrongfully to the complainant's injury through interference with his employment, it is established that the suit cannot be regarded as one against the state. Whatever doubt existed in this class of cases was removed by the decision in Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 155, 161, 52 L. ed. 714, 727, 729, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 932, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441, 14 Ann. Cas. 764, which has repeatedly been followed. Ludwig v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 216 U. S. 146, 54 L. ed. 423, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 280; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Andrews, 216 U. S. 165, 54 L. ed. 430, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 286; Herndon v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 218 U. S. 135, 155, 54 L. ed. 970, 976, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 633; Hopkins v. Clemson Agri. College, 221 U. S. 636, 643-645, 55 L. ed. 890, 894, 895, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 243, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 654; Philadelphia Co. v. Stimson, 223 U. S. 607, 620, 56 L. ed. 572, 576, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340; Home Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Los Angeles, 227 U. S. 278, 293, 57 L. ed. 510, 517, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 312.

It is also settled that while a court of equity, generally speaking, has "no jurisdiction over the prosecution, the punishment, or the pardon of crimes or misdemeanors" (Re Sawyer, 124 U. S. 200, 210, L.R.A.1916D.

31 L. ed. 402, 405, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 482), a distinction obtains, and equitable jurisdiction exists to restrain criminal prosecutions under unconstitutional enactments, when the prevention of such prosecutions is essential to the safeguarding of rights of property. Davis & F. Mfg. Co. v. Los Angeles, 189 U. S. 207, 218, 47 L. ed. 778, 780, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 408; Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223, 241, 49 L. ed. 160, 177, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18; Ex parte Young, supra; Philadelphia Co. v. Stimson, 223 U. S. 621, 56 L. ed. 577, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 340. The right to earn a livelihood and to continue in employment unmolested by efforts to enforce void enactments should similarly be entitled to protection in the absence of adequate remedy at law. It is said that the bill does not show an employment for a term, and that under an employment at will the complainant could be discharged at any time, for any reason or for no reason, the motive of the employer being immaterial. The conclusion, however, that is sought to be drawn, is too broad. The fact that the employment is at the will of the parties, respectively, does not make it one at the will of others. The employee has manifest interest in the freedom of the employer to exercise his judgment without illegal interference or compulsion and, by the weight of authority, the unjust defied interference of third persons is actionable although the employment is at will. Moran v. Dunphy, 177 Mass. 485, 487, 52 L.R.A. 115, 83 Am. St. Rep. 289, 59 N. E. 125; Berry v. Donovan, 188 Mass. 353, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 899, 108 Am. St. Rep. 499, 74 N. E. 603, 3 Ann. Cas. 738; Brennan v. United Hatters, 73 N. J. L. 729, 743, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 254, 118 Am. St. Rep. 727, 65 Atl. 165, 9 Ann. Cas. 698; Perkins v. Pendleton, 90 Me. 166, 60 Am. St. Rep. 252, 38 Atl. 96; Lucke v. Clothing Cutters' & T. Assembly, 77 Md. 396, 19 L.R.A. 408, 39 Am. St. Rep. 421, 26 Atl. 505; London Guarantee & Acci. Co. v. Horn, 101 Ill. App. 355, 206 Ill. 493, 99 Am. St. Rep. 185, 69 N. E. 526; Chiple v. Atkinson, 23 Fla. 206, 11 Am. St. Rep. 367, 1 So. 934; Blumenthal v. Shaw, 23 C. C. A. 590, 39 U. S. App. 490, 77 Fed. 954. It is further urged that the complainant cannot sue save to redress his own grievance (McCabe v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 235 U. S. 151, 162, 59 L. ed. 169, 174, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 691); that is, that the servant cannot complain for the master, and that it is the master who is subject to prosecution, and not the complainant. But the act undertakes to operate directly upon the employment of aliens, and if enforced would compel the employer to discharge a sufficient number of his employees to bring the alien quota within the prescribed limit. It sufficiently appears that the discharge of the complainant will be solely for the purpose of meeting the requirements of the act and avoiding threatened prosecution under its provisions. It is, therefore, idle to call the injury indirect or remote. It is also entirely clear that unless the enforcement of the act is restrained the complainant will have no adequate remedy, and hence we think that the case falls within the class in which, if the unconstitutionality of the act is shown, equitable relief may be had.

The question, then, is whether the act assailed is repugnant to the 14th Amendment. Upon the allegations of the bill, it must be assumed that the complainant, a native of Austria, has been admitted to the United States under the Federal law. He was thus admitted with the privilege of entering and abiding in the United States, and hence of entering and abiding in any state in the Union. (See Gegiow v. Uhl, decided October 25, 1915 [239 U. S. 3, 60 L. ed. — 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 2].) Being lawfully an inhabitant of Arizona, the complainant is entitled under the 14th Amendment to the equal protection of its laws. The description, "any person within its jurisdiction," as it has frequently been held, includes aliens. "These provisions," said the court in Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 369, 30 L. ed. 220, 226, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064 (referring to the due process and equal protection clauses of the Amendment), "are universal in their application, to all persons within the territorial jurisdiction, without regard to any differences of race, of color, or of nationality; and the equal protection of the laws is a pledge of the protection of equal laws." See also Wong Wing v. United States, 163 U. S. 228, 242, 41 L. ed. 140, 145, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 977; United States v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 695, 42 L. ed. 890, 907, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 456. The discrimination defined by the act does not pertain to the regulation or distribution of the public domain, or of the common property or resources of the people of the state, the enjoyment of which may be limited to its citizens as against both aliens and the citizens of other states. Thus in McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 396, 24 L. ed. 248, 249, the restriction to the citizens of Virginia of the right to plant oysters in one of its rivers was sustained upon the ground that the regulation related to the common property of the citizens of the state, and an analogous principle was involved in Patsone v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138, 145, 146, 58 L. ed. 539, 544, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281, where the discrimination against aliens upheld by the court had for its object the protection of wild game within the states, with respect to which it was said that the state could exercise its preserving power for the benefit of its own citizens if it pleased. The case now presented is not within these decisions, or within those relating to the devolution of real property (Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483, 25 L. ed. 628; Blythe v. Hinckley, 180 U. S. 333, 341, 342, 45 L. ed. 557, 562, 563, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390); and it should be added that the act is not limited to persons who are engaged on public work or receive the benefit of public moneys. The discrimination here involved is imposed upon the conduct of ordinary private enterprise.

The act, it will be observed, provides that every employer (whether corporation, partnership, or individual) who employs more than five workers at any one time, "regardless of kind or class of work, or sex of workers," shall employ "not less than 80 per cent qualified electors or native-born citizens of the United States or some subdivision thereof." It thus covers the entire field of industry with the exception of enterprises that are relatively very small. Its application in the present case is to employment in a restaurant the business of which requires nine employees. The purpose of an act must be found in its natural operation and effect (Henderson v. New York [Henderson v. Wickham] 92 U. S. 259, 268, 23 L. ed. 543, 547; Bailey v. Alabama, 219 U. S. 219, 244, 55 L. ed. 191, 202, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 145), and the purpose of this act is not only plainly shown by its provisions, but it is frankly revealed in its title. It is there described as "an act to protect the citizens of the United States in their employment against noncitizens of the United States, in Arizona." As the appellants rightly say, there has been no subterfuge. It is an act aimed at the employment of aliens, as such, in the businesses described. Literally, its terms might be taken to include with aliens those naturalized citizens who, by reason of change of residence, might not be at the time qualified electors in any subdivision of the United States; but we are dealing with the main purpose of the statute, definitely stated, in the execution of which the complainant is to be forced out of his employment as a cook in a restaurant, simply because he is an alien.

It is sought to justify this act as an exercise of the power of the state to make reasonable classifications in legislating to promote the health, safety, morals, and welfare of those within its jurisdiction. But this admitted authority, with the broad range of legislative discretion that it implies, does not go so far as to make it possible for the state to deny to lawful inhabitants, because of their race or nationality, the ordinary means of earning a livelihood. It requires no argument to show that the right to work for a living in the common occupations of the community is of the very essence of the personal freedom and opportunity that it was the purpose of the Amendment to secure. Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 762, 28 L. ed. 585, 588, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 31, 28 L. ed. 923, 924, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, supra; Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, 589, 590, 41 L. ed. 832, 835, 836, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 14, 59 L. ed. 441, L.R.A.1915C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240. If this could be refused solely upon the ground of race or nationality, the prohibition of the denial to any person of the equal protection of the laws would be a barren form of words. It is no answer to say, as it is argued, that the act proceeds upon the assumption that "the employment of aliens, unless restrained, was a peril to the public welfare." The discrimination against aliens in the wide range of employments to which the act relates is made an end in itself, and thus the authority to deny to aliens, upon the mere fact of their alienage, the right to obtain support in the ordinary fields of labor, is necessarily involved. It must also be said that reasonable classification implies action consistent with the legitimate interests of the state, and it will not be disputed that these cannot be so broadly conceived as to bring them into hostility to exclusive Federal power. The authority to control immigration—to admit or exclude aliens—is vested solely in the Federal government. Fong Yue Ting v. United States, 149 U. S. 698, 713, 37 L. ed. 905, 913, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1016. The assertion of an authority to deny to aliens the opportunity of earning a livelihood when lawfully admitted to the state would be tantamount to the assertion of the right to deny them entrance and abode, for in ordinary cases they cannot live where they cannot work. And, if such a policy were permissible, the practical result would be that those lawfully admitted to the country under the authority of the acts of Congress, instead of enjoying in a substantial sense and in their full scope the privileges conferred by the admission, would be segregated in such of the states as chose to offer hospitality.

It is insisted that the act should be supported because it is not "a total deprivation of the right of the alien to labor;" that is, the restriction is limited to those businesses in which more than five workers are employed, and to the ratio fixed. It is emphasized that the employer in any line of business who employs more than five workers may employ aliens to the extent of 20 per cent of his employees. But the fallacy of this argument at once appears. If the state is at liberty to treat the employment of aliens as in itself a peril, requiring restraint regardless of kind or class of work, it cannot be denied that the authority exists to make its measures to that end effective. Otis v. Parker, 187 U. S. 606, 47 L. ed. 323, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 168; New York ex rel. Silz v. Hesterberg, 211 U. S. 31, 53 L. ed. 75, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 10; Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Lynch, 220 U. S. 192, 57 L. ed. 184, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44. If the restriction to 20 per cent now imposed is maintainable, the state undoubtedly has the power, if it sees fit, to make the percentage less. We have nothing before us to justify the limitation to 20 per cent save the judgment expressed in the enactment, and if that is sufficient, it is difficult to see why the apprehension and conviction thus evidenced would not be sufficient were the restriction extended so as to permit only 10 per cent of the employees to be aliens, or even a less percentage; or were it made applicable to all businesses in which more than three workers were employed instead of applying to those employing more than five. We have frequently said that the legislature may recognize degrees of evil and adapt its legislation accordingly (Consolidated Coal Co. v. Illinois, 185 U. S. 203, 207, 46 L. ed. 872, 875, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 616; McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 539, 551, 53 L. ed. 315, 321, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206; Miller v. Wilson, 236 U. S. 372, 384, 59 L. ed. 627, 632, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 342); but underlying the classification is the authority to deal with that at which the legislation is aimed. The restriction now sought to be sustained is such as to suggest no limit to the state's power of excluding aliens from employment if the principle underlying the prohibition of the act is conceded. No special public interest with respect to any particular business is shown that could possibly be deemed to support the enactment, for, as we have said, it relates to every sort. The discrimination is against aliens as such in competition with citizens in the described range of enterprises, and in our opinion it clearly falls under the condemnation of the fundamental law.

The question of rights under treaties was not expressly presented by the bill, and, although mentioned in the argument, does not require attention, in view of the invalidity of the act under the 14th Amendment.

Order affirmed.

Mr. Justice McReynolds, dissenting:

I am unable to agree with the opinion of the majority of the court. It seems to me plain that this is a suit against a state, to which the 11th Amendment declares "the judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend." Fitts v. McGhee, 172 U. S. 516, 43 L. ed. 535, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 269. If Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 52 L. ed. 714, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 932, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 441, 14 Ann. Cas. 764, and the cases following it support the doctrine that Federal courts may enjoin the enforcement of criminal statutes enacted by state legislatures whenever the enjoyment of some constitutional right happens to be threatened with temporary interruption, they should be overruled in that regard. The simple, direct language of the Amendment ought to be given effect, not refined away.

That the challenged act is invalid I think admits of no serious doubt.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
Appt.,
v.

CLARENCE A. CRANE, Respnt.

(214 N. Y. 154, 108 N. E. 427.)

Constitutional law — right to raise question of constitutionality of statute.

1. A contractor, under prosecution for violation of a statute forbidding the employment of alien laborers, may raise the question of the constitutionality of the statute on the ground that it interferes with the rights of such laborers.

For other cases, see Action or Suit, I. c; Statutes, I. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — forbidding employment of aliens — equal protection of law.

2. Forbidding the employment of aliens on public work does not unconstitutionally deprive them of their liberty without due process of law or deny them the equal protection of the laws.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. a, 2, b; II. b, 4, b, (2) in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Treaty — exclusion of aliens from public work.

3. A provision of a treaty that the citizens of each of the high contracting parties shall have liberty to carry on trade and generally to do anything incident to or necessary for trade upon the same terms as natives, and shall receive protection and security for person and property, and enjoy in this respect the same rights and privileges as are granted to natives, does not prevent a state from forbidding the employment of citizens of the foreign contracting party on public work.

For other cases, see Treaties, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — As to prohibiting or restricting employment of aliens, see annotation following this case, post, 569.

The question who may raise the objection that a statute contains an unconstitutional discrimination is considered in the note to Pugh v. Pugh, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 954. L.R.A.1916D.

Constitutional law — giving money in aid of individual.

4. To forbid the employment of alien labor on public works in order to better the condition of citizen laborers does not violate a constitutional provision against giving the money of the state or municipality to individuals or private undertakings; at least, where another constitutional provision empowers the legislature to fix the wages of all employees upon the public works.

For other cases, see Public Money, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Statute — doubt as to constitutionality — effect.

5. In case of doubt as to the existence of conflict between a statute and the Constitution, the statute will prevail.

For other cases, see Statutes, I. o, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Collin, J., dissents.)

(February 25, 1915.)

APPEAL by the people from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, reversing a judgment of the Court of Special Sessions, First Division, of New York City convicting defendant of employing aliens as laborers in the performance of a contract for the construction of a municipal sewer, in violation of the Labor Law. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Robert S. Johnstone and George Z. Medalle, with Mr. Charles Albert Perkins, for appellant:

If the state has a right to prohibit certain things, it has the right to determine how it shall make the prohibition effective, —even to the extent of declaring that one who violates the statute shall be guilty of a penal offense and subject to imprisonment. The means by which the state may compel obedience to its lawful mandates rest entirely within its discretion.

Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 212 U. S. 86, 107, 111, 53 L. ed. 417, 428, 430, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 220; Coffey v. Harlan County, 204

U. S. 659, 662, 51 L. ed. 666, 668, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 305; Shevlin-Carpenter Co. v. Minnesota, 218 U. S. 57, 66-68, 70, 54 L. ed. 930, 934-936, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 663; Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 48 L. ed. 148, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124; People v. West, 106 N. Y. 293, 60 Am. Rep. 452, 12 N. E. 610; People v. D'Antonio, 150 App. Div. 109, 134 N. Y. Supp. 657; People ex rel. Williams Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Metz, 193 N. Y. 148, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 201, 85 N. E. 1070; People v. Orange County Road Constr. Co. 175 N. Y. 84, 65 L.R.A. 33, 67 N. E. 129.

It is not necessary to the validity of a penal statute that the legislature should declare on the face of it the policy or purpose for which it is enacted.

People v. West, 106 N. Y. 293, 60 Am. Rep. 452, 12 N. E. 610; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 57, 49 L. ed. 937, 941, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133.

The individual as an employer of labor, and the state as an employer of labor, stand on the same footing.

People v. Orange County Road Constr. Co. 175 N. Y. 90, 65 L.R.A. 33, 67 N. E. 129; People v. I. M. Ludington's Sons, 74 Misc. 363, 131 N. Y. Supp. 550; People v. Marcus, 185 N. Y. 257, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 282, 113 Am. St. Rep. 902, 77 N. E. 1073, 7 Ann. Cas. 118, 110 App. Div. 255, 97 N. Y. Supp. 322.

The state for itself and for each of its separate governmental agencies has the right to declare that, with respect to works of a public nature done by contract, the person contracting to do that work shall only employ such persons as the state may direct, and to place a restriction, if it sees fit to do so, upon the classes of persons who may be employed by the contractor.

People v. I. M. Ludington's Sons, 74 Misc. 363, 131 N. Y. Supp. 550; Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 48 L. ed. 148, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124; Ryan v. New York, 177 N. Y. 271, 69 N. E. 599; People ex rel. Williams Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Metz, 193 N. Y. 148, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 201, 85 N. E. 1070; Patson v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138, 58 L. ed. 539, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; People ex rel. Simon v. Bradley, 207 N. Y. 592, 101 N. E. 766.

With reference to a municipality, statutory regulations may be regarded as upon the same footing as they would be where the state itself is concerned.

Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 48 L. ed. 148, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124; Ryan v. New York, 177 N. Y. 271, 69 N. E. 599; People ex rel. Cossey v. Grout, 179 N. Y. 417, 72 N. E. 464, 1 Ann. Cas. 39; People ex rel. Williams Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Metz, 193 N. Y. 148, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 201, L.R.A.1916D.

85 N. E. 1070; People v. Morris, 13 Wend. 325; Darlington v. New York, 31 N. Y. 164, 88 Am. Dec. 248; Demarest v. New York, 74 N. Y. 161; Mt. Pleasant v. Beckwith, 100 U. S. 514, 525, 25 L. ed. 699, 701; Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. 266-268.

A state, by requiring a contractor with it or any of its municipalities or other subordinate agencies, to restrict the hours of labor to not more than eight hours a day, does not deprive any person of liberty or property without due process of law.

Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 937, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133; Lemieux v. Young, 211 U. S. 489, 53 L. ed. 295, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 174; People v. Luhra, 195 N. Y. 377, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 473, 89 N. E. 171; People ex rel. Lewisohn v. O'Brien, 176 N. Y. 253, 68 N. E. 353, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 97; People ex rel. Cossey v. Grout, 179 N. Y. 417, 72 N. E. 464, 1 Ann. Cas. 39; Ryan v. New York, 177 N. Y. 271, 69 N. E. 599.

An express stipulation not to employ "aliens" in the contract is unnecessary.

People ex rel. Rodgers v. Coler, 166 N. Y. 1, 52 L.R.A. 814, 82 Am. St. Rep. 605, 59 N. E. 716; Medina v. Dingledine, 211 N. Y. 24, 104 N. E. 1118.

If, in undertaking to do public work for the city, the state exacted as a condition that defendant should not employ aliens, he could waive any general constitutional right, and did so by accepting the service or privilege, knowing the conditions there-to attached by the statute.

People v. Rosenheimer, 209 N. Y. 115, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 977, 102 N. E. 530, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 161; Ex parte Kneeder, 243 Mo. 632, 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 622, 147 S. W. 983, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 923; Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 30 Am. Rep. 323; Ryan v. New York, 177 N. Y. 271, 69 N. E. 599; People ex rel. McLaughlin v. Police Comrs. 174 N. Y. 450, 95 Am. St. Rep. 596, 67 N. E. 78; Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 48 L. ed. 148, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124; People ex rel. Williams Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Metz, 193 N. Y. 148, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 201, 85 N. E. 1070.

There is no invalid classification.

Com. v. Hana, 195 Mass. 262, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 799, 122 Am. St. Rep. 251, 81 N. E. 149, 11 Ann. Cas. 514; Trageser v. Gray, 73 Md. 250, 9 L.R.A. 780, 25 Am. St. Rep. 587, 20 Atl. 905; Patson v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138, 58 L. ed. 539, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281, 231 Pa. 46, 79 Atl. 928; Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 529, 530, 533, 40 L. ed. 793, 797, 798, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600; McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24 L. ed. 248; Kohl v. Lehlback, 160 U. S. 293, 40 L. ed. 432, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 304; State v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 70 Conn. 590, 66 Am.

St. Rep. 138, 40 Atl. 465; Bloomfield v. State, 86 Ohio St. 253, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 726, 99 N. E. 309, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 629.

The statute is not in conflict with any treaty or with the 14th Amendment.

Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U. S. 258, 33 L. ed. 642, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 295; United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 23 L. ed. 588; Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall. 419, 435, 1 L. ed. 440, 447; Prevost v. Greneaux, 19 How. 7, 15 L. ed. 574; Jones v. Meehan, 175 U. S. 1, 32, 44 L. ed. 49, 62, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1; Hauenstein v. Lynham, 100 U. S. 483, 487, 25 L. ed. 628, 629; Chirac v. Chirac, 2 Wheat. 259, 4 L. ed. 234; Blythe v. Hinckley, 180 U. S. 333, 340, 341, 45 L. ed. 557, 561, 562, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390; United States v. Rauscher, 119 U. S. 407, 418, 30 L. ed. 425, 428, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 234, 6 Am. Crim. Rep. 222; Head Money Cases (Edye v. Robertson) 112 U. S. 580, 28 L. ed. 798, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 247; Com. v. Patson, 231 Pa. 46, 79 Atl. 928, 232 U. S. 138, 58 L. ed. 539, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281.

Laws are not unconstitutional merely because they affect property and property rights in existence at the time of the taking effect thereof, and even though they place restrictions upon its use, and impair and diminish its value.

Health Dept. v. Trinity Church, 145 N. Y. 32, 27 L.R.A. 710, 45 Am. St. Rep. 579, 39 N. E. 833; Tenement House Dept. v. Moesch, 179 N. Y. 325, 70 L.R.A. 704, 103 Am. St. Rep. 910, 72 N. E. 231, 1 Ann. Cas. 439, 203 U. S. 583, 51 L. ed. 328, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 781; McIntosh v. Johnson, 211 N. Y. 265, L.R.A.1915D, 603, 105 N. E. 414; Re Hering, 133 App. Div. 293, 117 N. Y. Supp. 747, 196 N. Y. 218, 89 N. E. 450; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. ed. 989; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 273; Eberle v. Michigan, 232 U. S. 700, 707, 58 L. ed. 803, 806, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 464; Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 32 L. ed. 623, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 231; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 992, 1257.

Mr. James F. McKinney, with Messrs. Edward M. Grout and Paul Grout, for respondent.

Section 14 of the Labor Law is void because it contravenes §§ 1 and 6 of article I. of the Constitution of the state of New York.

People v. Warren, 13 Misc. 615, 34 N. Y. Supp. 942; People ex rel. Rodgers v. Coler, 166 N. Y. 1, 52 L.R.A. 814, 82 Am. St. Rep. 605, 59 N. E. 716; Meyers v. New York, 58 App. Div. 534, 69 N. Y. Supp. 529; Ryan v. New York, 177 N. Y. 271, 69 N. E. 599; People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 1, 5 L.R.A. 559, 15 Am. St. Rep. 460, 22 N. E. L.R.A.1916D.

670; People ex rel. Williams Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Metz, 193 N. Y. 148, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 201, 85 N. E. 1070; Colon v. Lisk, 153 N. Y. 188, 60 Am. St. Rep. 609, 47 N. E. 302.

It is also unconstitutional in that it applies to contracts already in existence at the time of its enactment as well as to those subsequently executed, and that it makes acts penal which are otherwise innocent and harmless.

People v. Orange County Road Constr. Co. 175 N. Y. 84, 65 L.R.A. 33, 67 N. E. 129; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378; Green v. Shumway, 39 N. Y. 418; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. 277, 18 L. ed. 356; People v. West, 106 N. Y. 293, 60 Am. Rep. 452, 12 N. E. 610; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465, 17 N. E. 343; People v. Bowen, 182 N. Y. 1, 74 N. E. 489; People v. Hawkins, 157 N. Y. 1, 42 L.R.A. 490, 68 Am. St. Rep. 736, 51 N. E. 257; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29; People ex rel. Duryea v. Wilber, 198 N. Y. 1, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 357, 90 N. E. 1140, 19 Ann. Cas. 626.

The law is void because in contravention of art. 4, § 2, of the 5th and 14th Amendments of the United States Constitution, and the provisions of various treaties existing with foreign nations.

Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 39 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 28 L. ed. 923, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 357; Henderson v. New York (Henderson v. Wickham) 92 U. S. 259, 23 L. ed. 543; Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed. 23; Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U. S. 275, 23 L. ed. 550; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 937, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133; Colon v. Lisk, 153 N. Y. 188, 60 Am. St. Rep. 609, 47 N. E. 302; Sinnot v. Davenport, 22 How. 227, 16 L. ed. 243; Re Baldwin, 27 Fed. 187; Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mondou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 56 L. ed. 327, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; M'Culloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 405, 4 L. ed. 579, 601; Gandolfo v. Hartman, 16 L.R.A. 277, 40 Fed. 181; Workman v. New York, 179 U. S. 552, 45 L. ed. 314, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 212; People v. King, 110 N. Y. 418, 1 L.R.A. 293, 6 Am. St. Rep. 389, 18 N. E. 245; People ex rel. Tyroler v. Warden, 157 N. Y. 116, 43 L.R.A. 264, 68 Am. St. Rep. 763, 51 N. E. 1006; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Crescent City L. S. L. & S. H. Co. 111 U. S. 746, 28 L. ed. 585, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 652.

If the law is void as to the citizens of any alien nation, it is void as to all aliens.

Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378; Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. §§ 299, 300; United States v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214, 23 L. ed. 563; United States v. Harris, 106 U. S. 629, 27 L. ed. 290, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 601; Trade Mark Cases, 100 U. S. 82, 25 L. ed. 550; Poindexter v. Greenhow, 114 U. S. 270, 29 L. ed. 185, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 903, 962; Baldwin v. Franks, 120 U. S. 679, 30 L. ed. 766, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 656, 763; Rathbone v. Wirth, 150 N. Y. 459, 34 L.R.A. 408, 45 N. E. 15; Lawton v. Steele, 119 N. Y. 226, 7 L.R.A. 134, 16 Am. St. Rep. 813, 23 N. E. 878.

The contract agreement to comply with the law falls with the law itself.

People ex rel. Rodgers v. Coler, 166 N. Y. 1, 52 L.R.A. 814, 82 Am. St. Rep. 605, 59 N. E. 716; Knowles v. New York, 176 N. Y. 430, 68 N. E. 860; People ex rel. Cossey v. Grout, 179 N. Y. 417, 72 N. E. 464, 1 Ann. Cas. 39; Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 445, 22 L. ed. 365.

Mr. Jeremiah A. O'Leary, amicus curiæ.

Cardozo, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant is a contractor with the city of New York. His contract was for the construction of sewer basins. In doing the work, he employed laborers not citizens of the United States. One of them was an Italian. The nationality of the others is not shown. Because of the employment of these aliens, he has been convicted of violating § 14 of the Labor Law (Laws 1909, chap. 36; Consol. Laws, chap. 31). The section reads as follows:

"Section 14. Preference in Employment of Persons upon Public Works.—In the construction of public works by the state or a municipality, or by persons contracting with the state or such municipality, only citizens of the United States shall be employed; and in all cases where laborers are employed on any such public works, preference shall be given citizens of the state of New York. In each contract for the construction of public works a provision shall be inserted, to the effect that, if the provisions of this section are not complied with, the contract shall be void. All boards, officers, agents or employees of cities of the first class of the state, having the power to enter into contracts which provide for the expenditure of public money on public works, shall file in the office of the commissioner of labor the names and addresses of all contractors holding contracts with said cities of the state. Upon the letting of new contracts the names and addresses of such new contractors shall likewise be filed. Upon the demand of the commissioner of labor a contractor shall furnish a list of the names and addresses of all subcontractors in his employ. Each contractor performing work for any city of the first class shall keep a list of his employees, in which it shall be set forth whether they are naturalized or native-born citizens of the United States, together with, in case of naturalization, the date of naturalization and the name of the court where such naturalization was granted. Such lists and records shall be open to the inspection of the commissioner of labor. A violation of this section shall constitute a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500, or by imprisonment for not less than thirty nor more than ninety days, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

The appellate division has held that this statute violates both the state and the Federal Constitution. Its effect, we are told, is to deprive the excluded aliens of their liberty without due process of law, in that they are denied the right to labor on the public works. U. S. Const. 14th Amend. N. Y. Const. art. 1, § 6. The effect also is, we are told, to deny to the excluded aliens the equal protection of the laws. U. S. Const. 14th Amend. It is true the defendant is not within the excluded classes. Plymouth Coal Co. v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 531, 545, 58 L. ed. 713, 719, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 359. He is charged, however, with a crime, and the crime is said to have been the refusal to discriminate, and nothing else. The laborers whom he has employed are within the excluded classes; and, if they had a right to serve, he on his side had a right to employ. To refuse to give effect to an unlawful discrimination, and to do this at the instance of those against whom the discrimination is aimed, cannot constitute a crime. The question whether this statute does discriminate against aliens in violation of the Constitution is therefore, we think, before us.

The moneys of the state belong to the people of the state. They do not belong to aliens. The state, through its legislature, has given notice to its agents that in building its public works it wishes its own moneys to be paid to its own citizens, and, if not to them, then, at least, to citizens of the United States. The argument is made that in thus preferring its own citizens in the distribution of its own wealth it denies to the alien within its borders the equal protection of the laws.

The people, viewed as an organized unit, constitute the state. Penhallow v. Doane, 3 Dall. 54, 100, 1 L. ed. 507, 526; Texas

v. White, 7 Wall. 700, 720, 19 L. ed. 227, 235. The members of the state are its citizens. United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 549, 23 L. ed. 588, 590; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 162, 22 L. ed. 627. Those who are not citizens are not members of the state. Society thus organized is conceived of as a body corporate. Like any other body corporate, it may enter into contracts, and hold and dispose of property. In doing this it acts through agencies of government. These agencies, when contracting for the state, or expending the state's moneys, are trustees for the people of the state. Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 36 L. ed. 1018, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 110. It is the people—i. e., the members of the state—who are contracting or expending their own moneys through agencies of their own creation. Certain limitations on the powers of those agencies result from the nature of the trust. Ibid. Since government, in expending public moneys, is expending the moneys of its citizens, it may not, by arbitrary discriminations having no relation to the public welfare, foster the employment of one class of its citizens and discourage the employment of others. It is not fettered, of course, by any rule of absolute equality; the public welfare may at times be bound up with the welfare of a class; but public welfare, in a large sense, must, none the less, be the end in view. Every citizen has a like interest in the application of the public wealth to the common good, and the like right to demand that there be nothing of partiality, nothing of merely selfish favoritism, in the administration of the trust. But an alien has no such interest; and hence results a difference in the measure of his right. To disqualify citizens from employment on the public works is not only discrimination, but arbitrary discrimination. To disqualify aliens is discrimination, indeed, but not arbitrary discrimination; for the principle of exclusion is the restriction of the resources of the state to the advancement and profit of the members of the state. Ungenerous and unwise such discrimination may be. It is not for that reason unlawful.

The power of a state to discriminate between citizens and aliens in the distribution of its own resources is sanctioned alike by decisions of the courts and by long continued practice. Neither aliens nor the citizens of other states are invested by the Constitution with any interest in the common property of the people of this state. McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 394, 24 L. ed. 248. It has been held, therefore, that a state may deny to aliens, and even to citizens of another state, the right to plant oysters or to fish in public waters. L.R.A.1916D.

Ibid.; People v. Lowndes, 130 N. Y. 455, 462, 29 N. E. 751; Com. v. Hilton, 174 Mass. 29, 45 L.R.A. 475, 54 N. E. 362. It may restrict to its own citizens the enjoyment of its game. Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 529, 40 L. ed. 793, 797, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600; Patsone v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138, 145, 58 L. ed. 539, 544, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281. It may discriminate between citizens and aliens in its charitable institutions, or in other measures for the relief of paupers. Freund, Pol. Power, § 712; State Charities Law (Laws 1909, chap. 57) § 17. It may make the same discrimination in the distribution of its public lands (McCready v. Virginia, supra); its mines (Justice Min. Co. v. Lee, 21 Colo. 260, 52 Am. St. Rep. 216, 40 Pac. 444, 18 Mor. Min. Rep. 220); its forests; or other natural resources. It may deny to aliens the right to hold or inherit real estate, except where the right has been secured by treaty. Blythe v. Hinckley, 180 U. S. 333, 341, 45 L. ed. 557, 562, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 390. The origin of this last disability is historical (1 Pollock & M. History of English Law, 445), but the policy underlying it is akin to the policy that underlies the others. The principle that justifies these discriminations is that the common property of the state belongs to the people of the state, and hence that, in any distribution of that property, the citizen may be preferred.

To defeat this law it must, therefore, be held that the Constitution gives to the state a narrower liberty of choice in the expenditure of its own moneys than in the use or distribution of its other resources. I can find no justification for the supposed distinction. The construction of public works involves the expenditure of public moneys. To better the condition of its own citizens, and, it may be, to prevent pauperism among them, the legislature has declared that the moneys of the state shall go to the people of the state. The equal protection of the laws is due to aliens as to citizens (Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 369, 30 L. ed. 220, 226, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Lem Moon Sing v. United States, 158 U. S. 538, 547, 39 L. ed. 1082, 1085, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 967); but equal protection does not mean that those who have no interest in the common property of the state must share in that property on the same terms as those who have an interest.

In saying this, I assume that the purpose of the statute is not to promote efficiency in the doing of the work, but to discriminate in the distribution of the public wealth in favor of the citizen. There may be forms of employment where efficiency would be promoted by the employment of citizens, and, if the statute were restricted to such employments, its validity would not be doubtful. Just as the state may confine to citizens the right to hold public office, so, on the same ground, it may confine to citizens the right to serve the state in any way, whenever there is a relation between the exclusion of aliens and the promotion of efficiency. There are many lines of service where it is conceivable that the employment of citizens will make for a stable administration. If the government were to take over the railroads, there would be force in the argument that the trains should be run by citizens on whose loyalty the government might depend in times of national disaster. We have grown accustomed to the government's administration of the mails, and none of us doubts that the service is one from which aliens may be excluded. In all these branches of employment it is not difficult to discover some relation between citizenship and efficiency. The prohibition of alien labor in this statute is, however, unrestricted. It applies to the most temporary and occasional service, and to the lowest grades of labor. Even in those cases, it is for the legislature, according to the people's claim, to determine whether some relation exists between efficiency and citizenship; between loyalty in service and service by the loyal. Such tests of fitness have a fair relation to permanent positions where a spirit of allegiance to the employer may be cultivated. It seems far-fetched, however, to apply them to the task of day laborers excavating for sewers or digging trenches for a subway. The relation in such circumstances is so remote that we may consider it illusory. At least I shall so assume for the purpose of this discussion. The statute has been frankly defended at our bar as a legitimate preference of citizens, not to promote the efficiency of the work, but to promote the welfare of the men preferred; and from that aspect it will be frankest and safest for us to view it. To concede that such a preference was intended is not to condemn the statute as invalid. The state, in determining what use shall be made of its own moneys, may legitimately consult the welfare of its own citizens, rather than that of aliens. Whatever is a privilege, rather than a right, may be made dependent upon citizenship. In its war against poverty, the state is not required to dedicate its own resources to citizens and aliens alike. "The relief of the poor—the care of those who are unable to care for themselves—is among the unquestioned objects of public duty." Brewer, J., in State ex rel. Griffith v. Osawkee Twp. 14 Kan. 424, 19 Am. Rep. 99. The modern state everywhere is mindful of that duty. It has extended its bounty in large measure, though not without some discrimination, to aliens; but it would not trench upon their rights under the Constitution if it were to confine its bounty to its citizens. As it may discriminate between citizens and aliens in relief, so also it may discriminate in employment. When payment for public works is to be made from public funds, it may prefer in employment its own citizens, since to them the legislature may believe that the first duty is owing. United States v. Realty Co. 163 U. S. 427, 440, 41 L. ed. 215, 219, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1120. Everywhere throughout the world the state, in its relation to the laborer, is assuming a larger obligation; but it cannot be that it owes this obligation to citizens and aliens in equal measure. In Great Britain there was enacted in 1908 a statute providing for old-age pensions, restricted, it may be noted, to British subjects. 8 Edw. VII. chap. 40, § 1. In the same Kingdom there was enacted in 1911 a statute providing for insurance against unemployment. 1 & 2 Geo. V. chap. 55. In our own country the workmen's compensation laws that have been adopted in many states are phrases of the same world-wide movement. We are not concerned at this time with the validity of these measures for the alleviation of the laborer's lot. We mention them as illustrations of an expanding consciousness in the modern state that relief against unemployment, both after the event and before it, is part of the state's function. In one of our states the courts have sustained a law providing for state help to farmers. State v. Nelson County, 1 N. D. 88, 8 L.R.A. 283, 26 Am. St. Rep. 609, 45 N. W. 33. How far the state will go beyond its own citizens in thus applying its own resources to the betterment of conditions the legislature must say. Preferences to relieve against pauperism after it has become an accomplished fact do not violate the rights of aliens. Preferences to avert a threatened pauperism, or to render pauperism impossible, stand on the same footing. In each instance the state announces as its public policy that the common property shall be used for the benefit of its common owners.

The argument is made, however, that there is a distinction between the right of government to exclude aliens from its own employment and the right to exclude aliens from employment by independent contractors. The ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States in Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 48 L. ed. 148, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124, and in Ellis v. United States, 206 U. S. 246, 51 L. ed. 1047, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600, 11 Ann. Cas. 589, goes far to invalidate the distinction. The first case considered a statute of Kansas prohibiting the employment of laborers for more than eight hours a day on any public work. The statute was held valid in its application to laborers in the service of contractors. The second case sustained a like statute, passed by Congress, to regulate employment on public works in the District of Columbia. The presence of an independent contractor, interposed between the state and the laborer, did not check the power of the government to prescribe the hours of labor. But, without reference to those decisions, the distinction is inadequate. In a real and substantial sense, it is the money of the state that is paid to the laborers, though the distribution is made through the medium of contractors. That money constitutes the fund out of which the wages of laborers are payable. This is not only true as an economic and social fact; it is true also as a statement of the legal rights of those concerned. The state (lien law, Laws 1909, chap. 38, § 5) has given to any laborer employed by a contractor in the construction of a public improvement a lien for the value of his labor upon the moneys of the state applicable to that improvement. The state has thus defined the channels through which the payment must be made. It has assumed a direct obligation not only to its own employees, but also to the employees of contractors on its works. To say that the latter class of employees receive not the state's moneys, but those of the contractors, is to put form above substance. The great problems of public law do not turn upon these nice distinctions. The fundamental powers of the state and the fundamental rights of man are built upon a broader basis. The truth and substance of the situation is that the contractor's employees are doing the state's work, and are paid out of the state's moneys; and this truth ought not to be obscured by distinctions between contractors and servants established to fix the gradations of civil liability.

I do not ignore what was said in People v. Orange County Road Constr. Co. 175 N. Y. 84, 65 L.R.A. 33, 67 N. E. 129. There is a suggestion in that case, but not a ruling, that a distinction exists between employees of the state and those of a contractor in respect of the state's power to regulate the hours of labor. The later case of Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 48 L. ed. 148, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124, has obliterated the distinction, and so it was conceded in People ex rel. Cossey v. Grout, 179 N. Y. 417, 72 N. E. 464, 1 Ann. Cas. 39. It is now perceived that all persons engaged on the public works, from the highest officers to the lowest laborers, through all the gradations of contractors and subcontractors, are, in a very vital sense, in the service of the state. The state has a legitimate concern in the selection of the men to be employed from one extreme of the official hierarchy to the other. Whether they are called officers or employees does not matter. The power of the legislature depends upon the substance of things, and not upon names and labels.

To hold that this statute violates the Federal Constitution would be to ignore the contrary judgment expressed in the Constitutions and legislation of many other states. There is a like provision in the Constitution of Arizona (article 18, § 10), a Constitution which was approved (so far as this provision is concerned) by joint resolution of Congress (37 Stat. at L. 39, No. 8). There are like provisions in the Constitution of Idaho (art. 13, § 5), and in that of Wyoming (art. 19, § 1), which were also approved by Congress. There is a like provision, restricted, however, to Chinese, in the Constitution of California (art. 19, § 3). There are like provisions applicable to all aliens in the statutes of Massachusetts (Acts of 1909, chap. 514, § 21), New Jersey (Compiled Statutes of New Jersey 1910, p. 3023, § 15), Pennsylvania (2 Purdon's Dig. 13th ed. p. 2172, § 8), and California (act No. 127, General Laws of California 1906). Legislation similar in purpose may be found in Montana (Rev. Code, § 2250), Nevada (Rev. Laws of Nevada 1912, § 3483), Oregon (Laws of Oregon, § 6267), and Hawaii (Acts of Congress, Rev. Laws 1905). Unless the case against this statute is a clear one, the courts may not ignore this concurrence of opinion. Lemieux v. Young, 211 U. S. 489, 493, 53 L. ed. 295, 299, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 174.

In thus holding that the power exists to exclude aliens from employment on the public works, we do not, however, commit ourselves to the view that the power exists to make arbitrary distinctions between citizens. We do not hold that the government may create a privileged caste among the members of the state. Smith v. Texas, 233 U. S. 630, 638, 58 L. ed. 1129, 1133, L.R.A. 1915D, 677, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 420. We do not hold that it may discriminate among its citizens on the ground of faith or color. Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 25 L. ed. 664, 3 Am. Crim. Rep. 515; Gibson v. Mississippi, 162 U. S. 565, 40 L. ed. 1075, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 904; Rogers v. Alabama, 192 U. S. 226, 231, 48 L. ed. 417, 419, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 257. A citizen may not be disqualified because of faith or color from service as a juror. Strauder v. West Virginia, supra. For like reasons we assume that he may not be disqualified, because of faith or color from serving the state in public office or employment. It is true that the individual, though a citizen, has no legal right in any particular instance to be selected as contractor by the government. It does not follow, however, that he may be declared disqualified from service, unless the proscription bears some relation to the advancement of the public welfare. Strauder v. West Virginia, supra, 100 U. S. at page 305, 25 L. ed. 664. The legislature has unquestionably the widest latitude of judgment in determining whether such a relation exists, but we are not required to hold that there is no remedy against sheer oppression. Where the line must be drawn we do not now determine. We do not say that the legislature could single out A and B by name, and declare that, though citizens, they should never be employed on any public work. It may well be that such disqualification would be illegal under the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution, in that it would deny to the citizens thus arbitrarily excluded the equal protection of the laws, and illegal also under our state Constitution, which provides (art. 1, § 1): "No member of this state shall be disfranchised, or deprived of any of the rights or privileges secured to any citizen thereof, unless by the law of the land, or the judgment of his peers."

This opinion has failed of its purpose if it has failed to demonstrate that those provisions are without application to the exclusion of aliens from the enjoyment of the state's resources.

It must also be evident that nothing in this opinion gives countenance to the view that the government may deny to aliens the right to engage in any private trade, or calling on terms of equality with citizens. Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 369, 30 L. ed. 220, 226, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Re Tiburcio Parrott (C. C.) 6 Sawy. 349, 1 Fed. 481. If the calling is one that the state, in the exercise of its police power, may prohibit either absolutely or conditionally by the exaction of a license, the fact of alienage may justify a denial of the privilege. Patson v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138, 58 L. ed. 539, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Com. v. Patson, 231 Pa. E. 46, 79 Atl. 928; Com. v. Hana, 195 Mass. 262, 11 L.R.A. (N.S.) 799, 22 Am. St. Rep. 251, 81 N. E. 149, 11 Ann. Cas. 514; Bloomfield v. State, 86 Ohio St. 253, 99 N. E. 309, 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 726, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 629; State v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 70 Conn. 590, 600, 66 Am. St. Rep. 138, 40 Atl. 465. There must, however, be some relation in such cases between the exclusion of the alien and the protection of the public welfare. But, subject only to the exercise of the police power, it L.R.A.1916D.

is true that, in dealings between man and man, the alien and the citizen trade and labor on equal terms. It is a denial of the equal protection of the laws when the government, in its capacity as a lawmaker, regulating, not its own property, but private business, bars the alien from the right to trade and labor. It is not a denial of the equal protection of the laws when the government, in its capacity as proprietor, issuing a mandate to its own agents (United States v. Martin, 94 U. S. 400, 24 L. ed. 128; Carter, Law, Its Origin, Growth, and Functions, p. 230), bars the alien from the right to share in the property which it holds for its own citizens.

Because the state may thus discriminate in favor of the citizen in regulating employment on its public works, it does not follow, however, that it may exclude aliens from the enjoyment of those works after they have been completed. Aliens may use the public highways as freely as citizens. Aliens may use the railroads and other agencies of transportation as freely as citizens. The reason is that the right to move about from place to place within the state is incidental to the right to live within the state. There are probably many other public works so intimately related, if not to life, at least to health and comfort, that merely arbitrary or oppressive discrimination against the alien in regulating their use would be a denial by the state of the equal protection of the laws. To attempt to draw the line in advance is futile. The question must in each case be whether the use is one that is reasonably incidental to life under modern conditions in a civilized state, or whether it is rather a privilege which the state may grant or may withhold, to be employed by the state on the public works, and to receive payment out of the public purse, is, I think, a privilege, rather than a right. Atkin v. Kansas, supra, 191 U. S. at page 223, 48 L. ed. 158, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124.

The argument is made that, if the statute is not invalid as in conflict with the 14th Amendment of the Constitution, it is invalid as in conflict with treaties between the United States and foreign nations. Typical of these treaties is the one with Italy. It provides: "The citizens of each of the high contracting parties shall have liberty to travel in the states and territories of the other, to carry on trade, wholesale and retail, to hire and occupy houses and warehouses, to employ agents of their choice, and generally to do anything incident to, or necessary for trade, upon the same terms as the natives of the country, submitting themselves to the laws there established. The citizens of each of the high contracting parties shall receive, in the states and territories of the other, the most constant protection and security for their persons and property, and shall enjoy in this respect the same rights and privileges as are or shall be granted to the natives, on their submitting themselves to the conditions imposed upon the natives." [17 Stat. at L. 846, arts. 2, 3].

This treaty, in my judgment, does not limit the power of the state, as a proprietor, to control the construction of its own works and the distribution of its own moneys.

The argument is also made that discrimination between citizens and aliens may increase the cost of public works by limiting the supply of labor, and that to do this in order to better the condition of our laborers is to violate restrictions of the Constitution of the state. Article 8, § 9, of the state Constitution provides that "neither the credit nor the money of the state shall be given or loaned to or in aid of any association, corporation or private undertaking."

Article 8, § 10, provides: "No county, city, town or village shall hereafter give any money or property, or loan its money or credit to or in aid of any individual, association or corporation, or become directly or indirectly the owner of stock in, or bonds of, any association or corporation; nor shall any such county, city, town or village be allowed to incur any indebtedness except for county, city, town or village purposes. This section shall not prevent such county, city, town or village from making such provision for the aid or support of its poor as may be authorized by law."

The money that goes to laborers on public works is not given or loaned in aid of individuals within the meaning of these provisions. It is paid for service rendered. That is the direct and primary purpose of the payment. The primary and direct purpose being legal, the payment does not become illegal because a collateral and secondary purpose may be to protect a large class of the community against the peril of pauperism. In the long run, the payment may be found to have lessened the public burdens rather than to have increased them. Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 110, 111, 55 L. ed. 112, 116, 117, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1062, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 186, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487. The same argument was made against the validity of the statute for an eight-hour day. It was said that the result would be to increase the cost for the benefit of favored classes. The legislature is now empowered by the Constitution to fix the wages and salaries of all employees upon the public works. This authority embraces the direct increase of expense by increasing salaries beyond the minimum fixed by competition. It must also embrace the indirect increase of expense by regulations of employment tending to diminish competition.

I have not overlooked, though I have not attempted to analyze, the decisions of this court in which the statutes governing the hours of labor on public works were the subject of discussion. People ex rel. Rodgers v. Coler, 166 N. Y. 1, 52 L.R.A. 814, 82 Am. St. Rep. 605, 59 N. E. 716; People v. Orange County Road Constr. Co. 175 N. Y. 84, 65 L.R.A. 33, 67 N. E. 129; Ryan v. New York, 177 N. Y. 271, 69 N. E. 599; People ex rel. Cossey v. Grout, 179 N. Y. 417, 72 N. E. 464, 1 Ann. Cas. 39. The specific proposition there decided has ceased to be law in this state. So far as it was founded on the theory of a conflict between the statute and the Federal Constitution, it was overruled by the United States Supreme Court in Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 48 L. ed. 148, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124. So far as it was founded on the theory of a conflict between the statute and the Constitution of this state, it was superseded by the amendment of the Constitution in 1905. Const. art. 12, § 9; People ex rel. Williams Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Metz, 193 N. Y. 148, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 201, 85 N. E. 1070. The earlier cases are no longer authorities, therefore, for any proposition actually decided. Their reasoning may still instruct, but no longer control, us. They were decided in nearly every instance by a bare majority. In at least one instance a majority did not unite in anything more than the result. It would serve no useful purpose to review the varying opinions at this time. It is enough to say that they are not decisive of the case at hand.

This statute must be obeyed unless it is in conflict with some command of the Constitution, either of the state or of the nation. It is not enough that it may seem to us to be impolitic or even oppressive. It is not enough that in its making great and historic traditions of generosity have been ignored. We do not assume to pass judgment upon the wisdom of the legislature. Our duty is done when we ascertain that it has kept within its power. Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 515, 30 Am. Rep. 323; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 398, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465, 17 N. E. 343; Atkin v. Kansas, supra. "It must be remembered that legislatures are ultimate guardians of the liberties and welfare of the people in quite as great a degree as the courts." Holmes, J., in Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v.

May, 194 U. S. 267, 270, 48 L. ed. 971, 972, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 638, 639.

If doubt exists whether there is a conflict between the statute and the Constitution, the statute must prevail. Barrett v. Indiana, 229 U. S. 28, 31, 57 L. ed. 1050, 1053, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 692; People v. Gillson, supra. These guiding principles are not to be honored by lip service only. Mischiefs and hardship, it is said, will follow the enforcement of this law. If that is so, we cannot help it. To correct those evils, if they shall develop, will be the province of legislation. The statute does not withhold from the alien the rights secured to him by the Constitution; and we must enforce it as the law.

The judgment of the Appellate Division should be reversed, and the judgment of conviction affirmed.

Chase, Hogan and Miller, J., concur.

Willard Bartlett, Ch. J., concurring:

Whatever may be my own views as to the wisdom or fairness of the statute before us, I am entirely clear that it is constitutional, and that the question is settled by the decision both of the United States Supreme Court and of this court.

These decisions establish the proposition that the state in the prosecution of a public work stands in just the same position as an individual; that it may prescribe the conditions on which it will contract for such work; and that it may make the violation of his contract on the part of the contractor a criminal offense. It is so held in Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 223, 48 L. ed. 148, 158, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124, 128, where the Supreme Court of the United States said that "no employee is entitled, of absolute right and as a part of his liberty, to perform labor for the state; and no contractor for public work can excuse a violation of his agreement with the state by doing that which the statute under which he proceeds distinctly and lawfully forbids him to do."

This language was quoted with approval by this court in People ex rel. Williams Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Metz, 193 N. Y. 148, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 201, 85 N. E. 1070, and the doctrine therein declared thus received the sanction of all the judges who sat in that case.

In Ellis v. United States, 206 U. S. 246, 256, 51 L. ed. 1047, 1052, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600, 601, 11 Ann. Cas. 589, which involved the validity of a Federal labor law, it was held that "the government, purely as contractor, in the absence of special laws, may stand like a private person, but by making a contract it does not give up its power to make a law."
L.R.A.1916D.

And in the exercise of this power it may declare a violation of his contract by the contractor to be a crime. In answer to a suggestion that the purpose of the statute was to secure to labor certain advantages in conditions over which Congress has not general control, Mr. Justice Holmes said that the existence of such a motive would not render a law unconstitutional which was otherwise valid, and that the power which Congress has over the mode in which contracts with the United States shall be performed could not be limited by a speculation as to motives.

However subsequent legislation or adjudications may have modified the effect of the decision in People v. Orange County Road Constr. Co. 175 N. Y. 84, 90, 65 L.R.A. 33, 67 N. E. 129, 131, it still remains true, as was said by Judge Cullen in that case, that "if the state itself prosecutes a work it may dictate every detail of the service required in its performance,—prescribe the wages of workmen, their hours of labor, and the particular individuals who may be employed. . . . The state in this respect stands the same as its citizens."

How great the rights of private citizens are in their status as employers is aptly illustrated by Jacobs v. Cohen, 183 N. Y. 207, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 292, 111 Am. St. Rep. 730, 76 N. E. 5, 5 Ann. Cas. 280, where this court held that the contract between an employer and a labor union whereby the employer agreed for a certain period to employ only members of the union was not violative of public policy or otherwise forbidden by law. In the opinion we reiterated the assertion made in National Protective Asso. v. Cumming, 170 N. Y. 315, 341, 58 L.R.A. 135, 88 Am. St. Rep. 648, 63 N. E. 369, 377, that every man has a right "to carry on his business in any lawful way that he sees fit. He may employ such men as he pleases, and is not obliged to employ those whom, for any reason, he does not wish to have work for him."

It seems to me that the only constitutional prohibition which can be relied upon with any confidence to invalidate the statute forbidding the employment of aliens upon the public works of this state is the provision of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, which declares that no state shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

If it is a denial of the equal protection of the laws for an employer of labor to refuse to afford a designated class of persons an opportunity to work for him, it must be conceded that this statute was enacted in disregard of the constitutional provision thus invoked.

I can find no reason to suppose, however, that the 14th Amendment was designed to limit or restrict the rights of a state as an employer of labor. Other employers, individual or corporate, possess the undoubted and absolute right to withhold employment from whomever they see fit. The Constitution could hardly have been intended to deprive the states of equality with private employers in this respect; yet, if the 14th Amendment invalidates the statute in question, the great railroad corporation which is erecting its new building in Albany to-day may refuse to allow aliens to work upon it, while the state of New York, in repairing the capitol, must give aliens an equal opportunity with citizens to aid in its reconstruction.

The statute is nothing more, in effect, than a resolve by an employer as to the character of his employees. An individual employer would communicate the resolve to his subordinates by written instructions or by word of mouth. The state, an incorporeal master, speaking through the legislature, communicates the resolve to its agents by enacting a statute. Either the private employer or the state can revoke the resolve at will. Entire liberty of action in these respects is essential unless the state is to be deprived of a right which has heretofore been deemed a constituent element of the relationship of master and servant; namely, the right of the master to say who his servants shall (and therefore shall not) be.

If the alien labor law under consideration is violative of the 14th Amendment, the preference given to veterans by the Constitution of the state of New York must likewise be invalid. Const. of New York, art. 5, § 9. Appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state and of all civil divisions thereof, including cities and villages, are thereby required to be made according to merit and fitness to be ascertained as far as practicable by examinations, which, so far as practicable, shall be competitive; "provided, however, that honorably discharged soldiers and sailors from the Army and Navy of the United States in the late Civil War, who are citizens and residents of this state, shall be entitled to preference in appointment and promotion, without regard to their standing on any list from which such appointment or promotion may be made." Here is a preference in the public service based wholly upon a status acquired half a century ago, and a preference of one class of citizens over all others. There could not be a clearer case of discrimination. I think that the Federal Constitution permits such discrimination; but I should not think so if it be held that the statute in question here is in conflict with the 14th Amendment.

The differences of opinion upon the present appeal are necessarily radical, and depend upon the question whether the denial of an opportunity to work for the state is a denial of the equal protection of the laws. For the reasons which I have briefly stated, in addition to those set forth so clearly and cogently in the opinion of my Brother Cardozo, I think this question must be answered in the negative. I do not believe that either the 14th Amendment or any other of the constitutional provisions relied upon by the respondent was designed to limit the right of the state to choose its own servants.

Seabury, J., concurring:

This case in no way involves the right of private citizens to employ aliens in private work. It presents only the question of the right of the state to exclude aliens from employment upon its public works. The distinction is vital, and must be kept in mind throughout the discussion of this case.

I concur in the opinion that the statute is constitutional. I agree that, because of the public character of the work to which the statute relates, the discrimination against aliens is not an arbitrary discrimination. I agree also that the law cannot be upheld upon the ground that it is designed to promote efficiency upon the public works of the state. The present case, as I view it, does not involve merely the right of the state to prescribe the manner in which its public money may be distributed. The money expended for public works would necessarily be expended whether citizens or aliens were engaged in constructing them. The money paid by the state for this purpose is not a gratuity, but is paid as compensation for services rendered, and the rendering of these services creates a public value at least equal to the money expended. The distribution of public money for this purpose is only an incident of the state's exercise of its right as proprietor and owner of its public works. This case involves the right of the state as owner or proprietor to exclude aliens from working upon its public works, and to accord to its own citizens a preference in being employed upon such public works, over other citizens of the United States. No citizen, as an incident of citizenship, has any right to be employed upon public works. If to be employed upon public works is in any sense a right or privilege under the state Constitution (article 1, § 1), it is equally so under the provisions of the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution. Thus, if the right to be employed on public works is a right or privilege incident to citizenship, the state might discriminate against aliens, but it could not, under the provisions of the Federal Constitution, discriminate in favor of its own citizens against citizens of another state. Yet the state may discriminate as between its own citizens and citizens of a sister state, and even in favor of some of its citizens and against others as to the use that shall be made of its own property. People v. Lowndes, 130 N. Y. 455, 29 N. E. 751; Haney v. Compton, 36 N. J. L. 507; Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U. S. 519, 40 L. ed. 793, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600; Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 371, Fed. Cas. No. 3,230; Com. v. Hilton, 174 Mass. 29, 45 L.R.A. 475, 54 N. E. 362; McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24 L. ed. 248. No citizen has any constitutional right or privilege to be employed upon public work, or any immunity against discrimination in this respect, either under article 1, § 1, of the Constitution of the state, or under the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution. The legislature has the right to prescribe who shall work upon its public works. Public works are public property. As such, they belong wholly to the sovereign power of the state. The manner in which they shall be built is within the function of the sovereign power to prescribe. This regulation and control is a part of the police power of the state. The police power of the state is not limited to exerting control over private property to promote the general welfare. It is by virtue of this power that the state possesses the exclusive right to construct and control its public property. I am aware that objection has been made to the use of the term "police power" to include the regulation by the state of its internal affairs, on the ground that it uses the terminology that has often been associated with the regulation of private affairs external to the state. Notwithstanding this objection, the nature of the power exerted is the same, whether it is exercised over the public property of the state itself or over the private property of the citizen. The highest judicial authority exists for applying the term "police power" to both public and private property. New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. P. & Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 650, 29 L. ed. 516, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252; People v. Kerr, 27 N. Y. 188, 213; Haney v. Compton, 36 N. J. L. 507. In New Orleans Gaslight Co. v. Louisiana Light & H. P. & Mfg. Co. 115 U. S. 650, 661, 29 L. ed. 516, 520, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 252, 258, the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking of the police power, said: "We may, not improperly, refer to that power the authority of the state to create educational and charitable institutions, and provide for the establishment, maintenance, and control of public highways, turnpike roads, canals, wharves, ferries, and telegraph lines, and the draining of swamps."

Questions of great difficulty may present themselves as to how far the state may impose restraints or limitations upon the exercise of individual rights over private property, but no such questions are presented as to public property. Public property is in its very nature subject to social control. The authority of the state over all public works and public undertakings is supreme, and this is so whether the public works are undertaken directly by the state or by a municipality or any other agency of the state. Just as the individual may, generally speaking, do what he will with his own, so the state may exercise a like control over public property. In the same way that private property is subject to individual control, so public property is subject to governmental control. The provisions of the state and Federal Constitutions guarantying liberty and property refer to individual liberty and private property. They do not confer upon the individual, be he citizen or alien, the right to interfere with the use that the state may make of its public property or any regulation which it may prescribe as to the manner in which its public works shall be built. The constitutional safeguards which surround the liberty of the individual confer upon him no right or liberty to engage in public work. The statute under consideration does not involve governmental interference with individual liberty. The attempt of the contractors engaged in public work to deprive the state of the right to prescribe the conditions upon which the work shall be done is the assertion of the right of individual interference with the government. The manner in which public works shall be built is a matter wholly within the sphere of social, as distinguished from individual, control. We cannot lose sight of the fact that there are these separate and distinct spheres of action. It may not be possible to draw with precision the line of demarcation between them, but we all nevertheless recognize that there is a line of demarcation to be drawn. As we deny to the state the right to intrude into the individual sphere of action and to prescribe what we shall believe, and, except where the public welfare is involved, what we shall publish, or to supervise private morals, so the state denies to the individual the right to intrude within its social sphere of action and insist that he has a right to be employed upon its public works. The right of state control springs from the public or social character of the work. Owing to the narrow sphere to which the state's activities have, in the past, been limited, the assertion of the state's right of public property seems to have been confined principally to unappropriated lands, waters, wild beasts, fishes, and birds, but over those things to which the state's right of property attached the old books recognized the proprietary right of the sovereign power, which carried with it the right to discriminate either against subjects or foreigners. Grotius, Rights of War & Peace, bk. 2, chap. 2, § 5. In recent times the state's proprietary interests have been greatly extended. Over those interests it enjoys the right of a proprietor or owner. The public property of the modern state is not inconsiderable. It owns its highways, harbors, canals, aqueducts, bridges, markets, libraries, art galleries, and many other valuable possessions. Over all these things and others of a like nature the state is now proprietor and owner. Its sphere of ownership is being constantly extended. Formerly the functions represented by the public properties enumerated above were left entirely to individual initiative, as, indeed, were also such functions as the Army, Navy, police, and courts of justice now perform. The performance of these services is necessary to the enjoyment of modern social life, and the welfare of the citizenship of the state depends upon their proper administration. The uses to which these public properties shall be put are to be determined by the legislature, subject only to the Constitution. There are, generally speaking, no provisions of the Constitution that impose limitations upon the exercise of the legislative power over these properties, except such as are inherently attached to the exercise of the police power. Nor is it apparent that this extension of the state's activity has in any way violated the liberty of the citizen. The exercise by the state of these activities may in a negative sense have restricted the liberty of some, but in a positive sense the freedom of all has been increased on account of them. In the building of the state's public work we have an example through the exercise of the powers of government of the organized co-operation of our citizenship. In its capacity of owner and proprietor, the state is not hampered by restrictions as to the manner in which it shall cause its public works to be constructed. There are many uses to which an owner or proprietor may put his property which do not violate the rights of others. The state in its capacity of proprietor or owner may make such use of its own public property as it deems conducive to the social well-being. In the use that it makes of such property it is not required to refrain from discrimination. The largest measure of benefit may sometimes result from discrimination. Whether or not discriminations made in regard to public property sustain a relation to the public welfare is for the legislature, and not the courts, to determine. The modern state, through the ownership of its public property, affords opportunities for public co-operation. The motive which actuates it is service, not profit. Its service, to be effective, must be rendered where it is needed, and in rendering it it is not obliged, in the use of its public property, to secure immediate equality of benefits to all; it is sufficient if the ultimate result be to promote the general welfare. The public property or commonwealth should, of course, be used to promote the general welfare, but the restraints or checks to which government is by constitutional provisions subjected, when it acts in reference to private property, have no application where it acts in relation to public property. Within this sphere and in regard to this public property, government is free to prescribe such regulations as will best promote the general welfare. Where the state has, in a particular sphere, replaced private enterprise, as it has replaced it in the control and building of its public works, it cannot effectively accomplish its purpose if it is to be hampered by the same restraints which are imposed upon it when it exercises its authority over private property. Where it acts in its capacity of proprietor or owner in reference to its own public property, these restraints can only serve to hamper and embarrass the state in the exercise of its rights of ownership. If, in the exercise of the police power, the state may regulate private property to promote the general welfare of its citizens, a fortiori it may, by virtue of that power, exercise control over its own public property.

Public works, like other public property, are within the police power of the state. The character of the work to which the statute under consideration applies being public, the statute itself is an exercise by the sovereign of its police power. The statute being an exercise of the police power of the state, it necessarily follows that the provisions of the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution and article 1, § 1, of the Constitution of this state, so far as they guarantee the right of individual liberty and property, are without application. As Mr. Justice Field said: "No one has ever pretended, that I am aware of, that the 14th Amendment interferes in any respect with the police power of the state." Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall. 129, 138, 21 L. ed. 929, 932.

In Olsen v. Smith, 195 U. S. 332, 49 L. ed. 224, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 52, it was held that, although state laws concerning pilotage are a regulation of commerce, they fall within that class of powers which may be exercised by the states until Congress has seen fit to act upon the subject. In that case the argument was made that the right of a person who is competent to perform pilotage services to render them is an inherent right guaranteed by the 14th Amendment, and that, therefore, all state regulations providing for the appointing of pilots and restricting the right to pilot to those duly appointed was repugnant to the 14th Amendment. In reply to this contention Mr. Justice White said: "But this proposition in its essence simply denies that pilotage is subject to governmental control, and therefore is foreclosed by the adjudications to which we have previously referred." 195 U. S. 344, 49 L. ed. 230, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 55.

The state has, generally speaking, the right to employ upon public work whom it will, and to prescribe such conditions as it sees fit to prescribe. It has the right to employ certain citizens to the exclusion of others, and the citizens not so employed are not in any legal sense unlawfully discriminated against. As was said by Mr. Justice Harlan in Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 222, 48 L. ed. 148, 157, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124, 127: "It cannot be deemed a part of the liberty of any contractor that he be allowed to do public work in any mode he may choose to adopt, without regard to the wishes of the state. On the contrary, it belongs to the state, as the guardian and trustee for its people, and having control of its affairs, to prescribe the conditions upon which it will permit public work to be done on its behalf, or on behalf of its municipalities. No court has authority to review its action in that respect. Regulations on this subject suggest only considerations of public policy. And with such considerations the courts have no concern."

In replying to the contention that a state regulation as to the manner in which public work should be performed was a violation of the liberty of the employee and employer, Mr. Justice Harlan said: "It is sufficient to answer that no employee is entitled, of absolute right and as a part of his liberty, to perform labor for the state; and no contractor for public work can excuse a violation of his agreement with the state by doing that which the statute under which he proceeds distinctly and lawfully forbids him to do." 191 U. S. 223, 48 L. ed. 158, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124, 128.

If the legislature can lawfully discriminate between citizens as to whom it will employ upon its public works, it follows that it can also discriminate as between citizens and aliens. The whole matter as to how public works shall be built rests entirely within the police power of the state. The recognition of this principle seems to me to solve many of the difficulties that otherwise attach to this case. It is manifest that aliens, as well as citizens, are subject to the exercise of the police power. Nor can it be correctly contended that any treaty that exists between the United States and any foreign government excludes the citizens of that government who reside here from the operation of the police power of the state. If the police power includes, as has been said, "the power to govern men and things" (Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 125, 24 L. ed. 77, 84), that power does not become less potent when it is applied exclusively to public property being used for public purposes. So far as those trades or callings which are subject to governmental regulations are concerned, it is settled that the state may refuse to grant to aliens, because of the fact of alienage, a license to engage in them. Patson v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138, 58 L. ed. 539, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281; Com. v. Patson, 231 Pa. 46, 79 Atl. 928; McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24 L. ed. 248; State v. Travelers' Ins. Co. 70 Conn. 590, 66 Am. St. Rep. 138, 40 Atl. 465; Re O'Neill, 90 N. Y. 584; Re Opinion of Justices, 122 Mass. 594; Bloomfield v. State, 86 Ohio St. 253, 41 L.R.A. (N.S.) 726, 99 N. E. 309, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 629. If the state may debar aliens from participating in those private occupations or trades which are subject to governmental regulation, as has been held in the cases cited, there is no room for the argument that it cannot debar aliens from working upon its own public works which are wholly subject to its control. In the assertion by the state of its right to control the manner in which public work shall be constructed, it is immaterial whether the public work is done directly by the state or by a municipality or independent contractor. Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 48 L. ed. 148, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124; Ellis v. United States, 206 U. S. 246, 51 L. ed. 1047, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600, 11 Ann. Cas. 589; People ex rel. Cossey v. Grout, 179 N. Y. 417, 72 N. E. 464, 1 Ann. Cas. 39. If the work was private, and the public welfare in no way involved, it is clear that the legislature could not deny to the individual employer the right to employ aliens. Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 369, 30 L. ed. 220, 226, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064. If the work was private, and the exclusion of aliens was, in fact, necessary to the protection of the public welfare, such exclusion would be within the police power. Ibid. Where the work, as in the case under consideration, is public, and, therefore, wholly subject to the police power, the exclusion of aliens need not be shown to sustain any relation to the public welfare in order to be valid. In such case, the exclusion is merely an incident of that social control to which such public works are, in all respects, subject. The fact that the state may exercise complete control over its public works or other public property does not carry with it the right to use its public property so as to violate the rights of either its citizens or aliens to life, liberty, or property. The state, no less than the individual, is obligated to so use its public property, except when it acts to promote the general welfare, as not to impair the rights of others. For this reason it cannot lawfully exclude either citizens or aliens from its public highways, or deny to either the right to participate in the benefits of those public utilities which it may own and operate, and upon the equal administration of which the welfare and happiness of others depend. The limitations to which the state is subject in the construction and use of its public works are only those to which the police power is subject. These restraints it is not now necessary to consider, as they have no application to the exclusion of aliens from working upon public work. It is sufficient, I think, to point out that discriminations on account of race or religion that sustain no relation to the general welfare are not within the police power.

In my opinion, the judgment of the appellate division reversing the judgment of conviction should be reversed, and the judgment of conviction affirmed.

Collin, J., dissenting:

This appeal requires us to determine whether or not § 14 of the labor law is a constitutional enactment. The section is:

"Section 14. Preference in Employment of Persons upon Public Works.—In the construction of public works by the state or a municipality, or by persons contracting with the state or such municipality, only citizens of the United States shall be employed; and in all cases where laborers are employed on any such public works, preference shall be given citizens of the state of New York. In each contract for the construction of public works a provision shall be inserted, to the effect that, if the provisions of this section are not complied with, the contract shall be void. All boards, officers, agents or employees of cities of the first class of the state, having the power to enter into contracts which provide for the expenditure of public money on public works, shall file in the office of the commissioner of labor the names and addresses of all contractors holding contracts with said cities of the state. Upon the letting of new contracts the names and addresses of such new contractors shall likewise be filed. Upon the demand of the commissioner of labor a contractor shall furnish a list of the names and addresses of all subcontractors in his employ. Each contractor performing work for any city of the first class shall keep a list of his employees, in which it shall be set forth whether they are naturalized or native-born citizens of the United States, together with, in case of naturalization, the date of naturalization and the name of the court where such naturalization was granted. Such lists and records shall be open to the inspection of the commissioner of labor. A violation of this section shall constitute a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500, or by imprisonment for not less than thirty nor more than ninety days, or by both such fine and imprisonment." Laws of 1909, chap. 36 (Consol. Laws, chap. 31), § 14.

L.R.A.1916D.

The defendant, in constructing sewer basins pursuant to a contract between the city of New York and himself, employed persons who were not citizens of the United States, one of whom came from Italy. The judgment of the court of special sessions of the city convicting him of a misdemeanor therein was reversed by the appellate division solely for errors of law.

The question before us, necessitating, as it does, a decision concerning fundamental civic principles, is of unusual gravity. With the wisdom or unwisdom, the justice or injustice of the enactment, or the practical effects of our decision, we have no concern; those matters are within the legislative power, and are not subject to review by us. This court has neither the inclination nor the power to encroach upon the legislative department of the government of the state or assume any part of its functions or responsibilities. The measure of our duty is exhausted in ascertaining the legislative intention expressed in the enactment, and determining and declaring with cold neutrality that it either does or it does not ignore and transcend the limits which the people of the state, conscious that free government consists largely in rigid restrictions upon itself imposed and acquiesced in by the governed, have placed by the Constitution upon themselves and their representatives. State and people are inseparable ideas; for the state is the form in which the people have become organized.

The statute, through the intent expressed by it, if valid, prohibits the state and all the counties, towns, cities, and villages thereof, and all contractors with the state or any of those municipalities, from employing all persons not born or naturalized in and subject to the United States (U. S. Const. art. 14, § 1)—all aliens—in the construction of public works; that is, fixed works for public use. Ellis v. Grand Rapids, 123 Mich. 567, 82 N. W. 244; Ellis v. United States, 206 U. S. 246, 51 L. ed. 1047, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 600, 11 Ann. Cas. 589. It, in form, deprives contractors with the state or any municipality of the right to employ aliens, and it deprives all aliens of the right of being subjects of employment, of the right to offer their labor for wages, in such construction. Its purpose, avowedly, is to promote the welfare of wage-earning citizens by destroying competition from aliens in the construction of all public work within the state. The briefs and arguments of the counsel are in accord with those conclusions.

The respondent asserts that the enactment is in conflict with, and therefore void under certain provisions of, the state and Federal Constitutions. Of those, we cite the following:

"No person shall . . . be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law." N. Y. Const. art. 1, § 6.

"No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." U. S. Const. art. 14, § 1.

While the immediate inducement to and purpose in the adoption of this article of the United States Constitution was the protection of the liberty and property of colored persons, it is effective as a guaranty, additional to those of the state Constitutions, against encroachment by the legislatures of the states upon the fundamental and constitutional rights of any person. Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 382, 42 L. ed. 780, 787, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383. It is established, beyond useful questioning or discussion, that aliens, equally with citizens, are under and protected by the constitutional guaranties invoked by the defendant here. Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; State v. Montgomery, 94 Me. 192, 80 Am. St. Rep. 386, 47 Atl. 165, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 117; Com. v. Hana, 195 Mass. 262, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 799, 122 Am. St. Rep. 251, 81 N. E. 149, 11 Ann. Cas. 514. Within their operation citizen and alien are legal equals, and alienage is not and cannot be a basis or justification of differentiation or discrimination between them.

The legislative power of the people of the L.R.A 1916D.

state is plenary, except as they have abridged it by the state Constitution or consented to its restriction by the Federal Constitution. That power is vested in the legislature. The statute under consideration is valid unless it transcends the constitutional restrictions already quoted; if it overpassed them, it was and is as inoperative and impotent, as to persons lawfully assailing it, as if nonexistent. Whether it did or did not is to be determined upon the general object or purpose sought therein by the legislature and its efficiency to effect it. The purpose of a statute impugned as unconstitutional must be determined from the natural and legal effect of the language employed, and whether it is or is not repugnant to constitutional provisions must be determined from its natural effect when put into operation. Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 64, 49 L. ed. 937, 944, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133; Henderson v. New York (Henderson v. Wickham) 92 U. S. 259, 268, 23 L. ed. 543, 547. The statement already made of the intent and the general purpose to be effected by the statute under consideration need not be repeated.

Constitutional law has always deemed and declared the right to sell or purchase labor a part of the individual liberty and property safeguarded by the constitutional provisions I have quoted. Refraining from referring to the many judicial expressions of the principle, I quote the most recent of those of the United States Supreme Court: "The principle is fundamental and vital. Included in the right of personal liberty and the right of private property—partaking of the nature of each—is the right to make contracts for the acquisition of property. Chief among such contracts is that of personal employment, by which labor and other services are exchanged for money or other forms of property. If this right be struck down or arbitrarily interfered with, there is a substantial impairment of liberty in the long-established constitutional sense. The right is as essential to the laborer as to the capitalist, to the poor as to the rich; for the vast majority of persons have no other honest way to begin to acquire property, save by working for money." Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 14, 59 L. ed. 441, 446, L.R.A.1915C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240, 243.

We have said: "Liberty, in its broad sense, as understood in this country, means the right, not only of freedom from actual servitude, imprisonment or restraint, but the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or avocation. All laws, therefore, which impair or trammel these rights, which limit one in his choice of a trade or profession, or confine him to work or live in a specified locality, or exclude him from his own house, or restrain his otherwise lawful movements (except as such laws may be passed in the exercise by the legislature of the police power, which will be noticed later), are infringements upon his fundamental rights of liberty, which are under constitutional protection." Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 106, 50 Am. Rep. 636.

The principle has been frequently applied. Bertholf v. O'Reilly, 74 N. Y. 509, 515, 30 Am. Rep. 323; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 2 N. E. 29; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465, 17 N. E. 343; People v. Hawkins, 157 N. Y. 1, 42 L.R.A. 490, 68 Am. St. Rep. 736, 51 N. E. 257; People ex rel. Tyroler v. Warden, 157 N. Y. 116, 43 L.R.A. 264, 68 Am. St. Rep. 763, 51 N. E. 1006; People v. Williams, 189 N. Y. 131, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1130, 121 Am. St. Rep. 854, 81 N. E. 778, 12 Ann. Cas. 798; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 937, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133; Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 52 L. ed. 436, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764. Any person who is banned by a statute from employment in the construction of the public works within the state is deprived of liberty and property; any person who is likewise banned from employing any other person in such construction is likewise affected. To constitute the deprivation, the inhibition of the statute need not include employment upon the construction of all works within the state. It need not be universal. The deprivation exists when the right to offer one's labor or services, or the right to employ the labor or services of another, upon a specified work or at a specified place or time, is destroyed. People v. Williams, 189 N. Y. 131, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1130, 121 Am. St. Rep. 854, 81 N. E. 778, 12 Ann. Cas. 798; People v. Hawkins, 157 N. Y. 1, 42 L.R.A. 490, 68 Am. St. Rep. 736, 51 N. E. 257; Re Tiburcio Parrott, 6 Sawy. 349, 1 Fed. 481. The § 14 effects such deprivation, and is unconstitutional and invalid, unless there are conditions or legal principles justifying it. The appellants assert that there are.

The appellants assert, and as the chief and predominant support of their position, that the state has the right to declare, in the form of a statutory enactment, whom it and the municipalities will not employ, and contractors with them shall not employ, upon public works and in public undertakings, and is in this respect as free and untrammelled as the individual employer. This claim is unrelated to, and seeks no basis L.R.A.1916D.

or justification in, the police power of the state. It is oblivious of the existence of the police power. It rests exclusively upon the principle that the state is the owner and proprietor, as the guardian and trustee for the people, of the public works, undertakings, and institutions, and, as such proprietor, has the right to control, manage, and conduct them under such conditions, in such mode, and with such employees and appointees as it will, exercising without limit, as may the individual employer, its judgment, choice, or caprice. The authority directly relied upon to uphold the claim is Atkin v. Kansas, 191 U. S. 207, 48 L. ed. 148, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124.

In the Atkin Case was involved the validity under the Constitution of the United States of the statute known as the eight-hour law of Kansas. The law (speaking generally, but with sufficient exactness) constituted eight hours a day's work for persons employed by or on behalf of the state or a municipality, the current rate of per diem wages in the locality where the work was performed, the minimum wage to be paid, and the requirement or allowance of more than eight hours' work per calendar day an offense. It provided, further, that persons employed by contractors with the state or a municipality or their subcontractors should be deemed employees of the state or the municipality. Atkin, in constructing a pavement in Kansas City, under a contract with it, permitted a person employed by him to work ten hours each calendar day, and by a court of Kansas was adjudged guilty of a violation of the statute. The supreme court of Kansas and the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed the judgment. The decision of the United States Supreme Court is expressly limited to the facts of that case. It was grounded in the two principles it enunciated: (a) The construction of the pavement was done by the state through a governmental agency and was of a public character; and (b) being of a public character, the statute, in regulating, as to those undertaking it, the mode in which and the conditions upon which it should be executed, did not infringe the personal liberty of Atkin or his employees, and expressed a public policy with which the courts had no concern. The court said: "We rest our decision upon the broad ground that, the work being of a public character, absolutely under the control of the state and its municipal agents acting by its authority, it is for the state to prescribe the conditions under which it will permit work of that kind to be done. Its action touching such a matter is final so long as it does not, by its regulations, infringe the personal rights of others; and that has not been done." 191 U. S. 224, 48 L. ed. 158, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 128.

Chief Justice Fuller and Justices Brewer and Peckham dissented from this decision. See also United States v. Martin, 94 U. S. 400, 24 L. ed. 128.

The Atkin Case does not authorize or decide the claim of the appellants. It does not reach the basal element of the § 14. The section destroys absolutely the liberty of aliens to contract to work, their right to tender and sell their labor and services, and the right of the contractors to hire them or buy their labor, in and for constructing any public works. It does not fix the hours of each day through which an alien laborer may work, or his compensation; it declares that an alien shall not be permitted to be a laborer, and deprives him of the right to exercise the choice and freedom of being willing or unwilling to work upon public works under regulations enacted by the state, and the contractors of the right to employ him. Undoubtedly, no one has an inherent right to work or perform work for the state, which may in the regular and orderly administration and management of its affairs and institutions, in its proprietary capacity, contract as and with whom it chooses, except as restricted by the Constitution, to which it is not superior in any capacity. In the erection of a new capitol, for instance, it could select its architects, its decorators, its contractors, and its superintendent, and thereby reject the applications of those who were not selected. This, however, differs substantially and inherently from a statutory enactment that in the construction of any public building by or for the state or a municipality only persons residing in the city of Albany shall be engaged or employed. In the absence of the statute every person would be free to offer his labor and ability as he willed, and accept the terms, regulations, and conditions fixed by the employer, whether state, municipality, or contractor; with the statute every person residing elsewhere than in Albany would be deprived of that freedom, and to that extent of his liberty and property. The reasonable range and effect of a principle under discussion aids in determining its validity. The state is the proprietor of its educational, penal, and charitable institutions equally with its public works. The claim of the appellants, if sustained, would establish that it may declare by statutes (apart from the constitutional civil service provisions) that in the administration of those institutions, and of its public works and affairs, only the registered electors of a designated party, or only unmarried persons, or only white persons, or Protestants or Catholics, or persons born in this state, shall be employed or appointed, or that certain designated citizens shall not be employed, or that goods or products made or grown by corporations of this state shall not be purchased. The illustrations might be multiplied. The state may not, by virtue of its proprietorship, destroy by a statute the right of any person to tender for sale and sell his labor or services, upon such terms as he deems proper, in the construction of public works or in the administration of public institutions, or the right of a person contracting to construct public works, to buy the labor or employ the person. The claim of the appellants that the state may with arbitrariness, as an untrammelled proprietor, forbid by statute the employment in the construction of public works of designated persons, or a designated class of persons, is ill founded, and does not justify the infringement, worked by the § 14, of the personal rights of liberty and property guaranteed to the defendant and the alien class by the state and Federal Constitutions.

The appellants assert further that the § 14 is supportable as a reasonable exercise of the police power of the state,—a power inherent in the state, which the state did not surrender when becoming a member of the United States under the Federal Constitution, and which is exercisable for the preservation or promotion of the public health, safety, morals, and general welfare or the prevention of fraud or immorality. While the protection of the liberty and property of the individual is a main purpose of a government and the Constitution, no person or property is immune from the power of the legislature to impose restraints and burdens upon either as required by the public safety or welfare. The cases are numerous and familiar in which the courts have held that the legislature of the states may, by virtue of the police power, limit the enjoyment or control of property and the right of making contracts. Whenever, however, it is sought to justify or support a statute by invoking the police power, it must appear that it reasonably and fairly tends, in a perceptible and clear degree, towards one or more of the objects of that power; and, while it is within the general scope of legislative power to determine whether or not there is, in a given condition, necessity for its exercise, it is within the judicial power and duty to determine whether or not the legislative determination bears any reasonable relation to the public health, safety, or morals. Unless such relation exists, the determination must be deemed by the courts arbitrary and unjustified by the police power. Health Dept. v.

Trinity Church, 145 N. Y. 32, 27 L.R.A. 710, 45 Am. St. Rep. 579, 39 N. E. 833; Frank L. Fisher Co. v. Woods, 187 N. Y. 90, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 707, 79 N. E. 836; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 937, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549, 55 L. ed. 328, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259; Parks v. State, 169 Ind. 211, 59 L.R.A. 190, 64 N. E. 862; Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383; Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223, 49 L. ed. 169, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18; McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 539, 53 L. ed. 315, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 206; Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 59 L. ed. 441, L.R.A.1915C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240. It is argued that the section is within the police power because its natural effect, by interdicting competition from the alien class, increases to citizens the likelihood of employment and increased wages. The argument is both ill founded and pernicious. The constitutional provisions in question were wisely intended to, and do, safeguard the liberty and the property of the aliens lawfully residing in the United States. Under and to the extent of these provisions, aliens are on an equal footing with citizens. It would be unreasonable to assert that the public welfare would be promoted by assuring and compelling unemployment to a class or to classes or to parts of classes of workers in order that those not banished from the right of being employed might have fuller employment and larger compensation. It is argued, too, that there is a danger, or a danger to be apprehended, in allowing aliens to work upon the public works, because they, through loyalty to the governments to which they owe allegiance, may destroy or diminish the efficiency or safety of those works. The argument is insubstantial, and common knowledge and experience refute it. Persons of unbalanced, evil, or uncivilized minds do not form a definable societal class. Each class is infested with them, and the law must deal with them as their acts make necessary. In the construction of by far the greater part of the public works, opportunities for the commission of the apprehended acts would not exist, and in the alien, as in the other classes of the state, the number of those who would commit them is an undiscoverable and insignificant minority. Obviously, there are civil positions and offices, and public works of a military, naval, or analogous nature, or periods of conflict in regard to which aliens may, under the police power, be banned or restrained. Section 14 has not a relation, in substance or intent, to any of those positions or conditions, and the state or a municipality may, in the absence of the statute, L.R.A.1916D.

deny at any time, and, at least, when conditions justify recourse to the police power, may by contract bind those contracting with them to deny employment to members of a dangerous group or class. I do not perceive in the arguments of counsel, or conceive apart from them, any possible relation of the section to the police power.

The further claim of the appellants that the defendant, by undertaking the work, waived the guaranty of the Constitution, is not tenable. The transaction between the city and the defendant was a matter of contract. The city, through specifications and proposals, requested bids for their fulfillment, and accepted that made by the defendant. If the statute was valid, it encumbered, through legislative power, and not through a meeting of the minds of the parties, the contract made; if invalid, it was, as to the defendant, a nullity.

The respondent urges that the section is repugnant to the Federal Constitution, as denying to aliens the equal protection of the laws. The primary question in discussing this assertion is: What is the purpose of the statute? The answer manifestly is, as we have already stated, the promotion of the welfare and prosperity of certain wage earners by forbidding the employment in the construction of public works of other wage earners.

The second question is: Is the purpose constitutionally lawful? We hold it is not, for the reasons stated, and, being thus invalid, no arbitrary classification or discrimination between the laborers of the state effecting the unequal protection of the laws can make it more invalid. If it were valid because the state has the power, arbitrarily and in accord with its unfettered and unbiased will, to prohibit the employment of a class in the construction of its public works, by the same token, it has the power, with like paramountcy, to designate the prohibited class, which could not with reason allege a lack of equal protection of the laws. If it were declared valid because within the police power, it could not be declared invalid on the ground that the equal protection of the law to those whom the exercise of that power had lawfully classified and barred had been invaded. Where the purpose of a statute is lawful, the question might arise whether a classification of persons or things, adopted as a part of the prescribed means for effecting it, is legal and justifiable. Billings v. Illinois, 188 U. S. 97, 102, 47 L. ed. 400, 403, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 272; Patson v. Pennsylvania, 232 U. S. 138, 58 L. ed. 539, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 281.

A review of the relevant decisions will disclose that the courts frequently assume that the "due process of law" clause is the equivalent of "the equal protection of the laws" clause. In Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, 382, 42 L. ed. 780, 787, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383, 384, the court said: "As the three questions of abridging their immunities, depriving them of their property, and denying them the protection of the laws, are so connected that the authorities upon each are, to a greater or less extent, pertinent to the others, they may properly be considered together."

Professor Willoughby writes: "It would seem, however, that the broad interpretation which the prohibition as to 'due process of law' has received is sufficient to cover very many of the acts which, if committed by the states, might be attacked as denying equal protection. Thus it has been repeatedly declared that enactments of a legislature directed against particular individuals or corporations, or classes of such, without any reasonable ground for selecting them out of the general mass of individuals or corporations, amounts to a denial of due process of law so far as their life, liberty, or property is affected." 2 Willoughby, Const. p. 874.

Recent decisions verify this statement. Coppage v. Kansas, 236 U. S. 1, 59 L. ed. 441, L.R.A.1916C, 960, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240; Adair v. United States, 208 U. S. 161, 52 L. ed. 436, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 277, 13 Ann. Cas. 764; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 49 L. ed. 937, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133; Riley v. Massachusetts, 232 U. S. 671, 58 L. ed. 788, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 469; People v. Marcus, 185 N. Y. 257, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 282, 113 Am. St. Rep. 902, 77 N. E. 1073, 7 Ann. Cas. 118; Frank L. Fisher Co. v. Woods, 187 N. Y. 90, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 707, 79 N. E. 836; People v.

Williams, 189 N. Y. 131, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1130, 121 Am. St. Rep. 854, 81 N. E. 778, 12 Ann. Cas. 798; Chicago v. Hulbert, 205 Ill. 346, 68 N. E. 786. If the "equal protection of the laws" clause be applied, however, it must be held that the attempted classification of the aliens as a prohibited class is unreasonable and arbitrary, for the reasons which excluded it from the police power, and for such reasons is unconstitutional and void. People v. Orange County Road Constr. Co. 175 N. Y. 84, 65 L.R.A. 33, 67 N. E. 129; Cotting v. Kansas City Stock Yards Co. (Cotting v. Godard) 183 U. S. 79, 46 L. ed. 92, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 30; Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. 184 U. S. 540, 46 L. ed. 679, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 431; Southern R. Co. v. Greene, 216 U. S. 400, 54 L. ed. 536, 30 Sup. Ct. Rep. 287, 17 Ann. Cas. 1247; Lindsley v. Natural Carbonic Gas Co. 220 U. S. 61, 55 L. ed. 369, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 337, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 160; State ex rel. Richards v. Hammer, 42 N. J. L. 435, 440.

In view of what has been written it is not necessary to determine whether or not the section is repugnant to the existing treaty between the United States and Italy.

My conclusion is that the § 14 unconstitutionally attempted to deprive the defendant, as the contractor and employer of labor, and the alien class, as the vendors of their labor, of liberty and property, and is void.

The judgment should be affirmed.

Affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, November 29, 1915, in 239 U. S. 195, 60 L. ed. —, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 85.

Annotation—Prohibiting or restricting employment of aliens.

As to power of the state, under the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, to deny to aliens the right to engage in a lawful occupation, see note to Com. v. Hana, 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 799; also subdivision "Aliens," page 281, of note in 40 L.R.A.(N.S.) 279.

PEOPLE v. CRANE, ante, 550, was affirmed by the United States Supreme Court in (1915) 239 U. S. 195, 60 L. ed. —, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 85, the decision following that in another case—Heim v. McCall (1915) 239 U. S. 175, 60 L. ed. —, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 78,—decided at the same time, in which substantially the same constitutional questions were raised. In the Heim's Case, a taxpayer attempted to enjoin the Public Service Commission for the First District of New York from declaring certain contracts for the construction of subways in New York city L.R.A.1916D.

forfeited for violation of the anti-alien labor law in that state. Each contract contained a provision that it should be void if the law was not complied with. The taxpayer sought an injunction on the ground that the law was unconstitutional and violated treaty provisions, and that the threatened forfeiture would result in a delay in the work, increase the cost to the city, and cause it irreparable damage. A demurrer to the bill was sustained. The Federal Supreme Court, affirming (1915) 214 N. Y. 629, 108 N. E. 1095, held that the application of the provision of the New York anti-alien labor law to contracts for the construction of subways in New York city, and the extent to which they affect the corporate rights of the city or of the subway contractors, are local questions not open for review in the Federal Supreme Court on writ of error to a state court; that § 14 of this law (set out in PEOPLE v. CRANE), does not abridge the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the several states contrary to article 4, § 2, of the Federal Constitution, or the freedom to contract secured by the 14th Amendment, or result in the taking of property without due process of law, or in the denial of the equal protection of the laws in violation of the 14th Amendment; also that the law does not violate the treaty with Italy set out in PEOPLE v. CRANE.

It was held, also, in Crane v. New York (1915) 239 U. S. 195, 60 L. ed. —, 36 Sup. Ct. Rep. 85, that the distinction made between aliens and citizens in the New York anti-alien labor law did not offend against the 14th Amendment as violating the principle of classification.

The decision in Heim v. McCall (U. S.) supra, in the Federal Supreme Court was based largely upon the authority of Atkin v. Kansas (1903) 191 U. S. 207, 48 L. ed. 148, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 124, upholding the constitutionality of a statute making it a criminal offense for a contractor for a public work to permit or require an employee to perform labor upon that work in excess of eight hours each day. As applicable to the case before it, the court quoted from the Atkin Case as follows: "Instead of undertaking that work directly, the state invested one of its governmental agencies with power to care for it. Whether done by the state directly or by one of its instrumentalities, the work was of a public, not private, character. If, then, the work . . . was of a public character, it necessarily follows that the statute . . . does not infringe the personal liberty of anyone. . . . It cannot be deemed a part of the liberty of any contractor that he be allowed to do public work in any mode he may choose to adopt, without regard to the wishes of the state. On the contrary, it belongs to the state, as the guardian and trustee for its people, and having control of its affairs, to prescribe the conditions upon which it will permit public work to be done on its behalf, or on behalf of its municipalities. No court has authority to review its action in that respect. Regulations on this subject suggest only considerations of public policy. And with such considerations the court has no concern."

The decisions in TRUAX v. RAICH (U. S.) ante, 545, and PEOPLE v. CRANE, present clearly the distinction, as regard the right of a state to restrict the employment of aliens, between cases where such employment is in private business and where it is on public works. In the former case, it was held that the restriction in question denied the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the 14th Amendment; that to deprive aliens, merely because of their alienage, of the opportunity of earning a livelihood, would be the equivalent to the assertion of the right to deny them entrance and abode in the state; while in the latter case, the right of a state to prohibit the employment of aliens on public works is upheld chiefly on the ground that the discrimination relates to the distribution of the common property or resources of the people of the state, the enjoyment of which may be limited to its citizens as against both aliens and citizens of other states; that the state and its agents are acting in a proprietary capacity as an ordinary employer of labor, and that the discrimination is within the police power.

The grounds of the decision in the state court in PEOPLE v. CRANE, which are apparently substantially the same as those on which the Federal decisions rest, are indicated in the following excerpts from the opinions: "The moneys of the state belong to the people of the state. They do not belong to aliens. . . . The principle that justifies these discriminations is that the common property of the state belongs to the people of the state, and hence that, in any distribution of that property, the citizen may be preferred. . . . The equal protection of the laws is due to aliens as to citizens . . . but equal protection does not mean that those who have no interest in the common property of the state must share in that property on the same terms as those who have an interest. . . . It is a denial of the equal protection of the laws when the government, in its capacity as a lawmaker regulating not its own property, but private business, bars the alien from the right to trade and labor. It is not a denial of the equal protection of the laws when the government, in its capacity as proprietor, issuing a mandate to its own agents . . . bars the alien from the right to share in the property which it holds for its own citizens. . . . The statute is nothing more, in effect, than a resolve by an employer as to the character of his employees. An individual employer would communicate the resolve to his subordinates by written instructions or by word of mouth. The state, an incorporeal master, speaking through the legislature, communicates the resolve to its agents by enacting a statute. . . . As we deny to the state the right to intrude into the individual sphere of action and to prescribe what we shall believe, and, except where the public welfare is involved, what we shall publish, or to supervise private morals, so the state denies to the individual the right to intrude within its social sphere of action and insist that he has a right to be employed upon its public works. . . . The state in its capacity of proprietor or owner may make such use of its own public property as it deems conducive to the social well-being. In the use that it makes of such property it is not required to refrain from discrimination. . . . Public works, like other public property, are within the police power of the state. . . . If the work was private, and the public welfare in no way involved, it is clear that the legislature could not deny to the individual employer the right to employ aliens. . . . If the work was private, and the exclusion of aliens was, in fact, necessary to the protection of the public welfare, such exclusion would be within the police power. . . . Where the work, as in the case under consideration, is public, and, therefore, wholly subject to the police power, the exclusion of aliens need not be shown to sustain any relation to the public welfare in order to be valid."

The New York anti-alien labor law, considered in PEOPLE v. CRANE, was held constitutional in People v. I. M. Ludington's Sons (1911) 74 Misc. 363, 131 N. Y. Supp. 550, and not in conflict with treaties between the United States and England, Spain, and Italy.

The New York statute of 1870 as amended by the Laws of 1894, making it a crime for a contractor with a municipal corporation for the construction of public works to employ an alien as a laborer on such work, was held in People v. Warren (1895) 13 Misc. 615, 34 N. Y. Supp. 942, to be in conflict with the state and Federal Constitutions and with the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Italy.

The constitutional and statutory provisions in California against the employment by any corporation, in any capacity, of Chinese or Mongolians, were held in Re Tiburcio Parrott (1880) 6 Sawy. 349, 1 Fed. 481, to violate the 14th Amendment and also that provision of the treaty with China that Chinese subjects visiting or residing in the United States shall enjoy the same privileges, L.R.A.1916D.

immunities, and exemptions in respect to travel or residence as may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most-favored nation.

It was held, also, in Re Tiburcio Parrott (Fed.) supra, that the provisions could not be upheld as a legitimate exercise of the reserved power of the state to alter or repeal all laws concerning corporations.

Although the suit to enjoin a municipality from enforcing the law prohibiting the employment of Chinese laborers on the improvement of streets and public works was dismissed on other grounds, the court was of the opinion, it appears, in Baker v. Portland (1879) 5 Sawy. 566, Fed. Cas. No. 777, that the law violated the provision of the treaty with China indicated above. The court said it was true that the act did not undertake to exclude the Chinese from all kinds and fields of employment; but that if the state, notwithstanding the treaty, could prevent Chinese from working upon street improvements and public works, it was not apparent why it might not prevent them from engaging in any kind of employment or working at any kind of labor.

A statute making it unlawful for any county, or municipal or private corporation, to give employment to any alien who has failed, neglected, or refused, prior to the time of such employment, to become naturalized or to declare his intention to become a citizen of the United States, was held in Re Case (1911) 20 Idaho, 128, 116 Pac. 1037, to be repugnant to Art. IV. of the Federal Constitution, and to the 14th Amendment, as operating, as applied to a private corporation, to deprive it of liberty and property without due process of law and as denying to it the equal protection of the laws. The court said: "A state legislature, by legislative enactment or otherwise, has no authority to deprive a person of the right to labor at any legitimate business, or to deny any person within the jurisdiction of the United States the equal protection of the laws, or to prohibit a corporation that has a right to do business in the state to employ any person, whether alien or native, in the prosecution of any legitimate business. It is suggested that a corporation is not a 'person' within the meaning of that word as used in said 14th Amendment to the Constitution, and that, as corporations are organized under the laws of a state, the state may enact such laws as it may deem best for the control of such corporations, and has full authority to deprive them of the right to employ aliens. Those contentions are fully met by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis (1896) 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255, in which case it is held that corporations are 'persons' within the provisions of said 14th Amendment, and that a state has no more power to deny to them the equal protection of the law than it has to deny it to individual citizens."

In Re Case (Idaho) supra, the alien was employed, it appears, by a paving company in order to carry out its contract with the municipal authorities for street paving; but the court said that the complaint did not charge a violation of the provisions of the statute relating to employment on public works, but merely that, as superintendent of a private corporation, the petitioner knowingly gave employment to aliens.

In Chicago v. Hulbert (1903) 205 Ill. 346, 68 N. E. 786, it was held that an assessment for local improvements was not invalid by reason of failure of the contractor to comply with a statute forbidding the employment by a city or contractor under it of other than native-born or naturalized citizens, or those who have in good faith declared their intentions to become citizens of the United States, when such employees are to be paid in whole or in part out of any funds raised by taxation,—as the statute was void. The court dismissed the point with the observation that, "a similar law was enacted by ordinance in the city of Chicago, and we have repeatedly held that such law is invalid, as it is in contravention of the Constitution and the right of individuals to contract. The statute in question is void upon the same grounds, and neither the city nor the contractor was under any obligation to observe it."

A municipal ordinance making it a misdemeanor for any person when having labor performed for the purpose of carrying out a contract with the city, to demand, receive, or contract for more than eight hours of labor in one day from any person, or to employ Chinese labor, was held void in Ex parte Kubach (1890) 85 Cal. 274, 9 L.R.A. 482, 20 Am. St. Rep. 226, 24 Pac. 737; but the extent to which the decision was affected by the clause prohibiting the employment of Chinese labor is not clear. The court said that the ordinance was simply an attempt to prevent certain parties from employing others in a lawful business and paying them for their services, and L.R.A.1916D.

was a direct infringement of the right of such persons to make and enforce contracts; and quoted the rule laid down by Cooley on Constitutional Limitations that it is not competent to forbid any person or class of persons, whether citizens or resident aliens, from offering their services in a lawful business, or to subject others to penalties for employing them.

It was held in Fraser v. McConway & T. Co. (1897) 82 Fed. 257, that a statute which imposed upon all employers of foreign-born unnaturalized male persons over twenty-one years of age a tax of 3 cents per day for each day such person was employed, and authorized the employer to deduct the tax from the wages of the employees, violated the 14th Amendment, in that it denied to such employees the equal protection of the law. The court said that the statute "imposes upon these persons burdens which are not laid upon others in the same calling and condition. The tax is an arbitrary deduction from the daily wages of a particular class of persons. Now, the equal protection of the laws declared by the 14th Amendment to the Constitution secures to each person within the jurisdiction of a state exemption from any burdens or charges other than such as are equally laid upon all others under like circumstances. . . . It is idle to suggest that the case in hand is one of proper legislative classification. A valid classification for the purposes of taxation must have a just and reasonable basis, which is lacking here."

The statute involved in Fraser v. McConway & T. Co. (Fed.) supra, was subsequently held unconstitutional by the supreme court of Pennsylvania as violating the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution and also the uniform rule of taxation required by Pa. Const. art. 9, § 1. Juniata Limestone Co. v. Fagley (1893) 187 Pa. 193, 42 L.R.A. 442, 67 Am. St. Rep. 579, 40 Atl. 977.

Among possibly other cases of that kind, see the recent decision in Lillard v. Melton (1915) — S. C. —, 87 S. E. 421, holding that a statute which provided that in the improvement of highways in a county all laborers employed, with the exception of officers, superintendents, and skilled mechanics who cannot be obtained in the county, shall be actual residents of the county, did not violate the state Constitution or the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution. The court said: "There is an absence of any penalty to enforce this provision, thereby indicating a legislative intent to make the same purely suggestive or directory. Conceding, however, that the provision was mandatory, the objection could not be sustained, as no citizen of one county has the legal right to demand that he shall be employed upon the public works of another, and certainly the legislature, in directing the use or disposition of the public property or funds of the state or county, raised by taxation upon the people of either, has the power to limit the benefits to be derived therefrom to the residents of either. Such is plainly the conclusion reached by the United States Supreme Court in the case of TRUAX v. RAICH (U. S.) ante, 545."

As to constitutionality of statutes limiting hours of labor on public works, see notes to Keefe v. People, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 131; People ex rel. Williams Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Metz, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 201; and Com. v. Casey, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 767.

As to constitutionality of legislative limitation generally of hours of labor, see note to Miller v. Wilson, L.R.A. 1915F, 829, and earlier notes therein referred to.

And as to discrimination against non-residents, by statute or municipal ordinance imposing license or occupation tax, see note to State v. Williams, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 279. R. E. H.

IDAHO SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF IDAHO, Appt.,

v.

H. D. MORRIS, Resp't.

(— Idaho, —, 155 Pac. 296.)

Sunday — moving picture show — religious entertainment.

A religious phonographic lecture given in good faith, without charge, in a theater, and illustrated by moving pictures, for the religious instruction of the audience, is not within a statute making it unlawful to keep open inter alia theaters, moving picture shows, and playhouses on Sunday.

For other cases, see Sunday, III. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 23, 1916.)

A PPEAL by the state from a judgment of the District Court for Ada County acquitting defendant, after conviction in the justice's court, of keeping open and operating a moving picture show on Sunday. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — The applicability of Sunday laws to moving picture shows is discussed in the note to Re Hull, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 465, treating generally of the amusements that are prohibited by Sunday laws. See also later cases, State v. Penny, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1155, and State ex rel. Temple v. Barnes, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 114, on applicability of Sunday laws to moving picture shows.

The question whether a free performance violates the Sunday law is discussed in the annotation to McLeod v. State, L.R.A. 1916B, 1130.

Generally as to regulations affecting moving picture shows, see note to State ex rel. Ebert v. Loden, 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 193.

The censorship of moving picture films is discussed in the note to Bainbridge v. Minneapolis, L.R.A. 1916C, 224. L.R.A. 1916D.

Messrs. Raymond L. Givens and Evans Paul Barnes, for the State:

The lecture given by defendant was within a statute making it unlawful to keep open a moving picture show on Sunday.

United States v. Buffalo Park, 16 Blatchf. 189, Fed. Cas. No. 14,681; Economopoulos v. Bingham, 109 N. Y. Supp. 728; Ex parte Lingenfelter, 64 Tex. Crim. Rep. 30, 142 S. W. 555; Ann. Cas. 1914C, 765; Lempke v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 171 S. W. 217; Rosenberg v. Arrowsmith, 82 N. J. Eq. 570, 89 Atl. 524.

The state has the inherent right to regulate the course of conduct on the part of the citizens of the state, and where they transgress the statute law such acts will be prohibited even though they are sought to be performed under the guise of religious liberty.

Com. v. Herr, 39 Pa. Super. Ct. 454, 229 Pa. 132, 78 Atl. 68, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 422; Re Frazee, 63 Mich. 396, 6 Am. St. Rep. 310, 30 N. W. 72; State v. Weiss, 97 Minn. 125, 105 N. W. 1127, 7 Ann. Cas. 932; State ex rel. Temple v. Barnes, 22 N. D. 18, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 114, 132 N. W. 215, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 930; State v. Neitzel, 69 Wash. 567, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 203, 125 Pac. 939, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 899; Wright v. Kelley, 4 Idaho, 624, 43 Pac. 565; Blaine County v. Heard, 5 Idaho, 6, 45 Pac. 890; State v. Dolan, 13 Idaho, 693; 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1259, 92 Pac. 995; Re Jacobs, 13 Idaho, 720, 92 Pac. 1003.

Messrs. Wyman & Wyman, for respondent:

Penal statutes should be strictly construed.

Ex parte Bailey, 39 Fla. 734, 23 So. 552; State v. Woodruff, 68 N. J. L. 89, 52 Atl. 294; Com. v. Alexander, 185 Mass. 551, 70 N. E. 1017; Lewis's Sutherland, Stat. Constr. 2d ed. 520; Adams v. Lansdon, 18 Idaho, 483, 110 Pac. 280; Re Hull, 18 Idaho, 475, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 465, 110 Pac.

256; Re Bossner, 18 Idaho, 519, 110 Pac. 502.

The illustrated lecture given by defendant was not a moving picture show.

People v. Finn, 57 Misc. 659, 110 N. Y. Supp. 22.

Morgan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On August 11, 1914, the above-named respondent, together with two other persons, was arrested upon a warrant issued out of the justice's court of Boise precinct upon a charge of keeping open and operating a moving picture show on Sunday in the city of Boise, Idaho. The record does not disclose what disposition, if any, was made of the cases of the other defendants, but it appears that on November 30, 1914, the respondent, upon an agreed statement of the facts, was, by the justice of the peace, adjudged to be guilty of the crime charged against him. He appealed to the district court, where the case was submitted to the judge without a jury, upon the agreed facts, and where he was adjudged to be not guilty. The case is brought here by the state upon appeal from the judgment last mentioned.

It appears that respondent is a resident and citizen of the city of Boise, where he is engaged in the practice of his profession, that of an osteopathic physician, and that he devotes a portion of his time and means to religious work, and is an active member of the local class of the International Bible Students' Association, which is a branch, or subsidiary organization, of the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society, a religious corporation. It is agreed: "That among other means employed by the aforesaid society and association, or religious organization, in preaching the gospel, teaching the Bible, and giving Bible lectures, is that known as the 'Photo Drama of Creation,' which consists of a series of Bible lectures, together with pictures and photographic illustrations thereof. That the same is shown in four parts, each part requiring two hours to hear and see the same. It takes up the Divine plan, as set forth in the Bible, from the beginning of Earth's creation and follows the development thereof in orderly manner down to the present date. That the arrangement thereof is as follows: Approximately 100 Bible lectures, or sermons, were carefully prepared, and then dictated, or spoken, into a phonograph, and records or discs thereof made, and afterwards said lectures, or sermons, were and are reproduced by the phonograph. That for the purpose of illustrating these Bible lectures, or sermons, and to enable the mind to more readily grasp the lessons taught thereby, paintings and photographs and photographic scenes of such Bible subjects are reproduced upon a screen by means of a stereopticon and cinematograph, or moving picture machine, which pictures, photographs, and photographic scenes relate to and illustrate the subject-matter of the lecture or sermon."

It is further agreed that, prior to the 9th day of August, 1914, the respondent, together with other citizens and residents of Boise who were members of the local class of the International Bible Students' Association, and interested in teaching the Bible and preaching the Gospel to others, procured a building in that city known as the "Majestic Theater" for the purpose of producing therein the Photo Drama of Creation; that the rent for the building was paid by the members of the local class of the association, to which respondent contributed; and that all other expenses in connection therewith were paid by the society, or association, or by the members thereof, in order that the citizens of Boise might have the opportunity of hearing such lectures, or sermons, and of seeing the illustrations thereof. The agreed statement of facts further recites as follows: "That on Sunday, the 9th day of August, 1914, the said Photo Drama of Creation was begun or opened at the building aforesaid and part 1 thereof was given. That on the same day, and just preceding the opening of the Photo Drama of Creation, the local class of the International Bible Students' Association held their regular religious services in said building, namely, the one known as the 'Majestic Theater,' and the defendant was present and participated in said meeting or religious worship. That thereafter and on the same day the defendant, together with others, actively engaged in giving said part 1 of said Photo Drama of Creation in said 'Majestic Theater' building. That the defendant's services in connection therewith were rendered entirely free, without charge or remuneration. That no one having any part therein or connection therewith received a salary, but some of the helpers were paid their actual expenses, which expenses were provided by voluntary contribution as aforesaid by persons interested in the teaching of the Bible as aforesaid, or by said society or association aforesaid. That all the funds of the said society or association are provided by voluntary contributions made by persons interested in the spreading of the Gospel and teaching the Bible as aforesaid."

It is further agreed that the Majestic Theater was one of the regular moving picture houses in Boise and was equipped for moving pictures, but was, at the time, under the exclusive management and control of the society and association heretofore mentioned, and was used in the manner and for the purposes heretofore set forth, and for no other.

The agreed statement of facts further recites: "All the pictures thrown upon the screen, and all the lectures or sermons given, and everything connected with the said Photo Drama of Creation as aforesaid, were clean and moral in character and were highly edifying and instructive. No advertisements of any kind were exhibited. All that was done and performed at the time and place mentioned in the complaint was of a religious nature, and the sole purpose of those connected therewith, including the defendant, was to enlighten and instruct the people, without the hope, expectation, or receipt of pecuniary profit or reward. The audience throughout was quiet, orderly, and reverential, and no applause was allowed or given."

It is agreed that the sole issue to be determined is whether or not the acts done at the time and place mentioned in the complaint in giving the lecture, or sermon, on the phonograph, and in illustrating the same by stereopticon slides and moving pictures, in the light of the religious claims therefor and significance thereof, constitute a violation of § 6825, Rev. Codes, as amended by chapter 99 of the 11th Session of the Idaho legislature (Sess. Laws 1911, p. 342), which provides: "It shall be unlawful for any person or persons in this state to keep open on Sunday any . . . theater, moving picture show, playhouse, dance house, race track, merry-go-round, circus or show, concert saloon, billiard or pool room, bowling alley or variety hall. . . . Any person or persons violating this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not less than thirty dollars ($30) nor more than two hundred and fifty ($250) for each offense and shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not to exceed ninety days, and upon a second conviction any license which may have been granted for opening and maintaining any such place of business shall also be rendered void and shall not be renewed within two years next thereafter."

Probably no better definition of the phrase "moving picture show," as used in the statute, can be found than that employed by the learned trial judge in this case. He said: "I think that the robust common sense of the community will say that it is a public exhibition of moving pictures primarily to amuse and entertain, sometimes incidentally carrying with it instructive features. The show is almost always operated for profit, although this is perhaps not an essential element of the definition. It is certain that the pictures are the main element and the pleasure feature predominates; that being L.R.A.1916D.

the connotation of the word 'show.' In other words, it is a public place of amusement, like all the other institutions with which it is grouped in the statute."

There is no doubt that the term "moving picture show" is generally understood to mean a place where motion pictures are exhibited for the purpose of amusement and entertainment, and this is the meaning to be applied to the phrase in determining what was the legislative intent when the statute under consideration was enacted.

This court said (Re Bossner, 18 Idaho, 519, 110 Pac. 502): "It is a well-established rule of law that when words have not a technical meaning or application, or when they have not been so used or employed in the statute, they should then be given their ordinary significance as they are popularly understood."

With this rule in mind it is impossible to conclude that it was the legislative purpose to prohibit the use, on Sunday, of a moving picture machine for the purpose of worship, or religious instruction, as a means of illustrating a sermon or lecture. It is apparent the legislature had in mind the suppression of the evil of conducting certain forms of business on Sunday. This view is strengthened by the fact that it is provided, as a part of the punishment in the event of a second conviction of a violation of the statute, that "any license which may have been granted for opening and maintaining any such place of business shall also be rendered void and shall not be renewed within two years next thereafter."

It cannot be inferred from the agreed facts in this case that respondent and his associates were engaged in the business of conducting a moving picture show in the sense in which that phrase is commonly used. Prior to its amendment this section of the Code was before the court for construction in Re Hull, 18 Idaho, 475, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 465, 110 Pac. 256, wherein it was said: "This class of legislation is upheld solely as an exercise of the police power of the state. The prohibition of public amusements on Sunday must therefore rest on the theory that it is necessary either for the protection of the public morals, the public health, or the public peace and safety."

We are in accord with that opinion as well as with that in Re Bossner, supra, wherein it was held, even before the statute was amended so as to expressly include moving picture shows among business enterprises the operation of which on Sunday was prohibited, that such shows came within the inhibition of the statute forbidding the opening or conducting on Sunday of any theater, playhouse, . . . circus, or show, . . . or any such place or public amusement;" for it may readily be seen that the legislature might, with entire propriety, consider the conducting of such a business on Sunday detrimental to the public morals or the public peace; but we are unable to reach the conclusion that the use of a moving picture machine for the purpose of illustrating a sermon or religious lecture can be by anyone deemed to be detrimental, in any manner, to the public welfare.

The Constitution of Idaho guarantees to each inhabitant of the state the inalienable right to decide for himself as to the wisdom and righteousness of his mode of worship. It is provided in § 4, art. 1, that "the exercise and enjoyment of religious faith and worship shall forever be guaranteed."

And in § 19, art. 21, as follows: "It is ordained by the state of Idaho that perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured, and no inhabitant of said state shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship."

The good faith of respondent and his associates in adopting and carrying out their plan of devotional exercises has not been questioned, and it is not for this court to decide that it is, or that it is not, the correct course for them to pursue. We feel that the provisions of the Constitution above quoted prohibit us from deciding that question; and that, in a case like this, where entire good faith is apparent, and where the exercises were not being conducted merely in the name of religion, and as a pretense and subterfuge to cover acts criminal in their nature, we would not presume to decide it if we were not so prohibited.

To place upon the statute under consideration the construction asked for by appellant, and to hold that the use of a moving picture machine on Sunday, for the purpose to which it was put by respondent and his associates, is keeping open or operating a moving picture show in violation of the statute, would be to improperly invoke the police power of the state; for, thus construed and in that particular, the statute would bear no real or substantial relation to the public health, the public morals, the public peace, or the public safety. Such a construction would also bring the statute into conflict with § 4, art. 1, and § 19, art. 21, of the Constitution, for thereby religious liberty would be denied.

In case of Grice v. Clearwater Timber Co. 20 Idaho, 70, 117 Pac. 112, this court, quoting from Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. p. 255, said: "Whenever an act of the legislature can be so construed and applied as to avoid conflict with the Constitution and give it the force of law, such construction will be adopted by the courts."

Continuing, it is said in the opinion: "And it is held by many courts that where there is room for two constructions of a statute, both equally obvious and equally reasonable, the court must, in deference to the legislature of the state, assume that it did not overlook the provisions of the Constitution, and designed the act to take effect."

In case of Chesebrough v. San Francisco, 153 Cal. 559, 96 Pac. 288, the supreme court of California states the rule to be: "When a legislative provision is capable of two constructions, one consistent, and the other inconsistent, with the provisions of the Constitution, it is a well-recognized principle of construction that the statute should be given that construction which will make it harmonious with the Constitution, and comport with the legitimate powers of the legislature."

Applying that rule to this case, we hold that the use to which respondent and his associates put the moving picture machine and the other property appertaining to the Majestic Theater did not constitute keeping open or operating a moving picture show, as contemplated by § 6825, Rev. Codes, as amended by chapter 99 of the 11th session of the legislature, and the decision of the trial court is accordingly affirmed.

We recommend that the state pay respondent's cost upon appeal.

Sullivan, Ch. J., and Budge, J., concur.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

W. M. GORDON, Appt.,
v.

GEORGE GORDON, Admr., etc., of J. L. Gordon, Deceased.

(168 Ky. 409, 182 S. W. 220.)

Contract — to procure parole — validity.

A contract to aid in securing the parole of a prisoner, which does not contemplate the use of illegal means, but merely the presentation to the board of the necessary L.R.A.1916D.

papers and evidence, is not against public policy, although a statute imposes a penalty on any person who shall for reward aid or assist in procuring a pardon from the governor.

For other cases, see Contracts, III. c. 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 10, 1916.)

Note. — As to validity of contract to procure pardon, parole, or commutation of sentence, see annotation following this case, post, 580.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Boyle County sustaining a demurrer to a petition filed to recover expenses incurred under an alleged contract to aid in securing the parole of a prisoner. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Jay W. Harlan and Henry Jackson, for appellant:

The contract was valid, and not contrary to public policy.

9 Cyc. 494; 1 Page, Contr. p. 661; Timothy v. Wright, 8 Gray, 522; Chadwick v. Knox, 31 N. H. 226, 64 Am. Dec. 329; William Deering & Co. v. Cunningham, 63 Kan. 174, 54 L.R.A. 410, 65 Pac. 263.

Mr. J. W. Rawlings, for appellee:

To allow plaintiff to recover would be against the public policy of the state and government, and would violate § 1370 of the Kentucky Statutes.

McGill v. Burnett, 7 J. J. Marsh. 640; Thompson v. Wharton, 7 Bush, 563, 3 Am. Rep. 306; Brown v. Young, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 664; Baaket v. Moss, 115 N. C. 448, 48 L.R.A. 842, 44 Am. St. Rep. 463, 20 S. E. 733.

Mr. George Stone also for appellee.

Miller, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellant, William M. Gordon, is a son of J. L. Gordon, who died in January, 1914. J. L. Gordon was the father of another son, George Gordon, who was confined in the state penitentiary at Frankfort, in 1909, under a judgment of the Boyle circuit court.

The petition alleges that in 1909 J. L. Gordon employed the appellant to prepare an application and to do what was necessary toward securing the parole of said George Gordon, and agreed and promised to reimburse and pay plaintiff for all the expense that he might incur in that work; that pursuant to said employment, the plaintiff prepared the application for the parole, and, in doing so made many trips to Frankfort, Danville, Harrodsburg, and over the entire county of Boyle, at his own expense.

The petition further alleges that by reason of the plaintiff being required to be absent from home in this work, he was forced to hire a man to work in his place on his farm; that the time consumed in this work and effort to get the parole was the greater part of five years; that he was required to pay for said substituted hand, at least $1,000; and that his father agreed to pay the plaintiff his expenses, including the hire of the substituted hand.

The plaintiff also alleges that no unlawful means were used by him in said employment, and none were contemplated at the L.R.A.1916D.

time of the agreement; that said services so rendered were purely ministerial; that he did not use his personal influence with the paroling powers, and that it was never contemplated that he should do so.

It is further alleged that the agreement did not contemplate and did not include any reward or compensation to plaintiff whatever, but only included and provided for the plaintiff having returned to him his expenses, as above indicated; and that J. L. Gordon, by reason of his age and physical condition, was unable to personally make said trips in the preparation of said petition for a parole.

Upon the death of J. L. Gordon, his son J. T. Gordon qualified as his administrator; and, J. T. Gordon having subsequently died, George Gordon was appointed administrator of his father's estate.

In December, 1914, William M. Gordon brought this action to recover his expenses aggregating $1,000, and, the court having sustained a demurrer to his petition, upon the ground that the contract was against public policy and void, the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

By way of defense, the administrator relies upon § 1370 of the Kentucky Statutes, which reads as follows: "If any person shall, for fee or reward, or the promise thereof, aid or assist in procuring the governor to grant or refuse a pardon, remission or respite of any punishment or fine, he shall be fined not less than twenty nor more than five hundred dollars."

Appellant, however, denies the applicability of the statute, supra, or the doctrine that the contract relied on is against public policy, because, as he contends: (1) The work performed by the plaintiff was to secure a parole, and not a pardon; (2) it was clerical or ministerial, and under the contract the plaintiff was not to be paid for his personal influence; and (3) the money sought to be recovered is not a reward, remuneration, or profit to the plaintiff for his personal services, but is only for money expended and pecuniary loss suffered by reason of expenses and time lost from his own business, by reason of the contract.

It is contended by appellant that there is a radical difference between a contract to procure a pardon from the governor, which is denounced by the statute, and a contract to prepare an application to the board of prison commissioners, for a parole; that a contract to procure a parole is in no respect against public policy, and that the reason which makes a contract to procure a pardon invalid has no application whatever to a contract to prepare and present an application for a parole.

Since the enactment of § 1370 of the Kentucky Statutes, the power of parole has been vested in the state board of prison commissioners, subject to the approval of the governor. Ky. Stat. § 3828. By the terms of that statute the board of prison commissioners must base its action upon the record of the prisoner while confined; the record of his life previous to his confinement, which requires the ascertainment of the sentiment of the people where he formerly resided; and upon his securing, before his parole, a contract for some respectable employment for a period of six months after being liberated. Of course, much of this information can be furnished only through the efforts of some outside person in behalf of the man confined in the penitentiary. Moreover, the parole does not pardon the prisoner; he still remains in the legal control and custody of the board of prison commissioners. The pardoning power remains vested in the governor. It will thus be seen that the action of the paroling board must be based upon the facts specified in the statute, and that many of those facts necessarily must be gathered from outside sources.

There are many acts which the law positively forbids, and for the doing of which some penalty is attached. Whether the prohibition is by the common law or by statute is immaterial. Any agreement which involves the doing of an act which is positively prohibited by the rules of the common law or by statute is illegal and void.

There are also many things which the law does not prohibit, in the sense of attaching penalties, but which are so mischievous in their nature and tendency that on grounds of public policy they cannot be admitted as the subject of a valid contract.

It is probable that a satisfactory or precise definition of public policy has never been given. The courts have, however, frequently approved Lord Brougham's definition of public policy as the principle which declares that no one can lawfully do that which has a tendency to be injurious to the public welfare.

But the notion as to what is injurious to the public welfare at one time may not accord with the notion of a succeeding generation. Public policy, therefore, is variable; and that which is contrary to the policy of the public at one time may become public policy at another time. No hard and fast rule can be given by which to determine what is public policy.

It has been said that a contract is against public policy if it is injurious to the interests of the public, or contravenes some established interest of society, or if it L.R.A.1916D.

contravenes some public statute, or is against good morals, or tends to interfere with the public welfare or safety, or, as it is sometimes put, if it is at war with the interests of society, and is in conflict with the morals of the time. Pueblo & A. Valley R. Co. v. Taylor, 6 Colo. 1, 45 Am. Rep. 512; McNamara v. Gargett, 68 Mich. 454, 13 Am. St. Rep. 355, 36 N. W. 218.

The rule must not be understood to mean that in order that a contract may be declared to be against public policy, it must be inimical to morality. Many contracts which are not immoral are nevertheless void on the ground that they are against public policy. Kohn v. Milcher (C. C.) 10 L.R.A. 439, 43 Fed. 641.

In applying this rule, it has been said that contracts are against public policy when they tend to injustice or oppression, restraint of liberty and natural or legal right, or the obstruction of justice, or the violation of a statute, or to interfere with or control executive, legislative, or other official action, or to prevent competition whenever a statute or any known rule of law requires it.

In many jurisdictions, statutes have been passed similar to § 1370 of the Kentucky Statutes, denouncing as unlawful, contracts to procure a pardon from the governor; and if the contract in the case at bar employed the appellant, for a fee or reward, to procure a pardon from the governor, it would be against the public policy of the state, and consequently void.

The reason for the rule, and the exceptions thereto, are stated in 9 Cyc. 493, as follows: "The exercise of the pardoning power committed to the executive should be as free from any improper bias or influence as the trial of the convict before the court; consequently the law will not enforce a contract to pay money for soliciting petitions, signing petitions, using influence to obtain a pardon, or the remission of a forfeiture. But as in the case of lobbying contracts many courts have held that the reason for holding such agreements void fails when no unlawful means of attaining the desired object are contemplated by the contract itself or in fact employed; and such services, when performed at defendant's request, are a good consideration for a subsequent promise to pay. Such agreements would clearly seem to be lawful where the services contracted for are publicly rendered by advocates disclosing their true relation to the subject, and not by private individuals keeping secret the character in which they solicit; but where the compensation is contingent on success, this is a strong circumstance against the validity of the agreement."

In McGill v. Burnett, 7 J. J. Marsh. 640, a contract by which McGill's intestate agreed to pay Burnett $100 in consideration of his services and labor to be performed in and about the management of a petition to the governor, in case of a certain forfeiture, this court said the contract was, in effect, to pay the plaintiff for his management, whether fair or foul, in inducing the governor to remit a forfeiture, and that such contracts tended to obstruct a correct administration of the government, and were void as against public policy. A similar ruling was made in Brown v. Young, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 664. See also Averbeck v. Hall, 14 Bush, 505, for a ruling similar in principle.

But, under the exception to the general rule, as above stated, the contract will not be held invalid when no unlawful means of attaining the desired object are contemplated by the contract itself, or in fact employed. Thus, the general rule which makes contracts of this character void does not apply in cases in which the party whose pardon is sought to be obtained has not been convicted of crime by a legally constituted tribunal having the constitutional right to try and punish the offender, as where the trial of a prisoner by a military court is unauthorized by law and forbidden by the Constitution, and its sentence is consequently a nullity.

Where, under such circumstances, a person undertakes by the use of his personal influence with the military commander, to save the unfortunate man from the impending danger of threatened execution, or unauthorized and illegal imprisonment, his act cannot be regarded as an agreement to obstruct the proper administration of the government, or to defeat the ends of public justice. 6 R. C. L. 767.

The reasons which sustain the general rule and the statute, supra, apply only in cases in which the party whose pardon is sought to be obtained has been convicted of crime by a legally constituted tribunal having the constitutional right to try and punish the offender. Thus, in Thompson v. Wharton, 7 Bush, 583, 3 Am. Rep. 306, Solon Thompson was arrested in 1865 by the Federal military authorities. In the following June he was tried by a military court upon the charge of being a guerrilla, and was convicted and sentenced to suffer death. Wharton, a Louisville lawyer, had been employed prior to the trial to defend Thompson for an agreed fee, and, on the day fixed for Thompson's execution, a new contract was made with Wharton; he agreeing, by proper proceedings before the commanding general, without whose approval the sentence of the military court could not be carried into execution, to prevent the infliction of the adjudged punishment, and, if possible, to procure the discharge of Thompson, in consideration of a further fee of $300, to be paid only in event of his success.

In March, 1866, Thompson was discharged from custody, and Wharton sued to collect his fee. Upon the trial the court was asked to instruct the jury that if they believed from the evidence that the sole consideration for the execution of the note sued on was the agreement of Wharton to use his personal influence with the commanding general to secure the pardon of Thompson, or to have his punishment commuted, the agreement was contrary to public policy, and void.

But the court, speaking through Judge Lindsay, cited McGill v. Burnett, supra, and held that the rule there announced did not apply, and should not control in cases where the conviction was unauthorized by law and forbidden by the Constitution, as in Thompson's Case.

In the course of the opinion, Judge Lindsay said: "Under these circumstances the appellee undertook, by the use of his personal influence with the military commander, to save the unfortunate man from the impending danger of threatened execution or unauthorized and illegal imprisonment. Such an act cannot be regarded as an agreement to obstruct the proper administration of the government, nor to defeat the ends of public justice. The object sought to be accomplished, as well as the means to be resorted to, were entirely defensible, whether regarded from a legal or moral standpoint; and, such being the case, it is difficult to perceive how the contract constituting the consideration of the note can be regarded as contravening public policy."

Again, in Rau v. Boyle, 5 Bush, 254, Rau & Rieke, who were Confederate sympathizers, had purchased a quantity of tobacco in Western Kentucky, which had been seized by General Payne, the Federal military commander, at Paducah, under pretense of military authority. While their tobacco was thus wrongfully withheld from them, Rau & Rieke made a written contract with John Boyle, by which the latter undertook to procure the release of the tobacco, Boyle to have one half of it for his services.

By a subsequent contract with John and J. T. Boyle, Rau & Rieke were to buy tobacco and cotton on speculation and ship the same under a permit then held by Boyle from Major General Burbridge, of the United States Army, or under other permits which he might thereafter obtain, and the profits realized from said purchases were to be equally divided between Rau & Rieke and the Boyles. Boyle succeeded in procuring the release of the tobacco which had been seized by General Payne, and other tobacco was bought and shipped under the second contract above referred to. The Boyles were Union men, and had held positions in the United States Army, which they resigned before John Boyle undertook this agency to get the tobacco released.

In answer to the suit of Boyle & Boyle upon the contracts, Rau & Rieke contended that their agreements with Boyle & Boyle were mere promises to pay them for their loyalty, and for the exercise of their influence with officers of the United States government, and consequently were illegal as against public policy. But the court overruled this defense, holding that since Rau & Rieke had been unlawfully deprived of their tobacco, and their only remedy seemed to be the use of moral means, the court could not say that the employment of Boyle & Boyle to effectuate the purpose was either contrary to law or against public policy.

It will thus be seen that the strict rule of the statute has not been applied by this court in similar cases when the reason for the rule has ceased to exist.

Furthermore, the case before us does not come within the scope of the statute, and it has none of the features which would render it immoral or against public policy. The contract sued on was for the procurement of a parole, not a pardon; it is for reimbursement of expenses incurred, not for a fee or compensation; and the petition expressly states that the contract did not contemplate the use of any personal influence with any officers of the state in procuring the parole.

While we would uphold the integrity of the statute wherever it is applicable, under the authorities cited there is nothing in the contract before us which violates any rule of public policy. William Deering & Co. v. Cunningham, 63 Kan. 174, 54 L.R.A. 410, 65 Pac. 263; Chadwick v. Knox, 31 N. H. 226, 64 Am. Dec. 329; Moyer v. Cantieny, 41 Minn. 242, 42 N. W. 1060; Stroemer v. Van Orsdel, 74 Neb. 132, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 212, 121 Am. St. Rep. 713, 103 N. W. 1053, 107 N. W. 125; Denison v. Crawford County, 48 Iowa, 211; Hunt v. Test, 8 Ala. 713, 42 Am. Dec. 659; Trist v. Child (Burke v. Child) 21 Wall. 441, 22 L. ed. 623; and Wright v. Tebbitts, 91 U. S. 252, 23 L. ed. 320, contain interesting and valuable discussions of the question, and support the conclusion here reached.

The plaintiff might have been required, upon motion, to file a bill of particulars, showing his claim in detail; but that defect in the petition did not go to the merits of the plaintiff's claim, and a bill of particulars may yet be required.

Judgment reversed, with instructions to overrule the demurrer to the petition, and for further proceedings.

Annotation—Validity of contract to procure pardon, parole, or commutation of sentence.

As to validity of contract by an attorney to secure suspension of criminal law as to offenses thereafter committed, see note to Arlington Hotel Co. v. Ewing, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 842.

Though there is some conflict of opinion, contracts entered into to obtain a pardon or commutation of sentence have generally been upheld where the services contemplated are not other than the proper presentation of the case before the pardoning power. Where, however, personal interest enters into the success of the contract, or the use of personal influence is contemplated, the general rule is that the contract is illegal as against public policy, and so unenforceable.

A contract entered into by an attorney to procure a pardon by the proper use of legitimate means is not illegal or against public policy. Formby v. Pryor (1854) 15 Ga. 258; Meadow v. Bird (1867) 22 Ga. 246; Moyer v. Cantieny L.R.A. 1916D.

(1889) 41 Minn. 242, 42 N. W. 1060; Chadwick v. Knox (1855) 31 N. H. 226, 64 Am. Dec. 329; Bremesen v. Engler (1883) 17 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 172; Newbold v. McCrorey (1916) — S. O. —, 87 S. E. 542.

Nor is such a contract illegal because compensation is made contingent on success. Moyer v. Cantieny (1889) 41 Minn. 242, 42 N. W. 1060.

A distinction should be made between an employment of this kind and a contract to procure a pardon made by a person who is not an attorney; such a contract would be objectionable because it would appear on its face that the means to be employed were influence or personal solicitation, or some others equally objectionable, while in this case the employment is to perform services in the line of the employee's profession which for any other object would be unobjectionable. Bremesen v. Engler (1883) 17 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 172.

And in Chadwick v. Knox (1855) 31 N. H. 226, 64 Am. Dec. 329, the court said that "a person in prison can do little to aid himself in bringing his case to the consideration of the executive. For everything that must be done without the walls of the prison the convict is compelled to rely on the assistance of those who have their liberty. Such assistance may be afforded from motives of charity and compassion, or the motive may be in part kindness and in part an expectation that the party relieved will be ready to afford a suitable compensation for the services and expenses; or the party in prison may employ another to do such acts as may be rightfully and properly done for his relief, and contract to pay him for his services and to repay him his expenses. Such a contract, if the parties contemplate only a resort to legal and proper measures, is free from any just exception, and binding upon the parties."

So, also, in Moyer v. Cantieny (Minn.) supra, the court stated that "it would be proper and often expedient that an attorney at law examine the case upon which the conviction was based to see whether, notwithstanding the final judgment of the law, the case may not be of such a nature as to justify the exercise of the extraordinary power of pardon. He may direct investigations to the discovery of facts bearing upon the question of guilt not discoverable at the time of the trial. The attention of prosecuting officers and of the judge who tried the cause may be directed to newly discovered facts or to any of the circumstances of the case, and their recommendations in favor of a pardon may be sought. Whatever considerations may properly affect the action of the executive may be urged upon his attention."

And in Houlton v. Dunn (1895) 60 Minn. 26, 30 L.R.A. 737, 51 Am. St. Rep. 493, 61 N. W. 698, in referring to and quoting from Moyer v. Cantieny (Minn.) supra, the court as dictum said: "To the reasons given by the court in this case we may add that the statute expressly provides that a person convicted of crime may by petition apply to the governor for pardon. Such petitioner is usually one who is confined to some prison and unable to present the petition personally to the governor. Not only this, but it is very seldom that such a petition is made by one learned in the law; and it is therefore a legal right which a prisoner has under such circumstances to employ an attorney to prepare his petition, present it to the governor for pardon, and L.R.A.1916D.

have such argument made in behalf of the petitioner as may be pertinent and advisable. As a petition and pardon are authorized by law, the presentation of a petition duly and legally prepared, accompanied by a legal argument in behalf of the petitioner showing the illegality of his confinement, or its injustice, and that public interests would not be violated by the granting to him of a pardon, cannot be a proceeding contrary to public policy, and certainly a contract for such purpose should not be declared void."

On the contrary, a contract by an attorney to procure a pardon was held to be against public policy and void in Brown v. Young (1886) 7 Ky. L. Rep. 664.

Nor, it was held, could there be a recovery on quantum meruit for what an attorney might legally do, having for his end the procuring of a pardon, when the contract is to procure a pardon without limiting the services to such as can be legally contracted for. (Ky.) Ibid.

So, also, an agreement to obtain a commutation of sentence was held to be illegal and void in Kribben v. Hayercraft (1858) 26 Mo. 396. The court stated that the distinction between such an agreement and an agreement to obtain a pardon, which is contrary to public policy and void, is nominal, the principle being the same in both cases, and all the considerations that uphold the propriety and wisdom of the rule in one case applying to the other.

But an agreement by an attorney to use his personal influence with the commanding general to secure the pardon of his client, who had been convicted by a military tribunal of being a guerrilla, or to have his punishment commuted, was held in Thompson v. Wharton (1870) 7 Bush (Ky.) 563, 3 Am. Rep. 306, not to be contrary to public policy and void, as the conviction had been illegal, the military courts having had no jurisdiction.

In McGill v. Burnett (1832) 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 640, an agreement to pay one a certain sum "in consideration of his services and labor to be performed in and about the management of a petition to the governor in case a certain forfeiture described in the contract was remitted by him" was held illegal and unenforceable. The court said that "the contract is in effect to pay the plaintiff for his management, whether fair or foul, in inducing the governor to remit a forfeiture. Such contracts tend to obstruct a correct administration of the government. He who labors for the reward promised will be induced to use his influence for the money he is to obtain, when as a patriot and citizen he should only act for the good of his country and under an impartial sense of justice tempered with mercy. We can readily imagine the dangers likely to result from the corrupt artifices of mercenary managers in procuring pardons and remissions."

So, also, in Hatzfield v. Gulden (1838) 7 Watts (Pa.) 152, 32 Am. Dec. 750, it was held that a contract to secure signers to a petition for pardon was illegal and unenforceable, especially where, as in this case, it appeared that the party was acting not from pity nor from the sense that the punishment was too severe, nor from friendship to the prisoner, but for his own gain and emolument. The court stated that it was not necessary to say whether, after the whole transaction is closed, a person who incidentally paid some postage, or who under special circumstances carried a petition the signatures to which were spontaneously made, may not receive his actual expense and daily pay, but that it would be a very special case, however, to justify even this, and added that this was not such a case, and it did not wish to see advertisements that pardons will be obtained at the lowest price nor anything which approaches to it, and that generally all contracts to change the course of trials or the effects of trials, whether to obtain the liberation of a prisoner by money to the jailors or to obtain a pardon by the use of money directly or indirectly, must be void.

Promissory notes executed by one convicted of rape and made payable to prosecutrix and to her attorneys, part of the consideration being that she should sign a petition for a pardon, were illegal and void as against public policy. Haines v. Lewis (1880) 54 Iowa, 301, 37 Am. Rep. 202, 6 N. W. 495.

So, also, an agreement that for a pecuniary consideration a person will withdraw opposition to the granting of a pardon to one who has been convicted of a crime, and will, by solicitation and the exercise of personal influence, endeavor to induce the pardoning authority to grant one, contravenes public policy and is void. William Deering & Co. v. Cunningham (1901) 63 Kan. 174, 54 L.R.A. 410, 65 Pac. 263. The court distinguished between the services of persons legally employed to prepare a petition, to collect evidence showing the right to a pardon, and submit the same, together with proper arguments, either oral or in writing, to the governor or other authority granting pardons, and the services contracted for in the present case, which were personal influence and lobby services, not by anyone skilled in such work, but by those who had been instrumental in securing the conviction, and the withdrawal of their opposition to the granting of the pardon which had been applied for, and stated that the purchase of personal influence to obtain a pardon, or to control the operations of any department of the government, is immoral and pernicious in tendency, and cannot receive the sanction of courts.

And a mortgage to secure promissory notes which represented the amount the mortgagor had defrauded the mortgagee, but which was given on consideration that the mortgagee without improper means would obtain a nolle prosequi from the governor of an indictment for conspiracy to defraud found against the mortgagor, was held in Willey v. Collier (1854) 7 Md. 273, 61 Am. Dec. 346, to be against public policy and void. The court said: "There is no doctrine better settled than that agreements to obtain executive clemency by means of pardons or writs of nolle prosequi cannot be enforced. The reasons are obvious. They are designed to protect the exercise of this power from abuse through the intervention of designing persons, and although in the particular instance no improper influences may have been resorted to, the public interest in such question requires that the principle should be enforced in all cases. It may sometimes as between the parties be unjust to a claimant who has rendered valuable service for another in his distress, but rules of law founded on public policy and the safety of society will not be set aside to sustain such individual demand."

... There is much danger of abuse in the exercise of the pardoning power and in granting writs of nolle prosequi, arising from the manner in which such applications are generally presented. They were, before the adoption of the present Constitution, preferred and acted on ex parte, the governor necessarily relying on the imperfect, not to say false, lights that such circumstances might afford. It is easy to perceive that this danger is greatly increased where the party urging the application is unknown to the executive, the paid agent of the accused, or is acting under the strongest inducements to varnish or misrepresent the facts by reason of his own interest in the success of the measure. No class of cases presents a more striking illustration than that to which the presentment mentioned in this record belongs. If it be understood as the law of the state that such compromises are binding and may be enforced, we may anticipate an increase in number of presentments for raising money under false pretenses and for conspiracies to defraud, found at the instance of persons defrauded, hoping thereby ultimately, as here expected, to secure the payment of their claim against the offenders."

And in Norman v. Cole (1800) 3 Esp. (Eng.) 253, it was held that an action would not lie to recover money deposited for the purpose of being paid to one who had access to persons of influence, for his services in using his influence to procure a pardon for one sentenced to death, by representing in favorable terms the case and character of the one so sentenced. The court stated that "where a person interposes his interest and good offices to secure a pardon, it ought to be done gratuitously, and not for money; the doing an act of that description should proceed from pure motives, and not from pecuniary ones."

But a release from all liability for damages, given by one convicted of illegal liquor selling, under a statute the constitutionality of which was doubted, in consideration that the releases and others would take steps to procure a pardon, was held in Timothy v. Wright (1857) 8 Gray (Mass.) 522, not to be illegal as contrary to public policy. The court stated that "the release itself shows that the liquors had been seized and destroyed under a judicial decision as a legal penalty against the releasor; but that doubts had arisen whether that law was constitutional. If it was not, then he might have a suit for damages against the magistrates, the complainants, the executive officers who actually executed the judgment and destroyed the liquors. The purpose of this release was to quiet their claims for extreme damages. But at the same time that the liquors were adjudged to be destroyed as a penalty for a violation of law, by force of the same law he was subjected to a personal penalty by imprisonment. Now it seems to us that it would be right and fit for those who were acquainted with all these circumstances, on being satisfied that the convict would relinquish this extreme claim for pure damages against those who acted, as they supposed, under the justification of the law and in conformity with their duty, to apply to the executive to pardon the convict from the whole or part of the personal penalty; and that it would not be wrong or against public policy for the executive to receive and take such representations into consideration in the exercise of his high prerogative."

One who has paid money under an illegal contract to secure a pardon cannot after the contract is executed recover such money back. O'Reilly v. Cleary (1879) 8 Mo. App. 186.

Otherwise, however, if the contract is unexecuted. Adams Exp. Co. v. Reno (1871) 48 Mo. 264. J. H. B.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA

v.
E. T. BASS, Appt.

(— N. C. —, 87 S. E. 972.)

Municipal corporation — ordinance — erection of stables — application.

1. A municipal ordinance forbidding the erection of a stable nearer the house of a neighbor than of the owner applies to stables in course of erection.

For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, II. c, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Note. — For stable as a nuisance, see notes to Oehler v. Levy, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1025, and Douglas v. Greenville, 49 L.R.A. (N.S.) 958, and notes on analogous questions there referred to.

The different phases of the general sub-L.R.A.1916D.

Same — police power — location of stables.

2. The police power of a municipal corporation does not extend to the passage of an ordinance merely forbidding the erection of a stable nearer the house of a neighbor than of the owner.

For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, II. c, 4, c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Clark, Ch. J., dissents.)

(March 1, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Nash County, convicting him of erecting a stable nearer ject of municipal control over nuisances are treated in notes that may be found by consulting the Index to L.R.A. Notes, under the title, "Municipal Corporations," subtitle, "Nuisance."

to the house of his neighbor than to his own, in alleged violation of a town ordinance. Reversed.

Statement by Brown, J.:

This is an indictment, tried November term, 1915, for violating the following ordinance of the town of Nashville: "No person or persons, firm or corporation shall build or cause to be erected any privy, stables or stalls nearer to a neighbor's residence than it is to the owner's; and no privy shall be constructed nearer than 25 feet of any public street, under penalty of twenty-five (25) dollars for each offense. Each day's continuance of such privy, stables or stalls after notice by the sanitary officer shall constitute a separate offense."

The defendant was convicted, and, from the judgment pronounced, appealed.

Messrs. T. T. Thorne and A. C. Bernard, for appellant:

The court will not take judicial notice of the existence of a town charter or grant of corporate powers. The rule is: "That judicial notice will be taken by the court of knowledge of the facts of uniform, natural occurrence, immemorial usage, historical sanction, or general notoriety."

12 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 151; Hughes v. Craven County, 107 N. C. 598, 12 S. E. 465; Durham v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 108 N. C. 399, 12 S. E. 1040, 13 S. E. 1.

An ordinance must be "impartial, fair, and general." It would be unreasonable and unjust to make, under the same circumstances, an act when done by one person penal, and when done by another not so.

Barger v. Smith, 156 N. C. 323, 72 S. E. 376, 160 N. C. 205, 75 S. E. 1098.

A stable is not a nuisance per se.

Dargan v. Waddill, 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 244, 49 Am. Dec. 421; Hyatt v. Myers, 73 N. C. 237; Privett v. Whitaker, 73 N. C. 556.

It must be shown and found as a fact by a jury that such stables must have been so built, so kept or used, as to destroy the comfort of persons owning and occupying adjoining premises, or impair the value of such premises as places of habitation.

Thomason v. Seaboard Air Line R. Co. 142 N. C. 300, 55 S. E. 198.

Assuming the town had a charter, it had no authority, from another view, to pass the ordinance in question.

State v. Ray, 131 N. C. 814, 60 L.R.A. 634, 92 Am. St. Rep. 795, 42 S. E. 960; State v. Webber, 107 N. C. 962, 22 Am. St. Rep. 920, 12 S. E. 598; State v. Thomas, 118 N. C. 1121, 24 S. E. 431; State v. Dannenberg, 150 N. C. 799, 63 S. E. 946; State L.R.A.1916D.

v. Darnell, 166 N. C. 300, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 332, 81 S. E. 338.

Messrs. T. W. Bickett, Attorney General, and T. H. Calvert, Assistant Attorney General, for the State:

The courts will take judicial notice of municipal charters.

Chamberlayne, Ev. § 623; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 231.

Testimony offered by the defendant, tending to show the motive or reasons of the board of commissioners in adopting the ordinance, was properly excluded.

McQuillin, Mun. Ord. §§ 161, 162; Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 680, 681; Title Municipal Corporations, 28 Cyc. 375.

A stable, though not a nuisance per se, may become a nuisance, and therefore is a proper subject of municipal regulation.

McQuillin, Mun. Ord. § 450; Dill. Mun. Corp. § 692; Title Nuisances, 29 Cyc. 1181; Oehler v. Levy, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1025, note; Dargan v. Waddill, 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 244, 49 Am. Dec. 421.

An ordinance delegating to the owners of one half the ground in any block the power to determine whether a livery stable may be erected thereon or not is invalid, as an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power.

St. Louis v. Russell, 116 Mo. 248, 20 L.R.A. 721, 22 S. W. 470; State v. Tenant, 110 N. C. 609, 15 L.R.A. 423, 28 Am. St. Rep. 716, 14 S. E. 387.

Whether or not an ordinance is unreasonable is a question for the court.

Small v. Edenton, 146 N. C. 527, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 146, 60 S. E. 413; McQuillin, Mun. Corp. §§ 726, 728, 729.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant was convicted of erecting his stable nearer the house of his neighbor than to his own, the evidence being that it was located 14 feet 7 inches from Mrs. Collin's residence and three times that distance from his own residence.

The contention that the ordinance does not apply to a stable in course of construction cannot be maintained. In Privett v. Whitaker, 73 N. C. 554, it was held that a municipal ordinance forbidding the erection of a wooden building within certain limits applied to a building the erection of which had been commenced at the time the ordinance was adopted. Stables are not per se nuisances at common law, to be abated regardless of the manner in which they are kept. Dargan v. Waddill, 31 N. C. (9 Ired. L.) 244, 49 Am. Dec. 421.

Nevertheless, the possibility that they may become nuisances, together with their objectionable character when located very near to dwellings, places them in the category of buildings the location of which may be designated and controlled by reasonable ordinances enacted by the municipality in which they are situated. St. Louis v. Russell, 116 Mo. 248, 20 L.R.A. 721, 22 S. W. 470; McQuillin, Mun. Ord. § 450, 29 Cyc. 1171; Dill. Mun. Corp. 692.

It is contended that this ordinance is invalid because it is unreasonable and not uniform, in that it does not afford protection to all citizens alike, and is not reasonably appropriate for the accomplishment of any legitimate object falling within the police power of the state. 6 R. C. L. § 226. The objection is well taken, as the ordinance manifestly fails to accomplish any purpose properly falling within the scope of the police power. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Illinois, 200 U. S. 561, 50 L. ed. 596, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 341, 4 Ann. Cas. 1175; 6 R. C. L. § 226, and notes. Its purpose is presumed to be to improve the health of the inhabitants of the town, as well as to minister to their comfort. It fails conspicuously to accomplish such purpose, as, under it, stables may be kept with impunity obnoxiously near any number of dwellings if they are equally as near the dwelling of the owner of the stables. Thus it is put within the power of the owner to annoy his neighbor at will if he is willing to endure the same annoyance himself.

An ordinance, to be valid, must be uniform in its application to all citizens, and afford equal protection to all alike. It must not discriminate in favor of one person or class of persons over others. To be valid, it must furnish a uniform rule of action. State v. Tenant, 110 N. C. 612, 15 L.R.A. 423, 28 Am. St. Rep. 715, 14 S. E. 387. It must operate equally upon all persons, as well as for their equal benefit and protection, who come or live within the corporate limits. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 380; State v. Pendergrass, 106 N. C. 664, 10 S. E. 1002; State v. Summerfield, 107 N. C. 898, 12 S. E. 114.

The learned attorney general, with his usual candor, admits that the ordinance is void as a municipal regulation, and in his brief states the legal objections to it so strongly that we quote in extenso: "The consideration that raises a grave doubt about the constitutionality of the ordinance is that the commissioners of the town, who are by statute clothed with the power and duty of exercising their judgment in the enactment of measures for the protection of the public health, have not exercised any judgment at all, and have not declared what, in their opinion, is the shortest distance from a residence a stable should be permitted, but it is left to each citizen to determine that question for himself, with the obligation that when he has determined it, he must afford to his neighbor the same protection he does himself. In this view of the case, there would seem to be two fatal objections to the validity of the ordinance: First. That it is a clear delegation of legislative power to an individual. This court has held in State v. Tenant, 110 N. C. 609, 15 L.R.A. 423, 28 Am. St. Rep. 715, 14 S. E. 387, that a board of aldermen itself cannot be vested with any discretion in the enforcement of an ordinance upon the ground that there would be no general or uniform rule of action, and it would seem to follow that it cannot be left to the judgment, taste, or whim of an individual to say how far a stable must be from a residence. In St. Louis v. Russell, supra, it is held that an ordinance delegating to the owners of one half the ground in any block the power to determine whether a livery stable may be erected thereon or not is invalid, as an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power. The authorities in support of the proposition are reviewed on pages 727 and 728 of 20 L.R.A., State v. Tenant, supra, being among the cases cited."

Again he says: "The second objection to the validity of the ordinance is that it necessarily results in a standard devoid of any element of equality or uniformity, both of which elements are essential to a valid ordinance. The practical result of the enforcement of the ordinance would be a standard as variable as the sizes of the different lots in a town and as the judgment and taste of the individual citizens. Under the ordinance there could be a hundred stables within 50 feet of a residence and none of them be obnoxious to the ordinance, and at the same time there could be a hundred other stables more than a hundred feet from any residence and all of them a violation of the ordinance. The owner of a large lot could build his stable 300 feet from his residence, but if it happened to be within 250 feet of a residence of another, he would be subject to indictment; but if he moved up his stable so that it would be 100 feet from his own residence and 110 feet from a dozen other residences, he would 'clear the law.' The proposition that a stable 250 feet from a single residence is a menace to the public health, while the same stable moved to a point within 110 feet of a dozen residences would not be a menace to the public health, has in it elements of unreasonableness worthy of the of the serious consideration of this court."

What is so well said by Clark, J., in State v. Hord, 122 N. C. 1094, 65 Am. St.

Rep. 743, 29 S. E. 952 (sustaining an ordinance prohibiting a resident from keeping a hogpen within 100 yards of his neighbor's residence), is peculiarly applicable to this case: "The object of the ordinance is not to prevent a man from injuring himself by keeping his hogpen too near his own house, for that is a matter he can remedy at will, but to protect the public against a nuisance which they have no power to prevent except through the authority of a town ordinance acting on the offender."

The ordinance now under consideration is the converse of that. Under this ordinance one may injure his neighbor if, from necessity or caprice, he is willing to endure the same injury himself.

That the reasonableness or validity of a town ordinance is a matter of law for the court, and not the jury, to decide, is well settled. Small v. Edenton, 146 N. C. 527, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 145, 60 S. E. 413; McQuillin, Mun. Ord. §§ 726-729.

The motion to dismiss is allowed.

Reversed.

Clark, Ch. J., dissenting:

The ordinance does not provide that "anyone can erect a stable on his lot provided it is not nearer to his neighbor's residence than to his own."

If this were the language of the ordinance, then the criticism of it would be in point that it might be too near his neighbor. But the ordinance provides merely that "no person shall erect a privy, stables, or stalls nearer to a neighbor's residence than to his own."

It does not lie in the defendant's mouth to complain that the ordinance is not more restrictive upon him than it is. If the defendant should erect a stable or other nuisance nearer to his neighbor's residence than it should be, he is liable for a nuisance. State v. Wilkes, 170 N. C. —, 87 S. E. 48. This ordinance does not authorize him, under any circumstances, to place his stables or other nuisance nearer to a neighbor's residence than it should be. It is not requisite that the town commissioners shall pass ordinances in the exact wording that this court would use. Our only jurisdiction is to hold them invalid if unreasonable. There is nothing unreasonable in an ordinance providing that one "shall not place a stable or other nuisance nearer to a neighbor's residence than to his own." This is merely placing in an ordinance the Golden Rule enunciated in Galilee long centuries ago. It is nothing against the validity of the ordinance that it does not go further and restrict the defendant as to the distance from a neighbor's residence in which the stables can be placed. This court can—L.R.A.1916D.

not, by mandamus, compel the town authorities to make such ordinance. The ordinance is unobjectionable as far as it goes. It might go further. In State v. Hord, 122 N. C. 1092, 65 Am. St. Rep. 743, 29 S. E. 952, it was held that at common law, as well as under the statute, the town commissioners could forbid a citizen from keeping a hogpen within 100 yards of the residence of another, without prescribing the distance from his own residence. Certainly, therefore, it cannot be unreasonable to prescribe that he shall not keep a nuisance any nearer to his neighbor than to himself. In State v. Hord, supra, it was said: "It is an anomaly that the defendant, who had disobeyed the ordinance forbidding him to commit a nuisance upon the public, should be complaining that the town did not go further and forbid him being a nuisance to himself. He could refrain from that without official help."

In this case, it is equally an anomaly that the defendant, who has disobeyed the ordinance forbidding him from putting his stables nearer a neighbor's residence than his own, should be complaining that the town did not go further and prescribe a definite distance from his neighbor's house within which he could not put the stables, even though it should be an equal distance from his own house. He could refrain from doing that without official help, and if he put it near enough to his neighbor's residence to be a nuisance, he would be liable for such nuisance (State v. Wilkes, supra), and this ordinance does not purport to give him authority to do so. In State v. Rice, 158 N. C. 635, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 266, 74 S. E. 582, the court held that an ordinance was not insufficient because it did not go further and prescribe the number of hogs or pigs, the condition or size of the pens where they are kept. The court said: "Courts cannot run a race of opinion upon points of right, reason, and expediency against the lawmaking power. No act of the legislature can be declared void or unconstitutional unless it conflicts with some provision of the Constitution. Nor can any ordinance of any municipal corporation within the power conferred by the legislature, and not in conflict with the laws and the Constitution of the state, be impeached in a court for unreasonableness. A critical examination of cases holding police regulations void because unreasonable will disclose that the attempted police regulations violated some constitutional guaranty. The right asserted by some courts to declare municipal ordinances invalid because unreasonable is limited to ordinances passed under the implied or incidental powers of the municipality."

Our people have the inestimable right of "local self-government." As this court has often said, we cannot, "without making ourselves a tyranny of five men," assume supervision over boards of county commissioners or the boards of town commissioners, to set aside their regulations and orders within the powers conferred by the statute unless, as is said above, "the attempted police regulations violate some constitutional guaranty." This ordinance does not violate any constitutional guaranty, and is within the authority conferred upon the town by Revisal, § 2929.

The government of Nashville is committed to the commissioners elected by the voters thereof, and not to us. We can interfere only when the town authorities enact an ordinance which violates their authority under the Constitution and statutes, and not merely when the ordinance does not go as far as it might do, as in this instance. As was said in State v. Rice: "It is not our province to review the action of the board of sanitation within the limits of their powers."

As was said in State v. Hord, supra, the ordinance is uniform; for it applies to all citizens alike under the same conditions.

On its face, there is nothing in this ordinance that violates the Constitution or the statutes, or that is beyond the powers conferred upon the town commissioners. There is no evidence that the facts, in this particular case, have made it oppressive to the defendant. It is not the province of the courts to govern, but only to set aside, ordinances when shown to be beyond the authority of the town commissioners. When, as in this case, an ordinance which is within their powers does not go as far as we think it might have done, it is for the people of the town of Nashville, and not for us, to procure an addition to the ordinance, or to elect a new board that will amend it. The people of the town know local conditions and requirements better than we do, and are competent to govern themselves through their local officials, elected by themselves to voice their wishes in local matters. As the defendant has violated the ordinance as is written, certainly he cannot contend that he is not guilty because the ordinance might have prohibited him further to the protection of his neighbor.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND, & PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY et al., Plffs. in Err.

v.

H. N. MEDLEY.

(— Okla. —, 155 Pac. 211.)

Libel — letter to employee.

The following service letter, issued by a railroad company to a former employee upon his discharge: "To Whom It may Concern:—This is to certify that Mr. H. N. Medley has been employed at Enid, Oklahoma, on the Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific Railway, as car repairer, from July 25, 1909, to January 17, 1910, when he was discharged for being an agitator and creating trouble in the ranks of our car men at Enid. Service unsatisfactory on this account,"—is not libelous per se.

For other cases, see Libel and Slander, I. o., in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 1, 1916.)

Headnote by DUDLEY, C.

Note. — The liability growing out of the giving or refusing of information affecting the character or reputation of a servant, including the liability for defamatory statements, is considered at length in the note to Wabash R. Co. v. Young, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) L.R.A.1916D.

ERROR to the Superior Court for Garfield County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for delay in and failure to issue to plaintiff a service letter, and issuance to him of a false one, and for libel for publication of such false letter. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. C. O. Blake, R. J. Roberts, W. H. Moore, J. G. Gamble, and K. W. Shartel, for plaintiffs in error:

The service letter issued by the defendant company to plaintiff was not libelous per se.

Wabash R. Co. v. Young, 162 Ind. 102, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, 69 N. E. 1003; Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Kelly, 163 Ala. 348, 50 So. 1008.

Whatever publication in fact existed was privileged, and neither of the defendants can be held in damages therefor.

Newell, Slander & Libel, 2d ed. § 114, p. 515; Remington v. Congdon, 2 Pick. 310, 13 Am. Dec. 431; Beeler v. Jackson, 1091. And as to liability for libel or slander in such case, see also the subsequent cases, Sunley v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 91; Christopher v. Akin, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 104; and Doane v. Grew, L.R.A.1915C, 774.

64 Md. 589, 2 Atl. 916; Billings v. Fairbanks, 136 Mass. 177; Howland v. George F. Blake Mfg. Co. 156 Mass. 543, 31 N. E. 656; Miller v. Donovan, 16 Misc. 453, 39 N. Y. Supp. 820; Brown v. Elm City Lumber Co. 167 N. C. 9, L.R.A.1915E, 275, 82 S. E. 961; Schoepflin v. Coffey, 162 N. Y. 12, 56 N. E. 502; Rosenbaum v. Roche, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 237, 101 S. W. 1164; Massee v. Williams, 124 C. C. A. 492, 207 Fed. 222; Hubbard v. Cowling, 36 Okla. 603, 129 Pac. 714.

It was error to submit to the jury the question whether the publication, if any, of the language contained in the service letter given to the plaintiff, was privileged.

Tuohy v. Halsell, 35 Okla. 61, 43 L.R.A. (N.S.) 323, 128 Pac. 126; Hubbard v. Cowling, 36 Okla. 603, 129 Pac. 714; Spencer v. Minnick, 41 Okla. 613, 139 Pac. 130; Bodine v. Times-Journal Pub. Co. 26 Okla. 135, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 147, 110 Pac. 1096.

Messrs. H. G. McKeever and Frederick L. Brimf for defendant in error.

Dudley, C., filed the following opinion:

This is an appeal from the superior court of Garfield county. On December 30, 1910, the defendant in error Medley commenced this action in said court against the plaintiffs in error and the defendant in error Taylor to recover damages: (1) For their delay in and failure to issue him a true and proper service letter or clearance card, upon his discharge from the service of the railroad company, and the issuance to him of a false service letter or clearance card; and (2) for libel for the publication of such false service letter. We shall refer to the parties as they were in the trial court.

The amended petition contains two counts, one for damages for the delay in and failure to issue said service letter and the issuance to him of a false one, and the other for libel for the publication of such false letter. The issues were joined and the case tried to the court and jury, resulting in a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and against the defendants the railroad company and Bassett, for the sum of $1,000, for libel for the publication of said service letter, from which they have appealed.

At the conclusion of the taking of testimony the plaintiff dismissed the action as against Taylor, and the trial court sustained a demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence on the first count, as against the railroad company and Bassett, and withdrew the same from the jury.

The salient facts necessary to be considered to determine the question presented are: Bassett is in the employ of the defendant company as foreman of its roundhouse at Enid; Taylor is also in its employ, as superintendent of motive power, residing at Shawnee; Medley is a car repairer by trade, and entered the employ of said company as such at Enid, on July 25, 1909, and continued in its employ as such until January 17, 1910, when he was discharged for being an agitator and creating trouble in the ranks of the company's men at Enid. In February, following his discharge, a service letter was prepared by Taylor, showing when he entered the company's employ, his discharge, and the reasons therefor. This letter was not mailed nor delivered to Medley, but remained in Bassett's office at Enid. It was prepared upon Medley's request; Bassett sent word to Medley that the service letter was ready for him; he, however, did not call for it at that time; he learned, through Osborn, an employee of the company, that the letter had been issued, and, upon inquiry as to what it was, Osborn said to him that it was a "peach," and that he should get it. Later Medley mentioned to Taylor that he was entitled to his service letter, but had not received it. Following this, and on October 13, 1910, Taylor, as superintendent of motive power, issued and mailed to him the following service letter:

To Whom It May Concern:—

This is to certify that Mr. H. N. Medley has been employed at Enid, Oklahoma, on the Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific Railway, as car repairer, from July 25, 1909, to January 17, 1910, when he was discharged for being an agitator and creating trouble in the ranks of our car men at Enid. Services unsatisfactory on this account.

C. M. Taylor, (L), Supt. Motive Power.

Following the receipt of this letter, and on October 24, 1910, Medley wrote Taylor with reference to the same, requesting an investigation of the truth of the charges therein stated. Thereupon Taylor sent his letter to Embruy, master mechanic of the defendant company, with request that he go to Enid and investigate the charges. Embruy did this, and in the course of his investigation talked with various employees of the company at Enid, who had formerly worked with Medley, with reference to his conduct and demeanor while in the company's employ at Enid. During this investigation some of the employees of the company saw a copy of said service letter. Embruy satisfied himself, as a result of this investigation, that the statements in the service letter were true and correct, and so advised Medley. Medley and Bassett were members of the Brotherhood of Car Men at Enid; Medley was chairman of the grievance committee, and his duties were to settle controversies between the foreman and employees. He preferred charges against Bassett and others in connection with his discharge. The record is not clear as to what became of these charges.

The essential question presented for determination is whether or not the service letter is libelous per se. The language used in the letter is clear and unambiguous; hence it was a question of law for the court to say whether or not the letter was libelous per se. Bodine v. Times-Journal Pub. Co. 26 Okla. 135, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 147, 110 Pac. 1096; Spencer v. Minnick, 41 Okla. 618, 139 Pac. 130; McKenney v. Carpenter, 42 Okla. 410, 141 Pac. 779. This it did, and advised the jury that it was libelous per se. The correctness of this instruction is properly presented and challenged here. In determining whether or not the letter is libelous per se, the words used therein should be given their plain, natural, popular, and obvious meaning and use. Hubbard v. Cowling, 36 Okla. 603, 129 Pac. 714; Spencer v. Minnick, supra; Smith v. Gillis, — Okla. —, 151 Pac. 869. Our statute, § 4956, Rev. Laws 1910, defines libel as follows: "Libel is a false or malicious unprivileged publication by writing, printing, picture, or effigy or other fixed representation to the eye, which exposes any person to public hatred, contempt, ridicule or obloquy, or which tends to deprive him of public confidence, or to injure him in his occupation. . . ."

We are concerned only with the words, "to injure him in his occupation." Is the letter libelous per se within the meaning of this portion of the statute? In Newell on Slander & Libel, 3d ed. § 174, discussing this question, it is said: "Next to imputations which tend to deprive a man of his life or liberty, or to exclude him from the comforts of society, may be ranked those which affect him in his office, profession, or means of livelihood. To enumerate the different decisions upon this subject would be tedious, and to reconcile them impossible; yet they seem to yield a general rule sufficiently simple and unembarrassed, namely, that words are actionable which directly tended to the prejudice of anyone in his office, profession, trade, or business."

Discussing this question further, the author, in § 175, says: "It by no means follows that all words to the disparagement of an officer, professional man, or trader will for that reason, without proof of special damage, be actionable in themselves. Words to be actionable on this ground, must touch the plaintiff in his office, profession, or trade. They must be shown to have been spoken of the party in relation thereto, and to be such as would prejudice him therein. They L.R.A.1916D.

must impeach either his skill or knowledge, or his official or professional conduct."

In the case of N. S. Sherman Mach Co. v. Dun, 28 Okla. 447, 114 Pac. 617, in construing the foregoing section of our statute, it is said: "The alleged libel does not impute to the plaintiff any fraud, dishonesty, misconduct, or incapacity in the management of said business, or in connection therewith, or in any other relation of life. The fact that a man may be engaged in business and yet have a limited capital is neither an imputation against his business reputation, nor does it in any manner reasonably subject him to public scandal, scorn, or ridicule. This seems to be the test as to whether such publication is libelous per se; for when words are uttered falsely of a person in reference to his profession or business, such as to hold him out to contempt or ridicule, thereby tending to bring him or his business into disrepute, such publication may be considered as libelous per se."

The plaintiff, in his petition, ascribes no peculiar or special meaning to the words used in the service letter. Considering them in their plain, natural, popular, and obvious sense, are they libelous per se, within the meaning of our statute? We think not. They do not impeach his skill or ability as a car repairer, neither do they impute any fraud, dishonesty, misconduct, or incapacity in his trade. They certainly do not subject him to public hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or deprive him of public confidence. Considering the language of this letter, in connection with the facts and circumstances under which it was issued, and the occasion for its issuance, one would infer that the plaintiff was a labor agitator, and as such caused trouble among the company's men with whom he worked; but, be this as it may, no special meaning is ascribed to the language used, and we are unable to see under what theory this letter could be regarded as libelous per se. We have had many agitators in the history of this country,—not only labor agitators, but others. In fact most of the modern legislation, both for the protection of the laboring man and the improvement and betterment of society, has been due largely to agitators. The potential force of labor unions and labor organizations is due to a great extent to labor agitators. We think it would be going too far to hold that the language used in this letter is libelous per se.

We have searched in vain for precedents, and the nearest one we find is that of the case of Wabash R. Co. v. Young, 162 Ind. 102, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, 69 N. E. 1003, wherein it was held: "It is not libelous per se to accuse one of being a member of a labor union and a labor agitator."

The facts in this case are similar to the facts in the case at bar, and the rule thus announced is quite applicable. The following authorities support, in principle, the rule we announce: McKenney v. Carpenter, supra; Kee v. Armstrong B. & Co. — Okla. —, 151 Pac. 572; Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Kelly, 163 Ala. 348, 50 So. 1008; Nichols v. Daily Reporter Co. 30 Utah, 74, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 339, 116 Am. St. Rep. 796, 83 Pac. 573, 8 Ann. Cas. 841; Labor Review Pub. Co. v. Galliher, 163 Ala. 364, 45 So. 188, 15 Ann. Cas. 674. In the case of Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Kelly, 163 Ala. 348, 50 So. 1008, it was said in the syllabus:

"It is not libel per se to charge that plaintiff had made trouble at defendant's mines, or that he had run negroes out of their homes; such conduct not necessarily being a crime."

Having reached the conclusion that the service letter is not libelous per se, the trial court committed prejudicial error in advising the jury to the contrary.

Said service letter not being libelous per se, there can be no recovery, even though it is false, without the allegation and proof of special damages. Sherman Mach. Co. v. Dun, supra; McKenney v. Carpenter, 42 Okla. 410, 141 Pac. 779; Kee v. Armstrong, B. & Co. — Okla. —, 151 Pac. 572.

The judgment of the trial court should be reversed, and the cause remanded.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

UTAH SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF UTAH

v.

HARLEY MEWHINNEY, Appt.

(43 Utah, 135, 134 Pac. 632.)

Criminal law — right to attorney — notification.

1. A recital in the transcript of proceedings before a magistrate in a criminal case that accused waived the services of an attorney shows that he was apprised of his right to the aid of counsel.

For other cases, see Criminal Law, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — failure to reduce testimony to writing — waiver of examination.

2. An information charging murder cannot be quashed for failure of the committing magistrate to reduce the testimony against accused to writing, as required by statute, if, as permitted by the Constitution, a preliminary examination was waived.

For other cases, see Indictment, etc., IV. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — overruling challenge to jury.

3. There is no error in overruling challenges for cause to jurors who are impartial and conscientious men.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. m, 7, b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — rejecting evidence — prejudicial error.

4. It is not prejudicial error for the court to state, in sustaining an objection to a question which assumes a fact rather than asks a question, that it implies something that is not of record, not evidence in the case.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. m, 6, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — articles taken from accomplice.

5. Articles taken from the accomplice of one accused of murder, upon his arrest soon after the commission of the crime, are admissible in evidence against accused.

For other cases, see Evidence, V. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Criminal law — test of responsibility for crime.

6. The test of insanity in a murder case is the capacity to distinguish between right and wrong with respect to the criminal act in issue, without regard to the existence of will power to overcome or resist the im-

Note. — As to effect of statutory declaration that murder committed by certain means, or in commission of felony, shall be murder in first degree, upon right of jury to pass upon degree, see annotation following this case, post, 610.

As to right to full jury box before exercising right to peremptorily challenge jurors, see pages 831 et seq. of the annotation following Blankenship v. State, L.R.A. 1916A, 814, on "Right of accused in criminal case to full panel from which to select jury."

The admissibility against defendant of documents or articles taken from him is discussed in the notes to State v. Edwards, 59 L.R.A. 467; State v. Fuller, 8 L.R.A. L.R.A.1916D.

(N.S.) 762; and People v. Campbell, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 58; and see later case, State v. Sutter, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 399.

For weakness of mind as affecting responsibility for criminal act, see note to Rogers v. State, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 999. As to irresistible impulse as an excuse for crime, see notes to State v. Harrison, 18 L.R.A. 224, and Smith v. State, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 461; and see later case, Oborn v. State, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 966. For kleptomania as a defense to burglary or larceny, see note to State v. Riddle, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 150.

Generally as to character and reputation of the deceased as affecting homicide, see note to State v. Feeley, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 351.

pulse to commit the act, if the only evidence of insanity is a few general guesses, based upon a few isolated facts which, in and of themselves, do not necessarily point either to insanity or to any serious mental derangement.

For other cases, see Criminal Law, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Homicide — to avoid apprehension for theft — kleptomania as defense.

7. One cannot avoid liability for murder committed to avoid apprehension for theft if he could distinguish between right and wrong with respect to murder, although he had not the will power to resist the temptation to steal.

For other cases, see Criminal Law, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — restricted instruction on insanity — prejudice.

8. Failure of the court to enlarge on the different phases of insanity and mental weakness in charging the jury in a murder case is not prejudicial error where the only evidence of insanity is a few general guesses, based on a few isolated facts which, in and of themselves, do not necessarily point either to insanity or to any serious mental derangement.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. m, 4, a, (1), in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Homicide — degree — submission to jury.

9. Where the statute makes a homicide committed in furtherance of robbery murder in the first degree, the court need not submit to the jury the question of murder in the second degree, in a prosecution for a crime so committed, although the statute also provides that the degree of the crime must be found by the jury whenever a crime is distinguished into degrees, since the statute does not segregate murder committed in an attempt to commit robbery into degrees.

For other cases, see Trial, III. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Criminal law — homicide — instruction — absence of evidence.

10. The court need not, in a prosecution for homicide, alleged to have been committed in the perpetration of a robbery, charge upon the effect of an abandonment of the attempt to rob before commission of the homicide, if there is no evidence to support such theory.

For other cases, see Trial, III. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — instructions — average instead of good character.

11. It is not prejudicial error to instruct in a criminal case that when a man is charged with the commission of crime, the law presumes that he is a man of average character, instead of using the word "good," if the court instructs, "and the failure to call witnesses to prove his general good character raises no presumption against it."

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. m, 4, a, (1), in Dig. 1-52 N. S.
L.R.A.1916D.

Trial — instructions — right to recommend life imprisonment.

12. It is not error for the court, in calling to the attention of the jury in a murder case their statutory privilege of recommending life imprisonment instead of death for one convicted of murder in the first degree, to state that, "in considering this question, you are not restricted by any rule of law or public policy, but are entitled to decide the question from such considerations as may appeal to you as reasonably and conscientiously entitled to be weighed in determining the giving or withholding of such recommendation."

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. m, 4, a, (1), in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Straup, J., dissents.)

(May 9, 1913.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Salt Lake County convicting him of murder in the first degree. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. S. P. Armstrong and H. J. Brothers, for appellant:

Even a statute cannot permit defendant to waive a constitutional right.

Dempsey v. People, 47 Ill. 323; People v. McKay, 18 Johns. 212; Burley v. State, 1 Neb. 385; Nomaque v. People, Breese (Ill.) 109, 12 Am. Dec. 157; Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 579, 28 L. ed. 262, 265, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 202, 4 Am. Crim. Rep. 417.

The test of criminal responsibility is not only accused's knowledge of the nature and consequences of his act, but also his will power to control his action, and to resist the impulse to commit the act.

1 Clevenger, Med. Jur. 21-26; State v. Peel, 23 Mont. 358, 75 Am. St. Rep. 529, 59 Pac. 169; Wheeler v. State, 158 Ind. 687, 63 N. E. 975; State v. Keerl, 29 Mont. 508, 101 Am. St. Rep. 579, 75 Pac. 363; Mathley v. Com. 120 Ky. 389, 86 S. W. 988; Hopps v. People, 31 Ill. 385, 83 Am. Dec. 231; State v. Lyons, 113 La. 959, 37 So. 890; Lowe v. State, 118 Wis. 641, 96 N. W. 417; Davis v. United States, 165 U. S. 373, 378, 41 L. ed. 750, 754, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 360.

The law presumes that the accused is a man of good character, not of average character.

Mullen v. United States, 46 C. C. A. 22, 106 Fed. 892; Cluck v. State, 40 Ind. 263; Whart. Crim. Ev. 9th ed. § 62; People v. White, 24 Wend. 520.

Defendant was entitled to instructions on murder in the second degree and manslaughter.

Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 28 L. ed. 262,

4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 202, 4 Am. Crim. Rep. 417; People v. Thiede, 11 Utah, 241, 39 Pac. 837.

The nature of the crime should be distinctly and specifically charged, under whatever class of murder the charge is made, and the allegations must be proved or the indictment is not sustained.

People v. White, supra.

The instructions requested on deliberation and premeditation should have been given.

State v. Thorne, 39 Utah, 208, 117 Pac. 58.

The right of the jury, or their power to make the recommendation, or the exercise of their discretion in making or withholding it, was unlimited and uncircumscribed.

Ibid.

Even under statutes that distinguish murder into degrees, and that require the jury to find the degrees, the court must instruct as to the different degrees, and leave the jury to find thereon; it is not proper, where there is no evidence of manslaughter, to instruct on manslaughter, although included in the charge of murder.

Clark v. Com. 123 Pa. 555, 16 Atl. 795; State v. Lucas, 124 N. C. 825, 32 S. E. 902; Brown v. Com. 76 Pa. 319.

The statute requiring the jury to find the degree, where the crime is divided into degrees, prohibits the court from imperatively instructing as to the degree to be found; and the statute applies in all cases, including murder committed in attempt to commit other felonies.

Brown v. State, 109 Ala. 70, 20 So. 103; Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 582, 28 L. ed. 266, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 202, 4 Am. Crim. Rep. 417; State v. Phinney, 13 Idaho, 307, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 935, 89 Pac. 634, 12 Ann. Cas. 1079; Rhodes v. Com. 48 Pa. St. 396; Lane v. Com. 59 Pa. 371; Shaffner v. Com. 72 Pa. 60, 13 Am. Rep. 649; McMeen v. Com. 114 Pa. 300, 9 Atl. 878; Com. v. Frucci, 216 Pa. 84, 64 Atl. 879; State v. Dowd, 19 Conn. 388; Adams v. State, 29 Ohio St. 412; Robbins v. State, 8 Ohio St. 131; Beaudien v. State, 8 Ohio St. 634; State v. Lindsey, 19 Nev. 47, 3 Am. St. Rep. 776, 5 Pac. 822; State v. Brown, 40 La. Ann. 725, 4 So. 897, 41 La. Ann. 410, 6 So. 670; State v. Clark, 46 La. Ann. 704, 15 So. 83; State v. Thomas, 50 La. Ann. 148, 23 So. 250; Washington v. State, 125 Ala. 40, 28 So. 78; Gafford v. State, 125 Ala. 1, 28 So. 406; Thomas v. State, 150 Ala. 31, 43 So. 371; People v. Woods, 147 Cal. 265, 109 Am. St. Rep. 151, 81 Pac. 652; People v. Campbell, 40 Cal. 129; State v. Gadberry, 117 N. C. 811, 23 S. E. 477; State v. Locklear, 118 N. C. 1154, 24 S. E. 410; Com. v. Sheets, 197 Pa. 69, 46 Atl. 753.

Messrs. A. R. Barnes, Attorney General. L.R.A.1916D.

eral, E. V. Higgins and George C. Buckle, Assistant Attorneys General, for the State:

The true test on the question of sanity is whether the accused was, at the time of the act, and with reference to such act, capable of distinguishing between right and wrong.

Whart. Homicide, 3d ed. §§ 537, 539; Whart. & S. Med. Jur. 5th ed. 175; People v. Calton, 5 Utah, 458, 16 Pac. 902; Smith v. State, 95 Miss. 786, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 461, 49 So. 945, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 23.

The failure to call witnesses to prove defendant's general good character raised no presumption against his character; likewise, the failure to call witnesses to prove his general good character raised no presumption in favor of it.

Whart. Crim. Ev. 10th ed. § 62.

When the homicide is committed immediately after the robbery or attempted robbery, and apparently for the purpose of preventing detention, the crime is first degree murder.

Whart. Homicide, 3d ed. § 126, p. 186; State v. Williams, 28 Nev. 395, 82 Pac. 353.

If an abandonment existed, it was brought about by fear of detection and capture; and this being so, the killing was equally first degree murder.

Whart. Homicide, 3d ed. p. 188; State v. Gray, 19 Nev. 212, 8 Pac. 456.

If there are circumstances in the case, which, to the minds of the jury, would justify a recommendation that the defendant be imprisoned for life, in case of a verdict of murder in the first degree, it is the right of the jury to make such a recommendation.

State v. Romeo, 42 Utah, 46, 128 Pac. 530; Valentine v. State, 77 Ga. 471; Cyrus v. State, 102 Ga. 616, 29 S. E. 917; People v. Bawden, 90 Cal. 195, 27 Pac. 204; People v. Olsen, 80 Cal. 122, 22 Pac. 125; People v. Brick, 68 Cal. 190, 8 Pac. 858; Brown v. State, 109 Ala. 70, 20 So. 103; Whart. Homicide, 3d ed. p. 1056.

Frick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was charged with, and, upon a trial by a jury in the district court of Salt Lake county, convicted of, murder in the first degree. The court, in due time, entered judgment sentencing appellant to suffer death. He appeals from that judgment.

Numerous errors are assigned. Before proceeding to a consideration of the assignments relating to the alleged errors occurring at the trial, we shall dispose of those which relate to the quashing of the information and the impaneling of the jury.

Counsel for appellant at the proper time interposed a motion to quash the information filed in the district court against him upon the grounds: (1) That the magistrate before whom the original complaint was filed, and before whom appellant was taken after his arrest, did not inform or advise him "of his rights to the aid of counsel;" and (2) because "the testimony of the, or any of the, witnesses against him was not reduced to writing by the magistrate." The first ground is clearly untenable. The transcript of the proceedings before the magistrate affirmatively shows that the appellant "waived the service of an attorney." If this means anything, it means that appellant was apprised of his right to have such services.

In the absence of any showing to the contrary, we must presume that the magistrate performed the duties imposed upon him by our statute. Such is the holding of the courts. People v. Figueroa, 134 Cal. 159, 66 Pac. 202. In the case at bar, as we have pointed out, it, however, affirmatively appears that appellant waived any aid or assistance from counsel.

Referring, now, to the second ground of the motion, it is true that Comp. Laws 1907, § 4670, in terms provides that "the testimony of each witness in cases of homicide must be reduced to writing as a deposition, by the magistrate, or under his direction." This section in substantially the same form was in force long before Utah became a state. 2 Comp. Laws 1888, § 4983. It was carried into the Revised Statutes of 1898 as § 4670 of that revision, and is now known by the same number in Comp. Laws 1907, supra. Since said section was originally passed the Constitution of this state was adopted, where, in article 1, § 13, it, among other things, is provided: "Offenses heretofore required to be prosecuted by indictment, shall be prosecuted by information after examination and commitment by a magistrate, unless the examination be waived by the accused with the consent of the state, or by indictment, with or without such examination and commitment." Although the language of § 4670, supra, is positive and without exception that in homicide cases the testimony of the witnesses must be reduced to writing, yet, in view of the constitutional provision that the accused, with the consent of the state, may waive the examination, the statute cannot be given application according to the strict letter thereof. If the accused or the officer representing the state desires an examination to be held, then, of course, witnesses must be heard, and if they are heard, their L.R.A.1916D.

testimony must be reduced to writing, as required by the statute. If, however, no examination is desired, and is expressly or by implication waived, as held by us in State v. Gustaldi, 41 Utah, 63, 123 Pac. 897, then there is no need of hearing any testimony, and hence there is none to be reduced to writing. In the case at bar the transcript of the proceedings had before the committing magistrate affirmatively shows that appellant, with the consent of the state, expressly waived the preliminary examination mentioned in the Constitution. This he could do, and, having done so, he likewise must be held to have waived the necessity of the magistrate to hear any testimony with respect to the charge filed against him. There was therefore no testimony to be reduced to writing. Nor can there be any doubt as to appellant's competency to waive the examination, nor as to having done so, since he does not assail the truth of the statements to that effect contained in the magistrate's transcript, as he could have done under the ruling of this court in State v. Gustaldi, supra. See also upon this point, State v. Ritty, 23 Ohio St. 562. The motion to quash, for the reasons aforesaid, was therefore properly overruled.

It is also insisted that the court erred in refusing to sustain certain challenges for cause that were interposed by appellant's counsel against at least four prospective jurors upon the ground of both expressed and implied bias. It is accordingly urged that appellant was required to remove those jurors from the panel by the exercise of four peremptory challenges, which reduced by that number the quota of such challenges vouchsafed to him by our statute. We have carefully examined all of the testimony of those jurors, given upon their voir dire, and we are satisfied that this case falls squarely within the rule laid down by this court upon this question in the recent case of State v. Thorne, 41 Utah, 414, 126 Pac. 286, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 90. The only difference between this and the Thorne Case is that, while there might have been some doubt in our minds with respect to the qualifications of some of the challenged jurors in the Thorne Case, there is no such doubt in this case. If there were, however, the rulings of the trial court fall squarely within what is said in the Thorne Case, supra. Further, by carefully going over the jurors' examination, we are impressed with the fact that they were fair, impartial, and conscientious men, and the trial court was clearly justified in overruling the challenges. This contention, therefore, cannot be sustained.

It is further contended that the court erred in requiring appellant to exercise his peremptory challenges at times when the jury box was not filled with jurors. The jury was impaneled and the challenges were required to be exercised in the manner stated by Mr. Justice McCarty, in State v. Riley, 41 Utah, 225, 126 Pac. 294. We there held that the course of procedure followed in that case was proper. This case is therefore controlled by that one, and this assignment must also fail.

Passing to a consideration of the assignments relating to the alleged errors occurring at the trial, it becomes necessary to state as briefly as possible the controlling facts. From the evidence it is made to appear that the homicide in question occurred while appellant and an accomplice were engaged in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate a robbery. The undisputed facts relating to the homicide are substantially as follows: On the afternoon of the 6th day of October, 1911, between 3 and 4 o'clock, a Mrs. Fuller, after meeting one Sol S. Brown, a friend of hers, on the street in Salt Lake City, went with him to her room on the second floor of the Romona rooming house, which is located on the corner of Second East and Second South streets in said city. Mr. Brown wore a large and conspicuous diamond ring on one of his fingers, of the approximate value of $350. In going upstairs to the room Mrs. Fuller noticed the appellant and his accomplice in the hallway. Within a few minutes after Mrs. Fuller and Mr. Brown had entered the room aforesaid, there was a knock at the door, and Mrs. Fuller went to open it. Upon opening the door she saw two men in the hallway (one of them the appellant) with handkerchiefs tied over the lower portions of their faces. As soon as she had opened the door, they forced their way into the room. One of the men had a revolver in his hand and immediately upon entering the room pointed it at Mr. Brown, and the other remained standing at the door, which he had closed after him. Mr. Brown at once went forward and grappled with the one having the revolver, catching his hand or forearm in such a manner as prevented him from shooting Mr. Brown, and a hard struggle ensued between them. Mr. Brown seemed to hold his own, and the man with the revolver, seemingly, could make no headway in obtaining the coveted prize, the ring. He called to his accomplice, who still stood guarding the door, for help, and said, "Pull the ring off his finger." The accomplice immediately left the door and went to the assistance of the other and in doing so struck Mr. Brown several times on the head with what is termed a "black-jack," inflicting scalp wounds which subsequently bled somewhat freely. The struggle now went on between the three, but as soon as the one had left the door Mrs. Fuller ran out of the room, down the hallway, and into the street crying for help as she went. Considerable uproar was thus caused, and it was not long before the man who had stood by the door also slipped out of the room, Mr. Brown and the other still continuing the struggle for supremacy, while Mr. Brown was also crying for help. Immediately after the one with the black-jack had left the room, Mr. Brown heard the steps of a man in the hallway, approaching the door, which was now standing ajar. The one with the revolver, who was still continuing the struggle and still trying to obtain the diamond ring, apparently also heard the steps of the approaching stranger, whose name it was afterwards learned was Erickson, and he then also broke away from Mr. Brown, who was becoming quite weak from the blows he had received on his head and the continued struggle, and ran out of the door into the hallway which led downstairs into the street. Immediately after getting outside of the door of the room in which the struggle took place, the one with the revolver was met by Mr. Erickson, who was coming to Brown's assistance, and as soon as he saw Mr. Erickson, and within a very few feet from the door, he raised his revolver and shot Mr. Erickson, the bullet penetrating his chest and passing through a portion of the heart. Mr. Erickson staggered back into a room near by and fell on the floor, and in a few minutes thereafter expired from the effects of the bullet wound. Both of Brown's assailants had in the meantime run down the steps and had reached the street, where they separated. It was only a few minutes afterwards, however, when the one who had the revolver, and who shot Erickson, was apprehended on the street in front of the rooming house while in the act of inducing an expressman, whose express wagon he had climbed onto, to drive him hurriedly away from the place. He was immediately taken to the police station after he was apprehended as aforesaid. A short time after the arrest he was identified as the one with the revolver by both Mrs. Fuller and Mr. Brown, and was further identified as the one who did the shooting, and as being the appellant in this case. The other one was apprehended later on the same day and was also identified by Mrs. Fuller and Mr. Brown as the one who was with appellant and the one who struck Mr. Brown with the black-jack. During the struggle in the room the handkerchiefs were torn from the faces of the two men, and a full view of their features was thus obtained by both Mrs. Fuller and Mr. Brown. There is much other evidence respecting the identity of the appellant and his accomplice which we need not refer to here. It must suffice to say that, under the evidence, no other conclusion is permissible than the one arrived at by the jury; namely, that the appellant is the one who had the revolver and who killed Mr. Erickson, and that the killing was done within and as a part of the res gestæ of the attempted robbery.

It is contended that the court erred in one of its rulings which it is said trenced upon the province of the jury with respect to an important fact in the case. The matter arose during the progress of the trial and while counsel for appellant was cross-examining the chief of police, who was one of the state's witnesses. The witness had testified that at the time the appellant and his accomplices were brought to the police station some articles, including a cap, came into his possession, which it was shown were either taken from appellant's person when he was brought to the station, or identified at the time as having been in his or his accomplice's possession at the time of the attempted robbery, or immediately thereafter.

Appellant's counsel, Mr. Armstrong, on cross-examination, questioned the witness with regard to the articles aforesaid, and Mr. Farnsworth, the prosecuting attorney, interposed an objection to the method pursued by counsel. The record of the proceeding in this respect reads as follows:

Q. So that you were not very careful in designating these different articles about how they came into your possession?

A. I was reasonably careful, as you see by the tags.

Q. The important one, however, does not seem to be very well designated?

A. Which is the important one?

Q. The cap.

Mr. Farnsworth: We object to counsel making any such assumption as that.

The court: The objection is sustained. It implies something that is not of record, not evidence in the case.

Mr. Armstrong: Exception.

The contention that, in sustaining the foregoing objection, and in making the remark, the court invaded the province of the jury, seems to us untenable. In view that the record discloses that counsel were given every opportunity to lay all the facts before the jury, the matter seems somewhat trivial. While the objection was extremely technical, yet the supposed question to which the objection was sustained was, in its nature, an assumption of a fact by counsel rather than a question to the witness which he was expected to answer. It is very clear L.R.A.1916D.

that no prejudicial error resulted or could result from the court's ruling, and this assignment must therefore be overruled.

The contention that the court erred in admitting in evidence the articles of wearing apparel and other articles found on or taken from appellant's accomplice after the attempted robbery is clearly without merit. Whart. Crim. Ev. 10th ed. § 312, p. 610.

Counsel for appellant strenuously insist that the court erred in charging the jury upon the question of insanity. It may be said that appellant produced some evidence in support of his plea of insanity. It was contended at the trial, and is now insisted, that appellant had acquired the habit of using drugs, such as opium and morphine, and that their use affected his mental capacity. To establish that fact he produced in evidence the depositions of two witnesses of Terre Haute, Indiana, one of whom testified that he was acquainted with appellant from 1900 to 1907, and that during that period of time appellant habitually used "both opium and morphine." When asked what effect the use of those drugs had upon appellant's mental condition as observed by the witness, he said: "The use of drugs seemed to make him very thin and at times dull and stupid." When pressed for further particulars with regard to the effect that the use of the drugs had upon appellant's mind, the witness said, "I am not aware of any specific facts and circumstances." The testimony of the other witness is substantially the same; the only difference being that the other one said that appellant used the drug for a period of about five years between 1900 and 1907. After the year 1907 the witnesses did not come in contact with appellant. Upon substantially the foregoing testimony the two witnesses were permitted to give their opinion with respect to the sanity of appellant, and they both testified that, in their opinion, appellant was insane, and that the insanity was caused through the use of drugs as aforesaid. It also was shown that when appellant was arrested he had some morphine on his person, and that he afterwards called for some, and that the city physician ordered the officers to permit him to have about two grains daily for some time after his arrest. In addition to the foregoing testimony respecting appellant's insanity and the use of drugs, a young doctor who had about three years' experience in the general practice as a physician, and without any further experience, was called as an expert upon the question of insanity. His conclusions regarding appellant's mental condition were mainly based upon the effect that the habitual use of opium or morphine usually has upon the mind.

The doctor, however, did not testify from actual experience, as his answers to the following questions clearly indicate:

Q. And of these alkaloids you say that morphine is the most active and the most detrimental to the faculties of the mind?

A. I have read authorities stating that fact.

Q. You don't state that of your own knowledge as a chemist or anything?

A. No, sir; I could not do that.

Q. Not from your own practical experience, but from your reading of it?

A. Yes, sir.

Upon substantially the foregoing testimony the doctor was permitted to answer a hypothetical question which was propounded to him by appellant's counsel, in which the facts as testified to by the witnesses aforesaid, together with the effect that the use of drugs had on the mind, and appellant's habits with regard to their use, as disclosed by the evidence, and further, that the robbery was attempted in broad daylight, in a well-tenanted apartment or rooming house, and a few other unimportant facts, were recited. The doctor, in answering the question, said that, in his opinion, appellant was insane when he attempted to commit the robbery and when he shot and killed the deceased, Erickson. Upon the part of the state there was abundant testimony to the effect that appellant's conduct and demeanor immediately after the shooting and since then were always normal and rational. A physician who had frequently observed him after the shooting also testified that he did not use morphine in excessive quantities, and did not have the appearance of one who did so, and that, in his judgment, appellant, at the time of the commission of the offense, was and ever since has been sane. Upon the question of insanity the court instructed the jury that, before they could find appellant guilty as charged in the information, they "must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt from all the evidence in the case that the defendant at the time of the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate, such robbery or burglary, had formed the intent to commit said robbery or burglary, and that he had the mental capacity to distinguish between right and wrong with reference to said robbery or burglary; and, if you should find from the evidence in this case that the defendant at the time in question had not the mental capacity to form an intent to perpetrate a robbery or burglary, then you cannot convict him of murder in the first degree." The court further instructed the jury upon this question that "the test of responsibility for a criminal act, when insanity is relied upon as a defense, is the capacity of the defendant to distinguish between right and wrong at the time of and with respect to the act which is the subject of inquiry; and if, after a fair and conscientious consideration of all the facts and circumstances in evidence, you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant had the capacity to distinguish between right and wrong at the time of and with reference to the act in question, then you cannot convict him." The same thought in other forms was repeated in several of the instructions.

It is insisted that the capacity to distinguish between right and wrong with respect to the criminal act in issue is not the true test of mental responsibility. It is contended that, in addition to that test, the jury should also be told that they must find that the accused had the will power to overcome or resist the impulse to commit the act with which he stands charged. Let us assume at the outset that, under certain circumstances where a plea of insanity is interposed as a defense, it may become necessary to charge the jury as contended for by counsel, and that in all cases where such a plea is interposed it would be unobjectionable, although not necessary to do so. And let us assume further that in this case it would not have been at all improper for the court in its charge to have gone farther into the question of insanity along the lines suggested by counsel. The foregoing assumptions are, however, not decisive of the question we are called upon to determine. In reviewing a charge upon any particular subject, as well as in reviewing the requests refused, we must constantly keep in mind the facts and circumstances of the particular case as they are made to appear from the evidence. What meager evidence of insanity there is in this case is limited entirely to generalities. The whole superstructure of the so-called insanity claim is built upon the statements of two laymen, who, for some years prior to 1907 (three years before the murder in question was committed), were acquainted with the appellant, and who testified that during that time—that is, during the time they knew him—he was addicted to the use of morphine, and that the use thereof "at times made him dull and stupid." Basing their opinions upon these meager facts, the two laymen tell us that the appellant was insane. In addition to their opinions, we also have a young doctor, who, after having the foregoing evidence detailed to him, also is willing to venture the opinion that the appellant was insane. There is absolutely no evidence of any actual mental lesions or any mental disease of any kind, or of any hallucinations or other mental derangement.

All that we have here, therefore, to establish insanity and to overcome the legal presumption of sanity, are a few general guesses based upon a few isolated facts which, in and of themselves, do not necessarily point to either insanity or to any serious mental derangement.

If the evidence in this case, therefore, is considered for the purpose of raising a doubt of the sanity of appellant, it can be considered for no other purpose except to show what may be called simple or general insanity. The existence of mental lesion, disease, or other aberration cannot be assumed or inferred, because there is absolutely no evidence to support such an inference. Under such circumstances, the test of responsibility that is applied by the overwhelming weight of authority is substantially the one given by the district court in this case in its charge to the jury. That test is thoroughly discussed by the authors of the following works: 1 Whart. Crim. Law, 10th ed. §§ 50-55; Whart. Homicide, 3d ed. §§ 537, 539; 1 Whart. & S. Med. Jur. § 175, and cases there cited. See also People v. Calton, 5 Utah, 458-460, 16 Pac. 902; 3 Thomp. Trials, 2d ed. §§ 536-541, where the test is approved.

We need not pause here to go over the reasons why the test is deemed a proper and a practical one except in those cases where the evidence discloses some special mental weakness, disease, delusion, or aberration. That the test in a case like the one presented by this record is the proper one impresses us as clearly sound, and this impression is not weakened after considering counsel's argument advanced in behalf of their contention. They, in effect, argue that if appellant was controlled by an irresistible impulse to commit the robbery,—that is, if he did not have the will power to resist the temptation or impulse to rob or steal,—then he should be acquitted, although he possessed the mental capacity to distinguish between right and wrong with respect to the homicide. This, in our judgment, is neither good law nor good sense. Suppose A is charged with the murder of B., which is committed because he is detected by B while he was in the act of committing a robbery or larceny. Upon being tried for the murder, A, however, establishes by indubitable proof that for a long time prior to the commission of the larceny he was a confirmed kleptomaniac; that is, that he was afflicted with that species of insanity which manifests itself in an irresistible impulse or desire to steal; and that he lacked the will power to control or overcome the impulse. Would this L.R.A.1916D.

proof be sufficient to excuse the homicide? We think not. In the assumed case A committed murder for precisely the same reason that appellant killed Erickson,—namely, to avoid apprehension and possible conviction for the attempted robbery. Under such circumstances, the test of mental responsibility, therefore, is not whether the accused is a confirmed thief and has not the will power to resist theft, but it is whether he had the mental capacity to distinguish between right and wrong with respect to the act with which he is charged,—in this case, murder. According to counsel's theory, although the accused may have had ample mental capacity to realize that it was wrong to kill, yet, if he was afflicted with an irresistible impulse to steal, he ought to have been acquitted of both crimes. This, in effect, would be an inducement to every thief to slay everyone who discovered a theft committed by him.

There is nothing in the evidence in this case which would have justified the jury in finding that appellant was afflicted with any mental lesion, disease, or weakness, and hence it was not necessary to go into those matters in the charge in charging upon the general subject of insanity. To hold, therefore, that the court should have charged as contended by counsel, and that the refusal of the court to do so constitutes prejudicial error, is to disregard the evidence and the reasons which require such a charge, and further requires us to assume facts and conditions not directly testified to by anyone nor legitimately deducible from any facts and circumstances that were testified to. The court, in our judgment, in submitting the question of general insanity to the jury, clearly safeguarded all of appellant's rights in that regard.

We repeat that the question here is not the abstract one whether the court could not have properly enlarged upon the different phases of insanity or mental weakness, but the question we have to meet is whether the evidence required the court to so enlarge upon those subjects, and whether, in having failed to do so, the appellant was prejudiced. We are clearly of the opinion that the appellant was not prejudiced, and that the judgment, therefore, should not be reversed upon this ground.

When the cases cited by counsel upon this question are analyzed, it will be found that in all of them there were some facts and circumstances which made the doctrine contended for by them applicable to some extent at least. It must be conceded, however, that there are a few cases which seem to hold that the doctrine is applicable upon a mere general claim of insanity, as was the case in the case at bar. We cannot yield assent to such a doctrine.

It is further insisted that the court erred in refusing to charge the jury with respect to second degree murder. This question, like the one of insanity, must of necessity, to a large extent, at least, be controlled by our statute when considered in connection with the evidence adduced at the trial. In this connection it is contended that inasmuch as the information was framed upon the theory of a deliberate and premeditated murder, and in view that the court submitted the case to the jury upon that theory as well as upon the statute which provides that murder "committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate robbery" also constitutes murder in the first degree without deliberation or premeditation, therefore the court should also have submitted the question of second degree murder to the jury. It is true that the court submitted the elements of deliberation and premeditation to the jury. From that it does not follow, however, as contended, that the court should also have submitted the question of an unpremeditated or second degree murder to the jury. Where there was some evidence in this case from which the jury could have found a deliberate and premeditated murder, yet the jury would not have been justified in finding that the murder in question was not committed in an attempt to perpetrate a robbery, and upon the latter question there is not even room for doubt or conflict. Under our statute a murder so committed constitutes murder in the first degree, and legally can constitute nothing else. True, a jury in any homicide case has the power to disregard the evidence, and may find one who is clearly guilty of first degree murder guilty of manslaughter or acquit him.

From this it is assumed that, because a jury may do this, therefore a court must submit all the degrees of murder, and thus give the jury the right to pass upon the several degrees of murder. This contention loses sight of the legal principle involved in the statute just referred to which does not segregate murder committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate a robbery into degrees. While it is true that, under our jurisprudence, a jury has the power, with or without reason, either to reduce the degree of the crime, if it be divided into degrees, or acquit the accused, it does not follow that a court is bound in effect to charge that they may disregard the law, the evidence, and their oath in arriving at a verdict. Neither is it correct to say that, by not submitting the question of second degree murder in a case where the killing was perpetrated in an attempt to rob, the court thereby in effect coerces the jury to find the accused guilty of murder in the higher degree. Whether such might be the effect under our statute depends upon the evidence. If the evidence justifies a finding that the murder was committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate a robbery, it is the duty of the court to charge that, if they find beyond a reasonable doubt that the murder was "committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate a robbery," they should find the accused guilty of first degree murder, and if the evidence, as in the case at bar, does not justify the jury under their oaths to find otherwise, the court need not submit the question of second degree murder at all, although it might do so without committing error against the accused. In such a case, in merely charging on first degree murder the court does not, as is contended, withhold anything from the jury, but simply charges the law. It is the law that fixes the degree of the offense, and when the facts are not in dispute and clearly show that the murder in question was committed as aforesaid, the jury have neither the legal nor a moral right to refuse to follow the law, and, in refusing to do so, in effect amend or repeal the statute.

Of course, if the jury refuses to be bound by either law or fact, a court is powerless; but the court is not required to partake of the wrong and in effect suggest to the jury that they may do what the law does not sanction. Here again the question is not whether it would have been improper for the court to have charged with regard to murder in the second degree, but the question is whether, under all the facts and circumstances of this case (not some other case), the trial court committed prejudicial error in refusing to so charge. Upon this question we are of the opinion that there was absolutely no evidence, either direct or inferential, which would have justified a finding by the jury other than that the murder in question was committed in an attempt to perpetrate a robbery. If this be correct, why submit a question to the jury upon which an affirmative finding can in no event be justified? Is not the question of whether there is any evidence in support of any essential fact as much a question of law in a homicide case as any other? Must the court in advance abdicate its prerogatives to the jury simply because that jury has the power, and perhaps the inclination, to disregard both law and fact? In this case the jury, however, followed the law, and in passing upon the facts observed their oath, and hence fully discharged their duty. Further, the case was fairly and impartially tried. What plausible reason, therefore, can an appellate court give for interfering with the verdict and judgment? Again, this case in principle is not distinguishable from State v. Thorne, 41 Utah, 414, 126 Pac. 286, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 90, in which we held that under a similar state of facts the court committed no error in refusing to charge on second degree murder.

In passing this point we desire to say that a trial court should, in every case where there is any direct or inferential evidence with respect to the different degrees of murder, charge the jury with regard to all the degrees, and this rule should be followed where there may be any doubt with regard to whether the higher degree is established or not. This is contemplated by our statute which divides crimes into degrees, and which requires the jury to find in the lesser degree in case of doubt. That statute should, however, not be given controlling effect in a case of murder committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate robbery, because a murder so committed is not divisible into degrees. In such a charge of murder the killing was either committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate robbery or it was not. If the evidence, as in the case at bar, is clear and undisputed that it was, then the murder is first degree murder and nothing else, and the mere fact that the jury has the power to ignore the evidence and find otherwise does not change the law. In this case the jury was, by force of the evidence, compelled under their oaths to find that the murder was committed in an attempt to perpetrate robbery. By authority of what law or system of logic could they also legally have found that it was not so committed? If they could not have so found without ignoring both law and fact, no prejudicial error could have been committed in not telling them that they might do so.

The following cases are based upon a statute like ours with respect to murder, and it is accordingly held that, if the jury find that the murder was committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate a robbery, they have no alternative save to find the perpetrator guilty of murder in the first degree: State v. Gray, 19 Nev. 212-218, 8 Pac. 456; State v. Williams, 28 Nev. 407, 82 Pac. 353, and cases there cited. See also People v. Wardrip, 141 Cal. 229, 74 Pac. 744. Some of the very cases that counsel cite to sustain their contention that the court should have charged the jury with respect to second degree murder hold directly to the contrary. For example, in Davis v. United States, 165 U. S. at pages 378 and 379, 41 L. ed. 754, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 362, Mr. Justice Brewer, in referring to the question now under consideration, said: L.R.A.1916D.

"There was no testimony to reduce the offense, if any there was, below the grade of murder. If the defendant was sane and responsible for his actions, there was nothing upon which any suggestion of any inferior degree of homicide could be made, and therefore the court was under no obligation (indeed, it would simply have been confusing the minds of the jury) to give any instruction upon a matter which was not really open for their consideration." So here: If the jury believed that the appellant fired the fatal shot and that he was mentally responsible, then they had no choice, and it was their sworn duty to find him guilty of murder in the first degree.

It is also contended that the court erred in refusing to charge the jury that, if appellant had abandoned the intention to rob before he shot Erickson, then the killing would not have been committed in an attempt to rob, and therefore, unless it was a "wilful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated killing," the killing would not have been murder in the first degree. The court properly refused to so charge, if for no other reason than that there was no evidence whatever that appellant had voluntarily abandoned the attempted robbery before he fired the fatal shot. Indeed, the only evidence upon the question is inferential, and that is directly contrary to such a claim. Upon this question the cases last above cited are decisive against counsel's contention.

Counsel for appellant requested the court to charge the jury that one who is charged with a criminal offense is presumed to have a "good character and reputation." The court refused the request in the language proposed, but charged the jury upon that subject as follows: "When a person is charged with the commission of a crime, the law presumes that he is a man of average character, and the failure to call witnesses to prove his general good character raises no presumption against it."

It is now insisted that the court erred in giving the charge aforesaid and in refusing the proffered one. It is contended that the error consists in using the qualifying adjective "average" instead of "good" in defining the presumption with respect to character. It is true that the adjective usually used is "good." Many authorities are, however, to the effect that the law presumes one accused of crime to be possessed of a fair, or ordinarily fair, character. In the case of Mullen v. United States, 46 C. C. A. 24, 106 Fed. 894, cited by appellant's counsel on this point, in referring to the presumption now under consideration, it is said: "It is in consonance with the general principle of law that a man is presumed to stand ordinarily well, and to have at least the average qualities of morality and good conduct."

In People v. Fair, 43 Cal. at page 149, Mr. Justice Wallace says that the law presumes everyone possessed with a "character of ordinary fairness." To the same effect is 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. 3d ed. § 1112, and Underhill, Crim. Ev. § 76. While perhaps it would have been better if the court had used the phrase "good character," yet, in view of all that the court said in the instruction, the jury could not have been misled by the use of the word "average." It seems clear to us that the appellant could not have been prejudiced from anything said or omitted, and therefore this contention cannot prevail.

Finally it is contended that the court erred in its charge to the jury with respect to their right to recommend life imprisonment in case they found appellant guilty of murder in the first degree. The court, in calling attention to the statute upon that subject which confers the right upon the jury to recommend life imprisonment in case they find appellant guilty of first degree murder, charged as follows: "In considering this question you are not restricted by any rule of law or public policy, but are entitled to decide the question from such considerations as may appeal to you as reasonably and conscientiously entitled to be weighed in determining the giving or withholding of such recommendation."

It is contended that this charge is open to the same objection as the one which we condemned in the case of State v. Thorne, 39 Utah, 208, 117 Pac. 58. This contention is not tenable. The court in this case in no way did, nor attempted to, direct or control the judgment of the jury in arriving at a conclusion upon the question of recommendation. That is what was attempted in the Thorne Case, and it was that attempt which we condemned. While the trial courts discharge their full duty under the statute when they direct the attention of the jury thereto, and state that thereunder it is their province to make or withhold a recommendation of imprisonment for life in case they find the accused guilty of murder in the first degree, yet the mere fact that a court may say what is said in the instruction in this case cannot have the effect of avoiding the verdict and the judgment based thereon. To so hold would amount to a mere travesty.

In conclusion we desire to say that after a careful examination of the entire record we cannot avoid the conclusion that the appellant has had a full, fair, and impartial trial. Moreover, all of his rights have been carefully safeguarded at all stages of L.R.A.1916D.

the trial by vigilant and able counsel, who, although acting without any reward or compensation, have manifested a most commendable interest in the prisoner's behalf.

The judgment should be, and it accordingly is, affirmed.

McCarty, Ch. J., concurring:

I fully concur in the reasoning of and the conclusions reached by Mr. Justice Frick in the foregoing opinion. In view of the importance of the case I am impelled to make the following additional observations:

The information charges, without referring to the burglary or robbery, that the defendant "wilfully, unlawfully, feloniously, deliberately, premeditatedly of his malice aforethought, and with a specific intent to take the life of the said C. L. Erickson," shot and killed him. Second degree murder is included in the charge as alleged. But the evidence without conflict shows that at the time defendant fired the fatal shot he was perpetrating a burglary (Comp. Laws 1907, § 4336) and attempting to perpetrate a robbery. The evidence also shows that the burglary, attempted robbery, and homicide were so connected and interwoven, each one with the other two, that they constituted one transaction. Comp. Laws 1907, § 4161, provides, among other things, that murder when "committed in the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate, any . . . burglary, or robbery, . . . is murder in the first degree." The killing of Erickson was, therefore, under the circumstances as shown by the undisputed evidence, murder in the first degree, unless the defendant was, at the time he fired the fatal shot, insane. Upon this point, as the record now stands, there is no room for doubt. The question upon which there seems to be a difference of opinion is as to whether second degree murder is included in a homicide committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate a burglary or robbery. In all classes and kinds of intentional murder in which the crime is divided into degrees, the element that distinguishes first degree murder from murder in the second degree is the "premeditation and deliberation with which first degree murder is committed." 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, 7th ed. § 728; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 157; 21 Cyc. 728. Under § 4161, supra, murder committed in the perpetration of any of the felonies therein enumerated is murder in the first degree, regardless of whether the killing is premeditated and deliberate or even intentional. The killing may be accidental, but it nevertheless is murder in the first degree. State v. Thorne, 39 Utah, 208, 117 Pac. 58.

I am unable to conceive of a state of facts or circumstances, and certainly none has been suggested, under which a murder committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate any of the felonies mentioned in § 4161, supra, would or could be less than murder in the first degree. As I have stated, the elements of first degree murder, namely, premeditation and deliberation, that distinguishes first degree murder from second degree murder, are not essential, when the crime is committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate any one or more of the felonies referred to, to make the crime murder in the first degree. 21 Cyc. 719-723; 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 167; State v. Thorne, supra. The reason for the rule is well stated by the supreme court of California in the case of People v. Milton, 145 Cal. 169, 78 Pac. 549, as follows: "In this [referring to the class of murder committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate arson, rape, robbery, or burglary] the law has said to the malefactor: If in your perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate arson, rape, robbery, burglary, or mayhem you shall take the life of a fellow being, intentionally or unintentionally, your crime is murder in the first degree. The killing may be wilful, deliberate, and premeditated, or it may be absolutely accidental. In either case, you are equally guilty. The elements of wilfulness, deliberation, and premeditation are not indispensable to your crime. The murder, under § 187 of the Penal Code, is established, in that the killing is unlawful, it having been perpetrated in the performance or attempt to perform one of these felonies, and the malice of the abandoned and malignant heart is shown from the very nature of the crime you are attempting to commit. Therefore, if, in perpetrating arson, although in the belief that the building is unoccupied, some person within the building, unknown to you, shall lose his life, you are guilty of murder in the first degree. Or if, in burglariously entering premises which you believe to be unoccupied, you shall accidentally take the life of one whose presence is unsuspected by you, still your crime is murder in the first degree. That such is the true meaning and construction of our statute there can be no doubt." State v. Thorne, 41 Utah, 414, 126 Pac. 286, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 90; Morgan v. State, 51 Neb. 672, 71 N. W. 788; State v. Young, 67 N. J. L. 224, 51 Atl. 939.

Counsel for appellant, proceeding upon the theory that second degree murder is necessarily included in a homicide committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate any of the felonies enumerated in § 4161, supra, argues that in a prosecution for such murder it is the province of the jury, under § 4892, if the defendant is found guilty, to determine whether he is guilty of first degree or second degree murder. The section referred to reads as follows: "Whenever a crime is distinguished into degrees, the jury, if they convict the defendant, must find the degree of the crime of which he is guilty."

The difficulty with counsel's position is that, under the plain provisions of § 4161, murder committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate any felony mentioned therein is first degree murder only, and that § 4892 has no application. As I have suggested, there is no conceivable state of facts or circumstances under which this class of murder can be anything less than murder in the first degree. For illustration, take a case in which an incendiary, believing that a certain building is uninhabited and unoccupied, wilfully and maliciously applies the torch to it, and after the structure is enveloped in flames he discovers that it is occupied by a human being who is unable to make his escape therefrom, and the incendiary makes every effort in his power to rescue such party, but is unable to do so. Under such circumstances the killing would be murder in the first degree. I think it is plain that in a homicide belonging to this class there is no line of demarcation that distinguishes it into degrees. If it may be separated into different degrees, where is the line to be drawn between the first and second degree? Is it second degree murder when it appears from the evidence that the defendant, in the commission of or attempt to commit one or more of the felonies mentioned, had no specific intent to take human life, and that the killing was wholly accidental? The question is answered by the statute, which declares that the killing of a human being even under such circumstances is murder in the first degree.

The Texas court of criminal appeals, in construing a statute containing provisions which are substantially the same as §§ 4161 and 4892, supra, said: "The statute, and the decisions construing that statute, have not yet laid down the proposition that the accused firing at the intended victim in cases of robbery and killing another party would reduce that killing to murder in the second degree. The shooting would still be murder in the first degree, because the statute expressly says that all murder in robbery or in perpetration of robbery would be murder in the first degree. This statute eliminates murder in the second degree in homicides of this character." (Italics mine.) Milo v. State, 59 Tex. Crim. Rep. 196, 127 S. W. 1025.

True, the jury have the power in this class of homicides to find the accused guilty of any of the lower degrees necessarily included in the charge set forth in the information, or to acquit him. They may do this even though it is conclusively shown by the evidence that he is guilty of murder in the first degree, and there is no evidence tending to reduce the crime to a lower degree. But it does not follow that because a jury have the power to ignore the evidence, and, in violation of their oaths, to bring about a miscarriage of justice by refusing to do their duty, the court should, in its instructions, authorize and in a sense invite them to do so.

I am clearly of the opinion that in this case the court did not err in refusing to instruct the jury on the question of murder in the second degree. As I read the record, and understand the law applicable thereto, second degree murder is not in this case. The defendant, under the undisputed evidence, is either guilty of murder in the first degree or he is not guilty at all of the crime of which he stands convicted. State v. Thorne, supra.

Under § 4336 all that was necessary for the state to prove in order to establish first degree murder was that defendant, while he was perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate burglary or robbery, shot and killed Erickson; and the question of whether the killing was deliberate, premeditated, and with malice aforethought, or whether it was unintentional on the part of defendant, was immaterial. The court, by charging the jury that before the defendant could be convicted of murder in the first degree the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the killing was deliberate, premeditated, with malice aforethought, and with the "specific intent to take the life of said C. L. Erickson," imposed upon the state a greater burden to prove first degree murder than the law applicable to the facts required. In other words, the instruction, notwithstanding the evidence conclusively shows that the homicide was committed in the perpetration of burglary and attempted robbery, required the jury, before they could legally convict the defendant of murder in the first degree, to find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the killing was wilful, deliberate, premeditated, and with malice aforethought. The charge, in this regard, was therefore much more favorable to the defendant than the law and the facts warranted. The contention seems to be that because the court erroneously instructed the jury that in order to convict the defendant of murder in the first degree they must find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the fatal shot was fired wilfully, deliberately, premeditatedly, with malice aforethought, and with the specific intent to take the life of Erickson, the court should have committed further error favorable to the defendant and to the prejudice of the state by submitting to the jury the question of second degree murder.

Moreover, as I read and construe § 4161, an instruction on the question of second degree murder would, in effect, have withdrawn from the consideration of the jury the question of whether the homicide was committed in the perpetration of burglary and attempted robbery. The court could not have submitted the question of second degree murder without in effect annulling the statute. It sometimes happens that the rapist, burglar, robber, and incendiary, in perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate one or more of the felonies mentioned in § 4161, kills, without any specific intent so to do, a human being. The killing, as a matter of fact, may be wholly accidental. In such case the killing is not deliberate nor premeditated, but is, nevertheless, murder in the first degree. Take, for example, a case such as I have suggested, in which the court, in defining murder in the first degree, charges the jury in the language of the statute, namely, that "every murder . . . committed in the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, burglary, or robbery, . . . is murder in the first degree." § 4161. It must be conceded that, if the statute is to be given any effect whatever, such instruction correctly defines murder of the first degree when the homicide is committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate any of the felonies mentioned therein. Now it is apparent that should the court, after giving the instruction suggested, proceed to define second degree murder, it must repeat the language of the statute down to and including the words "in the," and then substitute the words "second degree" for the words "first degree," which would, in effect, annul the statute, and, as I have stated, take from the jury the question of first degree murder.

It is suggested that there is evidence tending to show that defendant was addicted to the use of morphine or opium, and that the use of such drugs had weakened and impaired his mental faculties to such an extent as to render him incapable of deliberation and premeditation, or of forming a design to kill, thereby reducing the crime from first degree to second degree murder. The court carefully and elaborately charged the jury on the question of insanity, and the defendant's rights in that regard were carefully guarded. Upon that issue the court instructed the jury in part as follows: "An insane person is not criminally responsible under the law for his acts. The words 'insane person' include . . . distracted persons and persons of unsound mind. . . . When evidence is introduced tending to prove insanity sufficient to raise a reasonable doubt of defendant's sanity at the time of the commission of the act, then the presumption of sanity ceases, and the prosecution is bound to prove the sanity of the accused beyond a reasonable doubt. So in this case, if the jury, after considering all the evidence, entertain a reasonable doubt of the sanity of the defendant at the time of the alleged offense, then he must be acquitted. . . . When the evidence is completed, and the case finally submitted to you, the defendant cannot be convicted of any crime unless, from all the evidence in the case, taken together, you are satisfied, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant was sane at the time the act in question was committed." (Italics mine.) "You are instructed that if you are not satisfied from a careful and conscientious consideration of all the evidence in the case, beyond a reasonable doubt, that, at the time of the commission of the act charged, the defendant knew right from wrong with respect to said act, then you cannot find him guilty of any crime; and so far as this case is concerned, it is not material what caused such insanity."

Assuming, for the sake of the argument, that the defendant, without either deliberation or premeditation, and without forming a design or intent to take human life, fired the fatal shot that killed Erickson,—and we may go a step farther and assume that the weapon was accidentally discharged,—the killing, nevertheless, was, under the statute, murder in the first degree, unless the defendant, at the time he fired the shot, was insane. Of course, if he were insane, he could not legally be convicted of any crime. The jury, however, found against the defendant on the question of insanity.

I have examined the record in this case with more than ordinary care, and am forced to the conclusion that the defendant had a fair and impartial trial, and that he was properly convicted.

Straup, J., dissenting:

Our statute (Comp. Laws 1907, § 4159) defines murder to be "the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought." § 4161 defines the degrees of murder. It is: "Every murder perpetrated by poison, lying in wait, or any other kind of wilful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated killing; or committed in the perpetration of, or attempt to perpetrate, any arson, rape, burglary, or robbery; or perpetrated from a premeditated design unlawfully and maliciously to effect the death of any human being other than him who is killed; or perpetrated by any act greatly dangerous to the lives of others and evidencing a depraved mind, regardless of human life,—is murder in the first degree. Any other homicide committed under such circumstances as would have constituted murder at common law is murder in the second degree."

The information charged first degree murder thus: That the defendant "wilfully, unlawfully, feloniously, deliberately, premeditatedly, of his malice aforethought, and with the specific intent to take the life of the" deceased, shot and killed him. The facts are referred to by Mr. Justice Frick. The state, as it had the right to do, went to the jury on two theories: One that the defendant, in the commission of, or attempt to commit, a robbery, shot and killed the deceased; the other, that the defendant wilfully, maliciously, deliberately, and premeditatedly, and with the specific intent to take the life of the deceased, and as specifically alleged in the information, shot and killed him. There is ample evidence to support both. The court submitted the case on both, and in such respect charged that, if the jury found that the defendant, in the commission of or attempt to commit a robbery or burglary, shot and killed the deceased, that constituted first degree murder. It further charged that "every murder perpetrated by poison, lying in wait, or any other kind of wilful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated killing," was also first degree murder. The court in such particular and at some length charged what was meant by the terms "wilful," "deliberate," and "premeditated." It then charged that, before the defendant could be convicted of murder in the first degree, the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that "the killing was unlawful;" that it was "deliberate;" that it was premeditated;" that it was "with malice aforethought;" and that it "was with the specific intent to take the life of" the deceased.

The defendant's theory was that, by the habitual and excessive use of morphine and other drugs, his mental faculties were impaired to such an extent as to render him (1) wholly irresponsible for his acts; or (2) incapable of deliberation and premeditation, or of forming or entertaining a design or an intent to kill or rob. Conformably to the first, he requested the court to charge that if the jury found that the defendant, because of an habitual use of such drugs, had become wholly irresponsible for his acts, they should acquit him; conformably to the second, that if the jury found "that the defendant was intoxicated by the use of morphine or other drugs at the time of the killing, you may take that fact into consideration in determining his condition of mind, though such intoxication may have been voluntary;" that "in this case, if you believe from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant was addicted to the use of morphine or opium or both, and by reason of the continued and habitual use of either or both of such drugs was brought or left in such weakened mental condition that he was incapable of deliberation and premeditation, as defined in these instructions, he is not guilty of murder in the first degree." The defendant also requested the court to define murder in the second degree and to submit such question to the jury. The court refused to give these requests.

Notwithstanding the charge, that before the jury could convict the defendant of first degree murder the state was required to prove that the killing was unlawful, wilful, deliberate, premeditated, with malice aforethought, and with the specific intent to take the life of the deceased, the court, nevertheless, refused to submit to the jury the question of second degree murder; and, by the charge, bound the jury to convict the defendant of first degree murder, or to find him not guilty. The court submitted to the jury the question of the defendant's insanity or irresponsibility, but with the direction that, "before the defendant can be convicted of murder in the first degree upon the theory" that the deceased "was killed by the defendant while the defendant was engaged in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate a robbery or burglary, you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, from all the evidence in the case, that the defendant, at the time of the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate said robbery or burglary, had formed the intent to commit said robbery or burglary, and that he had the mental capacity to distinguish between right and wrong with reference to said robbery or burglary; and, if you should find from the evidence that the defendant at the time in question had not the mental capacity to form an intent to perpetrate a robbery or burglary, then you cannot convict him of murder in the first degree." The court then, after charging on burden of proof as to the issue of insanity, charged that "the test of responsibility for a criminal act when insanity is relied upon as a defense is the capacity of the defendant to distinguish between right and wrong at the time of and with respect to the act which is the subject of inquiry;" L.R.A.1916D.

and if the jury were "not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant had the capacity to distinguish between right and wrong at the time of and with reference to the act in question, then you cannot convict him."

The refusal of the requests, and the charge in the particulars referred to, present the principal questions for review. The most serious is the refusal to submit to the jury the question of second degree murder, and binding them, as did the court, to either find the defendant guilty of first degree murder or to acquit him. This presents two questions: (1) May the court, in any case upon a charge of first degree murder, and upon a plea of not guilty and a trial, itself, instead of the jury, determine the degree of murder? And (2) if so, is this a proper case in which the court may do so? Because of our recent decision in the case of State v. Thorne, 41 Utah, 414, 126 Pac. 286, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 90, where it was held that the court in that case was justified in refusing to submit to the jury the question of second degree murder, I approach the first with some hesitation. While I think the doctrine in the Thorne Case is stated too broadly, still, were it not for the second question, and the extent to which it is here carried, I should be inclined to yield assent without further observations.

I have already referred to the statute defining murder and first and second degree murder. Section 4893 of the statute provides that "the jury may find the defendant guilty of any offense, the commission of which is necessarily included in that with which he is charged." Section 4892, that "whenever a crime is distinguished into degrees, the jury, if they convict the defendant, must find the degree of the crime of which he is guilty." Section 4906, that "upon a plea of guilty of a crime distinguished or divided into degrees, the court must, before passing sentence, determine the degree." Here, then, are express statutes which on a plea of not guilty and a trial, require the jury, and on a plea of guilty the court, to determine the degree, whenever a crime is distinguished into degrees. Murder, under the statute, is distinguished "into degrees." The charge here is murder. It is charged in the first degree. Second degree is "necessarily included in" the charge of first degree murder. The one is just as much charged in the information as is the other. I think the statutes referred to are peculiarly applicable to a charge of first degree murder. I see no license to disregard them or to hold them inapplicable to a charge of murder as here charged, a wilful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated murder. Under such statutory provisions I think the great weight of authority is that upon an information or indictment for first degree murder, and upon a plea of not guilty and a trial, it is the exclusive province of the jury to determine the degree of murder, not only when the charge or claim is that the murder was wilful, deliberate, and premeditated and with malice aforethought, but also when perpetrated by poison, or done in the commission of or attempt to commit felonies enumerated in the statute defining murder in the first degree. The cases so holding are collected and cited in notes to the case of State v. Phinney, 12 Ann. Cas. 1081, and 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 935. The reasons for the rule are stated in those cases. Other cases in support of the rule are also cited and referred to by the appellant in his brief. The California and Nevada cases cited in the prevailing opinion do not, in my judgment, support a contrary doctrine. In 19 Nev., cited, the question of second degree murder was not withheld from, but was expressly submitted to, the jury. In 28 Nev. and in 141 and 145 Cal., cited, questions of withholding or submitting second degree murder were not involved. Neither is the case of Davis v. United States, 165 U. S. 373, 41 L. ed. 750, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 360, in point, for there the prosecution was under a statute different from ours; one where homicide was not divided into degrees of murder, as is the case under our statute, and where there was no statute, as we have, "that whenever a crime is distinguished into degrees, the jury, if they convict the defendant, must find the degree of the crime of which he is guilty." There, however, are cases supporting a contrary or "minority" rule,—the rule stated in the Thorne Case. They are also collected and cited in notes in 12 Ann. Cas. and 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) heretofore referred to. Some of them may be distinguished because of dissimilar statutes. That is especially true of the cases from Nebraska and New Jersey. There seem to be no statutes in those states corresponding with §§ 4892 and 4906 of our statute. Others may be distinguished because no request to charge on second degree murder was asked. However, there are cases there cited, notably from Michigan and Iowa, which apparently support the rule laid down in the Thorne Case.

The ruling is here defended and upheld upon the theory that the evidence without dispute shows the murder was committed in the commission of or attempt to commit a robbery; and, since the statute declares a murder so committed to be murder in the first degree, the court was justified in refusing to submit to the jury the question of L.R.A. 1916D.

second degree murder, and in giving the binding instruction to convict the defendant of first degree murder or to find him not guilty. In this no distinction is drawn between a proper statement of the law and a binding instruction to the jury which takes from them the ascertainment and determination of the degree. Of course a murder committed in the commission of or attempt to commit a robbery, or perpetrated by poison, is, by the statute, declared to be first degree murder; and the jury should be so instructed, and that, if they so find the facts beyond a reasonable doubt, to convict the defendant of first degree murder. So, too, does the statute declare that "any other kind of wilful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated killing," or "perpetrated from a premeditated design unlawfully and maliciously to effect the death" of a human being, is also first degree murder. Declaring to the jury the law as to what constitutes first degree murder is one thing; withholding from them the right to find second degree murder, when, by the information, second degree as well as first degree is charged, is quite another and different thing. Asserting, as is done, that since the statute declares a "murder committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate a robbery," etc., is first degree murder, and if the evidence shows the "murder (defined by the statute to be 'the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought') was committed" that way, the court is not required to submit to the jury second degree murder, adds nothing; for the statute as well declares a "murder committed" under other enumerated circumstances is also first degree murder. Yet it is said if the evidence shows a "murder committed" in the perpetration of a robbery, etc., second degree murder need not be submitted to the jury, because the statute defines that to be the first degree murder; but if the evidence shows a "wilful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated" murder, second degree murder should be submitted, though the statute as well declares that also to be first degree murder. The question is asked, how can a murder committed in the perpetration of a robbery, etc., be second degree murder? As well ask how can a wilful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated murder be second degree murder? Let the thought be carried a little further by asking: How can a guilty man be innocent? and how can a verdict of not guilty be rendered in either supposed case?

The declaration in an early day of Chief Justice Shaw in a criminal case (Com. v. Porter, 10 Met. 263) may not be here amiss: "It is the proper province and duty of judges to consider and decide all questions of law which arise, and that the responsibility of a correct decision is placed finally on them; that it is the proper province and duty of the jury to weigh and consider evidence, and decide all questions of fact; and that the responsibility of a correct decision is placed upon them. And the safety, efficacy, and purity of jury trial depend upon the steady maintenance and practical application of this principle." The further observation is there made by him that while it is the duty of the court to declare the law and the jury to accept it as so declared, they, nevertheless, in a criminal case by a general verdict "declare the law as well as the fact." And that is our statute. Comp. Laws 1907, § 4876. Every first degree murder involves elements of a wilful, deliberate, malicious and premeditated killing. On the first appeal in the Thorne Case, 39 Utah, 208, 117 Pac. 58, we held that allegations in an information of an unlawful, malicious, deliberate, and premeditated killing are supported by proof of a killing committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate a robbery, on the theory that a wilful and premeditated intent to commit the felony is transferred from that offense to the homicide actually committed, and is the legal equivalent of and tantamount to the allegations of a wilful, deliberate, and premeditated killing. And on no other theory can such a ruling be upheld.

When, therefore, all the provisions of the statute referred to are considered, I see no reason for holding that when the murder is shown to have been committed without dispute by poisoning, or in the commission of, or attempt to commit, a felony enumerated in the statute defining first degree murder, the degree of murder is for the court; but when the evidence without dispute, and by the most positive and direct testimony, shows the murder to have been committed, not in such manner, but by a wilful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated killing with malice aforethought,—a murder also defined by the statute to be first degree murder,—the degree is for the jury. Under the statute I do not see wherein the court has any greater license in the one case than in the other to itself, instead of the jury, determine the degree of murder. The statute requiring the jury to "find the degree," where the crime is "distinguished into degrees," makes no such distinction. In considering the power of the court and the province of the jury with respect to the subject in hand, we must bear in mind the well-recognized distinction between our civil and criminal jurisprudence. In a civil case, if all the material allegations of the complaint are established by evidence without dispute, the court is given the power, and it is its duty, if requested, to direct a verdict for the plaintiff; and though the case under such circumstances should be submitted to the jury, and a verdict nevertheless rendered in favor of the defendant, the court, on its own motion, or upon the plaintiff's, may set the verdict aside, as being against and contrary to the evidence. The court may not do that in a criminal case. Though all the allegations of the information or indictment be established by most direct and positive evidence, wholly without dispute, and though the defendant offered no evidence whatever, the court, nevertheless, may not direct a verdict against him; and if, upon a submission of the case, under such circumstances, a verdict is rendered in favor of the defendant, which manifestly is contrary to and against all the evidence, and wholly unsupported by it, still the court may not, upon its own motion or that of the state, and against the objection of the defendant, set the verdict aside.

Take the case in hand, where it is claimed the evidence without dispute shows first degree murder; and let it further be assumed that the defendant had offered no evidence of any kind, but had rested when the state rested, and the jury had rendered a verdict of not guilty,—a verdict, let it be assumed, in the very teeth of all the evidence,—yet the court could neither on its own motion nor that of the state have interfered with it. This proposition is conceded. What significance is to be attached to it? That the jury in a criminal case, so far as concerns the state, are not only the judges of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given the testimony but are also the exclusive judges of the facts. They, as concerns the state, may or may not decide questions of fact and find a verdict conformably with the evidence. They, in such respect, are given unlimited power, wholly uncontrolled by the court, to decide all questions of fact and render a verdict contrary to the evidence. It may be said the jury in such case would not properly perform their duty. That is not the point. The pertinent question is: May the court in such case influence, coerce, or control the jury, or interfere with their verdict when so rendered, in the very teeth of all the evidence? When a jury in a civil case renders a verdict not conformable with and not supported by the evidence, the court may interfere on its own motion, or that of the party aggrieved. So may it in a criminal case on behalf of the defendant, when a verdict is rendered to his prejudice, not conformable with and not supported by the evidence, or one against law. But, as concerns the state, the court may not interfere, though the verdict is wholly unsupported by, and is contrary to, all the evidence; and though the jury, in the rendition of it, disregarded both law and evidence.

It is said in some of the cases that, if the evidence without dispute shows first degree murder, the court should not submit the question of second degree to the jury, and thereby permit or give them to understand that they may render such a verdict when there is no evidence to support it. But in such case such a verdict would not be unsupported by evidence. It would not only amply support such a verdict, but would also support a verdict of a higher degree,—of first degree murder. Evidence which would support first degree, of necessity must also support second degree murder. That is the effect of the holding in People v. Dillon, 8 Utah, 92, 30 Pac. 150. If, however, the argument is sound and is carried to a conclusion, then why should the court submit a case at all to the jury when the evidence, wholly without dispute, and by the most positive and direct testimony, manifestly shows murder in the first degree committed by the defendant, and no evidence whatever offered by him to controvert it? To say, as is said in some of the cases, the court is required to submit the case to the jury to determine whether the defendant committed the acts constituting the charged offense, is to beg the question; for such a contention assumes some conflict or uncertainty in the evidence, either with respect to the commission of the offense, or as to the person who committed it, or that such questions rest upon inferences and deductions, and not upon positive, direct, and uncontroverted evidence. Let us adhere to the admitted proposition, the conceded premises,—the defendant's guilt of first degree murder, clearly shown by the most positive and direct evidence, wholly without conflict. According to all the cases, no matter how conclusive may be the evidence in favor of the state and against the defendant, the court, nevertheless, upon a plea of not guilty and a trial, is bound to let the case to the jury. If they, in such case, have the unlimited power, wholly uncontrolled by the court, to render a verdict of not guilty, then why have they not the same power to render any other verdict which, on the information or indictment, may be rendered?

It seems somewhat of an anomaly to say that the jury have the unlimited power, wholly uncontrolled by the court, to render a verdict of not guilty, in disregard of all the evidence, but may not render a verdict of second degree murder because the evidence without dispute shows first degree murder. What appears to be a conclusive answer to the contention is this: Had the jury in this case, notwithstanding the court by its charge bound them to render a verdict of first degree murder or to find the defendant not guilty, rendered a verdict of murder in the second degree, what power under our Constitution or the statute had the court, either on its own motion, or that of the state, and against the objection of the defendant, to set the verdict aside? None whatever. This but shows that the jury, so far as concerns the state, had the right and power to render any kind of a verdict which, under the information, could be rendered; and any verdict so rendered could not, against the defendant's objection, be questioned or assailed on the ground that it is against law or the evidence. And if such a verdict had been rendered, and the court were powerless to interfere, then what right had the court in the first instance, on the submission of the case to the jury, against the defendant's requests and objections, to so restrict, direct, and control the jury as was here done? The court may, and it is its duty when requested, to inform the jury of the different verdicts which, on the information or indictment, may be rendered. But the court may not, against the defendant's requests and objections, restrict, direct, or influence the jury as to which of such verdicts should be rendered by them. And as second degree murder is necessarily included on the charge of first degree murder, and as the statute expressly requires the jury, not the court, to determine the degree, where the crime is distinguished into degrees, I think the question of second degree murder ought to have been submitted to the jury.

I have thus considered the question from the standpoint that the evidence without dispute shows murder in the first degree. I shall now consider it from the standpoint that there is evidence to justify a verdict of second degree murder. There is evidence to show that the defendant was addicted to the use of morphine or opium. The controversy in that respect was: To what extent had he used such drugs, and what effect had they upon him? The contention of the defendant was twofold: One, a destruction or impairment of his mental faculties to such an extent as to render him wholly irresponsible for his acts; the other, that his mental faculties were weakened and impaired to such an extent as to render him incapable of deliberation, premeditation, or of forming a design or intent to kill, thereby reducing the crime from first degree to second degree murder. The state contended that the defendant, though addicted to the use of the drugs, had not used them to such an extent as to render him either irresponsible for his acts, or incapable of deliberation or premeditation or of forming a design or intent to kill. The court submitted the case to the jury on the theory only of whether the defendant was irresponsible for his acts; whether he had the capacity to distinguish right from wrong as to the robbery; whether he was insane. The defendant's evidence as to his insanity or entire irresponsibility was not strong. It, however, is conceded to be sufficient to require a submission of such issue to the jury. No one has questioned that. If it was so sufficient, I do not see why the defendant was not also entitled to go to the jury on the theory of an impairment of his mental faculties by the use of the drugs to such an extent as to render him incapable of deliberation and premeditation, or of forming a design or an intent to kill.

The jury on the evidence, finding that the defendant was not wholly irresponsible, might have reached the conclusion, had they not been directed against it, and had the question of second degree murder been submitted to them, that the defendant's mental faculties, because of an habitual and excessive use of the drugs, nevertheless, were impaired to such an extent as to render his capacity to deliberate and premeditate, or to form a design or an intent to kill, reasonably doubtful, and thus induced to find him guilty of second degree murder. And had such a verdict been rendered, on such a theory, I do not see how it could be said to be against, or unsupported by, evidence, in view of the concession that there was sufficient evidence to carry the case to the jury on the issue of insanity and irresponsibility caused by an excessive and habitual use of the drugs. But the jury were not allowed to consider the effect of such drugs upon the defendant's mind for the purpose of determining whether he had the capacity to deliberate, premeditate, or of forming an intent to kill. And this, notwithstanding the court submitted to the jury the question of first degree murder on two theories: One, that the murder was committed in the commission of or attempt to commit a robbery; the other, that the killing was wilful, deliberate, with premeditation and malice aforethought, and with the specific intent to take the life of the deceased, and as specifically in the information charged. So, though it be claimed that the jury, on the theory that the murder was committed in the commission of or attempt to commit a robbery, could not consider the excessive use of the drugs and the effect they had upon the defendant's mind except to determine whether he was wholly irresponsible, L.R.A.1916D.

they, nevertheless, had the right to consider such use and effect on the theory that the killing was wilful, deliberate, and premeditated. If not, then as well say a jury in a charge of first degree murder could consider the defendant's intoxication or the effects of alcoholism upon him, only for the purpose of determining whether he was insane, or wholly irresponsible for his acts, and not whether he had the capacity to deliberate and premeditate, and in determining whether he was guilty of first or second degree murder. The Thorne Case involved no question as to the defendant's mental capacity or condition. In such respect this case is dissimilar to that. So, upon the evidence, I think the court ought to have submitted to the jury the question of second degree murder.

Now, the defendant requested the court to charge that if the jury found the defendant was addicted to the use of the drugs, they should consider the effect thereof, whatever they might find in such particular, in determining his condition of mind and his capacity to deliberate and premeditate. As has been seen, the court refused this and submitted to the jury the consideration of the effect of such drugs only in determining whether the defendant was capable of distinguishing between right and wrong "with reference to the robbery and burglary" and "the mental capacity to form the intent to perpetrate a robbery or burglary." And it is said this is all that was necessary because the evidence shows the murder was committed in that manner. But that is not the only theory on which the state tried the case and went to the jury, and on which the court, on behalf of the state, submitted it to them. The court also submitted it on the theory of a wilful, deliberate, malicious, and premeditated killing. There, too, is ample evidence to support that. It about as strongly supports the one as the other. And the court, notwithstanding a submission on the theory that the murder was committed in the commission of or attempt to commit a robbery, nevertheless, in most direct and positive terms, unqualifiedly charged the jury that before they could convict the defendant of first degree murder the state was required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the killing was unlawful, that it was deliberate, that it was premeditated, that it was with malice aforethought, and that it was with the specific intent to take the life of the deceased. Right or wrong, it was the duty of the jury to accept that. Comp. Laws 1907, § 4876. It must be presumed that they did so. And therefore, by their verdict, must it also be presumed that they found the murder was committed in such manner They could not have done otherwise without disobeying the charge in such particular. It is said this charge, though no complaint is made of it by either party, and though it is not before us for review, is wrong; and then is it asserted that the claim is made further error should have been committed by submitting second degree murder. The proposition to be demonstrated is: Was or was not the court required to submit to the jury second degree murder? If the conclusion that to submit such question would have been error is to be taken as the major premise of the syllogism, or the negative assumed of the proposition sought to be proved, then, of course, there is nothing to demonstrate. For, when it is once assumed, or the conclusion is reached, that to submit such question would have been error, all argument must cease. No matter what we may think of the charge submitting to the jury the question of a deliberate, malicious, and premeditated murder, and requiring the jury to find that kind of a murder to convict the defendant of first degree murder, it nevertheless, uncomplained of by either party, was given as the law of the case which the jury were required to accept and to render a verdict accordingly; and the presumption that they did so must equally be indulged whether the charge is right or wrong, favorable or unfavorable to the defendant or the state. The information in express terms charged a deliberate, malicious, and premeditated murder. Under that information the state could prove the commission of such a murder or one committed in the perpetration of a felony. It was to its advantage to go to the jury, as it did, on both theories. And since the court submitted to the jury the question of a deliberate, malicious, and premeditated murder, and required the jury to find that the murder was committed in such manner before they could convict the defendant of first degree murder, then, it seems to me, must it necessarily follow that the court ought also to have submitted the question of second degree murder and the effect, if any, the use of the drugs had on the defendant's mental capacity and condition to deliberate and premeditate. To escape this conclusion must it be presumed that the jury did not obey the positive and commanding language of the court as to the finding of a deliberate, malicious, and premeditated murder before they could convict the defendant of first degree murder,—that they did not consider such question so submitted to them, and did not find that the murder was so committed,—or else must there be a different finding made on the record that the murder was not committed in such manner, but in the commission of or attempt to commit a robbery? I think we may not do either. We may not in a civil, much less a criminal, case, try it de novo on the record, and treat as found that which may be, or even ought to have been, found.

There is another question of less moment,—the charge with respect to the test of insanity or irresponsibility. The court charged: "The test of irresponsibility for a criminal act, when insanity is relied upon as a defense, is the capacity of the defendant to distinguish between right and wrong at the time of and with respect to the act which is the subject of inquiry."

This thought is repeated several times in other portions of the charge. The defendant, by his request, asked the court to also embody the additional element of "sufficient will power to govern his action" and to "resist impulses to commit crime." The refusal to so charge is also complained of.

Insanity or mental unsoundness embraces many different species. In some cases the subject, because of a diseased or disordered mind, lacks intelligence and the power to reason—to think rationally. Such a person is therefore incapable of comprehending the nature and quality of an act done, and of distinguishing between right and wrong with respect to it. When such is the particular form of malady the test is, as was charged: Did the defendant have the capacity to understand the nature and quality of the act, and to distinguish between right and wrong with respect to it? Many cases so hold. But it also is well recognized in medical jurisprudence that one may be capable of understanding the nature and quality of an act and know that it is morally wrong or unlawful, yet, understanding this, may, because of a diseased, impaired, or deranged mind, lack will power and ability to choose and to control conduct, or actions, in the light of his understanding and intelligence. In such case the true test is not capacity merely to distinguish between the rightfulness and wrongfulness of an act committed, but also sufficient will power to choose whether he shall do or refrain from doing it. Many cases so hold. Lack of will power may be caused not only by mania, hallucinations, or irresistible impulses to commit crime, or other maladies impelling violence or impulses to commit crime, but also by maladies of a negative character showing inability to control, to govern generally, to choose, to will. It is common knowledge that that portion of the brain which is concerned with the will may be so diseased or impaired as to destroy will power, and yet the person may not be possessed of mania, hallucinations, or irresistible impulses. I see no evidence that the defendant was possessed of "irresistible impulses to commit crime," or that his malady was of such a character or took such a form. The court, therefore, was not required to embody such an element in the charge in stating the test of insanity. But I think there is evidence of a malady, if any at all, involving a diseased or an impaired will power. Again, it is common knowledge that the general effect of an excessive and habitual use of morphine and opium is to impair, and in some instances to wholly destroy, will power. It is this faculty which usually is first affected by the use of such drugs. Evidence of this was also given at the trial. We are therefore concerned with a malady which involves not only the faculty to think rationally, and to reason, and the capacity to understand right from wrong, but also the faculties of the will, the capacity, the power, to choose, to govern, and to control conduct and actions. In view of this I think the court in its charge too much restricted the test, and ought to have charged substantially as was charged and approved in the case of Davis v. United States, 165 U. S. 373, 41 L. ed. 750, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 360, and in accordance with the doctrine stated in State v. Reidell, 9 Houst. (Del.) 470, 14 Atl. 550, and supported by many other cases, when the particular malady involves or affects will power.

Petition for rehearing denied July 3, 1913.

Petition for writ of certiorari to Supreme Court of the United States denied September 12, 1914.

Annotation—Effect of statutory declaration that murder committed by certain means, or in commission of felony, shall be murder in first degree, upon right of jury to pass upon degree.

This annotation is supplementary to that appended to State v. Phinney, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 935, on the same subject; and as is the case there, is confined to the question as to the right of the jury to determine the degree of guilt of one on trial for a murder committed by means of poison, lying in wait, or in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate rape, robbery, burglary, or while committing a felony, which is declared by statute to be murder in the first degree; and does not include the right of the jury to determine the degree where the element of deliberation and premeditation is essential to a conviction of murder in the first degree.

As shown by the earlier note and the following cases, the decisions are not of one accord upon this question, some holding, like STATE v. MEWHINNEY, ante, 590, that the statute precludes the jury from determining the degree of guilt, while others hold to the contrary.

The statutory power to convict of a lesser degree of crime than that charged does not apply in case of one charged with murder in the perpetration of a burglary, since such a homicide is murder in the first degree, regardless of intent. People v. Schleiman (1910) 197 N. Y. 383, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1075, 90 N. E. 950, 18 Ann. Cas. 588.

And where one accused of homicide is guilty of murder in the first degree, if guilty at all, the court should not instruct the jury upon the lesser degrees of the crime. (N. Y.) Ibid.

In State v. Spivey (1909) 151 N. C. 676, 65 S. E. 995, it appearing that the L.R.A.1916D.

homicide was done only in one of two ways, by lying in wait, or in an attempt to commit arson, the doing of which in either way the statute declared to be murder in the first degree, it was held that a charge that the verdict must be either guilty of murder in such degree or not guilty was proper; and that a statute giving the jury in a murder case the power by their verdict to determine the degree gave them no discretion in the matter.

In Strong v. State (1914) — Ark. —, 169 S. W. 1189, an instruction in conformity with the proof and with the statute prescribing that "all murder which shall be committed in the perpetration of or attempt to perpetrate arson, rape, robbery," etc., "shall be deemed murder in the first degree," was sustained.

In Williams v. State (1891) 30 Tex. App. 354, 17 S. W. 408, the refusal of the trial court to charge the jury upon murder in the second degree was sustained because all the evidence showed that the murder was committed in the perpetration of robbery, and a murder so committed is expressly made by statute per se murder in the first degree.

But in Burton v. Com. (1908) 108 Va. 892, 62 S. E. 376, it was decided that on an indictment for murder a verdict for manslaughter would not be set aside at the instance of the accused because the evidence shows "murder by lying in wait," which the statute declares to be murder in the first degree, since other statutes allow juries a certain degree of latitude and discretion in applying the law to the facts and fixing the degree of guilt of one convicted of crime. The court said: "Our jurisprudence, in this and in other respects, may be amenable to criticism of schoolmen and logicians, but, subjected to the test of actual experience, it has appeared in practice to be well that the law, after framing definitions and formulating rules of conduct, should allow to courts and juries, in their application and enforcement, a certain latitude and discretion. And so it comes to pass that a man may be indicted for murder of the first degree by the various means embraced in the statute, the evidence adduced may tend to the proof of the offense named in the indictment, and none other, and yet the jury, acting under this discretion with which they have been clothed by the law, may find the offender guilty of a less offense. And it is well in practice that it should be so, else, owing to the tenderness of juries and their reluctance to impose the highest penalty, many crimes would go wholly unpunished, and thus the rigor of the law would tend rather to the promotion than to the prevention of crime."

And in State v. Bobbitt (1908) 215 Mo. 10, 114 S. W. 511, it was decided that although a homicide occurs in the perpetration of or in the attempt to perpetrate arson, robbery, etc., designated by the statute as murder in the first degree, the defendant may, nevertheless, be tried and found guilty of murder in the second degree.

In State v. Rogers (1905) 129 Iowa, 229, 105 N. W. 455, the court, in this connection, said: "Appellant contends that Forney was killed in an attempt to commit robbery, and therefore the perpetrator of the crime was guilty of murder in the first degree, or was entitled to an acquittal, and that the jury should have been so instructed. See Code, § 4728; State v. Smith (1897) 102 Iowa, 656, 72 N. W. 279. Even if this were so, it might not follow that submission of the issue as to his guilt of murder in the second degree was an error prejudicial to the defendant. Upon that question the court, in State v. Bertoch (1900) 112 Iowa, 195, 83 N. W. 967, where poison was alleged to have been administered, was equally divided." W. W. A.

UTAH SUPREME COURT.

H. T. & C. COMPANY, Respt.,

v.

J. W. WHITEHOUSE and Wife, Appts.

(— Utah, —, 154 Pac. 950.)

Covenant — warranty — married woman — running with land.

The covenant of a married woman who signs a warranty deed of her husband's real estate merely to convey her dower interest does not run with the land so as to be enforceable by a remote grantee.

For other cases, see Covenants and Conditions, III. c. 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 3, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Judicial District Court for Tooele County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for an alleged breach of warranty of title to certain land conveyed under contract by defendants to a trustee of the plaintiff corporation. Affirmed on condition.

Statement by McCarty, J.:

Plaintiff, a corporation, brought this action to recover damages from defendants for the alleged breach of warranty of title to 200 acres of land situated in Tooele county, Utah, which land was, on February 7, 1906, conveyed under contract by the defendants to Theodore Schulte, trustee, for Joseph H. Hurd, J. B. Taylor, and Walter A. Cooke. From a judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiff, defendants prosecute this appeal.

The contract under which the land was conveyed, so far as material here, is as follows:

This agreement made this 29th day of January, A. D. 1906, by and between Jeremiah W. Whitehouse, of Lincoln, Tooele county, Utah, party of the first part, and Theodore G. Schulte, of Salt Lake City, Utah, party of the second part, witnesseth that the party of the first part agrees to sell, and the party of the second part to purchase, all of the following described real property, situate in Tooele county, Utah, namely [describing the land], for the sum of twenty-seven hundred fifty ($2,750) dollars, payable twelve hundred ($1,200) dollars cash at the date hereof, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, and the balance of fifteen hundred fifty ($1,550) dollars, payable twelve hundred ($1,200) dollars on or before August 1, 1906, and three hundred fifty ($350) dollars on or before October 1, 1906. The party of the second part also agrees to pay the balance due the state of Utah on the said southeast quarter

Note.—As to right of remote grantee to sue for breach of covenant when covenantor had neither title nor possession, see annotation following this case, post, 613.
T. R. A. 10187

and the east half of the southwest quarter of section 20, in township 3 south of range 3 west, Salt Lake meridian.

It is hereby further mutually understood and agreed that the aforesaid premises shall be conveyed by warranty deed, and that the party of the first part and his wife will execute such warranty deed, and that the same shall be placed in escrow with some bank or other depository to be agreed upon, to be delivered upon the payment of said sum of fifteen hundred fifty ($1,550) dollars, balance of the aforesaid purchase price thereof. . . .

In witness, whereof the said parties of the first and second part have hereunto set their hands the day and year first above written.

Jeremiah W. Whitehouse.

Theodore G. Schulte.

On September 17, 1906, Schulte, at the request of his beneficiaries, Hurd, Taylor, and Cooke, conveyed to plaintiff by warranty deed the above-mentioned 200 acres of land.

At the time the foregoing contract was entered into and the deeds referred to were executed, the land was, and since October 31, 1904, had been, encumbered by a certain agreement in writing entered into between the defendants and one Catherine Le Vine and Elizabeth R. Pratt, by which the defendants agreed to sell and convey to Le Vine and Pratt, and they agreed to purchase from defendants, for the sum of $2,000, the 200 acres of land described in the deed herein mentioned from defendants to Schulte. Suit was brought against the Whitehouses in the district court of Tooele county for the specific performance of the last-mentioned contract. Schulte was made a party defendant. The plaintiff herein, grantee and assignee of Schulte, was later on substituted as defendant in lieu of and in the place and stead of Schulte. A trial was had, and from the judgment rendered in favor of the Whitehouses denying specific performance, the cause was brought to this court on appeal. This court, after considering the questions presented by the appeal, remanded the cause, with directions to the trial court to set aside the judgment theretofore rendered and to enter judgment decreeing a specific performance of the last-mentioned contract. For a more detailed statement of the facts concerning the making of that contract, and of the suit brought thereon, we invite attention to the case of Le Vine v. Whitehouse, 37 Utah 260, 109 Pac. 2, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 407.

The court in the case at bar found, and the record shows, that the district court, in pursuance of the remittitur and the L.R.A.1916D.

directions of this court in the case above mentioned, rendered and entered judgment against the Whitehouses and the plaintiff herein for a specific performance of the agreement, "adjudging that defendants and each of them (and particularly the plaintiff herein) should execute and deliver to said Le Vine and said Pratt a good and sufficient conveyance in fee conveying the fee simple title to the tract of land (200 acres) described in said agreement, . . . and that thereupon, by virtue of said decree, and the proceedings taken therein, . . . plaintiff herein . . . was evicted and ousted from the possession" of the premises (the 200 acres of land), and ever since has been, and is now, dispossessed of the same.

The court also found, and the evidence supports the findings: "That at the time of entering into the said agreement of January 29, 1906, between the said Theodore G. Schulte and the defendant J. W. Whitehouse, the said 200 acres of land, from the possession of which the plaintiff herein was ousted as aforesaid by the said Catherine E. Le Vine and Elizabeth R. Pratt by virtue of the aforesaid judgment and decree of this court, was valued, and it was agreed that the same should be taken, at and for the sum or price of $10 per acre, or a total of $2,000 for the said 200 acres, and that the same was at said time and ever since has been, and still is, of said value, . . . which was paid by the said Theodore G. Schulte and his beneficiaries hereinbefore referred to. That no part of the purchase price paid by the said Schulte and his said beneficiaries to the defendants herein has been repaid to them or either of them, or to the plaintiff herein, and no part of the damage arising by reason of the defendants' breaches of said contract and of the warranty and covenants in said warranty deed conveying the said 200 acres of land, excepting that the plaintiff received from the said Catherine E. Le Vine and Elizabeth R. Pratt the sum of $517.23, and which was paid on the 16th day of July, 1910, . . . and excepting the further sum of $100 paid on the 17th day of February, 1911, and $400 paid on the 5th day of June, 1913, and for which the defendants are entitled to credit upon the amount of said damages suffered by the plaintiff by reason of said breaches of the terms and covenants of said deed and agreement, and that, after crediting all of said sums, there is due to the plaintiff from the defendants, and the plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendants as damages and for principal and interest, costs, and attorneys' fees suffered, paid out, and expended, the sum of $1,720.83."

Messrs. Hancock & Barnes, for appellants:

Rescission of a contract cannot be done in part.

Cole v. Smith, 28 Colo. 506, 58 Pac. 1086; Hynes v. Packard, 92 Tex. 44, 45 S. W. 562; Phillips v. Reichert, 17 Ind. 120, 79 Am. Dec. 463; Hoffman v. Kirby, 136 Cal. 26, 68 Pac. 321; Slocum v. Bracy, 55 Minn. 249, 43 Am. St. Rep. 499, 56 N. W. 826; Clifton v. Jackson Iron Co. 16 Am. St. Rep. 621, note; 3 Page, Contr. 2101; 2 Sutherland, Damages, 606; Carter v. Beck, 40 Ala. 599.

The judgment against defendant Ettie Whitehouse is erroneous.

Mygatt v. Coe, 124 N. Y. 212, 11 L.R.A. 650, 26 N. E. 611; Van Amburgh v. Kramer, 16 Hun, 205; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 4th ed. p. 284; Cole v. Hughes, 54 N. Y. 444, 13 Am. Rep. 611; O'Brien v. Evans, 107 Mich. 623, 65 N. W. 571.

Mr. Joseph H. Hurd for respondent.

McCarty, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There are numerous assignments of error. The only assignment, however, we deem of sufficient importance to consider, is the one in which the findings of fact, conclusions of law, and the judgment are assailed, wherein it is held that Ettie Whitehouse is liable under the covenant of warranty contained in the deed from the Whitehouses to Theodore Schulte executed February 7, 1906.

Plaintiff's evidence shows that Mrs. Whitehouse was not a party to the transactions leading up to, and which culminated in, the making of the contract under which the deed was executed, and that she was not known "at all in the transaction" prior to the execution of the deed. The evidence, without conflict, shows that she signed the deed merely as the wife of Jeremiah Whitehouse, and that she had no title to, or estate in, the land conveyed, except the contingent interest created by Comp. Laws. 1907, § 2826, which, so far as material here, provides: "One third in value of all the legal or equitable estates in real property possessed by the husband at any time during the marriage, and to which the wife had made no relinquishment of her rights, shall be set apart as her property in fee simple if she survive him."

The rule, as declared by the great weight of authority, seems to be that a covenant of warranty by one having neither possession of, nor title to, the land conveyed, does not run with the land, and that the right to recover on the covenant belongs only to the grantee to whom it is made. In other words, a warranty by one who is a stranger to the title, and not in possession of the land conveyed, is a personal covenant and does not pass to a subsequent grantee, except by assignment. In this case there was no assignment from Schulte to the plaintiff.

In Jones on Real Property, vol. 1, § 942, the author says: "A covenant will not run with the land unless there is either mutuality or succession of interest. Privity of contract is sufficient between the immediate parties, but there must be privity of estate to carry the benefit of the covenant to subsequent owners of the property to which the covenant relates." 11 Cyc. 1100; Mygatt v. Coe, 124 N. Y. 212, 11 L.R.A. 646, 26 N. E. 611; Mygatt v. Coe, 142 N. Y. 78, 24 L.R.A. 850, 36 N. E. 870; Pyle v. Gross, 92 Md. 132, 48 Atl. 713; Bull v. Beiseker, 16 N. D. 290, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 514, 113 N. W. 870.

We also invite attention to an instructive note in 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 514, to the last case cited, in which the annotator cites and reviews numerous decisions wherein the doctrine herein announced is upheld.

We are of the opinion, and so hold, that plaintiff, under the admitted facts, is not entitled to recover against Ettie Whitehouse on her covenant of warranty to Schulte. The cause is therefore remanded, with directions to the trial court that, in case the plaintiff shall, within fifteen days after notice of the remittitur, file with the clerk of the court its consent in writing to a modification of the findings of fact, conclusions of law, and judgment, to conform with the views herein expressed, the judgment will stand affirmed as to Jeremiah Whitehouse, each party to pay his own costs on this appeal. Should plaintiff fail to file with the clerk of the trial court his consent in writing to a modification of the findings of fact, conclusions of law, and judgment within fifteen days after receiving notice of the remittitur, the trial court is directed to grant a new trial; appellants to recover their taxable costs on this appeal.

Straup, Ch. J., and Frick, J., concur

Petition for rehearing denied January 15, 1916.

Annotation—Right of remote grantee to sue for breach of covenant when covenantor had neither title nor possession.

This note is supplemental to the note to Bull v. Beiseker, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 514, L.R.A.1916D.

where the earlier cases are collected. Since the earlier note only one case in point besides H. T. & C. Co. v. WHITEHOUSE, ante, 611, has been found.

In Coleman v. Lucksinger (1909) 224 Mo. 1, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 934, 123 S. W. 441, where the defendant, having no title, conveyed to B with covenants of seisin and warranty, and B conveyed to the plaintiff with special warranty, neither B nor the plaintiff ever having been in actual possession of the land, it was claimed by the defendant that, conceding all the covenants were broken when made, and that neither title nor possession passed from the defendant to B nor from B to the plaintiff, then there was no privity of contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, and the plaintiff could not maintain the action. But it was held that the covenant of seisin ran with the land and that the plaintiff might sue upon it.

While without the scope of this note, an interesting case upon privity in recovery upon covenants is Merchants' Union Trust Co. v. New Philadelphia Graphite Co. (1912) — Del. —, 83 Atl. 520, where it was held that a Pennsylvania mortgagee, having no title to the land nor estate in it before sale and entry, had no privity with the lessee of the mortgagor's grantee, nor could it enforce the covenant in his lease to pay rent. B. B. B.

UTAH SUPREME COURT.

CLEOPHA JEPSEN, Appt.,

v.

ANTON JENSEN, Resp't.

(— Utah, —, 155 Pac. 429.)

Fright — recovery for injuries caused by.

1. Damages may be recovered for injuries from fright due to the defendant's wilful, wanton, and malicious acts in using abusive language to plaintiff's husband in her presence, and threatening to kill him with a weapon which defendant pointed at him.

For other cases, see Fright, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Trial — wilful acts — question for court.

2. The court cannot say as matter of law that the acts of one in using abusive language to another and pointing a weapon at him with a threat to kill were not wilful and wanton within the rule permitting recovery for injuries resulting from fright caused by such acts.

For other cases, see Trial, II. c, 8, e, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 8, 1916.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Box Elder County granting a nonsuit in an action brought to recover damages for alleged injuries from fright due to defendant's wilful, wanton, and unlawful acts. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Johnson & Johnson, for appellant:

Note. — The right to recover for physical injury resulting from fright caused by a wrongful act is treated in the notes to Huston v. Freemansburg, 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49; Chittick v. Philadelphia Rapid Transit Co. 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1073; and Conley v. United Drug Co. L.R.A.1915D, 830.

The right to recover for mental anguish L.R.A.1916D.

Recovery may be had for injuries resulting from fright or terror.

Watkins v. Kaolin Mfg. Co. 131 N. C. 536, 60 L.R.A. 617, 42 S. E. 983, 13 Am. Neg. Rep. 197; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hayter, 93 Tex. 239, 47 L.R.A. 325, 77 Am. St. Rep. 856, 54 S. W. 944, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 359; Purcell v. St. Paul City R. Co. 48 Minn. 134, 16 L.R.A. 203, 50 N. W. 1034.

Where the conduct of the defendant has been wilful and wanton a recovery may be had.

Preiser v. Wielandt, 48 App. Div. 569, 62 N. Y. Supp. 890, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 558; May v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 157 N. C. 416, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 912, 72 S. E. 1059; Harless v. Southwest Missouri Electric R. Co., 123 Mo. App. 22, 99 S. W. 793; Green v. Shoemaker, 111 Md. 69, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 667, 73 Atl. 688; Dunn v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 2 Ga. App. 848, 59 S. E. 189; Brownback v. Frailey, 78 Ill. App. 262; Williams v. Underhill, 63 App. Div. 223, 71 N. Y. Supp. 291.

Plaintiff's own personal legal rights have been invaded, and it is a cruel and inhuman refinement to say that she is not entitled to recover not only compensation, but exemplary damages.

Lesch v. Great Northern R. Co. 97 Minn. 503, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93, 106 N. W. 955; Watson v. Dilts, 116 Iowa, 249, 57 L.R.A. 559, 93 Am. St. Rep. 239, 89 N. W. 1068; Hill v. Kimball, 76 Tex. 210, 7 L.R.A. 618, 13 S. W. 59; Engle v. Simmons, 148 Ala. 92, 7 L.R.A.(N.S.) 96, 121 Am. St. Rep. 59, 41 So. 1023, 12 Ann. Cas. 740.

caused by an assault, where no bodily injury is inflicted, is discussed in the note to Small v. Lonergan, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 976.

The question, as affecting specifically a carrier's liability to a passenger, is discussed in the note to Cheapeake & O. R. Co. v. Robinett, 45 L.R.A.(N.S.) 433.

Messrs. B. C. Call and George Halver-son, for respondent:

The evidence fails to disclose any action-able damages, or any cause of action against the defendant.

Gaskins v. Runkle, 25 Ind. App. 584, 58 N. E. 740; Kalen v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 18 Ind. App. 202, 63 Am. St. Rep. 343, 47 N. E. 694; White v. Sander, 168 Mass. 296, 47 N. E. 90, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 573; Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 168 Mass. 285, 38 L.R.A. 512, 60 Am. St. Rep. 393, 47 N. E. 88, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 566, 172 Mass. 488, 43 L.R.A. 832, 70 Am. St. Rep. 298, 52 N. E. 747, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 367; Smith v. Postal Tele. Cable Co. 174 Mass. 576, 47 L.R.A. 323, 75 Am. St. Rep. 374, 55 N. E. 380, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 54; Braun v. Craven, 175 Ill. 401, 42 L.R.A. 199, 51 N. E. 637, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 15; Renner v. Canfield, 36 Minn. 90, 1 Am. St. Rep. 654, 30 N. W. 435; Phillips v. Dickerson, 85 Ill. 11, 28 Am. Rep. 607; Mitchell v. Rochester R. Co. 161 N. Y. 107, 34 L.R.A. 781, 56 Am. St. Rep. 604, 45 N. E. 354, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 121; Lee v. Burlington, 113 Iowa, 356, 86 Am. St. Rep. 379, 85 N. W. 618; Nelson v. Crawford, 122 Mich. 466, 80 Am. St. Rep. 577, 81 N. W. 335; Ewing v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 147 Pa. 40, 14 L.R.A. 666, 30 Am. St. Rep. 709, 23 Atl. 340; Huston v. Freemansburg, 212 Pa. 548, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 49, 61 Atl. 1022; Bucknam v. Great Northern R. Co. 76 Minn. 373, 79 N. W. 98, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 302; Haas v. Metz, 78 Ill. App. 46; Mahoney v. Dankwart, 108 Iowa, 321, 79 N. W. 134, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 278; Sanderson v. Northern P. R. Co. 88 Minn. 162, 60 L.R.A. 403, 97 Am. St. Rep. 509, 92 N. W. 542; Miller v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. 78 Ohio St. 309, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 949, 125 Am. St. Rep. 699, 85 N. E. 499; Kagy v. Western U. Tele. Co. 37 Ind. App. 73, 117 Am. St. Rep. 278, 76 N. E. 792.

Frick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover damages for alleged injuries to her health and nervous system which she alleged were sustained through defendant's wilful, wanton, and unlawful acts. In view that the complaint is assailed as insufficient in substance, we shall set it forth at large. It reads as follows: "Plaintiff complains and alleges: (1) That she now is and was at all the times herein alleged, a married woman, residing with her husband, Reuben Jeppsen, and three children, in Mantua, Box Elder county, Utah. (2) That in the night-time of the 1st day of October, 1914, at about the hour of 8:30 of the evening of said day, the said defendant came to the home of this plaintiff and knocked at the L.R.A.1916D.

door, and when plaintiff opened the same, said defendant entered the room in which she, her said husband, and children were, and then and there wilfully, wantonly, maliciously, and without regard to the rights of this plaintiff, began and did curse and abuse plaintiff's husband, and then and there drew a pistol from his pocket and pointed the same over and across plaintiff's shoulder, and threatened to shoot and kill her said husband; that said defendant remained in said room for a long time, to wit, about fifteen minutes, though often begged and requested by this plaintiff to leave the same, and during all of said time, in a loud and threatening voice, and with vile and abusive language, threatened to shoot and kill her said husband, and after leaving said room said defendant returned and was prevented from re-entering the same only by this plaintiff closing and fastening the doors of said room; that plaintiff about six weeks before had been confined in child-birth, and was still, as a result thereof, in delicate health, all of which defendant well knew. (3) That by reason of said wilful, wanton, and malicious conduct of said defendant, this plaintiff became greatly frightened and terrified, so that at the time said defendant returned to re-enter said room, as hereinbefore alleged, she fell in a swoon or faint, and was attacked by a nervous chill, and her nervous system so gave way and she became prostrated so that she was confined to her bed for the greater part of two days, and ever since said time she has been in a highly nervous state and condition, so that she does not sleep well and is easily disturbed and frightened by any unusual noise or occurrence. (4) That by reason of the said wilful, wanton, and malicious language, acts, and conduct of said defendant, this plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $10,000."

Judgment is prayed for the amount of the damages alleged. The defendant answered the complaint, admitting that plaintiff is a married woman, etc., and that he called at her home on the night stated, and denied all other allegations of the complaint. When the case came on for trial, the plaintiff produced evidence that fully supported every material allegation of the complaint. Indeed, the testimony of the plaintiff and that of her husband, given on direct examination, respecting defendant's conduct, threats, and abusive language, is even stronger than the allegations of the complaint. At the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence defendant moved for a nonsuit, the grounds of which, stating them in the language of his counsel, are as follows: "(1) That no actionable damages were shown; (2) that the complaint fails to state a cause of action; and (3) that the evidence failed to show any cause of action against the defendant."

The court sustained the motion, and plaintiff assigns the ruling as error. In view that we have been forced to find that all of the material allegations of the complaint are amply supported by competent evidence, the first question to be determined is whether the complaint states a cause of action.

Defendant's counsel contend that, inasmuch as the alleged injuries were caused from terror or fright alone, without bodily contact, and that the alleged threats or assault were neither intended to be nor were directed against the plaintiff personally, therefore the case stated in the complaint comes within the rule that no recovery is permitted where the alleged injuries are caused alone by terror or fright. Upon the other hand, plaintiff's counsel contend that this case falls within the rule of wilful or wanton and intentional wrongdoing committed by the wrongdoer. Under such circumstances counsel contend that the authorities permit a recovery, although the alleged injuries or diseases complained of are the result of fright or terror alone. In the case of Brownback v. Frailey, 78 Ill. App. 262, the allegations of the complaint were substantially the same as in the case at bar. The only difference between the complaint in that case and the one before us is that the alleged assault and threats in that case were directed against the plaintiff, although her husband, who was absent, seems to have been the inciting cause thereof, the same as here. We can see no legal distinction from the standpoint of civil redress between making an assault upon the plaintiff and making one in her presence upon her husband. The case of Hill v. Kimball, 76 Tex. 210, 7 L.R.A. 618, 13 S. W. 59, is very much in point upon that precise question. In that case the assault was not made upon the plaintiff, a woman, but upon others in her presence, and the court there did not discover any reason why she should not recover. In the following cases recoveries were held authorized under facts and circumstances which, in our judgment, cannot legally be distinguished from those in the case at bar, namely: Preiser v. Wielandt, 48 App. Div. 569, 62 N. Y. Supp. 890, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 558; May v. Western U. Tele. Co. 157 N. O. 416, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 912, 72 S. E. 1059; Harless v. Southwest Missouri Electric R. Co. 123 Mo. App. 22, 99 S. W. 793; Dunn v. Western U. Tele. Co. 2 Ga. App. 845, 59 S. E. 189; Brownback v. Frailey, supra; Williams v. Underhill, 63 App. Div. 223, 71 N. Y. Supp. 291; Watson v. Dilts, 116 Iowa, 249, 57 L.R.A. 559, 93 Am. St. Rep. 239, 89 N. W. 1068; Hill v. Kimball, supra; and Engle v. Simons, 148 Ala. 92, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 96, 121 Am. St. Rep. 59, 41 So. 1023, 12 Ann. Cas. 740. Counsel for plaintiff have also cited several cases where recoveries are permitted in what are called negligence cases. The negligence in those cases was so gross, however, that the acts may well have been characterized as wanton and wilful. We, however, do not refer to those cases. We do not deem it necessary to review the foregoing cases. We shall, however, make a few excerpts from the opinions to show the principle upon which the decisions are based. In Preiser v. Wielandt, 48 App. Div. 569, 62 N. Y. Supp. 890, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 558, it is squarely held that the general rule that no recovery is permitted for mere fright "does not include cases of wanton wrongs nor apply to acts of trespassers." In Harless v. Southwest Missouri Electric R. Co., the court, in the course of the opinion, said: "The instructions for plaintiff permitted a recovery for fright, mental suffering, and anguish. The defendant assails the propriety of such instructions on the ground that, where there is no bodily hurt, mental anguish and fright are not elements of damage. That is the law in cases of mere negligence [citing cases]. But in cases where the wrongful act is occasioned by offensive, insulting, and humiliating conduct, or where the act itself is wilful and inhuman, such elements enter into the damages which may be recovered [citing cases]."

In Dunn v. Western U. Tele. Co. 2 Ga. App. 845, 59 S. E. 189, the supreme court of Georgia states the rule in the headnote thus: "While mental suffering, unaccompanied by injury to purse or person, affords no basis for an action predicated upon wrongful acts, merely negligent, yet such damages may be recovered in those cases where the plaintiff has suffered at the hands of the defendant a wanton, voluntary, or intentional wrong the natural result of which is the causation of mental suffering and wounded feelings."

In Williams v. Underhill it is said: "A recovery for mental injuries and suffering alone is not precluded in cases of wilful tort."

To that effect is the decision in the Williams Case.

The case of Watson v. Dilts, 116 Iowa, 249, 57 L.R.A. 559, 93 Am. St. Rep. 239, 89 N. W. 1068, is not distinguishable from the case at bar. The Watson Case is distinguished from the case of Mahoney v. Dankwart, 108 Iowa, 321, 79 N. W. 134, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 278, cited by the defendant. In the latter case it is pointed out that the Watson case was not one merely for negligence, but, like the case at bar, the acts constituted a wilful wrong. Defendant's counsel, however, insist that their client's acts as they are set forth in the complaint were not wanton and wilful. A conclusive answer to that contention is that whether they were or not is, to say the least, largely, if not entirely, a question for the jury. Can we, can any court, say as a matter of law that the threats, acts, and conduct, say nothing of the grossly vulgar and abusive language used by the defendant as shown by plaintiff's evidence, were not wilful nor wanton? Can we say as a matter of law that to threaten to shoot another with a revolver which the threatener then and there holds in his hand is not a wilful nor a wanton act? Such acts in law constitute an assault. It might just as well be contended that the court can say as a matter of law that any assault with any weapon is not wilful nor wanton. Indeed, a jury, under certain circumstances, might find such acts to have been so wanton and cruel as to call for punitive, as well as actual, damages, as is pointed out in some of the cases before referred to.

We do not mean to be understood as expressing an opinion, or even as intimating, that the acts alleged in the complaint are necessarily such as a matter of fact, but what we mean, and now hold, is that we cannot say as a matter of law that the acts complained of were neither wilful nor wanton. Prima facie, the acts complained of and testified to constituted an unlawful assault. We must assume that the defendant intended just what it is said he did. We are not permitted to minimize nor to magnify his acts and conduct. His counsel contend that he went to plaintiff's home for a lawful purpose, and that he was rightfully there. Let this be conceded. That, however, gave him no right to commit an unlawful act after he had arrived there. Suppose one goes to his neighbor upon a mission of mercy, but before he leaves the premises he commits an assault. Is he any the less culpable or responsible for his conduct? We are of the opinion, therefore, that the acts described in the complaint are such as bring this case clearly within the rule that damages may be recovered for injuries to health or for shock to the nervous system, although caused by terror or fright alone, and where there was no actual bodily injury inflicted upon the injured person and none such intended by the wrongdoer. Such acts cannot be considered as merely ordinary negligent acts, for which no recovery from fright alone is, as a general rule, permitted.

Counsel for defendant refer us to the following cases in which it is held that a recovery is not permitted for fright alone without some bodily or physical injury, either direct or indirect, such as miscarriage of a pregnant woman, etc.: Gaskins v. Runkle, 25 Ind. App. 584, 58 N. E. 740; Kalen v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 18 Ind. App. 202, 63 Am. St. Rep. 343, 47 N. E. 694; Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 168 Mass. 285, 38 L.R.A. 512, 60 Am. St. Rep. 393, 47 N. E. 88, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 566; Smith v. Postal Tele. Cable Co. 174 Mass. 576, 47 L.R.A. 323, 75 Am. St. Rep. 374, 55 N. E. 380, 7 Am. Neg. Rep. 54; Braun v. Craven, 175 Ill. 401, 42 L.R.A. 199, 51 N. E. 657, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 15; Renner v. Canfield, 36 Minn. 90, 1 Am. St. Rep. 654, 30 N. W. 435; Mitchell v. Rochester R. Co. 151 N. Y. 107, 34 L.R.A. 781, 56 Am. St. Rep. 604, 45 N. E. 354, 1 Am. Neg. Rep. 121; Nelson v. Crawford, 122 Mich. 466, 80 Am. St. Rep. 577, 81 N. W. 335; Ewing v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 147 Pa. 40, 14 L.R.A. 666, 30 Am. St. Rep. 709, 23 Atl. 340; Huston v. Freemansburg, 212 Pa. 548, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 49, 61 Atl. 1022; Mahoney v. Dankwart, 108 Iowa, 321, 79 N. W. 134, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 278; Sanderson v. Northern P. R. Co. 88 Minn. 162, 60 L.R.A. 403, 97 Am. St. Rep. 509, 92 N. W. 542; Lee v. Burlington, 113 Iowa, 356, 86 Am. St. Rep. 379, 85 N. W. 618; Miller v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. 78 Ohio St. 309, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 949, 125 Am. St. Rep. 699, 85 N. E. 499; Kagy v. Western U. Tele. Co. 37 Ind. App. 73, 117 Am. St. Rep. 278, 76 N. E. 792. Every one of the foregoing cases was determined upon the theory that the acts complained of constituted merely acts of ordinary negligence, and hence a recovery was denied. While it is true, and that it is so is not remarkable, that there are some cases which seem to hold that in no case can a recovery be had where the injuries are caused alone from fright, yet it is also true that there are some cases which seem to hold that a recovery may be had for fright alone, although the acts complained of constituted merely negligent acts. Such cases are, however, not numerous, and the great weight of authority is reflected in the cases relied on by the plaintiff, most of which we have cited above.

We are of the opinion, therefore, that the complaint states a cause of action, and that the court erred in sustaining the defendant's motion for a nonsuit.

We remark that in arriving at the foregoing conclusion we have not been unmindful of defendant's contention that on cross-examination both the plaintiff and her husband, to some extent, modified their original statements. While, as a general rule, it is true that the testimony of a witness is no stronger than he leaves it on cross-examination, yet, where a nonsuit has been granted on plaintiff's evidence, it is the duty of the court to construe the evidence most favorably to the plaintiff, since it is the province of the jury to say what weight shall be given the plaintiff's evidence as a whole.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded to the District Court of Box Elder County, with directions to grant a new trial. Plaintiff to recover costs.

Straup, Ch. J., and Loofbourow, D. J., concur.

UTAH SUPREME COURT.

PARLAN McFARLANE, Resp't.,

v.

W. P. WINTERS et al., Appts.,

(— Utah, —, 155 Pac. 437.)

Appeal — finding on conflicting evidence — review.

1. The reviewing court cannot interfere with a finding by the jury upon the question of negligence and contributory negligence, where there is substantial evidence to support the finding.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. 1, 2, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Master and servant — injury by automobile — liability of owner.

2. The owner of an automobile cannot be held liable for injury caused by the negligence of his son in driving it merely because the son at the time of the injury was using it to convey members of the owner's family to a social function, if the owner himself was not present and the car had been lent by the owner to a stranger for the evening, who had secured the son without the owner's knowledge to act as driver.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 11, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Judicial District Court for Sanpete County in plaintiff's favor, and from an order denying a motion for new trial, in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence. Reversed as to first defendant; affirmed as to the other.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — The liability of an owner for injuries by automobile while being used by a servant or a third person for his own business or pleasure is treated in the notes to Christy v. Elliott, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 215; Hayes v. Wilkins, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1035; Jones v. Hoge, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216; Danforth v. Fisher, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93; Steffen v. McNaughton, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 382; Fleischner v. Durgin, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 79; Riley v. Roach, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 834; Symington v. Sipes, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 662; and Reilly v. Connable, L.R.A.1916A, 957.

The liability of the owner where the automobile is being used by a member of his family is treated in the notes to McNeal v. L.R.A.1916D.

Messrs. George Christensen and Samuel A. King, for appellants:

Defendant W. P. Winters was not liable under the facts proven by plaintiff.

Doran v. Thomsen, 76 N. J. L. 754, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 335, 131 Am. St. Rep. 677, 71 Atl. 296; White Oak Coal Co. v. Rivoux, 88 Ohio St. 18, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, 102 N. E. 302, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1082; Siegel v. White Co. 81 Misc. 171, 142 N. Y. Supp. 318; Fielder v. Davison, 139 Ga. 509, 77 S. E. 618; Armstrong v. Sellers, 182 Ala. 582, 62 So. 28; Symington v. Sipes, 121 Md. 313, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 662; Smith v. Burns, 71 Or. 135, L.R.A. 1915A, 1130, 135 Pac. 200, 142 Pac. 352, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 666; Fowkes v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. — Utah, —, 151 Pac. 53.

Mr. Lewis Larson, for respondent:

Defendant was liable for the injury resulting from his son's negligent operation of the car.

McNeal v. McKain, 33 Okla. 449, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, 126 Pac. 742; Smith v. Jordan, 211 Mass. 269, 97 N. E. 761; Bourne v. Whitman, 209 Mass. 155, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 701, 95 N. E. 404, 2 N. C. C. A. 318; Ploetz v. Holt, 124 Minn. 169, 144 N. W. 745; Kayser v. Van Nest, 125 Minn. 277, 51 L.R.A.(N.S.) 970; Daily v. Maxwell, 152 Mo. App. 415, 133 S. W. 351; Marshall v. Taylor, 168 Mo. App. 240, 153 S. W. 527, 6 N. C. C. A. 313; Hays v. Hogan, 180 Mo. App. 237, 165 S. W. 1125; Hiroux v. Baum, 137 Wis. 197, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 332, 118 N. W. 533; Reichardt v. Shard, 30 Times L. R. 81; Collard v. Beach, 81 App. Div. 582, 81 N. Y. Supp. 619; Birch v. Abercrombie, 74 Wash. 486, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, 133 Pac. 1020; Parker v. Wilson, 179 Ala. 361, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 87, McKain, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, and Birch v. Abercrombie, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59; and these notes will be supplemented in a subsequent volume by annotation following the cases of Griffin v. Russell, L.R.A.—, —, and Sultzbach v. Smith, L.R.A.—, —.

The question of the owner's liability on the ground or theory of dangerous agency is discussed in the note to Neubrand v. Kraft, L.R.A.1915D, 691.

Other questions involving the liability of the owner where the automobile is being used by another are discussed in notes that may be found by consulting the Index to L.R.A. Notes under the title, "Automobiles."

60 So. 150; Lynde v. Browning, 2 Tenn. C. C. A. 262; Allen v. Bland, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 168 S. W. 35.

Frick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff sued the defendants to recover damages for alleged injuries to himself and to his horse and buggy. He alleged that the injuries were caused through the negligence of the defendant Glen Winters in negligently driving and managing the defendant W. P. Winters's automobile, and thereby causing a collision with plaintiff's horse and buggy while he was lawfully driving along on a public highway in Sanpete county, Utah. Glen Winters, who is represented by a guardian ad litem, was at the time of the accident a minor eighteen years of age, and is the son of W. P. Winters, who is a physician living at Mt. Pleasant, Utah. The latter used the automobile in question in his practice as a physician and surgeon.

Both defendants denied the alleged negligence, pleaded contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, and the doctor also denied liability upon the ground that, under the facts and circumstances, he was not responsible for his son's acts, even though it were conceded that the latter so negligently drove and managed the automobile as to cause the collision and consequential damages resulting therefrom.

After the plaintiff had produced his evidence and rested his case, the defendants made separate motions for a nonsuit. Glen Winters based his motion upon the grounds that the plaintiff had not established negligence on his part, and that the evidence, as a matter of law, established contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff which caused the accident and consequential damages. W. P. Winters based his motion upon the foregoing grounds and upon the further ground that the plaintiff had failed to produce any evidence authorizing the finding and judgment that he was legally responsible for the alleged negligence of his son, Glen Winters. The court overruled both motions, and after the defendants had produced their evidence it also refused to direct a verdict in favor of the defendants as requested, and submitted the case to the jury against both defendants. The jury found in favor of the plaintiff and against both defendants. The court entered judgment upon the verdict, and both defendants appeal.

The principal errors assigned by Glen Winters are: (1) That the evidence is insufficient to justify a finding of negligence on his part; and (2) that, in view of all the evidence, the plaintiff was guilty of negligence, as a matter of law, which caused the injury complained of. W. P. Winters also assigned the foregoing errors, and also assigned an additional ground, namely, that there is no evidence whatever justifying a finding that he was legally responsible for his son's acts in driving and managing the automobile at the time and place of the accident.

The evidence respecting the cause of the collision is voluminous and quite conflicting. We could subserve no good purpose either in setting forth the evidence or in stating the facts with regard to how the accident occurred. It must suffice to say that there was sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of Glen Winters in driving and managing the automobile at the time and place to be submitted to the jury for their determination. Their finding upon that subject is therefore conclusive upon us. The same result must follow with regard to the question of plaintiff's contributory negligence. While, if the latter question had been left for us to determine, we might have arrived at a different conclusion, yet, in view that there is substantial evidence in support of the finding of the jury, our views in that regard are quite unimportant.

This disposes of the assignments on the part of Glen Winters as well as of the first two assignments interposed on behalf of Dr. Winters. The doctor's third assignment, namely, that there is not sufficient evidence justifying the verdict or judgment by which he is held responsible for his son's acts, presents more difficulty. We have carefully read the evidence, which is preserved in a bill of exceptions, and we have been unable to arrive at the conclusion that, under the facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence, the father, under the law, can be held responsible for the acts of the son, which acts, the jury found, caused the accident and the consequential injuries and damages as before stated. It conclusively appeared from the evidence that Dr. Winters was not present at the time and place of the accident, and therefore had no control over the son in driving and managing the automobile, and that he knew nothing concerning the accident until after it had occurred. The plaintiff, however, sought to establish the doctor's liability upon the theory that the automobile was owned by him, that it had theretofore been driven by the son in the father's business affairs, and that at the time of the accident it was being driven by the son in the father's affairs. In other words, the plaintiff seeks to hold the father responsible for the acts of the son upon the theory of principal and agent or that of master, and servant. All the evidence produced by the plaintiff relating to the question now under consideration is, in substance, as follows: The plaintiff and at least two of his witnesses testified that they knew the automobile in question; that it was owned by Dr. Winters, and that he used it in his business of practising medicine; that prior to the accident they on several occasions had seen the son drive the car both when the doctor was in it and when only other members of his family were in the car with the son. Those witnesses, however, all admitted that they had no knowledge with regard to the circumstances or arrangement, if any, under which the son operated the automobile at the times referred to by them. The plaintiff also testified that Glen Winters, Glen's mother, and her little child, and two young ladies or girls, as he called them, were in the car at the time and place of the accident. The plaintiff, in answer to the question of whether he had any conversation with the doctor after the accident occurred, also testified: "Why, Dr. Winters said he had sent the boy over to Spring City with his wife and the girls, and he said they were going to a picnic party of some kind at one of the girls' mother's place, and he said he ought to have went himself, but he sent the boy."

On cross-examination he was asked the following question:

"Isn't it a fact that he [the doctor] told you at the time that the fact was his boy was, at the suggestion of this young lady—that he was driving for this young lady to take her to her mother's home?"

He answered: "He [the doctor] said he [the son] was taking them over to a social over at her [the young lady's] mother's. . . . Why, he simply said that he was taking them over to Spring City to a birthday party."

It was also shown by plaintiff's evidence that Spring City is a country town several miles distant from Mt. Pleasant, where the doctor lived, and that the party in the automobile were on their way to Spring City when the accident occurred. Plaintiff's counsel cites and relies on the following cases as sustaining his contention that the foregoing evidence is sufficient to charge the doctor with responsibility for his son's acts, namely: McNeal v. McKain, 33 Okla. 449, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, 126 Pac. 742; Smith v. Jordan, 211 Mass. 269, 97 N. E. 761; Bourne v. Whitman, 209 Mass. 155, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 701, 95 N. E. 404, 2 N. C. C. A. 318; Ploetz v. Holt, 124 Minn. 169, 144 N. W. 745; Daily v. Maxwell, 152 Mo. App. 415, 133 S. W. 351; Marshall v. Taylor, 168 Mo. App. 246, 153 S. W. 527, 6 N. C. C. A. 313; Hays v. Hogan, 180 Mo. App. L.R.A.1916D.

237, 165 S. W. 1125; Hiroux v. Baum, 137 Wis. 197, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 332, 118 N. W. 533; Birch v. Abercrombie, 74 Wash. 486, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 59, 133 Pac. 1020; and Moon v. Matthews, 227 Pa. 488, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 856, 136 Am. St. Rep. 902, 76 Atl. 219. It may be said that the three cases cited from the courts of appeal of Missouri, the case from the supreme court of Minnesota, and the one from the supreme court of Washington sustain counsel's contention. The supreme court of Washington lays down the doctrine in the following language: "Ownership of an automobile is prima facie proof that it was in the possession of, and was being driven for, the owner."

The three courts last referred to state the proposition in somewhat different form; but they practically all agree that, where the ownership of an automobile is shown to be in a particular person, such evidence constitutes prima facie proof that the automobile was being used in his business affairs at the time and place when and where an accident was occasioned through the negligence of the person in charge of or driving the automobile. The other cases cited above do not go to the extent claimed for them by counsel. We shall refer to those cases again hereinafter.

It will be observed that from plaintiff's evidence in this case it was made to appear that the automobile in question was, in fact, in the possession and under the control of Glen Winters, the son, so that what must be inferred in this case is that Glen was the servant or agent of his father, and was engaged in the latter's business affairs at the time and place of the accident. Can such an inference be legitimately deduced from the mere fact that Glen was at the time driving an automobile owned by his father? Is not the inference just as natural and quite as strong that Glen was driving the automobile either for his own use or for the use of someone other than the father? Is it not a matter of common knowledge and experience that not only automobiles, but all kinds of vehicles, as well as other instrumentalities, while owned by one person, may nevertheless, at a particular time and place, be in the possession of another person, and may be used by the latter for his, and not for the owner's, benefit? It is certainly going to what we consider undue lengths to hold that, because an automobile, or any other vehicle or instrumentality, is shown to be owned by one person, but is found in the possession and use of another, the only legitimate inference to be deduced from such fact is that such other person is the agent or servant of the owner, and is using the instru-mentality in the owner's business affairs or for his use and benefit. This court has refused to so hold in the recent case of Ferguson v Winter, — Utah, —, 150 Pac. 299, where we expressly held that, where a person on a public street is injured by being run into by a delivery wagon which, it was made to appear, was not driven by the owner, but was at the time of the alleged injury under the control of a third person, the plaintiff was required "to produce evidence that the driver was the servant of the defendant [the owner of the wagon], acting in the course of his employment at the time of the accident, since the mere use of a wagon is not sufficient to hold the owner for injuries caused by the driver." In a more recent case still, Fowkes v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. — Utah, —, 151 Pac. 53, we practically announced the same principle although under somewhat different circumstances. After again carefully going over the cases, and after more thorough reflection upon the fundamental principles involved, we are firm in the opinion that the doctrine laid down in the cases just referred to is sound in reason, conforms to fundamental legal principles, and is supported by the best-reasoned cases upon the subject. It certainly cannot successfully be contended that, because of the mere fact that the instrumentality in question is an automobile, therefore a new rule with regard to how the relationship of principal and agent or master and servant may be established is to be applied. We think it may still be safely affirmed that, where it is sought to hold one person responsible and civilly liable for the torts committed by another, whether such other be the child of the owner or a stranger, it must be made to appear by competent evidence that the relationship of principal and agent or that of master and servant existed between the two at the time the tort was committed, and, in addition to that, that the tortious act complained of was committed in the course of the employment of the servant, or was within the scope of the agency. While the courts which hold to the doctrine announced by the supreme court of Washington do not dispute the foregoing rule, they nevertheless contend that all of the foregoing elements may be inferred from the mere fact of ownership of the automobile which causes the injuries complained of. In our opinion, to so hold constitutes a clear departure from the general principles which control in actions for tort where the master is held responsible for the acts of the servant or for those of his agent, and to that effect, in our judgment, is the clear weight of authority.

In the case of White Oak Coal Co. v. L.R.A.1916D.

Rivoux, 88 Ohio St. 18, 46 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091, 102 N. E. 302, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 1082, the doctrine is correctly stated by the supreme court of Ohio. It is there held that, where it is sought to hold the owner of an automobile responsible for the negligent acts of the driver, merely to prove the ownership of the automobile, and that the servant of the owner was at the time in charge of it, was not enough. It was accordingly held that "it was incumbent upon the plaintiff below to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that he [the driver] was acting within the scope of his employment."

In Maher v. Benedict, 123 App. Div. 579, 108 N. Y. Supp. 228, the rule is stated in the first headnote thus: "The owner of a motor car is not liable for injuries resulting from the negligent driving of the car by his son, merely because of his ownership, or because he permitted his son to drive the car, or because the driver was his son."

In the course of the opinion the court further said: "Liability cannot be cast upon the defendant because he owned the car, or because he permitted his son to drive the car whenever he wished to do so (Cavanagh v. Dinamore, 12 Hun, 468), or because the driver was his son (Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 144). Liability arises from the relationship of master and servant, and it must be determined by the inquiry whether the driving at the time was within the authority of the master, in the execution of his orders, or in the doing of his work,"—citing authorities.

In a case where the owner of an automobile was sought to be held liable for the acts of its employee, namely, Clark v. Buckmobile Co. 107 App. Div. 120, 94 N. Y. Supp. 772, it is said: "The mere fact that the persons in charge of the machine at the time of the accident were employees of the defendant does not render defendant liable for whatever they did. Unless they were engaged in the defendant's business at the time the accident occurred, the defendant is not liable for any injuries to the plaintiff resulting therefrom."

To the same effect are Bourne v. Whitman, 209 Mass. 155, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 701, 95 N. E. 404, 2 N. C. C. A. 318; Siegel v. White Co. 81 Misc. 171, 142 N. Y. Supp. 318; Symington v. Sipes, 121 Md. 313, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 662, 88 Atl. 134; Moon v. Matthews, 227 Pa. 488, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 856, 136 Am. St. Rep. 902, 76 Atl. 219; McNeal v. McKain, 33 Okla. 449, 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 775, 126 Pac. 742; Smith v. Jordan, 211 Mass. 269, 97 N. E. 761; and a large number of cases cited in the foregoing cases. See also the recent case of Halparin v. Bulling, 50 Can. S. C. 471, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 474. It is also of some significance that the courts of appeal of Missouri seem to rest their judgments, to a large extent at least, upon the Missouri statute, as is apparent from the opinions in the cases to which we have hereinbefore referred. Moreover, the justices do not agree upon the principles upon which the decisions should be based, as is apparent from the opinion of Mr. Justice Sturgis in the case of Hays v. Hogan, 180 Mo. App. 237, 165 S. W. 1125. A mere casual reading of the opinion in the latter case will disclose that the court seeks to distinguish automobiles from other vehicles and instrumentalities. No doubt, such a distinction is sought to be made for the reason that, if it be not made, then the owner of every kind of instrumentality which may cause some injury while in the possession and under the control of another would, by mere inference, be held responsible upon the theory that the instrumentality was at the time of the injury being used for the benefit of the owner by his servant or agent. Such a doctrine, in the ordinary affairs of life, would be monstrous, to say the least. But if it were assumed that a distinction should be made between automobiles and other vehicles and instrumentalities, it should be made by the legislature, the lawmaking power, and not by the courts, who merely declare the law as they find it. We, however, can conceive neither reason nor logic in attempting to make such a distinction. The reciprocal rights and duties of the owners of automobiles and of those who own and use other vehicles on the streets and highways are now well defined and understood. The owner of any kind of vehicle is liable for causing injury through negligence to another who is rightfully using the streets or highways. The reciprocal rights and duties in that regard have been thoroughly settled by the courts. For a collation of the cases see vol. 22, Case and Comment, p. 185.

Neither does it work a hardship upon the plaintiff to require him to prove by competent evidence the defendant's connection with the vehicle or instrumentality which it is contended caused the accident, and the relationship of the defendant and the person in whose charge the vehicle or instrumentality was at the time of the accident. As pointed out in Ferguson v. Winter, supra, this may be done in various ways. Of course, if the defendant is driving the vehicle, his responsibility is easily shown. If, however, it is driven by another, such other's relationship to the defendant, as well as his connection with the vehicle at the time, may be shown by him or by any other competent facts from which such relationship and connection may be inferred. There is no reason, therefore, for having recourse to deceptive and misleading inferences.

Nor do the courts sustain the contention that an automobile is inherently a dangerous machine or instrumentality. The everyday knowledge and experience of the ordinary person is quite to the contrary. Everyone who knows anything about the working machinery of the automobile knows that it is more easily managed and controlled than a fractious team or horse on the streets. He also knows that while it is in charge of an ordinarily careful and prudent driver it is just as safe and quite as harmless as any other conveyance used on the public streets. True, accidents occur; but they should not be attributed to the automobile, as such, but to the careless, and oftentimes reckless, drivers. Is it not more in consonance with reason and justice to blame a negligent driver who causes the mischief than it is to condemn the machine which he can, but negligently refuses to, control? Will it not also be more conducive to justice and fair play to apply to the owners of automobiles in our courts of justice the same rules that are applied to the owners of all other instrumentalities, except such as constitute what are known as attractive nuisances and those which are inherently dangerous?

Referring now to those cases referred to by plaintiff's counsel which we have not already distinguished, we specially invite attention to the case of Moon v. Matthews, which is cited by him, and to which we have before referred. While the court in that case seems to regard the cases from Missouri with some favor, yet the case of Sarver v. Mitchell, 35 Pa. Super. Ct. 69, from which we took the liberty to quote in Ferguson v. Winter, supra, is expressly followed. Then, again, the prior case of Lotz v. Hanlon, 217 Pa. 339, 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 202, 118 Am. St. Rep. 922, 66 Atl. 525, 10 Ann. Cas. 731, which is in thorough harmony with our holding in Ferguson v. Winter, supra, is also followed in Moon v. Matthews. There is nothing in the Pennsylvania cases, therefore, that lends any support to plaintiff's contention. Moreover, in all the cases, with one or possibly two exceptions, the evidence was stronger than in the case at bar, although the courts announced the doctrine we have before stated. All the evidence the plaintiff produced to establish the doctor's responsibility for the acts of his son, Glen, was that the former owned the automobile, and that the same was at the time being used with his permission or consent by the son. That is not sufficient. Every time an owner lends any article or instrumentality to another, whether for hire or gratuitously, the owner consents to its use by the borrower or bailee. To hold that evidence of that fact is sufficient to fasten liability upon the owner of the instrumentality in case some injury is inflicted upon another by the negligent use of such instrumentality while it is in the possession and under the control of a third person is to revolutionize the law which holds the principal or master liable for the acts of his agent or servant. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the plaintiff produced no evidence which supports the finding of the jury or the judgment of the court as against the defendant W. P. Winters.

If the case be viewed, however, from the evidence submitted by both parties, the result must still be the same. The doctor and the two young ladies who were in the car with Glen at the time of the accident all testified that one of the young ladies was employed by the doctor in his office; that about a week prior to the accident she asked the doctor whether she might take the automobile on the night in question to go to Spring City to attend her mother's birthday party; that the doctor said she might have the car if she could find a suitable driver, and suggested one Lundberg to her. The matter rested there until the evening of the accident. The young lady said she was not acquainted with Lundberg, so she asked Glen Winters to drive the car for her on the evening in question, which he did without the knowledge of the doctor. Just before starting out from home Mrs. Winters, the wife of the doctor, who was away from home during the afternoon, arrived home with her little girl, about five years of age, and the young lady who had obtained permission to use the car, and who had invited the other young woman who was in the car, prevailed on Mrs. Winters to accompany them to the birthday party at Spring City, which she did. All the doctor knew and consented to, therefore, was that the young woman might take the car if she procured a driver. She, without his knowledge, prevailed on Glen Winters to drive the car, and the doctor's wife accompanied the party without the doctor's knowledge. All of this evidence stands unquestioned by anyone. Since it is not in conflict with anything testified to by plaintiff and his witnesses, it stands as the L.R.A.1916D.

uncontroverted evidence in the case. It certainly cannot be said to be in conflict with plaintiff's evidence, since all he proved was that the car was owned by the doctor, and that he consented to its use. All the rest was mere inference which we have held was not proper nor permissible. Upon the uncontradicted evidence, therefore, the doctor cannot be held liable under the law as it is laid down by any court, since the car was not being used by another who was his servant or agent, nor used in his business affairs, nor for his benefit. The facts and circumstances of this case, therefore, also illustrate the fallacy of the rule that mere ownership is sufficient proof of liability on the part of the owner. Under the rule as laid down by the supreme court of Washington, the doctor could be held liable in this case, although the testimony was all to the effect that the car was driven and controlled by one who did not sustain the relationship of either agent or servant to the doctor, and who was using the car, not for his benefit, but for the benefit of a third person. This is so for the reason that, if the evidence is sufficient to take the case to the jury, it is also sufficient to sustain their finding, regardless of the amount of evidence to the contrary. It is needless, therefore, to speak of a "prima facie" case which requires the defendant to explain, since the prima facie case is sufficient, and no amount of explanation can be of any aid to the defendant in case the jury do what they did in this case,—find against the defendant regardless of his undisputed evidence. Nor in this jurisdiction can this court interfere with the jury's finding, although it may be against the great weight of the evidence, so long as there is some substantial evidence in support of the finding. The liability of a defendant would thus be based upon a false and misleading inference which was deduced from the ownership of the car alone.

The judgment against the defendant Glen Winters must, for the reasons stated, be affirmed, and the judgment against W. P. Winters reversed, and the cause remanded to the District Court of Sanpete County, with directions to grant a new trial as against him and to proceed with the case in accordance with the views herein expressed.

It is so ordered; the respondent to recover his costs as against Glen Winters, and W. P. Winters to recover his costs as against the respondent.

Straup, Ch. J., and Loofbourow, D. J., concur.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

EDWARDS & DEUTSCH LITHOGRAPH-
ING COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

VIDALIA GROCERY COMPANY.

(144 Ga. 514, 87 S. E. 675.)

Bills and notes — bona fide holder — break in chain of indorsements.

The presumption that the holder of a note is such bona fide and for value is not overcome because the note, which is payable to the order of the maker, a corporation, and indorsed by it, was not also indorsed by the person from whom it was obtained by the holder; nor because the plaintiff and the person from whom he obtained it, and the defendant, resided in different states, nor because the note was taken without the collateral recited in the face of the note as having been assigned as a pledge to secure its payment.

For other cases, see Bills and Notes, V. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 12, 1916.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Toombs County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. D. C. Pattillo and B. P. Jackson, for plaintiff in error:

The holder of a negotiable note is the bona fide holder for value, by presumption of law, and no defense is available against him, except non est factum, gambling, or immoral and illegal consideration, until it is shown affirmatively by defendant that plaintiff is not a bona fide holder for value. Fraud of the holder in procurement of the note, when proved by defendant, is sufficient to negative such presumption.

Headnote by EVANS, P. J.

Note. — It is a well-established rule that mere possession of a negotiable instrument by a transferee, where no indorsement is necessary, imports prima facie that he is the lawful owner and that he acquired it before maturity, bona fide, for value, in the usual course of business, and without notice of any circumstance impeaching its validity. Note to Commercial Bank v. Burgwyn, 17 L.R.A. 326; 3 R. C. L. 1037, § 243; 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 812.

In EDWARDS & D. LITHOGRAPHING CO. v. VIDALIA GROCERY CO., the court considered the effect of the specific fact that the immediate transferor of the holder had not indorsed it, and arrived at a conclusion in accord with the well-established rule above referred to. No other cases have been found in which the question is discussed from the angle taken in the principal case. L.R.A.1916D.

Morrison v. Hart, 122 Ga. 660, 50 S. E. 471; Bank of Lavonia v. Bush, 140 Ga. 594 79 S. E. 459; Bealle v. Southern Bank, 57 Ga. 274; Jones v. Dannenberg Co. 112 Ga. 426, 52 L.R.A. 271, 37 S. E. 729; Johnson County Sav. Bank v. Roberts, 125 Ga. 41, 53 S. E. 808; Harrell v. National Bank, 128 Ga. 504, 57 S. E. 869; Taylor v. Cribb, 190 Ga. 94, 26 S. E. 468; Grooms v. Olliff, 93 Ga. 789, 20 S. E. 665; First Nat. Bank v. Messer, 136 Ga. 226, 71 S. E. 148; Bank of Stewart County v. Adams, 96 Ga. 529, 23 S. E. 496; Habersham v. Lehman, 63 Ga. 380; Paris v. Moe, 60 Ga. 91; Rhodes v. Beall, 73 Ga. 641; Jenkins v. Jones, 108 Ga. 556, 34 S. E. 149; Pate v. Allison, 114 Ga. 651, 40 S. E. 715; Walters v. Palmer, 110 Ga. 776, 36 S. E. 79; Dickerson v. Burke, 25 Ga. 225; Hatcher v. National Bank, 79 Ga. 542, 5 S. E. 109; Parr v. Erickson, 115 Ga. 873, 42 S. E. 240.

It is to be presumed that a note transferred was transferred before due, and that the holder is a bona fide holder for value, and in such case the note itself is evidence of no notice of a defense except such as may appear upon the face of it.

Dickerson v. Burke, 25 Ga. 225; Howard v. Simpkins, 70 Ga. 322; Citizens' Bank v. Greene, 12 Ga. App. 49, 76 S. E. 795.

The mere fact that the consideration is expressed on the face of the note is not, of itself, notice that the consideration has failed. Nor is a holder from that fact put upon inquiry, and bound to inquire whether the consideration has failed.

Post v. Abbeville & W. R. Co. 99 Ga. 232, 25 S. E. 405; Pyron v. Ruohs, 120 Ga. 1060, 48 S. E. 434; Bank of Commerce v. Barrett, 38 Ga. 126, 95 Am. Dec. 384; Hudson v. Best, 104 Ga. 131, 30 S. E. 688; Simmons v. Council, 5 Ga. App. 386, 63 S. E. 238; Stubbs v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 12 Ga. App. 539, 77 S. E. 893; Howry v. Eppinger, 34 Mich. 29.

This rule is stated sufficiently broad to cover the question discussed in EDWARDS & D. LITHOGRAPHING CO. v. VIDALIA GROCERY CO. as to the effect of the fact that an instrument transferable by delivery is not indorsed by the immediate transferor upon the presumption as to the bona fides of the holder, and it seems evident that in at least some of the cases supporting the rule the immediate transferor of the holder had not indorsed the instrument. No attempt has been made, however, to collect cases announcing the rule thus generally.

Upon the substantive question as to what circumstances are sufficient to put a purchaser of a negotiable paper on inquiry in order to secure rights of the bona fide holder, see notes to Mee v. Carlson, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 351, and McPherrin v. Tittle, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 395. W. A. E.

Messrs. W. J. De Loach and Hines & Jordan, for defendant in error:

If fraud in the procurement of an instrument is shown, or if it is shown that the instrument was lost or stolen, or that it is founded upon an illegal consideration, or that the instrument is without consideration, this is sufficient to overcome the presumption that the holder is without notice of such defenses, and the burden of proof is then shifted to him to show that he took without notice.

Matthews v. Poythress, 4 Ga. 305; Nell v. Snowden, 5 Ga. 1; Dickerson v. Burke, 25 Ga. 225; Merchants' & P. Nat. Bank v. Masonic Hall, 62 Ga. 283; Sheffield v. Johnson County Sav. Bank, 2 Ga. App. 221, 58 S. E. 386; Tredick v. Walters, 81 Kan. 828, 106 Pac. 1067; Holme v. Karsper, 5 Binn. 469; Lerch Hardware Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 109 Pa. 240; Schultheis v. Sellers, 223 Pa. 513, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1210, 72 Atl. 887; Story, Promissory Notes, 1st ed. § 196; Judson v. Holmes, 9 La. Ann. 20; Vathir v. Zane, 6 Gratt. 246; Goodman v. Harvey, 4 Ad. & El. 870, 6 L. J. K. B. N. S. 260, 6 Nev. & M. 372; Arbouin v. Anderson, 1 Q. B. 498; Bailey v. Bidwell, 13 Mees. & W. 73; Catlin v. Hansen, 1 Duer, 322; Munroe v. Cooper, 5 Pick. 412; Smith v. Braine, 3 Eng. L. & Eq. Rep. 379, 16 Q. B. 244, 20 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 201, 15 Jur. 287; Harvey v. Towers, 4 Eng. L. & Eq. Rep. 531, 6 Exch. 656, 20 L. J. Exch. N. S. 318, 15 Jur. 544; Vallett v. Parker, 6 Wend. 615; McKesson v. Stanberry, 3 Ohio St. 156; Berry v. Alderman, 24 Eng. L. & Eq. Rep. 318, 14 C. B. 95, 2 C. L. R. 691, 23 L. J. C. P. N. S. 34; Gwyn v. Lee, 1 Md. Ch. 445; Case v. Mechanics' Bkg. Asso. 4 N. Y. 166; Joyce, Defenses to Commercial Paper, §§ 123, 381, 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 305; Hall v. Featherstone, 3 Hurlst. & N. 284, 27 L. J. Exch. N. S. 308, 4 Jur. N. S. 813, 6 Week. Rep. 496; Smith v. Sac County, 11 Wall. 139, 20 L. ed. 102; Chambers v. Faulkner, 65 Ala. 448; Wright v. Brosseau, 73 Ill. 381; Mitchell v. Tomlinson, 91 Ind. 167; Sullivan v. Langley, 120 Mass. 437; Merchants' Exch. Nat. Bank v. New Brunswick Sav. Inst. 33 N. J. L. 170; Crampton v. Perkins, 65 Md. 22, 3 Atl. 300; Meadows v. Cozart, 76 N. C. 450; Battles v. Laudenslager, 84 Pa. 446; Duncan v. Scott, 1 Campb. 100; Clark v. Pease, 41 N. H. 414; Nickerson v. Ruger, 76 N. Y. 279; Roberts v. Lane, 64 Me. 108, 18 Am. Rep. 242; Reamer v. Bell, 79 Pa. 292; Ross v. Drinkard, 35 Ala. 434; Emerson v. Burns, 114 Mass. 348; Knight v. Pugh, 4 Watts & S. 445, 39 Am. Dec. 99; Miller v. Race, 1 Burr. 452; 8 Cyc. 236, 238. L.R.A.1916D.

Evans, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Edwards & Deutsch Lithographing Company brought an action against the Vidalia Grocery Company, to recover an amount alleged to be due upon a note which was expressed in the following terms:

$1,000. Montgomery, Alabama, June 21, 1912.

On the 21st day of June, 1913, for value received, we promise to pay to the order of ourselves, the sum of one thousand and no/100 dollars, with 8 per cent interest per annum thereon, and all costs of collection; negotiable and payable at Montgomery Bank and Trust Company, Montgomery, Alabama. As collateral security for the payment of this note the undersigned hereby transfers, assigns, conveys, deposits, and pledges one registered debenture, number three, of the Lewis Bear Drug Company, Inc., for $1,000, with full power and authority to sell, assign, and deliver the whole or any part thereof, or any substitute therefor, or any addition thereto, either at public or private sale, at the option of the owner or holder of said note or debt, his, their, or its assigns, on the nonperformance of this promise at any time or times thereafter, without advertising or notice, which is hereby expressly waived, and upon such sale the owner or holder thereof may purchase the whole or any part of said securities discharged from any right of redemption or liability of conversion. The undersigned indorsers of this note waive demand, protest, and notice of nonpayment and protest, and hereby waive all claims of exemption to real or personal property, salary, or wages, under the Constitution and statute laws of Alabama, or any other state, as against the debt evidenced hereby, and agrees and contracts with the payee hereof that liability of the debt as shown hereby is not limited or affected by any outside agreement or otherwise in any way; and if unpaid at maturity, agree to pay 10 per cent of the principal and interest as attorneys' fees.

The note was signed, "Vidalia Grocery Co., J. E. French, President," and was indorsed, "Vidalia Grocery Co., J. E. French, Pres." The defendant pleaded failure of consideration, and that it had been induced to sign the note by false and fraudulent representations of the president of the Lewis Bear Drug Company, and that the plaintiff was not a bona fide holder of the note. A verdict was rendered for the defendant. A motion for new trial was overruled, and the plaintiff excepted.

The controlling question is whether the evidence is sufficient to so affect the bona fides of the holder of the note as to let in the defenses urged against it. The statute provides that "the holder of a note is presumed to be such bona fide, and for value; if either fact is negatived by proof, the defendants are let into all their defenses; such presumption is negatived by proof of any fraud in the procurement of the note." Civil Code 1910, § 4288.

Fraud in its procurement, as used in this section, means the fraud of the holder in procuring the paper, and has no reference to the fraud in the contract out of which the paper arose. Walters v. Palmer, 110 Ga. 776, 36 S. E. 79. The plaintiff was not shown to have had actual notice of the circumstances attending the making of the contract in execution of which the note was given, but the defendant says that the circumstances were sufficient to impute notice, under the Code section, which declares that "any circumstances which would place a prudent man upon his guard in purchasing negotiable paper shall be sufficient to constitute notice to a purchaser of such paper before it is due." Civil Code 1910, § 4291.

The defendant contends that the following circumstances are sufficient to overcome the presumption that the plaintiff is a bona fide holder of the note: The plaintiff's taking of the note without the indorsement of the Lewis Bear Drug Company; the widely separated localities of the parties to the transaction, the plaintiff being a corporation doing business in Chicago, the defendant a Georgia corporation, and the Lewis Bear Drug Company being an Alabama corporation doing business in Montgomery, Alabama; and, notwithstanding the stipulation in the note that a certain registered debenture bond of the Lewis Bear Drug Company was assigned as collateral security, the plaintiff's acceptance of the note without the collateral. Referring to the first contention, the effect of the indorsement of the note by the payee, which was also the maker, was to make it as if it had originally been payable to bearer, and no indorsement by a subsequent holder was necessary for the protection of the holder. Hendrix v. Bauhard, 138 Ga. 473, 476, 43 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1028, 75 S. E. 588, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 688. We do not think any inference of mala fides is deducible from the fact that a note payable to bearer is not indorsed by an intermediate holder before its delivery to a purchaser. Nor do we think that the commercial business of this country is to be regarded so far provincial as to raise a presumption of mala fides because the parties to the transaction may live in different states. If unfavorable deductions can be made on this account, no L.R.A.1916D.

transaction will be safe against an inference of impurity unless the parties thereto live in the same locality. The last contention (that the note recited that it was secured by a collateral bond, which the plaintiff failed to demand or take at the time of the purchase, as being sufficient information to put it upon inquiry as to the circumstances under which it procured the note) is likewise untenable. The object and intent of the parties in inserting the recital that the note was secured by collateral was not to limit or impair the value of the note, but to add to it. It was not to notify third persons that the collateral would destroy or affect the negotiable character of the note. The principal object was to show that, in addition to the responsibility of the maker, the note was also secured by collateral. This language is neither sufficient to inform third persons nor to put them upon inquiry as to the circumstances under which the note was given. Pyron v. Ruoha, 120 Ga. 1060 (6), 1065, 48 S. E. 434; Howry v. Eppinger, 34 Mich. 29; Zollman v. Jackson Trust & Sav. Bank, 238 Ill. 290, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 858, 87 N. E. 297.

The failure of the defendant to show such circumstances as would authorize the submission to the jury of the bona fides of the plaintiff in purchasing the note renders it unnecessary to discuss the various assignments relating to the admissibility of evidence offered to support the plea to the merits.

Judgment reversed.

All the Justices concur, except Fish, Ch. J., absent on account of sickness.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

JOHN BUTLER

v.

CITY OF KANSAS CITY, KANSAS, Appt.

(97 Kan. 239, 155 Pac. 12.)

Municipal corporation — governmental duty — pesthouse.

1. Where a municipal corporation maintains a pesthouse for the treatment and isolation of persons who have been exposed to or affected with smallpox, it performs a governmental duty.

For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, II. g, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Headnotes by PORTER, J.

Note. — The question of municipal liability as affected by the distinction between governmental and proprietary, or public and private, functions of municipal corporations, is treated in various aspects, and with Same — defective floor — liability.

2. The rule that the governmental agencies of the state are not liable in an action of tort for either misfeasance or nonfeasance is applied to an action against a city to recover damages for personal injuries resulting from the defective condition of the floor of a pesthouse, where plaintiff, who was affected with smallpox, was confined by the city authorities.

For other cases, see Municipal Corporations, 11. g, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 12, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Wyandotte County overruling a demurrer to a petition filed to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. R. J. Higgins, W. H. McCamish, and Lee Judy, for appellant:

In establishing and maintaining a pesthouse, defendant was performing a governmental duty, was acting under the police power of this state, and therefore cannot be liable for injuries to patients who were there for the purpose of being treated for contagious diseases, such as smallpox.

6 McQuillin, Mun. Corp. ¶ 2689, pp. 5496, 5498; Murtaugh v. St. Louis, 44 Mo. 479; Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461; New Kiowa v. Craven, 46 Kan. 114, 26 Pac. 426; Pfefferle v. Lyon County, 39 Kan. 432, 18 Pac. 506; La Clef v. Concordia, 41 Kan. 323, 13 Am. St. Rep. 235, 21 Pac. 272; Williamson v. Louisville Industrial School, 95 Ky. 251, 23 L.R.A. 200, 44 Am. St. Rep. 243, 24 S. W. 1065; Benton v. City Hospital, 140 Mass. 13, 54 Am. Rep. 436, 1 N. E. 836; Sherbourne v. Yuba County, 21 Cal. 113, 81 Am. Dec. 151; Hessin v. Manhattan, 81 Kan. 153, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 228, 105 Pac. 44; Stewart v. New Orleans, 9 La. Ann. 461, 61 Am. Dec. 218.

Mr. A. J. Herrod for appellee.

Porter, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

John Butler sued the city of Kansas City to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the city's negligence. The city maintains a pesthouse where persons affected with smallpox are taken for isolation and treatment. The petition alleged that Butler became sick with smallpox and was taken by employees of the city and confined in one of the rooms or wards of the pesthouse, where each morning he was obliged to start a fire, and that blood poisoning resulted from a splinter of the flooring which entered his bare foot as he walked from the bed to the stove. The petition alleged that the city was negligent in maintaining the floor of the room in a defective and dangerous condition. A demurrer to the petition was overruled. The city elected to stand upon the demurrer and has appealed.

The contention of the city is that in maintaining a pesthouse it was performing a governmental duty under the police power of the state, and therefore cannot be held liable for negligence causing injuries to persons who were in the pesthouse for treatment and isolation while affected with smallpox.

On the same principle, a similar immunity from liability has been held to exist in a case where a county is sued by an inmate of a jail for injuries resulting from negligence in the manner in which the jail was maintained. Pfefferle v. Lyon County, 39 Kan. 432, 18 Pac. 506. The decision in that case was placed upon the ground that, in respect to persons committed to its custody, the county was engaged in the performance of a governmental duty for the benefit of the state and possessed the same immunity as the state.

In Thomas v. Ellis County, 91 Kan. 443, 138 Pac. 409, it was said: "Counties are mere auxiliary agencies of the state government, and, like the state, are immune from liability on account of damages occasioned by the manner in which they exercise or fail to exercise their governmental powers." Syl. 1.

See also State v. Lawrence, 79 Kan. 234, 250, 100 Pac. 485.

The same doctrine was applied in a case of malicious prosecution. Caldwell v. Prunelle, 57 Kan. 511, 513, 46 Pac. 949, 950. It was there held that in enforcing a police regulation the officers of the city were exercising a public and governmental function. In the opinion it was said: "For the manner in which they exercise their powers and duties in this respect the city is not liable." p. 513.

The case of Edson v. Olathe, 81 Kan. 328, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 861, 105 Pac. 521, rehearing denied in 82 Kan. 4, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 865, 107 Pac. 539, recognized the distinction between the governmental and proprietary functions of municipal corporations generally, and as affecting property and contract rights. See authorities cited in opinion. Another case more nearly in point as to the facts, and in which the controlling question was the distinction between the liability of a city for an act done by it in its public capacity as a part of the political subdivisions of the state, and its liability for an act done to its private advantage in relation to which the state at large has no interest, is La Clef v. Concordia, 41 Kan. 323, 13 Am. St. Rep. 285, 21 Pac. 272. There the plaintiff brought an action to recover damages to his health by the negligent condition of a jail in which he was confined for the violation of a city ordinance. It was held that the city in maintaining the jail stands in the same attitude as counties, and is not liable for injuries resulting from the enforcement of public laws affecting the state at large.

reference to particular branches of municipal activity, in notes cited in the Index to L.R.A. Notes, under the title, "Municipal corporations," subtitle, "Liability for damages."

L.R.A.1916D.

The note appended to Columbia Finance & T. Co. v. Louisville, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 88, deals specifically with the question as affecting liability for tort in connection with buildings used by the municipality.

It is a general rule that the governmental agencies of the state are not liable in an action of tort for either nonfeasance or misfeasance. Fowle v. Alexandria, 3 Pet. 398, 7 L. ed. 719; Maximilian v. New York, 62 N. Y. 160, 164, 165, 20 Am. Rep. 468. Judge Dillon states the law as follows: "The power or even duty on the part of a municipal corporation to make provision for the public health and for the care of the sick and destitute appertains to it in its governmental or public, and not in its corporate, or, as it is sometimes called, private, capacity. And therefore where a city, under its charter and the general law of the state enacted to prevent the spread of contagious diseases, establishes a hospital, it is not responsible to persons injured by reason of the misconduct of its agents and employees therein." 4 Dill. Mun. Corp. 5th ed. § 1661.

Among the cases cited in the notes which are directly in point, see Evans v. Kankakee, 231 Ill. 223, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1190, 83 N. E. 223; Sherbourne v. Yuba County, 21 Cal. 113, 81 Am. Dec. 151; Summers v. Daviess County, 103 Ind. 262, 53 Am. Rep. 512, 2 N. E. 725; Richmond v. Long, 17 Gratt. 375, 94 Am. Dec. 461; Murtaugh v. St. Louis, 44 Mo. 479.

In Barbour v. Ellsworth, 67 Me. 294, a well person was taken to a hospital for smallpox, where he contracted the disease. Alleging that he had not been suitably or sufficiently cared for, he sued the city for damages, and it was held there was no liability. In Lynch v. North Yakima, 37 Wash. 657, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 261, 80 Pac. 79; it was held that the city was not liable for the act of a policeman who took a person exposed to smallpox into a building occupied by the fire department, thereby exposing the employees to contagion.

The duty of a municipal corporation to conserve the public health is governmental, and it is not liable for injuries inflicted while performing such duty. 6 McQuillin Mun. Corp. § 2669.

The petition failed to state a cause of action against the city, and the judgment is reversed, with directions to sustain the demurrer.

MONTANA SUPREME COURT.

RE APPLICATION OF LEWIS AND CLARK COUNTY, Respt.

INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT BOARD OF THE STATE OF MONTANA, Appt.

(— Mont. —, 155 Pac. 268.)

Statute — title — workmen's compensation act — application to counties.

1. Counties may be included in the operation of a workmen's compensation act under a title, "An Act Providing for the Protection and Safety of Workmen in All Places of Employment."

For other cases, see Statutes, I. c, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Constitutional law — class legislation — compensation to employees of counties.

2. Providing compensation for persons injured while in the employment of a county to the exclusion of those injured while mere inhabitants of the county is not unconstitutional class legislation.

For other cases, see Constitutional Law, II. a, 5, c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Public money — donation to individual — workmen's compensation.

3. Workmen's compensation acts do not provide for charity so as to bring their application to public employees in conflict with a constitutional provision forbidding donation of public funds to individuals.

For other cases, see Public Moneys, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Tax — public purpose — workmen's compensation.

4. Compensating county employees for injuries received in the course of their employment is a public purpose within the meaning of a constitutional provision that taxes shall be collected for public purposes only.

Note. — The entire subject of workmen's compensation acts is annotated in L.R.A. 1916A, 23. As to the power of the legislature to impose the provisions of such acts upon a municipal corporation, see footnote to Wood v. Detroit, L.R.A.1916C, 388.

For other cases, see Taxes, I. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 27, 1916.)

APPEAL by the Industrial Accident Board from an order of the District Court for Lewis and Clark County overruling and setting aside its order refusing the application of said county to become bound by the workmen's compensation law. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. B. Poindexter, Attorney General, and O. S. Wagner, Assistant Attorney General, for the appellant:

The law is inoperative as to counties, and their attempted inclusion within its provisions is null and void.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 161; 36 Cyc. 1171; Miller v. Pillsbury, 164 Cal. 199, 128 Pac. 327, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 886; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 120; State ex rel. Holliday v. O'Leary, 43 Mont. 157, 115 Pac. 204; Yegen v. Yellowstone County, 34 Mont. 79, 85 Pac. 740; State v. McKinney, 29 Mont. 375, 74 Pac. 1095, 1 Ann. Cas. 579; State v. Brown, 29 Mont. 179, 74 Pac. 366; State v. Courtney, 27 Mont. 378, 71 Pac. 308; Russell v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 37 Mont. 10, 94 Pac. 488, 501; State v. Cunningham, 35 Mont. 547, 90 Pac. 755; Evers v. Hudson, 36 Mont. 135, 92 Pac. 462; Hersey v. Neilson, 47 Mont. 132, 131 Pac. 30, Ann. Cas. 1914C, 963; Smith v. Zimmer, 45 Mont. 282, 125 Pac. 420; Stegmaier v. Jones, 203 Pa. 47, 52 Atl. 56; Dailey v. Potter County, 203 Pa. 593, 53 Atl. 498; State ex rel. Patterson v. Douglas County, 47 Neb. 428, 66 N. W. 434; Cunningham v. Northwestern Improv. Co. 44 Mont. 180, 119 Pac. 554, 1 N. C. C. A. 720.

Mr. J. P. Donnelly for respondent.

Holloway, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This appeal presents the question: Do the provisions of the workmen's compensation law (chapter 96, Laws 1915) apply to counties and county employees? The trial court answered the inquiry in the affirmative, and the Industrial Accident Board appealed.

By specific legislative declarations contained in §§ 3 (e), 6 (gg), and 6 (i) counties and county employees are made subject to the terms of the act, but it is the contention of counsel for appellant that those provisions are to be disregarded as without force or validity, because the title to the act is not sufficiently comprehensive to warrant their inclusion in the body of the measure.

Section 23, art. 5, of the Constitution, provides: "No bill, except general appropriation bills, and bills for the codification and general revision of the laws, shall be passed containing more than one subject which shall be clearly expressed in its title; but if any subject shall be embraced in any act which shall not be expressed in the title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be so expressed."

Beginning with Hotchkiss v. Marion, 12 Mont. 218, 29 Pac. 823, and continuing down to State ex rel. Cotter v. District Ct. 49 Mont. 146, 140 Pac. 732, this court has repeatedly considered and defined the purposes and limitations of this section of the Constitution, and they need not be restated here. The title to chapter 96, above, is as follows:

"An Act Providing for the Protection and Safety of Workmen in All Places of Employment and for the Inspection and Regulation of Places of Employment in All Inherently Hazardous Works and Occupations; Providing a Schedule of Compensation for Injury to or Death of Workmen and Methods of Paying the Same, and Prescribing the Liability of Employers Who Do Not Elect to Pay Such Compensation; Establishing the Industrial Accident Board, Defining its Powers and Duties; and Providing for a Review of its Awards."

It may be conceded at once that counties and county employees are not included, eo nomine, in this title; and we agree with counsel that general legislation is intended primarily for the subjects, and not for the Sovereign, and that the rules of statutory construction require that we enter upon our investigation of the meaning and purpose of a legislative enactment indulging the presumption that the lawmakers intended to legislate upon the rights and affairs of individuals, and that the state or the public will not be deemed to be within the purview of such enactment, unless expressly named or included by fair implication. In their brief, counsel for appellant say: "Theorize as we will, compensation and employers' liability acts are nothing more or less than substitutes for, and intended to supplant, the recognized unsatisfactory and oft-times disappointing and uncertain common-law and statutory tort remedies which furnished the only legal haven of refuge for an injured employee."

At the time chapter 96 was enacted, a county of this state was not liable for damages to its injured employee, and therefore, if counsel are correct in their analysis of the purpose of this act, it would seem to be a justifiable conclusion to be reached by anyone entertaining the same view and considering the title of this act only, that it was never intended to subject counties or county employees to its provisions. But that counsel has misconceived the object and purpose of the act is quite patent when the history of this character of legislation is considered.

Liability and compensation statutes are not to be grouped together. They are the antipodes of labor legislation, having their foundation in essentially different social and economic ideas. The common law of England and America and the Civil Code of Continental Europe furnished but a single remedy for a servant's injury,—an action for damages in which it was made to appear that the negligence of the master was a proximate cause of the injury. The harshness of the rule was emphasized when there was ingrafted on it the defenses of contributory negligence (Butterfield v. Forrester, 11 East, 60, 10 Revised Rep. 433, 19 Eng. Rul. Cas. 189), fellow servant's negligence (Priestly v. Fowler, 3 Mees & W. 1, Murph. & H. 305, 7 L. J. Exch. N. S. 42, 1 Jur. N. S. 987, 19 Eng. Rul. Cas. 102; Murray v. South Carolina R. Co. 1 McMull. L. 385, 36 Am. Dec. 268), and assumption of risk (Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Met. 49, 38 Am. Dec. 339, 15 Am. Neg. Cas. 407; Laning v. New York C. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 521, 10 Am. Rep. 417, 16 Am. Neg. Cas. 747). With the increased hazards consequent upon the use of high explosives, complicated and dangerous machinery, and the powerful agencies of steam and electricity, the percentage of injured employees having justiciable claims rapidly increased, until relief was sought in liability statutes which modified or eliminated some or all of the common-law defenses. But whether the remedy was sought at common law or under an employers' liability statute, the actionable wrong of the master, or actionable wrong for which the master was liable under the maxim respondent superior, was the gist of the claim for damages and the basis of any right to recover. Experience demonstrated that more than one half of all industrial injuries resulted from inevitable accident or from the risks of the business for which no one could be held responsible; that neither the common law nor employers' liability statutes furnished any measure of relief to more than 12 or 15 per cent of the injured, and that further appreciable improvement from the modification of existing laws could not be expected so long as the element of negligence was the foundation of legal liability.

L.R.A.1916D.

Workingmen's insurance and compensation laws are the products of the development of the social and economic idea that the industry which has always borne the burden of depreciation and destruction of the necessary machinery shall also bear the burden of repairing the efficiency of the human machines, without which the industry itself could not exist. The economic loss from vocational disease, industrial accident, invalidity, old age, and unemployment was a subject of serious inquiry among the constituent German states before the days of the Empire, but the credit for crystallizing the sentiment into workable laws will always remain with Bismarck. From the enactment of the sick insurance statute in Germany in 1883, and the fundamental law in 1884, the idea of compensation based only upon the risks of the business and the impairment of earning efficiency spread to other European states, and finally penetrated to this country. The Federal government, thirty-one states, Alaska, Hawaii, and the Canal Zone now have measures for the relief of injured workmen patterned after the German insurance or English compensation plan. Each system seeks the same ultimate end, but by somewhat different means, and "workmen's compensation" is a term sufficiently comprehensive for all practical purposes to include both. The fundamental difference between the conception of liability and compensation is found in the presence in the one, and the absence from the other, of the element of actionable wrong. The common law and liability statutes furnished an uncertain measure of relief to the limited number of workmen who could trace their injuries proximately to the master's negligence. Compensation laws proceed upon the theory that the injured workman is entitled to pecuniary relief from the distress caused by his injury, as a matter of right, unless his own wilful act is the proximate cause, and that it is wholly immaterial whether the injury can be traced to the negligence of the master, the negligence of the injured employee or a fellow servant, or whether it results from an act of God, the public enemy, an unavoidable accident, or a mere hazard of the business which may or may not be subject to more exact classification; that his compensation shall be certain, limited by the impairment of his earning capacity, proportioned to his wages, and not dependent upon the skill or eloquence of counsel or the whim or caprice of a jury; that as between workmen of the same class who suffer like injuries, each shall receive the same compensation, and that, too, without the economic waste incident to protracted litigation, and without reference to the fact that the injury to the one may have been occasioned by the negligence of the master, and to the other by reason of his own fault.

Confronted with a legislative history covering more than thirty years and extending to practically all of Europe, to many of the European dependencies, and to more than one half of the United States, the members of the legislative assembly of 1915 must be credited with an understanding of compensation measures as they were generally understood at that time, and with an intention to employ terms appropriate to such measures as they were generally employed under like circumstances. In drafting this measure and formulating a title for it, we must assume that the members of the legislative assembly appreciated the fact that they were departing from the rule of liability in favor of the few, to establish a rule of compensation for injured workmen generally,—one which would insure relief without reference to the question of fault, and altogether irrespective of whether, under existing laws, actions for damages would lie. They therefore employed the term "workmen" in the title to this act, in its generic sense, and intended thereby to include the employees of a county as well as the servants of individuals or private corporations engaged in the extra-hazardous occupations enumerated in the act. Since the title selected "fairly indicates the general subject of the act, is comprehensive enough in its scope reasonably to cover all the provisions thereof, and is not calculated to mislead either the legislature or the public," it must be held to be sufficient to meet the requirements of the Constitution above. Evers v. Hudson, 36 Mont. 135, 92 Pac. 462. For the history of industrial insurance and workmen's compensation legislation, reference may be had to 24th Annual Report of U. S. Commissioner of Labor 1909, and to Boyd's Workmen's Compensation.

We are unable to appreciate much of counsel's argument in support of the contention that this statute is open to the objection that it is obnoxious class legislation. In the absence of any restriction in the Constitution, the legislature was free to establish a measure of duty owing to a public employee different from that owing to a citizen who is not in the public service, and it cannot be contended that a classification of workmen based upon the risks of their employment is either arbitrary or unreasonable. If the compensation to be paid to an employee injured in the service of the county is to be treated as charity under an assumed name, then it might be conceded that this measure conflicts with the provisions of § 1, art. 13, of the Constitution; but that is not the conception of compensation statutes.

A county subject to the provisions of this act will, of necessity, be compelled to levy taxes to meet the assessments made upon it under § 40, and this cannot be done unless the purpose to which the money so raised is to be devoted is a public purpose. Section 11, art. 12, of the Constitution, provides: "Taxes shall be levied and collected by general laws and for public purposes only." Whether a particular purpose is "public," as that term is employed above, is not always easy of solution. The power of taxation is a legislative prerogative, and therefore the determination of the question whether a particular purpose is or is not one which so intimately concerns the public as to render taxation permissible is for the legislature in the first instance. 37 Cys. 720; State v. Nelson County, 1 N. D. 88, 8 L.R.A. 283, 26 Am. St. Rep. 609, 45 N. W. 33; 1 Cooley, Taxn. 182. The general rule of constitutional law that courts will indulge every reasonable presumption in favor of legislation is applicable with peculiar force to the case of a legislative decision upon the purpose for which a tax may be laid. 1 Cooley, Taxn. 185. In §§ 3 (e) and 6 (gg) of this act the legislature has determined that the money to be contributed by a county to the fund for the relief of its injured employees is to be devoted to a public purpose,—an ordinary and necessary county expense. In Cunningham v. Northwestern Improv. Co. 44 Mont. 180, 119 Pac. 554, 1 N. C. C. A. 720, we held that a statute which in effect levied a tax upon the coal mining industry to provide an insurance fund for injured miners was a valid exercise of the taxing power, and that the purpose sought to be subserved was a public purpose, within the meaning of § 11 above. It is unnecessary to again review the authorities which support that conclusion. We are satisfied with its correctness, and that the determination of the question in that case is decisive of it in this.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

Brantly, Ch. J., and Sanner, J., concur.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

HARRY C. KEISEL, Plff. in Err.,
v.

NANCY E. BALDOCK et al.

(— Okla. —, 154 Pac. 1194.)

Bills and notes — indorsee — defenses.

1. Where the purchaser of a promissory note has notice of its infirmities at the time of the purchase, he takes the same subject to such defenses as may be maintained by reason of such infirmities.

When a negotiable instrument bears on its face such marks of infirmity as would put an ordinarily prudent person upon inquiry, the indorsee of such instrument takes the same subject to such defenses as are maintainable by reason of its infirmities.

For other cases, see Bills and Notes, V. b, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — statement in indorsement — effect.

2. The holder of three negotiable promissory notes for $2,500 each purchased property of B for $6,000, and transferred these notes in payment, but retained an interest in one of the notes to the extent of the excess of the notes above the purchase price of the property, and in transferring one of the notes the special indorsement was preceded by the following memoranda: "Oklahoma City, November 16, 1910. On payment of the within note and interest Mrs. N. E. Baldock is to receive $1,530 and interest at 6 per cent." And these notes were transferred to C prior to maturity and for value, and the amount of the notes and interest was collected by C. Held, that the above memoranda in effect destroyed the negotiability of the note, and it was sufficient to put the purchaser upon inquiry as to Mrs. Baldock's interest therein, and such purchaser was not a holder in due course, and was liable to Mrs. Baldock for the amount of her interest therein in an action for money had and received.

For other cases, see Bills and Notes, V. b, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 21, 1915.)

ERROR to the District Court for Oklahoma County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action for money had and received. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Headnotes by GALBRAITH, C.

Note. — The question as to what circumstances are sufficient to put a purchaser of negotiable paper on inquiry is discussed at length in the notes to Mee v. Carlson, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 351, and McPherrin v. Tittle, 44 L.R.A. (N.S.) 395. See later case Security Trust & Sav. Bank v. Gleichmann, L.R.A. 1915F. 1203. L.R.A. 1916D.

Messrs. Everest & Campbell, for plaintiff in error:

Plaintiff, having transferred the paper with her unqualified indorsement thereon, which authorized the transferee to sell it or collect it, is without any authority to say that she has any claim or can exercise any claim over the proceeds of the sale of the note or of its collection except such proceeds as came into the hands of F. H. Skirvin, to whom she intrusted the note.

Davies v. Stevenson, 59 Kan. 648, 54 Pac. 679; Freeman v. Venner, 120 Mass. 424; Branch v. Augusta Nat. Bank, 5 Kan. App. 440, 49 Pac. 344; Campbell v. Equitable Securities Co. 12 Colo. App. 544, 56 Pac. 88; Bank of Welch v. Cabell, — Okla. —, 152 Pac. 844; Jenkins v. Sherman, 77 Miss. 884, 28 So. 726; Kellogg v. Douglas County Bank, 58 Kan. 48, 62 Am. St. Rep. 596, 48 Pac. 587; Fawcett v. National L. Ins. Co. 97 Ill. 11, 37 Am. Rep. 95; Leland v. Parriott, 35 Iowa, 454; Hook v. Pratt, 78 N. Y. 371, 34 Am. Rep. 539.

Messrs. Burwell, Crockett, & Johnson, for defendant in error Baldock:

The indorsement on the instrument was sufficient notice of "an infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it."

7 Cyc. 949; Jenkins v. Planters' & Mechanics' Bank, 34 Okla. 607, 126 Pac. 757; Stein v. Rheinstrom, 47 Minn. 476, 50 N. W. 827.

Galbraith, C., filed the following opinion:

Nancy E. Baldock commenced this action in the trial court against the plaintiff in error and defendants in error Floyd H. Skirvin and W. B. Skirvin for money had and received. A jury was waived, and the cause was tried to the court, and a finding made in favor of the plaintiff, and judgment rendered for the amount claimed against the plaintiff in error. From that judgment an appeal has been prosecuted to this court by petition in error and case made.

It appears from the record that the defendant in error Mrs. Baldock was the owner of three promissory notes for $2,500 each, and secured by real estate mortgage; that she purchased some property from Floyd H. Skirvin for $6,000, and gave in payment thereof these mortgage notes, after having indorsed the same; that the aggregate amount of the notes was in excess of the purchase price of the property in the sum of $1,530; that Mrs. Baldock retained an interest in one of the notes for this amount; and that Skirvin also executed his promissory note to her for this amount, and on the back of one of the notes transferred to him was written this indorsement:

Oklahoma City,
November 16, 1910.

On payment of within note and interest Mrs. Nancy E. Baldock is to receive $1,530 and interest from date at 6 per cent. Pay to F. H. Skirvin or order.

N. E. Baldock.

Payment of the note was also guaranteed by W. B. Skirvin by written indorsement on the back thereof. Prior to maturity, and for value, Skirvin transferred and indorsed the notes to the plaintiff in error, Keisel, and Keisel collected the notes at maturity, and claims to have been a bona fide holder of the notes, and that, since he acquired them prior to maturity and for value, he took them free from all equities or claims of Mrs. Baldock.

Oral testimony was admitted at the trial, over the objection of the plaintiff in error, to the effect that it was understood between Skirvin and Mrs. Baldock at the time the notes were transferred to Skirvin that he should hold this note in which Mrs. Baldock claimed an interest, and that the same was to be placed in the bank and held until its maturity, and, when collected, the $1,530 and interest should be paid to Mrs. Baldock. The full amount of this note and interest was collected by Keisel, and this action was to recover the interest claimed in it by Mrs. Baldock to the extent of $1,530, and interest at 6 per cent.

Keisel's testimony as to how he purchased the notes is as follows:

Q. Did you agree with Floyd H. Skirvin to purchase the notes?

A. I did.

Q. Did you have them in your hands?

A. He came out to the house. I was in bed. I took a couple of the notes; presumed they were all right; just looked at them; saw that they were $2,500 each, you know. I took up a couple of them; did not look them over. I did not see that indorsement on it.

Q. You did not see the indorsement on there?

A. No, sir.

Q. What did you do then?

A. I gave him a check and put the notes in my safe. I gave him the check. He said make it out to W. B. Skirvin. I made the note payable to W. B. Skirvin, or check, rather.

After Keisel discovered the memoranda on the note in regard to the interest of Mrs. Baldock therein, he went to W. B. Skirvin L.R.A.1916D.

and had the payment guaranteed Skirvin made a written guaranty on the back of the note as follows:

On account of indorsement in favor of Mrs. Baldock I guarantee the full payment of $2,500 and interest on this note to H. C. Keisel or order.

W. B. Skirvin.

The assignments of error as set out in the brief of plaintiff in error are as follows: "The assignments of error may be all discussed under two headings: First, it was error for the trial court to admit evidence of the oral agreement and conversations between Mrs. Baldock and her attorney and the Skirvins at the time the note was delivered by Mrs. Baldock to Floyd H. Skirvin, on November 16, 1910; second, the transaction between Mrs. Baldock and Floyd H. Skirvin conferred absolute authority upon the latter to sell and dispose of the note barring the so-called restrictive and conditional indorsement, and under the undisputed evidence Keisel, by the purchase of said note from Floyd H. Skirvin, became the absolute owner thereof, and of all the proceeds thereof, and of the debt evidenced by said note, and the judgment of the trial court should have been in his favor on this account."

The oral testimony as to the understanding of Mrs. Baldock and Skirvin as to what should be done with the note at the time the same was transferred to Skirvin was not competent or relevant as to the plaintiff in error, Keisel, and he was not bound thereby, provided he was a holder of the note in due course. However, this testimony was competent and relevant to show the interest that Mrs. Baldock retained in this note, and the title that Floyd H. Skirvin had to the same, since, if there was an infirmity in his title, and the note bore evidence of this infirmity, the same was passed to Keisel, and he was not a holder in due course. The fact that Keisel purchased the note for value and before maturity did not make him a holder in due course, if at the time he purchased the note he had notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of Skirvin thereto. Therefore the question is presented whether or not the indorsement on the back of the note relative to the interest of Mrs. Baldock therein was not sufficient notice to place Keisel upon inquiry as to the character of title that Skirvin had, and to charge him with notice of the infirmity in Skirvin's title, and, in effect, to destroy the negotiability of the note and to make it subject to all the defenses in his hands that it would have been in the hands of Floyd H. Skirvin.

Section 4102, Rev. Laws 1910, defines a "holder in due course" as follows: "A holder in due course is a holder who has taken the instrument under the following conditions: First. That it is complete and regular upon its face; Second. That he become the holder of it before it was overdue, and without notice that it had been previously dishonored, if such was the fact; Third. That he took it in good faith and for value; Fourth. That at the time it was negotiated to him he had no notice of any infirmity in the instrument or defect in the title of the person negotiating it."

If Skirvin transferred the note to Keisel "in breach of faith," as provided in § 4105, Rev. Laws 1910, with Mrs. Baldock, Keisel's title to the note was defective and he was not a holder in due course. The general rule as announced by this court in Jenkins v. Planters' & Mechanics' Bank, 34 Okla. 607, 126 Pac. 757, in the first paragraph of the syllabus, is as follows: "Where the purchaser of a promissory note has notice of its infirmities at the time of the purchase, he takes same subject to such defenses as may be maintained by reason of such infirmities. When a negotiable instrument bears on its face such marks of infirmity as would put an ordinarily prudent person upon inquiry, the indorsee of such instrument takes same subject to such defenses as are maintainable by reason of its infirmities."

The note involved in that case was payable to a corporation. It was indorsed by the president of the corporation, and placed as collateral security to the bank to secure his individual debt. There was no evidence that the bank taking this note as collateral had any further notice of the note's infirmities than such as was disclosed by the note to the effect that Harper was pledging the company's note to secure his debt. The court held that that was sufficient notice to place the bank upon inquiry, and that they should have ascertained whether or not Harper had authority from the company to use this note as collateral for his own obligation, and, as it did not make that inquiry, it was not a holder in due course, and the same was subject to the same defenses in an action by the bank as it would have been in the hands of the corporation.

In the case of Stein v. Rheinstrom, 47 Minn. 476, 50 N. W. 827, the instrument involved was negotiable in form, a warehouse receipt for whisky, and contained the following phrase, "and deliver the same upon payment for the whisky, the United States government and state tax, interest, and charges." The court, in discussing the question, said: "Whether these words should be regarded as equivalent to the words 'upon payment for the whisky' or 'upon payment of the purchase price of the whisky,' or as equivalent to some other form of expressing the fact that a payment of some part of the price had to be made, is wholly immaterial for the proper disposition of the order appealed from, which must be affirmed. Strictly speaking, the receipts were not negotiable, for they carried upon their face a notice that the whisky would only be surrendered upon the payment of certain charges thereafter to be ascertained. If there was anything doubtful or ambiguous about the language used as to the nature, character, or extent of the claim or lien, a purchaser was put upon his guard and cautioned to inquire. He was thereby notified of an infirmity which would affect him, and this notice was ample to prevent a purchase of the receipts by any person exercising ordinary business prudence and judgment without first investigating. Observing a clause in the receipts which was uncertain, he was bound to learn its meaning, or, failing so to do, to suffer the consequences. The words in question were indefinite and of doubtful import, but palpably a prepayment of some character was required in addition to United States government and state taxes, interest, and charges. It devolved upon the plaintiff, when purchasing, to discover what was intended by their use. The purchaser of what purports to be or is said to be negotiable paper must exercise ordinary prudence in respect to knowledge derived from an inspection of the paper. Hall v. Hale, 8 Conn. 336; Ayer v. Hutchins, 4 Mass. 370, 3 Am. Dec. 232; see also First Nat. Bank v. Scott County, 14 Minn. 77, Gil. 59, 100 Am. Dec. 194."

This case is not in line with the great weight of authority, as will be seen by reference to Mee v. Carlson, 22 S. D. 365, 117 N. W. 1033, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 351, and the very full note accompanying said report.

We conclude from these authorities that the indorsement on the note in regard to the interest of Mrs. Baldock therein was sufficient to put a reasonably prudent man upon inquiry, and the inquiry would have disclosed the defect in Skirvin's title, and the fact that Keisel bought the note without actual knowledge of this indorsement cannot affect the question, for he is charged with knowledge of this indorsement and everything it necessarily implied. It was certainly notice of the defect in Skirvin's title, and was sufficient to put Keisel on inquiry to find out the interest of Mrs. Baldock, if any, in the note. The fact that he did not see or look for the indorsement before purchasing the note cannot excuse him. The fact that when he did discover this indorsement he carried the note to W. B. Skirvin and secured his guaranty of the payment is sufficient, at least, to show that the memoranda on the back of the note was sufficient to give notice that Mrs. Baldock had some interest in the note, and that there was a defect in his title. Keisel having taken this note with the knowledge of the infirmity in Skirvin's title, he was not a holder in due course, and the same was subject to the same defenses in his hands that it would have been in the hands of Floyd H. Skirvin, and, he having collected the full amount of the note and interest, he is liable to Mrs. Baldock for money had and received, to the extent of her interest as found by the trial court.

We therefore recommend that the judgment appealed from be affirmed.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

Petition for rehearing denied February 15, 1916.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

RE ESTATE OF EDWARD CONNOLLY, Deceased.

JOHN FARLEY et al., Respts.,
v.

JAMES HOPKINS, Exr., etc., of Edward Connolly, Deceased, Appt.

(— Wash. —, 154 Pac. 155.)

Forgery — exact similarity of signatures — effect.

That the purported signature of a man, not given to much writing, to a will, is exactly like a genuine signature, is evidence of forgery, although the will purports to have been made before the genuine signature.

For other cases, see Forgery, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 10, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Spokane County in favor of contestants in a proceeding to contest an instrument purporting to be the will of Edward Connolly, deceased. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Lucius G. Nash and Nuzum, Clark, & Nuzum for appellant.

Messrs. Tolman & King, Luby & Pearson, John B. White, and Fred J. Cunningham for respondent.

Mount, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The purported will of Edward Connolly, deceased, is contested by one asserting himself to be an heir, and by the state of Washington. The case took the usual turn of such cases, and there is much conflict of testimony.

After very thorough inquiry the trial judge found the will to be a forgery, and held, further, that the right of the state to claim the property under the laws providing for the escheat of property of deceased persons would not be prejudiced by his holding. The witnesses to the will testified that it was executed by the deceased, and its whereabouts is accounted for by the testimony of other witnesses from about the time it was executed until it was offered for probate. On the other hand, there is testimony tending to show that the deceased had not executed a will, and that he had manifested an intent not to do so.

Several experts in handwriting were offered as witnesses, and they concur in the opinion that the purported signature to the will is a forgery. The fact that the experts agree in this case may be attributed to the unusual instance that they were all testifying on the same side of the case.

At least two men who were familiar with the signature of the deceased, and with the deceased and his characteristics, expressed the opinion that the signature was that of Edward Connolly.

We have read the whole of the record with more than our usual care, keeping in hand the several exhibits to which the witnesses were addressing their testimony. We have made the same examinations and comparisons in the same way and with the same instruments employed by the expert witnesses, and, but for the fact that there was offered by the proponents of the will an admitted signature of Edward Connolly, and which became the principal basis for comparison, we would be inclined, notwithstanding the opinion of the experts, to hold that the signature to the will is genuine. But when the two signatures, the one upon the will and the one referred to as exhibit No. 7, are considered, we believe, as the court below must have believed, that the signature upon the will is a tracing of the genuine signature. Edward Connolly was not a man of education, nor was he given much to writing.

It is understood of all men that no two signatures are exactly alike, or so nearly alike that they will bear a superimposition of one upon the other, and if they do, it is one of the strongest evidences of a forgery. The subject of identity of signatures and the conclusions to be drawn therefrom are learnedly discussed by Mr. Osborn in his finished work on Questioned Documents, chapter XVI. After noting that it is the natural thing for the model to go undiscovered, he says: "Strange as it may seem, however, in many important cases the model writing is actually put in the case to prove the forged writing to be genuine by means of it."

Note. — As to comparison of handwriting for the purpose of showing copying or tracing of signature, see notes to University of Illinois v. Spalding, 62 L.R.A. 870, and Stitzel v. Miller, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1004. L.R.A. 1916D.

It has so happened in this case. We have the model—the authenticated signature—and the questioned signature. All the books agree that if exactly similar they will prove too much.

"This coincidence of a disputed signature with a genuine one when superimposed against the light has long been held by the courts to be proof of simulation." Re Burtis, 43 Misc. 437, 89 N. Y. Supp. 441.

"That an illiterate man, capable of writing his name . . . could, without tracing and painstaking design, produce two signatures so precisely alike," is deemed incredible. Re Koch, 33 Misc. 153, 68 N. Y. Supp. 375.

"It is a fact well known, and may be readily verified, that no two signatures, actually written in the ordinary course of writing them, are precisely alike. The character of a person's signature is generally of uniform appearance, and the resemblance between one and another signature of the same person is thus apparent. But the coincidence is seldom, if ever, known, where a genuine signature of a person, when held up to the window pane, superposed over another genuine signature of the same person, is such a facsimile that the one is a perfect match to the other in every respect.

"But where two or more supposed signatures are found to be counterparts, I think the simulation is detected by that circumstance. Genuine signatures will not lap with perfect similarity one over another." Hunt v. Lawless, 7 Abb. N. C. 119.

"It does not seem hardly possible that one, without design, can write his name twice so exactly alike, in spaces between and height of the letters, and their slope or angles, as that a tracing of one will accurately measure the other in every respect. Indeed, numerous experiments show that it cannot be done when it is sought to be done. Such a perfect coincidence as in the case of these two signatures in this cause is at L.R.A.1916D.

least highly improbable, and but barely possible, if attainable at all." Day v. Cole, 65 Mich. 129, 31 N. W. 823.

And so conclusive is this circumstance that at least one court has followed it to the exclusion of other evidence. It is said: "And for this reason it does not need the testimony of experts to demonstrate that these signatures were not genuine, but tracings. The resemblance in each is so striking that it cannot help but be observed upon a bare inspection, and if a measurement be made from any given point in one, it will be found to correspond to the merest fraction of an inch in the other; in other words, each signature will superimpose the other, a similarity which does not appear in the concededly genuine signatures introduced in evidence, and which, from the very nature of things could not occur." Re Rice, 81 App. Div. 223, 81 N. Y. Supp. 68.

We have not overlooked the point that is made that the will antedates by three months the authenticated signature to which we have referred, but we are mindful that it is not likely that one who is disposed to forge a signature would hesitate to endeavor to discount or destroy the evidence of his forgery by dating the forged instrument upon a day when the signature relied upon as a copy was not in existence.

In short, the testimony is conflicting. We have weighed it carefully, and we think that the findings and decree of the trial judge are sustained by a preponderance of the evidence. We have come to this conclusion endeavoring in our own minds to reject entirely the testimony of two of the principal witnesses for the contestants, that is to say, Stephen Doyle and George Morris. The testimony of these witnesses is vigorously assailed by counsel. We believe ourselves that their testimony is so freighted with fabrication as to make them unworthy of belief.

There is no question of law in this case. The trial judge had the advantage of seeing and hearing the witnesses, and of marking their demeanor while upon the witness stand. We find nothing that would sustain a holding that the preponderance of the evidence is not with the contestants.

The decree of the lower court is affirmed.

Morris, Ch. J. and Ellis, Chadwick, and Fullerton, JJ., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

DAISY GOODING, Appt.,

v.

LEE OTT, State Compensation Commissioner.

(— W. Va. —, 87 S. E. 862.)

Master and servant — workmen's compensation — injury in other state.

1. Where a coal company of this state, with principal offices and tipples and main entrance and the principal part of its mine located in this state, has qualified under the provisions of § 9 of the workmen's compensation act of this state (Laws 1913, chap. 10; Code 1918, chap. 15p, § 9 [§ 665]), as amended by the Acts of the Legislature of 1915, chap. 9, by paying the premiums of liability and by giving notice to miners employed in its mine, etc., as required by said act, the widow of a miner residing in this state and so employed therein, unless employed wholly without the state, and whose injuries resulting in his death were sustained in the course of and resulting from his employment, while temporarily at work in that part of the mine located in an adjoining state, is entitled to participate in the workmen's compensation fund created by said act, notwithstanding the language of § 25 thereof, authorizing disbursements of such fund to employees who "shall have received injuries in this state."

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Statute — workmen's compensation — extraterritorial enforcement.

2. The relation of employer and employee, under said act, being voluntary, and not compulsory, is contractual, the statute becoming an integral part of the contract, and limiting the rights and liabilities of employer and employee, binding upon the parties, and enforceable in other jurisdictions, unless opposed to the public policy thereof, and as all other foreign contracts are enforceable therein.

For other cases, see Conflict of Laws, I. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 25, 1916.)

A PPEAL by petitioner from an order of the State Compensation Commissioner

Headnotes by MILLER, J.

Note.—As to extraterritorial effect of workmen's compensation acts, see annotation following Kennerson v. Thames Towboat Co. L.R.A.1914A, 443.

Generally as to conflict of laws in relation to actions for personal injury or death, see note to Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hurd, 56 L.R.A. 193. Particular phases of the question in relation to actions for death are also considered in notes cited in the Index to L.R.A. Notes, under the title, "Conflict of Laws," subtitle, "Personal injuries; death." L.R.A.1916D.

denying her compensation, in a proceeding under the workmen's compensation act, to obtain compensation for the death of her husband. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. A. Bowers, for appellant:

The intention of the lawmakers constitutes the law, and the primary object in the interpretation of a statute is to ascertain and give effect to that intention, although the construction may not be in conformity with the strict letter of the statute.

Bank of Bramwell v. County Ct. 36 W. Va. 341, 15 S. E. 78; State v. Myers, 74 W. Va. 488, 82 S. E. 270; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 246.

In considering statutes, every part must be viewed in connection with the whole, so as to make its parts harmonious, if practicable, and give a sensible and intelligent effect to each. It is not to be presumed that the legislature intended any part of the statute to be without meaning.

Bank of Bramwell v. County Ct. 36 W. Va. 341, 15 S. E. 78; Wellsburg & S. L. R. Co. v. Pan Handle Traction Co. 56 W. Va. 18, 48 S. E. 746; Old Dominion Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Sohn, 54 W. Va. 109, 46 S. E. 222; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. §§ 238-240, 237.

In searching for legislative intent, it is the duty of the court to consider the object, and purpose to be accomplished; the reason and motive which led to its making are most certain means of establishing a statute's true sense.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 319; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 292; Daniel v. Simms, 49 W. Va. 554, 39 S. E. 690; State v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 61 W. Va. 367, 56 S. E. 518.

Of two permissible constructions of a statute, one leading to unjust or absurd results and the other to equity and fairness, the latter is to be adopted, upon the presumption that the legislature did not intend the results flowing from the other.

Rider v. County Ct. 74 W. Va. 712, 82 S. E. 1083; Hasson v. Chester, 67 W. Va. 278, 67 S. E. 731; Dickey v. Smith, 42 W. Va. 805, 26 S. E. 373; Old Dominion Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Sohn, 54 W. Va. 101, 46 S. E. 222; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. §§ 322-324; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 361.

Courts will so construe statutes as to render them constitutional.

Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 332; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 349-352; Charleston & S. Bridge Co. v. Kanawha County Ct. 41 W. Va. 658, 24 S. E. 1002; State v. Workman, 35 W. Va. 367, 14 L.R.A. 600, 14 S. E. 9; Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Piggott, 60 W. Va. 532, 55 S. E. 664; Coal & C. R. Co. v. Conley, 67 W. Va. 129, 67 S. E. 613.

Messrs. A. A. Lilly, Attorney General, and Frank Lively, Assistant Attorney General, for appellee:

Workmen's compensation laws do not cover an injury or accident which occurs out of the state enacting such laws, unless there is plain, unequivocal, and direct language in the statute to the contrary.

Gould's Case, 215 Mass. 480, 102 N. E. 693, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 372, 4 N. C. C. A. 60; Johnson v. Nelson, 128 Minn. 158, 150 N. W. 620; Reynolds v. Day, 79 Wash. 499, L.R.A.1916A, 432, 140 Pac. 681, 5 N. C. C. A. 814; Keyes Davis Co. v. Allerdyce, Decision of Michigan Industrial Board, 1913; Schwartz v. India Rubber, G. P. & Teleg. Works Co. [1912] 2 K. B. 299, 5 B. W. C. C. 390; 81 L. J. K. B. N. S. 780, 106 L. T. N. S. 706, 28 Times L. R. 331.

Laws have no extraterritorial effect.

Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. 519, 10 L. ed. 274; Stevens v. Brown, 20 W. Va. 450; Story, Conf. L. 18.

In all cases of torts, the law of the place where the injury was inflicted governs the remedy, without regard to the law of the forum, or the law of the place where the contract was made.

Johnson v. Nelson, 128 Minn. 158, 150 N. W. 620; Burns v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 113 Ind. 169, 15 N. E. 230.

Miller, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Petitioner, widow, complains of the order of defendant denying her right of participation in the workmen's compensation fund, on account of the death of her husband, Clyde F. Gooding, a miner, killed by coming in contact with a trolley wire, while employed in the mine of the Davis Coal & Coke Company.

The record shows that the tippie and main works of the Davis Coal & Coke Company are located in Grant county, West Virginia, where deceased resided and was employed to work as a miner, but that at the instant of his death he was operating a motor in a part of the mine which lay in Maryland, and at a point about 400 feet from the dividing line between the two states.

It is conceded that the Davis Coal & Coke Company, a West Virginia corporation, with tippie and works and main offices so located in West Virginia, is of the class of "persons, firms, associations and corporations regularly employing other persons for profit, or for the purpose of carrying on any form of industry or business in this state," as provided by § 9, of the workmen's compensation act, as amended by chapter 9, of the Acts of the Legislature, 1915, entitled to the benefits and protection of said act, and that deceased was, at the time of his injury and death, in the service of said company and employed by it "for the purpose of carrying on" its "industry or business," within the provisions of said act, and not of the excepted class, those "who are employed wholly without this state," as provided by said section.

It is conceded also that the Davis Coal & Coke Company had fully complied with all the requirements of the said chapter, and the rules of the commissioner, promulgated in relation thereto, for the month preceding the injuries and death of decedent, and had paid into the workmen's compensation fund, established under the provisions of said act, "the premiums of liability" prescribed thereby, being the "prescribed percentage of the total earnings of all employees subject to this act for such preceding month," including the earnings of said decedent, as required by § 24 of said act, and that 10 per cent thereof was deducted from the pay of said employees, including that of decedent, as likewise provided in said section, and had in all other respects complied with the requirements of said act.

That the petitioner, the widow of deceased, is one of the beneficiaries or dependents of deceased, entitled to share in the distribution of said compensation fund, is conceded, unless denied that right by some other provision of the law. The reasons assigned by the defendant for rejecting her claim are, first, that by § 25 of said act he is authorized to disburse said workmen's compensation fund only to employees, or their dependents, who "shall have received injuries in this state in the course of and resulting from their employment;" second, that this act can have no extraterritorial force or effect, and as the deceased sustained his injuries resulting in his death, within the boundary of the state of Maryland, petitioner is not entitled to participate in said fund, wherefore her claim was denied.

It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that this construction of § 25 of the statute is too narrow, and is not in harmony with other provisions of the act, or with the humanitarian objects and purposes thereof to relieve classes of employers and employees falling within its provisions. It is conceded by the attorney general, arguendo, that, under the original act of 1913, there could have been no doubt of petitioner's right to participate in the fund, because, by § 18, it was specifically provided that "a mine worker shall be deemed to be wholly employed in the state in which the tippie or principal mine entrance of the mine in or about which he works is situate;" but that the omission of this provision in the amendment of 1915 evidenced an intention on the part of the legislature to deny to an employee, though not wholly employed but injured outside of the state, all relief or benefits of the fund to which he and his employer contributed and are required to contribute, not upon a proportion of his wages, but upon the whole amount of the wages earned by him.

Considering the objects and purposes of the statute, already indicated, and all the terms and provisions thereof, we think the commissioner has given too narrow a construction to § 25 of the act. True, this section does apparently limit the right to such persons "as shall have received injuries in this state," and true it is that the amendment of § 18, in 1915, defining a mine worker, was wholly omitted; but it is also true that the provision of § 9, of the act of 1913, admitting employees to the benefits of the fund unless "employed wholly without this state," remains in this section, as amended in 1916. Besides, by the amendment of said § 18, there was omitted that other provision of the original act, authorizing the employer, where an employee was employed partly within and partly without the state, to apportion the pay of such employee earned within and without the state in ascertaining the percentage of wages to be paid into the compensation fund. By the amendment, omitting this provision, an employer cannot now, on penalty of losing the entire benefit of the act, deduct any proportion of the wages of an employee earned without the state.

The question is presented, What did the legislature intend by these amendments? Was it intended to deprive both employer and employee of the protection provided by the act when the injuries of the employee should occur just across the line in another state, and where, as in this case, the tippie and principal works are all located within this state? We cannot think so. So construed the statute would impose unequal burdens upon and give unequal protection to mine owner and miner from whom premiums are exacted. They would both be liable for benefits not received. We think it quite clear that the amendments must have had some other purpose. We can see that employers and Commissioner may have found it difficult under the original act to apportion the wages so as to determine the proper amount of premiums to be paid, and that though "tippie or principal mine entrance" was located in this state, it may have been difficult to determine whether the act applied when the mine itself, where the miners were employed, was wholly outside of the state, and where the employers and employees also resided outside the state. Such we understand to be the actual mine conditions existing in some parts of the state. If so, these furnished ample justification for the amendments, and we ought not for this reason give the statute as amended a construction which would be out of harmony with other provisions of the act, and will work gross injustice to those required to contribute to the compensation fund.

That the legislature had the power to extend the benefits and privileges of the act to employers and employees outside the state is well settled. Mulhall v. Fallon, 176 Mass. 266, 54 L.R.A. 934, 79 Am. St. Rep. 309, 57 N. E. 386; Gould's Case, 215 Mass. 490, 102 N. E. 693, Ann. Cas. 1914D, 372, 4 N. C. C. A. 60; 1 Bradbury, Workman's Compensation, 42. And, while there is some conflict, it is held by high authority, and we think by the weight of authority, that when right of action for injuries or death by wrongful act is given by the state where the injuries are sustained, such right may be enforced in another state, unless the law conferring the right is opposed to some public policy of the state of the forum. American Radiator Co. v. Rogge, 86 N. J. L. 436, 92 Atl. 85, 7 N. C. C. A. 144, and note 148, and cases.

The other reason of the Commissioner for rejecting petitioner's claim, based on the general principle that a statute can be given no extraterritorial effect, and is binding on neither employee nor employer, we think should not be affirmed. It is true that the courts of some of the states, notably Massachusetts, in the early history of workmen's compensation statutes, took this view, all of these decisions being controlled largely by the particular statutes involved. These cases are all collated and reviewed in elaborate notes to Re Gould, 4 N. C. C. A. 60, and American Radiator Co. v. Rogge, 7 N. C. C. A. 144 et seq., and most of which are also reviewed and criticized by Mr. Bradbury, 1 Bradbury, Workman's Compensation, 2d ed. 34 et seq. Up to the time Mr. Bradbury wrote his second edition, the cases relied on as supporting the conclusion of the Commissioner, and cited in the text, were Re Gould, supra; Keyes Davis Co. v. Allerdycie, Michigan Industrial Acci. Board, April, 1913; Ruling of Wisconsin Industrial Commission, the question not in actual litigation; and the English cases of Hicks v. Maxton (1907) 124 L. T. Jo. 135, 1 B. W. C. C. 150; Tomalin v. S. Pearson & Son [1909] 2 K. B. 61, 2 B. W. C. C. 1, 78 L. J. K. B. N. S. 863, 100 L. T. N. S. 685, 25 Times L. R. 477; and Schwartz v. India-Rubber, G. P. & Teleg. Works Co. [1912] 2 K. B. 299, 5 B. W. C. C. 390, 81 L. J. K. B. N. S. 780, 106 L. T. N. S. 706, 28 Times L. R. 331.

The cases taking the opposition view were Deeny v. Wright & C. Lighterage Co. 36 N. J. L. J. 121; Re Schmidt, Claim No. 6, Ohio State Lia. Bd. Awd. July 10, 1912; Ops. Atty. Gen. Mch. 1914.

Of the leading case relied on by the attorney general, Re Gould, supra, Mr. Bradbury, receding from the views expressed by him in the first edition of his work, at page 50, of the second edition cited, says: "The supreme judicial court of Massachusetts certainly stands very high. Its decision will have very great weight;" but, says he, "The author cannot help expressing a feeling of regret that its decision in Gould's Case, supra, was not the other way." And in a note this writer further says: "In spite of this justification of the views formerly expressed, it is asserted without hesitation by the author that he believes he gave too broad an application to the decisions under the British compensation act. He believes that the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice Martin in Deeny v. Wright & C. Lighterage Co. 36 N. J. L. J. 121, is more in conformity with the spirit and the necessities of the development of the compensation principle in the American states. This is especially true as to elective laws, and, to prevent difficulty, the same principle should be incorporated in every compulsory statute. That there is ample justification for such a course both on legal grounds and considerations of expediency the author has endeavored to show in the text."

And at page 56, the same author, in his text, says: "Therefore, partially receding from the position taken in the first edition of this work, although that position has been sustained by eminent authority, it is believed that the doctrine which must be established finally will be, in effect, that the law of the place where a contract of employment is made will govern the rights and liabilities of employees and employers to claim and to pay compensation."

A distinction has been noted in some of the authorities between cases arising under the compulsory statutes and those controlled by statutes, as in New Jersey, and we think in this state, which are optional. Where the statute compels submission by the employer and employee, there is no contract, as a general rule, enforceable outside of the state. But where, as in New Jersey and in this state, the statute makes acceptance optional, and the parties freely enter into the contract of employment with reference to the statute, the statute should be read into the contract as an integral part thereof, binding the parties, and enforceable in any jurisdiction, the same as any other contract. Such is the holding, and L.R.A.1916D.

we think the correct holding, with reference to workmen's compensation statutes generally, of the New Jersey cases of Deeny v. Wright & C. Lighterage Co., and American Radiator Co. v. Rogge, supra, as well as the case of Sexton v. Newark Dist. Teleg. Co. 84 N. J. L. 85, 86 Atl. 451, 3 N. C. C. A. 569, 578.

The pivotal question then is, Does a contract of employment, with reference to our statute, amount to a contract between employer and employee to be bound by the provisions of the act, when the employee is not employed wholly without the state? Section 22 of the act provides, that when the employer has complied with the act, and has given notice as required, the continuation in the service of such employer with such notice shall be deemed a waiver by the employee, and by the parents of any minor employee, of right of action against the employer protected by the act. Prior to the enactment of workmen's compensation laws, right of action for injuries and death given by statute, English and American, was treated as ex delicto, and not as arising out of contract. But employment under these new compensation acts, when elective, and not compulsory, and voluntarily entered into, are treated as contracts of employment, to be interpreted and enforced as all other contracts, and as binding upon the parties for injuries or death sustained in any place to which such contracts of employment extend the rights of the parties. 1 Bradbury, Workman's Compensation, 44 et seq. The author here reviews among cases, the case of Schweitzer v. Hamburg American Packetfahrt Actien Gesellschaft, 149 App. Div. 900, 134 N. Y. Supp. 812, and the New Jersey and other cases cited herein.

It is true, as argued by the attorney general, that the Massachusetts statute, construed in Re Gould, supra, contained no limitation as to time or place of employment, or injuries sustained, and it is argued from this that that statute was stronger against his position than ours, which, by § 25, limits the benefits of the workmen's compensation fund to those sustaining injuries in this state. But, as we have construed the statute as a whole and with reference to all its parts, including the definition of who is an employee within the meaning of the statute, to include those employees whose employment is not wholly without the state, the statute becomes an express recognition of the right of employees who and whose employers are required to contribute to the compensation fund upon the basis of the entire wages paid the employee, we think our statute is stronger in favor of the right of such employees to participate in the fund, than if it was silent as to time and place of employment or of injuries sustained.

As the questions considered herein are so fully covered by the authorities cited, it becomes unnecessary to extend this opinion into a further review of the decided cases. And it is sufficient to say that we turn our decision upon the proper construction of our own statute, and upon the theory of a contract, express or implied, between employer and employee, accepting the provisions of the statute, and as extending its benefits and liabilities to persons so related and to employees or their dependents injured as the decedent was in this case.

For these reasons we are of opinion to reverse the order of the Compensation Commissioner, and to direct that this decision be certified to him as provided by § 43 of the workmen's compensation act, for further action by him in the premises as required thereby.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

RE CLARA C. VON ETTE, Widow of George C. Von Ette, Deceased, Employee.
GLOBE NEWSPAPER COMPANY, Employer.

CASUALTY COMPANY OF AMERICA, Insurer, Appt.

(223 Mass. 56, 111 N. E. 696.)

Master and servant — workmen's compensation — finding of Industrial Accident Board.

1. A finding by the Industrial Accident Board that the death of a workman found dead on the ground after he was known to have gone upon the roof of a building, under circumstances indicating that he had fallen therefrom, was accidental, cannot be said to have been unwarranted where no evidence indicated any other cause of death. For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. 1, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — fall from roof — course of employment.

2. A fall by a workman to his death from a roof to which he had gone, with the acquiescence of the employer, to get air and cool off because of the oppressive heat in the room where he was employed, may be found to have arisen out of and in the course of his employment within the operation of a workmen's compensation act, even though he went unnecessarily near the edge of the roof.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, II. a, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 29, 1916.)

A PPEAL by insurer from a decree of the Superior Court for Suffolk County awarding compensation to claimant in a proceeding by her under the workmen's compensation act to recover compensation for the death of her husband. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Peabody, Arnold, Batchelder, & Luther, and Samuel H. Batchelder, for appellant:

On all the evidence the employee's widow is not entitled to compensation.

Herrick's Case, 217 Mass. 111, 104 N. E. 432, 4 N. C. C. A. 554; Fisher's Case, 220 Mass. 581, 108 N. E. 361; Lee v. Stag Line, 107 L. T. N. S. 509, 56 Sol. Jo. 720, 5 B. W. C. C. 660; Sponatski's Case, 220 Mass. 528, L.R.A.1916A, 333, 108 N. E. 466, 8 N. C. C. A. 1025; 25 Harvard L. Rev. 420, 421.

Mr. C. L. Carr for appellee.

Crosby, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a decree entered in the superior court under the workmen's

Note. — The English cases construing the phrase "arising out of and in the course of the employment" are discussed at pages 40 et seq., of the annotation in L.R.A.1916A, 23, on the general subject of workmen's compensation acts; and the American cases construing this provision, including its applicability to injuries received while the employee is not actually at work, will be found at pages 232 et seq., of that note. Various specific phases of the general question as to the applicability of the act where the employee is not actually at work when injured are treated in the annotation following Hopkins v. Michigan Sugar Co. L.R.A.1916A, 314, on "Recovery of compensation for injury to employee received while L.R.A.1916D.

on the street;" annotation following Zabriskie v. Erie R. Co. L.R.A.1916A, 317, on "Injuries received while seeking toilet facilities as 'arising out of' the employment;" annotation following Re Sundine, L.R.A. 1916A, 320, on "Injuries received while procuring refreshment as arising out of and in the course of the employee's employment;" annotation following Re Brightman, L.R.A. 1916A, 322, on "Recovery of compensation for injuries received while trying to save personal belongings from loss;" annotation following De Constantin v. Public Service Commission, L.R.A.1916A, 331, on "Recovery of compensation for injuries received while going to and from work."

compensation act. The facts as disclosed by the evidence are briefly as follows:

George C. Von Ette, the deceased, was in the employ of the Globe Newspaper Company, in Boston, as a compositor. He met his death on the night of June 21, 1914. He went to work on the evening of June 21st, and his employment for that night would have been finished at a quarter before 2 o'clock the next morning. He was last seen alive about 11 o'clock. His dead body was found the next morning at a quarter before 4 o'clock upon the ground six stories below the floor where he worked. The injuries which caused his death resulted from falling from the roof of the building adjoining the room in which he worked. When the deceased left his home to go to work that night, he told his wife that he would be at home on the 2 o'clock car the next morning. He was apparently in good health; he was cheerful in disposition, and there was no evidence tending to show any trouble between him and his wife. He was apparently contented and happy. He made an appointment with one of his fellow workers to visit the new fish pier on the next day. He also made arrangements to attend a recital on the following Monday evening to be given by his sister. It was a common practice of the workmen employed in the room with the deceased to go upon the roof of a building on the employer's premises for the purpose of getting fresh air, the compositor's room where the men worked being very warm in the summer time, the temperature sometimes being 110 degrees, and warmer than the temperature outside.

The arbitration committee found "that on the morning of the 22d of June the employee went from the room in which he was working to the roof, it being a hot night and he being in need of fresh air; and while on the roof he accidentally slipped and fell to the ground below, where he met his death. . . . From the room to the roof below there is a stairway of iron as used in ordinary fire escapes."

There was an iron railing which extended along the edge of a part of the roof, but there was no railing on that side of the roof at the place above where the body of the deceased was found.

The committee further finds "that on the night the employee met with the injury, following the custom which had prevailed in the establishment, he went upon the roof; that it was a hot night; that the ventilation in the room where he worked was poor, and he went out to get the fresh air; that the building adjoining on the roof of which the employee went was the property of the employer. There is no evidence in the L.R.A.1916D.

case pointing to any other reason for his going upon the roof except . . . to get away from the heat and get into the fresh air, and we further find that in so doing he was within the scope of his employment, and that the injury arose out of and in the course of his employment."

The Industrial Accident Board took two views of the premises, one in the daytime and the other at night, and made a decision based upon their observations taken at the views, upon the evidence heard and reported by the arbitration committee, and upon other evidence presented at the hearing on review. The record contains all of the evidence presented to the committee and to the board.

One of the office rules of the employer posted on the premises was as follows: "No employee shall leave the composing room during working hours except on office business without permission of the man in charge."

The Board finds that there was an established custom among the employees, known to the employer, to go upon the roof for the purpose of obtaining fresh air, and that it was an incident of the employment of the deceased to go upon the roof. The Board also finds as follows: "That some time towards midnight of June 21st or early in the morning of June 22d the employee went from the room in which he was working, the room being hot and the work being slack, to the roof of the Devonshire street building, which is a part of the Globe premises, he being in need of fresh air and it being customary to use this roof for that purpose, and that while on this roof he accidentally walked over the edge or became dizzy and slipped off into the areaway and fell to his death. We find that on going upon said roof he was acting within the scope of his employment, and that his death was the result of injuries arising out of and in the course of his employment. We find that he did not commit suicide and that he was not under the influence of liquor."

The insurer contended that the findings made by the committee and by the Board were not warranted, and requested the Board to rule that, as matter of law, no compensation could be awarded. Whether this ruling should have been given depends upon the questions: (1) Did the deceased voluntarily take his own life or was his death the result of a condition of intoxication or was it due to his accidentally falling from the roof? (2) If the injury and death resulting therefrom were due to an accident, did the injury arise out of and in the course of the employment of the deceased?

If the deceased met with his injury by reason of his serious and wilful misconduct, no compensation can be awarded, and it may be conceded that if he voluntarily took his life, or if his fall from the roof was due to a condition of intoxication, the ruling requested should have been given. It has been held repeatedly that in cases arising under the act, in order that an award of compensation may be made the burden of proof rests upon the claimant to show by a preponderance of the evidence that an injury occurred, and that it arose out of and in the course of the employment. The determination of these issues cannot be left to speculation, surmise, or conjecture. If the evidence upon the questions involved is slender, but is sufficient to satisfy a reasonable man, a case has been made out in favor of the claimant. A finding of the Industrial Accident Board is not to be set aside if warranted by the evidence, although we might feel that a different conclusion would have been reached by us if we had been called upon to decide the question in the first instance. If this claimant were required to prove all the facts and circumstances attending her husband's death by direct evidence, it is plain that her claim would fail, but she is not limited to such proof. She may show the existence of such facts as would warrant the inference that her husband did not commit suicide, and did not meet with his death as the result of intoxication. Com. v. Doherty, 137 Mass. 245; Com. v. Kennedy, 170 Mass. 18, 25, 48 N. E. 770; Colburn v. Spencer, 177 Mass. 474, 59 N. E. 78; Bigwood v. Boston & N. Street R. Co. 209 Mass. 345, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 113, 95 N. E. 751; Sponatski's Case, 220 Mass. 526, L.R.A.1916A, 333, 108 N. E. 466, 8 N. C. C. A. 1025. There was no evidence of suicide, and therefore the presumption against the commission of a crime is enough to support the finding on that point. Com. v. Mink, 123 Mass. 422, 25 Am. Rep. 109; Sponatski's Case, 220 Mass. 526, L.R.A.1916A, 333, 108 N. E. 466, 8 N. C. C. A. 1025; Furnivall v. Johnson's Iron & Steel Co. 5 B. W. C. C. 43. There was no evidence to show that he was under the influence of liquor. The board having found that the employee did not commit suicide and was not under the influence of liquor, and no other cause of death having been suggested except that he accidentally fell off the roof, we cannot say that the finding of the Board that his death was accidental was not warranted.

The insurer further contends that the evidence does not warrant a finding that the employee's death arose out of and in the course of his employment. If we assume that it would be a violation of the L.R.A.1916D.

rule to go upon the roof during working hours without seeking permission, for the purpose of obtaining fresh air, the question is whether the rule was in force at the date of Von Ette's death, or whether it had been waived by the employer. There was ample evidence of a general practice of the men who worked in the composing room to go upon the roof to get fresh air and cool off on hot nights, and that such practice was known to the employer. We are of opinion that the Board was warranted in finding that the rule was not in force, but had become a dead letter at the time of the accident. McNee v. Coburn Trolley Track Co. 170 Mass. 283, 49 N. E. 437; Sweetland v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 177 Mass. 574, 51 L.R.A. 783, 59 N. E. 443; Boyle v. Columbian Fire Proofing Co. 182 Mass. 93, 98, 64 N. E. 726; Brady v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 184 Mass. 225, 68 N. E. 227; Cutts v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 202 Mass. 450, 456, 89 N. E. 21; Crowley v. A. O. H. Widows' & Orphans' Fund, 222 Mass. 228, 110 N. E. 276.

The question whether the injury arose out of and in the course of the employment is one of some difficulty; a majority of the court are unable to say that the finding of the Board was wrong. The accident happened upon the premises of the employer, and we think, in view of the practice which might have been found to exist under which the men went upon the roof for fresh air, that the act of the deceased in going there on a warm night was not necessarily outside his employment, but could have been found to be incidental thereto. An injury to a workman may arise out of and in the course of his employment even if he is not actually working at the time. Sundine's Case, 218 Mass. 1, L.R.A.1916A, 318, 105 N. E. 433, 5 N. C. C. A. 616; Boyle v. Columbian Fire Proofing Co. 182 Mass. 93, 64 N. E. 726; Blovelt v. Sawyer [1904] 1 K. B. 271, 73 L. J. K. B. N. S. 155, 68 J. P. 110, 52 Week. Rep. 503, 89 L. T. N. S. 658, 20 Times L. R. 105, 6 W. C. C. 16; Moore v. Manchester Liners [1910] A. C. 498, 79 L. J. K. B. N. S. 1175, 103 L. T. N. S. 226, 26 Times L. R. 618, 54 Sol. Jo. 703, 3 B. W. C. C. 527.

The fact that the unprotected place upon the roof where it is found the deceased fell off is 23 feet away from the foot of the stairway is not decisive against the claimant. He could have been found to be rightfully upon the roof, and was not bound to remain at the foot of the stairs or on any particular part of the roof. We cannot say as matter of law that the Board was not warranted in finding that the injury arose out of and in the course of the employment even if the deceased fell from the roof at a place 23 feet from the stairway. We cannot say that the Board has drawn inferences which no reasonable man could draw, and for that reason we cannot set aside its findings. Upon principle, aside from authority, the findings of the Industrial Accident Board were warranted; the conclusion which we have reached is abundantly supported by the decisions of the English courts. Marshall v. The Wild Rose [1910] A. C. 486, 79 L. J. K. B. N. S. 912, 103 L. T. N. S. 114, 26

Times L. R. 608, 54 Sol. Jo. 678, 3 B. W. C. C. 514; Fletcher v. The Dutchess [1911] A. C. 671, 81 L. J. K. B. N. S. 33, 55 Sol. Jo. 598, 4 B. W. C. C. 317, 105 L. T. N. S. 121.

We have examined all the questions raised by the appeal, but do not discover any reversible error. A majority of the court are of opinion that the entry should be, decree affirmed.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

GUST VIITA, Resp.,
v.

JAMES FLEMING, Impleaded, etc., Appt.

(— Minn. —, 155 N. W. 1077.)

Evidence — care of physician.

1. Assuming that the relation of patient and physician existed between plaintiff and defendants, the evidence was sufficient to justify the jury in finding that the physician failed to exercise toward the patient that degree of care and skill which the law requires.

For other cases, see Evidence, XII. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Physician — contract with employer — relation to servant.

2. Plaintiff's employer had an arrangement with defendants, physicians, who operated a hospital in Cloquet, by which the employer deducted a certain sum each month from the pay of each employee, and turned over the sums so deducted to defendants, who agreed, for such compensation, to care for and treat all injured employees which the employer should send to them. Plaintiff was injured, and was taken to defendants' hospital and treated by them under this arrangement. It is held that the relation of patient and physician existed between plaintiff and defendants, and that the latter owed plaintiff the duty to exercise ordinary care and skill in treating him.

For other cases, see Physicians and Surgeons, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — settlement between master and servant — effect.

3. A settlement between plaintiff and his employer under the workmen's compensation act, by which the employer was released from all claims on account of the injury to plaintiff, did not operate as a settlement or release of any claim for malpractice which plaintiff might have against the physician who treated him.

For other cases, see Release, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Damages — excess.

4. The damages awarded are not excessive.

For other cases, see Damages, III. i, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — rulings — error.

5. Certain rulings of the trial court on the admission of evidence held not erroneous.

For other cases, see Evidence, XI. h, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — instructions — duty of physician.

6. The trial court refused to instruct the jury, as requested, that defendant was bound to possess and exercise only the reasonable degree of care and skill possessed and exercised by physicians and surgeons in similar localities to that in which defendant practised, and is protected from the charge of negligence if he adopts and uses in performing an operation the method in use among competent surgeons in the locality in which the operation takes place. In its general charge the court instructed the jury the defendant was required to exercise such reasonable care and skill as an ordinary physician or surgeon in good practice would exercise under like circumstances, and that among the circumstances to be considered was the location of the physician in Cloquet, rather than in Duluth, St. Paul, or some other place. It is held that the court, in refusing to give the requested instructions, and giving, instead, the instruction quoted, committed no reversible error.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. m, 4, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Headnotes by BUNN, J.

Note. — For liability of physician to person treated under employment by a third person, see annotation following this case, post, 650.

As to the effect of settlement with, or release of, employer under workmen's compensation act, as affecting the liability of third persons, see annotation in L.R.A. 1916A, 225; and see also later case of Ross v. Erickson Constr. Co. L.R.A.—, —.

The degree of care and skill which a physician or surgeon must exercise is discussed generally in the note to Whitesell v. Hill, 37 L.R.A. 830. For the bearing on that question of the locality and extent of the practice, see also later cases, Burk v. Foster, 59 L.R.A. 277, and Dorris v. Warford, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1090. L.R.A.1916D.

Appeal — conduct of counsel.

7. While the jury was being selected, defendant's attorney testified that a certain company was interested in the defense of the case. Defendant was then sworn and asked if this was true. Held, that it was not prejudicial error to overrule an objection to this question, but the conduct of plaintiff's counsel in asking the question is disapproved.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. m, S, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 21, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant Fleming from an order of the District Court for Carlton County denying a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, or for a new trial, in an action brought to recover damages for alleged malpractice, which had resulted in a verdict in plaintiff's favor. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Abbott, MacPherran, Lewis, & Gilbert, for appellant:

A physician need not use any particular method. If there is more than one method of treatment recognized by the profession, he may use either.

De Long v. Delaney, 206 Pa. 226, 55 Atl. 965; Lorenz v. Booth, 84 Wash. 550, 147 Pac. 31; Marchand v. Bellin, 158 Wis. 184, 147 N. W. 1033; Miller v. Toles, 183 Mich. 252, L.R.A.1915C, 595, 150 N. W. 118.

So long as the language used in a legislative act or constitutional provision is not ambiguous, departure from its natural meaning is not justified by any consideration of its consequences or of public policy.

Lake County v. Rollins, 130 U. S. 662, 32 L. ed. 1060, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 651; Rodgers v. United States, 185 U. S. 83, 46 L. ed. 816, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 582; Ex parte Rickey, 31 Nev. 82, 135 Am. St. Rep. 651, 100 Pac. 134; United States v. Musgrave, 160 Fed. 700.

The mere fact that some other cause co-operated with the act of the employer to produce the injury does not absolve the employer from liability. His original act, concurring with some other cause, and both operating proximately in producing the injury, makes him liable whether the other cause was one for which the employer was responsible or not.

29 Cyc. 496; Pratt v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 107 Iowa, 287, 77 N. W. 1046; Logansport v. Smith, 47 Ind. App. 64, 93 N. E. 883; Louisville & N. R. & Lighting Co. v. Hynes, 47 Ind. App. 507, 91 N. E. 962; Sweet v. Perkins, 196 N. Y. 482, 90 N. E. 50.

One injured by the joint or successive wrongs of several parties, so long as the wrongs of the several parties have contributed to the same injury, may elect to proceed against any or all persons contributing to the injury. And the action is maintainable for the damages suffered by reason of the injury sustained.

Clinger v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 128 Ky. 736, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 998, 109 S. W. 315; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 153.

The damage sustained by reason of an injury must be fixed, and whenever the injured party accepts any sum as compensation for damages arising from an injury sustained from one of several persons, each of whom contributed to that injury, either after judgment and satisfaction or upon settlement, the same is in full satisfaction of the damages, and all others contributing to that injury are discharged.

Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 159; Siegel, C. & Co. v. Treka, 218 Ill. 559, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 647, 109 Am. St. Rep. 302, 75 N. E. 1053, 19 Am. Neg. Rep. 166; St. Louis Bridge Co. v. Miller, 138 Ill. 465, 28 N. E. 1091; Clinger v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. supra; Stedman v. O'Neill, 82 Conn. 199, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1229, 72 Atl. 923.

Defendant cannot interpose the defense that the damage was enlarged or augmented by the treatment of the physician who treated the injury.

2 Thomp. Neg. 1091; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Doyle, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 25 S. W. 461; Thompson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 91 Ala. 496, 11 L.R.A. 146, 8 So. 406; Collins v. Council Bluffs, 32 Iowa, 324, 7 Am. Rep. 200; Rice v. Des Moines, 40 Iowa, 638; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Bluhm, 109 Ill. 20, 50 Am. Rep. 601; Stover v. Bluehill, 51 Me. 439.

Mr. Andrew Nelson, for respondent:

The evidence was amply sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that the defendant was guilty of malpractice in improperly setting the fractured bones of plaintiff's left leg, and in allowing them to unite in an improper manner.

McGray v. Cobb, 130 Minn. 434, 152 N. W. 262, 153 N. W. 736; Jacobs v. Cross, 19 Minn. 523, Gil. 454; Getchell v. Hill, 21 Minn. 464; Getchell v. Lindley, 24 Minn. 265; Sawyer v. Berthold, 116 Minn. 441, 134 N. W. 120; Martin v. Courtney, 75 Minn. 255, 77 N. W. 813, 87 Minn. 197, 91 N. W. 487; Staloch v. Holm, 100 Minn. 276, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 712, 111 N. W. 264.

The relation of physician and patient existed between defendant and plaintiff, and defendant was not the servant or agent of plaintiff's employer.

Gaffney v. Sederberg, 114 Minn. 319, 131 N. W. 333; Wood v. Johnson, 117 Minn. 267, 135 N. W. 746; Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268.

The damages awarded plaintiff were reasonable, and only a fair compensation for the injuries which he has suffered at the hands of the defendant.

Sawyer v. Berthold, 116 Minn. 441, 134 N. W. 120.

It was not error to allow plaintiff to interrogate Dr. Fleming in regard to whether any indemnity insurance company was interested in the defense.

Heydman v. Red Wing Brick Co. 112 Minn. 158, 127 N. W. 561; Spoonick v. Backus-Brooks Co. 89 Minn. 354, 94 N. W. 1079; Antletz v. Smith, 97 Minn. 217, 106 N. W. 617; Viou v. Brooks-Scanlon Lumber Co. 99 Minn. 97, 108 N. W. 891, 9 Ann. Cas. 318.

A physician is required to use such reasonable care and skill as is usually given by physicians and surgeons in good standing, without reference to locality.

Gillette v. Tucker, 93 Am. St. Rep. 657, note; Gramm v. Boener, 56 Ind. 497; Getchell v. Hill, 21 Minn. 464; Martin v. Courtney, 75 Minn. 261, 77 N. W. 813, 87 Minn. 199, 91 N. W. 487; Henslin v. Wheaton, 91 Minn. 220, 64 L.R.A. 126, 103 Am. St. Rep. 504, 97 N. W. 882, 1 Ann. Cas. 19, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 362; McGray v. Cobb, 130 Minn. 434, 152 N. W. 262, 153 N. W. 736.

Mr. George B. Sjosellus also for respondent.

Bunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendants were partners as physicians and surgeons at Cloquet, Minnesota. Plaintiff claims that defendant Dolan, who died after this action was commenced, was guilty of negligence and want of skill in his treatment of an injury received by plaintiff. The trial resulted in a verdict of $2,000 against defendant Fleming, who appeals from an order denying his motion in the alternative for judgment notwithstanding the verdict or a new trial. It is contended that the verdict is not justified by the evidence. The various grounds for this contention will be noticed later. The facts are not much in dispute, and the evidence justified the jury in finding them to be as follows:

Plaintiff was in the employ of Johnson-Wentworth Company in skidding logs near Cloquet. February 5, 1914, while engaged in this employment, his left leg was fractured between the knee and ankle. Defendants operated a hospital at Cloquet, and were there engaged in the practice of their profession. Johnson-Wentworth Company and defendants had an arrangement by which the company deducted 75 cents per month from the pay of each employee, and turned this over to defendants, who agreed for this compensation to care for and treat injured employees which the company should send to them. Plaintiff, after his injury, received a ticket from his employer, presented it to defendants, and was taken into the hospital and treated. Upon this state of facts defendant bases a claim that the relation of physician and patient did not exist.

Defendant Dolan attended plaintiff. The injured leg was put in a plaster cast and allowed to so remain for a period of eleven days. The cast was then removed, and a new one put on. Soon after this plaintiff observed that his left foot turned outward, and called Dr. Dolan's attention to this condition, which, however, continued to exist during his eleven weeks' stay at the hospital, and existed at the time of the trial. The cause of this eversion of the foot was imperfect approximation of the fractured ends of the bones. Plaintiff claimed, and the evidence tended to show, that this failure to get a straight union was due to the omission of defendants to apply an extension weight to the injured limb. Negligence is also claimed in respect to their failure to use a "fracture box" or to take an X-ray photograph for the purpose of diagnosis. The evidence leaves no doubt that there was a poor result, and the inquiry on this branch of the case is whether the finding that this was due to negligence or want of skill on the part of Dr. Dolan is sustained by the evidence.

June 1, 1914, plaintiff and his employer, Johnson-Wentworth Company, agreed upon a settlement for the injuries received by plaintiff in the accident, and petitioned the court for its approval under the terms of the workmen's compensation act. The court approved the settlement agreed upon, which contained the provision that, when all payments thereunder have been made, "the employer shall be and hereby is released from all claims on account of said injury, under said act or otherwise." The claim here is that this settlement released the employer, and also the defendant, from all liability for negligence in the treatment of plaintiff's injury.

The principal contentions of defendant, as indicated in the above statement of facts, are: (1) Assuming that the relation of physician and patient existed, the evidence is not sufficient to justify the jury in finding that the physician failed to exercise that degree of care and skill which the law requires; (2) the relation of physician and patient did not exist; (3) the settlement between plaintiff and his employer bars this action; (4) the damages are excessive. It is further claimed that there were prejudicial errors in certain rulings on the admission of evidence, and in refusing to give certain instructions requested by defendant. There is also a claim of misconduct of counsel.

1. We have said that there is little doubt that there was a poor result. There was not a good union of the fractured ends of the bones. This resulted in a permanent eversion of the left foot, and the ankle and knee joints no longer operate on the same plane. In consequence of these conditions plaintiff tires very easily, and suffers considerable soreness due to the twisting of the limbs in opposite directions. His earning capacity is materially and permanently lessened. Two experienced and apparently reputable physicians and surgeons stated positively that the result was not good, and gave their opinion that the treatment given plaintiff was improper, and not good surgery. They testified that a fracture box should have been employed to hold the limb in a proper position, and an extension weight applied to draw down and overcome muscular contraction, which caused the overlapping of the fractured ends in this case. They also criticized the failure of Dr. Dolan to take an X-ray photograph to determine whether the approximation of the bones was correct. Defendants' experts gave opinions to the effect that the treatment was proper. The question was quite plainly one for the jury to decide, and we feel wholly unwarranted in saying that the jury was palpably wrong in believing the expert testimony of plaintiff's witnesses, rather than that of defendants' witnesses. We need not repeat what was said in Sawyer v. Berthold, 116 Minn. 441, 134 N. W. 120, to the effect that an expert witness may base his opinion on the result alone, and in the case at bar the opinions of the experts that the treatment was improper were based on the testimony as to what the treatment actually was, as well as upon the poor result achieved. We must hold, assuming that the relation of physician and patient existed, that the evidence sustains the finding of the jury that the physician failed in his legal duty toward the patient, and that this was the cause of the poor result. We do not see that Martin v. Courtney, 75 Minn. 255, 77 N. W. 813, id. 87 Minn. 197, 91 N. W. 487, or Staloch v. Holm, 100 Minn. 276, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 712, 111 N. W. 264, are at all decisive of the present case, or that anything said in those leading cases is of assistance to the defendant here. We fully appreciate the elements which the surgeon has to contend with in the treatment of his patient, and the injustice often involved in a charge of malpractice. The cases referred to so fully discuss these features, as do cases from other jurisdictions cited by defendant, that we can add nothing of value. The present case is simply one of conflicting expert testimony, with nothing in the facts as to the treatment, or in the probability or probative force of the evidence for defendant, that would make the granting of a new trial anything less than a usurpation of the functions of the jury.

2. The contention that the relation of physician and patient did not exist between defendant and plaintiff is based upon the facts hereinbefore stated as to the arrangement under which plaintiff was admitted to the hospital and treated by defendants. We see nothing in these facts to justify a decision that defendants did not owe plaintiff the duty to use ordinary care and skill in treating his injury. It is true that Johnson-Wentworth Company, under the terms of the compensation act, was required to provide medical and surgical treatment to the injured employee during the first ninety days of his disability and to an amount not exceeding $100. But we are unable to see how this changes the relationship between the injured employee and the physician or surgeon employed, or affects the duty of the latter to the former. It may be true in a sense that Drs. Fleming and Dolan were the agents of the employer for the purpose of minimizing the results of the injury and shortening the period of disability. Even if it be conceded that the employer might be liable for the negligence of the physicians on this theory of agency, this is no reason why the physicians are not liable directly to the patient. It is not material that plaintiff did not know the physicians, engage their services himself, or pay for the services in the ordinary way. Plaintiff, in fact, paid for medical and surgical treatment, and it surely can make no difference that this was by monthly deductions from his wages. Indeed, it is the law that the fact that a physician or surgeon renders services gratuitously does not absolve him from the duty to use reasonable care, skill, and diligence. 30 Cyc. 1573, and cases cited. In Du Bois v. Decker, 130 N. Y. 325, 14 L.R.A. 429, 27 Am. St. Rep. 529, 29 N. E. 313, it was held that a physician employed by a city to treat patients in an almshouse will not be released from liability to a patient therein for failure to exercise ordinary care and skill, although he is paid by the city, and not by the patient. We do not think that Johnson-Wentworth Company would be liable for any malpractice or negligence on the part of the physicians it employed to treat its employees. Its duty was discharged when it selected a competent physician. Youngstown Park & F. Street R. Co. v. Kessler, 84 Ohio St. 74, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 50, 95 N. E. 509, and cases cited in the note to this case as reported in Ann. Cas. 1912B, 933.

It seems clear that the physicians in the case at bar owed plaintiff the duty to exercise ordinary care and skill in treating his injury, and that he has the same rights and remedies that any patient has against his physician.

3. We need add little to what is said in the preceding paragraph in order to dispose of the argument that the settlement under the workmen's compensation act by which the employer was released from "all claims on account of said injury" operated as a settlement and release of any claim the employee might have against the physicians for malpractice. The employer, as we have seen, was not liable to the employee for the negligence of the physicians. It was not required to compensate plaintiff for damages sustained by their malpractice, and the settlement did not purport to include any such element. This is not contrary to the well known rule, existing before the compensation act, that where one is injured by the negligence of another, and uses due care in the selection of a physician or surgeon, the wrongdoer is liable for all the proximate results of his own act, although the injury has been aggravated by improper treatment by the physician. It by no means follows that the one whose negligence causes the original injury is liable for the negligence of the physician employed to treat it, and it is clearly not true that the physician is not liable to the patient for such negligence. When it appears, as it clearly does here, that there is a liability on the part of the physician to the patient, it is a strain to hold that a settlement between the injured man and the wrongdoer for the injury by the accident, whether made under the compensation act or outside of it, includes the claim that the injured man has against his physician for a separate and subsequent injury. Defendant cites numerous cases to support his contention, among others McNamara v. U. S. F. & G. Co. Case No. 169, June 9, 1914, 1 Dec. Ind. A. C. Cal 138; Favera v. Board, 1 Dec. Ind. A. C. C. B. D. Cal. 225; Smith v. Cord Taton Colliery Co. 2 W. C. C. 121; Shirt v. Calico Printers' Asso. 2 B. W. C. C. 342; and Beadle v. Milton, 114 L. T. N. S. 550, 5 W. C. C. 55. The only one of these cases that has anything to say to the point involved in the present case is Beadle v. Milton, and what is said in that case is plainly obiter dictum. In Humber Towing Co. v. Barclay, 5 B. W. C. C. 142, and Rocca v. Stanley Jones & Co. 7 B. W. C. C. 101, both decided subsequently to Beadle v. Milton, the dictum in the latter case is plainly overruled. The Humber Towing Company and the Rocca Cases distinctly hold that an employer is not liable under L.R.A.1916D.

the English compensation act for disability caused by the negligence of a physician who treats the injury. On the authority of these cases, as well as from the language of the compensation act, it must be held that Johnson-Wentworth Company was not liable for the disability caused by defendants' negligence, and that the settlement between that company and plaintiff did not include his claim against defendants for malpractice. What has been said also disposes of the claim of error in refusing certain instructions on the subject requested by defendant.

4. We need not further discuss the evidence in order to justify the conclusion we reach that the verdict is not excessive within the rules that guide this court in the consideration of this question.

5. It was not error to permit questions to the experts in regard to the propriety of taking X-ray photographs. While it is true that this was not specifically alleged as a charge of negligence, the complaint contained a general allegation of negligent treatment, and we think this evidence was properly received; at least, as against the general objection, "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial."

Error is assigned in sustaining an objection to a question asked of defendant as to whether the treatment by a certain other physician of a fracture in another case was similar to that employed by Dr. Dolan in the case at bar. That this ruling was proper is plain, but it is perhaps not so clear that the trial court was right in refusing to permit defendant to testify that, judging from his observation and experience in the vicinity of Cloquet, the treatment applied by Dr. Dolan was that used by physicians of ordinary care, skill, and caution in and about the vicinity of Cloquet. We think, however, that the ruling should be sustained on the ground that the standard of care and skill was too limited by the question. It is not the law that defendants' conduct of the case is to be judged by the degree of skill and care exercised by other physicians in the same village, and we hold that there was no error in sustaining the objection. The question is further discussed in the next paragraph. As to the other rulings on the admission of evidence that are assigned as error, we find nothing to merit special mention.

6. The trial court refused to give the instruction requested by the defendant, which was to the effect that defendant was bound to possess and exercise only that reasonable and ordinary degree of care and skill possessed and exercised by physicians and surgeons engaged in the same general line of practice in similar localities to that in which defendant practised, and is protected from the charge of negligence if he adopts and uses, in performing an operation, the methods in use among competent surgeons in the locality in which the operation takes place. In its general charge the court instructed the jury that the defendant Dolan was required to exercise such reasonable care and skill as an ordinary physician or surgeon in good standing would exercise under like circumstances, and that among the circumstances to be considered was the location of the physician in Cloquet, rather than in Duluth, St. Paul, or some other place.

The decisions in this state do not touch upon the question of the locality in which the physician or surgeon practises as affecting the degree of care and skill he is required to possess and exercise. Getchell v. Hill, 21 Minn. 464; Martin v. Courtney, 75 Minn. 255, 77 N. W. 813; id. 87 Minn. 197, 91 N. W. 487; Henslin v. Wheaton, 91 Minn. 219, 64 L.R.A. 126, 103 Am. St. Rep. 504, 97 N. W. 882, 1 Ann. Cas. 19, 15 Am. Neg. Rep. 352; Staloch v. Holm, 100 Minn. 276, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 712, 111 N. W. 264; McGray v. Cobb, 130 Minn. 434, 152 N. W. 262, 153 N. W. 736. But we do not understand that these cases commit this court to the rule that locality is immaterial. The authorities elsewhere quite uniformly agree that some consideration must be given to the question of locality, although there is a wide divergence in the views of different courts as to what the correct rule is. In Pelky v. Palmer, 109 Mich. 561, 67 N. W. 561, it was said that the character of the locality or neighborhood in which a physician or surgeon practises has an important bearing upon the requisite degree of skill. In Small v. Howard, 128 Mass. 131, 35 Am. Rep. 363, the court states that a country surgeon is not bound to the exercise of that high degree of art and skill possessed by eminent surgeons living in large cities and making a specialty of the practice of surgery, but only to that reasonable degree of learning and skill ordinarily possessed by others learned in his profession. Some cases seem to state the law as in the refused instructions; that is, that the physician or surgeon is held only to that degree of skill and learning possessed by physicians and surgeons of the particular locality where he practises. Pike v. Honsinger, 155 N. Y. 201, 63 Am. St. Rep. 655, 49 N. E. 760; Gates v. Fleischer, 67 Wis. 504, 30 N. W. 674. Other cases require the exercise of that degree of learning and skill which physicians and surgeons practising in similar localities or communities ordinarily possess. Whitesell v. Hill, 101 Iowa, 629, 37 L.R.A. 830, 70 L.R.A. 1916D.

N. W. 750, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 134; Small v. Howard, supra; Gramm v. Boerner, 56 Ind. 497; Burk v. Foster, 114 Ky. 20, 59 L.R.A. 277, 69 S. W. 1096, 1 Ann. Cas. 304, McCracken v. Smathers, 122 N. C. 799, 29 S. E. 354. See note to Whitesell v. Hill, 37 L.R.A. 830; note to Gillette v. Tucker, 93 Am. St. Rep. 657. We think it is plainly correct that the locality in which the physician or surgeon practises must be considered in determining whether he has the requisite skill and learning, but we do not think that he is bound to possess and exercise only that degree of skill and learning possessed by other practitioners in the same locality, if by that is meant the same village or city. If the same general locality is meant, as, for instance, the Northwest, or the state, no fault could be found with such a rule. But in these days the physician or surgeon in a village like Cloquet is not hampered by lack of opportunity for advancement. Frequent meetings of medical societies, articles in the medical journals, books by acknowledged authorities, and extensive experience in hospital work, put the country doctor on more equal terms with his city brother. He would probably resent an imputation that he possessed less skill than the average physician or surgeon in the large cities, and we are unwilling to hold that he is to be judged only by the qualifications that others in the same village or similar villages possess. The instructions requested provided too narrow a standard, and the court was justified in refusing them, and giving, instead, the instruction that among the circumstances to be considered was the location of the physician in Cloquet, rather than in Duluth, St. Paul, or some other place.

7. The claim of misconduct of counsel is based upon the action of counsel for plaintiff on the examination of prospective jurors in calling defendant to the stand and asking this question: "And is it true, what counsel has just testified to, namely, that a certain company is interested in the defense of this case?"

Defendant objected, the objection was overruled, and the ruling is assigned as error. We are unable to see any chance that defendant was prejudiced by the ruling, as the fact that defendant was insured was admitted. But we wish to express our emphatic disapproval of the conduct of plaintiff's counsel in calling the witness and asking this question after counsel for defendant had admitted the fact. An answer to the question could add nothing, and could serve no legitimate purpose.

Order affirmed.

Annotation—Liability of physician to person treated under employment by a third person.

As to liability for negligence of attendants furnished by relief departments towards which employees contribute, see notes to Phillips v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1167, and Texas C. R. Co. v. Zumwalt, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1206.

And as to the duty and liability of one, other than a physician or surgeon, who contracts to provide medical or surgical attention to another, see Youngstown Park & F. Street R. Co. v. Kessler, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 50, and note.

The relationship of physician and patient between a physician and one whom he treats under employment by a third person is considered in its relation to privileged communications in the notes to Woods v. Lisbon, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 886, and McGuire v. Chicago & A. R. Co. L.R.A.1915F, 888.

VITA v. FLEMING, ante, 644, is supported by the other cases passing upon the liability of a physician to a patient when he is employed by a third party.

Thus, in Carpenter v. Walker (1910) 170 Ala. 659, 54 So. 60, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 863, 2 N. C. C. A. 371, an action by a minor, by his next friend, against a physician employed by the minor's father, the court said that the action for malpractice is essentially in tort, and hence it is immaterial by whom the physician is employed.

In Harriott v. Plimpton (1896) 166 Mass. 585, 44 N. E. 992, it is held that where a physician undertook, upon request of and for compensation to be paid by another, to examine plaintiff and report whether he was diseased, he was bound to have the ordinary skill and learning of a physician, and to exercise ordinary diligence and care; and failure in these respects, to the injury of plaintiff, would make him answerable to plaintiff in damages.

In Hales v. Raines (1910) 146 Mo. App. 232, 130 S. W. 425, in which a physician was held liable for injury to a person's hand by X-ray treatment, the court says: "The case being in tort, it can make no difference whether the defendant was employed by plaintiff to treat him, or whether the plaintiff's contract was with the hospital in which defendant was interested, and defendant was assigned by the hospital association to treat the plaintiff."

In Burnham v. Stillings (1911) 76 N. H. 122, 79 Atl. 987, an action by plaintiff for alleged negligent treatment of himself while a patient in the public ward of a hospital at a time when the defendants had charge of the patients in that ward, there being no contract between the plaintiff and the defendants, so that they owed him no duty because of or in any way springing from contract, it was held that they owed plaintiff the duty not to do anything they either knew or ought to have known would injure him; and having, with his assent, undertaken to treat the plaintiff, they were bound to exercise care in what they did, and were liable if their failure to exercise due care resulted in injury to him.

In Du Bois v. Decker (1891) 130 N. Y. 325, 14 L.R.A. 429, 27 Am. St. Rep. 529, 29 N. E. 313, it is held that a physician employed by a city to treat patients in an almshouse will not be relieved from liability to a patient therein for failure to exercise ordinary care and skill, although he is paid by the city, and not by the patient.

Where one whose automobile had injured plaintiff brought his physician to examine plaintiff, and the physician examined him and prescribed for him, and gave directions to his mother regarding the treatment he should receive at her hands, the relation of physician and patient existed so that the physician would be liable for negligent treatment. Coss v. Spaulding (1912) 41 Utah, 447, 126 Pac. 468.

In Gladwell v. Steggall (1839) 5 Bing. N. C. (Eng.) 733, 8 Scott, 60, 8 L. J. C. P. N. S. 361, 3 Jur. 535, an action ex delicto against a physician for negligent treatment of plaintiff, it was held to be immaterial whether the physician was employed by plaintiff or her father.

In Pippin v. Sheppard (1822) 11 Price (Eng.) 400, an action by a married woman and her husband against a surgeon for damages sustained because of improper and unskillful treatment of the wife, a demurrer to the declaration on the ground that it was not stated or alleged, nor did it appear therefrom, by whom the defendant was retained and employed as a surgeon, was overruled and judgment given for the plaintiff, the court saying: "If a stranger had sent the defendant as a surgeon to cure this woman, undertaking to pay him for his attendance, he would not be entitled to recover or sue for damage and injury done to her in consequence of the surgeon's negligence and want of skill. From the necessity of the thing, the only person who can properly sustain an action for damages for an injury done to the person of the patient is the patient himself, for damages could not be given on that account to any other person, although the surgeon may have been retained and employed by him to undertake the cure. The party employing the surgeon can have nothing to do with this action." R. L. S.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

WILLIAM E. ANDERSON

v.

CRESCENT GARMENT COMPANY et al.

(— R. L. —, 96 Atl. 425.)

Slavery — convict labor.

The contracting by the state of the labor of a convict who is to remain under its control does not, although the state alone is to receive compensation for the service, violate a constitutional provision forbidding slavery.

For other cases, see Slavery, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 25, 1916.)

CERTIFICATION by the Superior Court for Providence and Bristol Counties for determination by the Supreme Court of a question arising in an action brought by plaintiff, an ex-convict, to recover wages from the defendant garment company, who hired his labor and services from the state under a contract with the state board of control and supply. Negative answer returned.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Fred A. Otis, George Gordon Battle, and Karl W. Kirchwey, for plaintiff:

The status of plaintiff, while forced to work for defendant without compensation, was slavery within the meaning of the Rhode Island Constitution.

Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 537, 41 L. ed. 256, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1138; Clyatt v. United States, 197 U. S. 207, 49 L. ed. 726, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 429; Hodges v. United States, 203 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 65, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 6; Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3, 27 L. ed. 835, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 72, 21 L. ed. 394, 407; Kent, Com. 247-250.

If there is any distinction between slavery and involuntary servitude, the status of the plaintiff came within the former class.

Slaughter-House Cases, supra; Bailey v. Alabama, 219 U. S. 219, 241, 55 L. ed. 191, 201, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 145; Clyatt v. United States, 197 U. S. 207, 49 L. ed. 726, 25 Sup.

Ct. Rep. 429; Re Peonage Charge, 138 Fed. 686; Peonage Cases, 136 Fed. 707; United States v. Clement, 171 Fed. 974; Jameson v. McCoy, 5 Heisk. 108.

This court would not be justified in reading an exception against convicts into the antislavery provision of the Rhode Island Constitution.

Sturges v. Crowninshield, 4 Wheat. 122, 4 L. ed. 529; Gage v. Currier, 4 Pick. 399; Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 28 L. ed. 262, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 202, 4 Am. Crim. Rep. 417; Boyd v. United States, 116 U. S. 616, 635, 29 L. ed. 746, 752, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 524; Callan v. Wilson, 127 U. S. 540, 32 L. ed. 223, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1301; Thompson v. Utah, 170 U. S. 343, 42 L. ed. 1061, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 620; Weeks v. United States, 232 U. S. 383, 58 L. ed. 652, L.R.A. 1915B, 834, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 341, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 1177.

The statute authorizing the board of control and supply to make the present contract is therefore invalid.

Henderson v. New York (Henderson v. Wickham), 92 U. S. 259, 268, 23 L. ed. 543, 547; Chy Lung v. Freeman, 92 U. S. 275, 278, 281, 23 L. ed. 550-552; Missouri v. Lewis (Bowman v. Lewis), 101 U. S. 22, 32, 25 L. ed. 989, 992; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 220, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1064; Home Ins. Co. v. New York, 134 U. S. 594, 598, 33 L. ed. 1025, 1029, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 593; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 319, 320, 322, 323, 34 L. ed. 455, 457-459, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 862; Brimmer v. Rebman, 138 U. S. 78, 82, 34 L. ed. 862, 863, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 485, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 213; Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S. 581, 602, 44 L. ed. 597, 605, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 448, 494; McCray v. United States, 195 U. S. 27, 60, 49 L. ed. 78, 97, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 769, 1 Ann. Cas. 561; Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223, 240, 49 L. ed. 169, 176, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18; Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S. 45, 64, 49 L. ed. 937, 944, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 539, 3 Ann. Cas. 1133; Bailey v. Alabama, 219 U. S. 219, 241, 55 L. ed. 191, 201, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 145; Quong Wing v. Kirkendall, 223 U. S. 59, 63, 64, 56 L. ed. 350, 352, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 192; Ho Ah Kow v. Nunan, 5 Sawy. 652, Fed. Cas. No. 6,546.

Plaintiff is entitled to recover the reasonable value of his services from the contractor in an action on quantum meruit.

Lightly v. Clouston, 1 Taunt. 112, 9 Re-

Note.—As to constitutional objections to convict labor contracts, see annotation following this case, post, 660.
L.R.A.1916D.

vised Rep. 713; Foster v. Stewart, 3 Maule & S. 191, 15 Revised Rep. 459; Culberson v. Alabama Constr. Co. 127 Ga. 599, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 411, 56 S. E. 765, 9 Ann. Cas. 507; Thompson v. Howard, 31 Mich. 309; James v. Leroy, 6 Johns. 274; Stockett v. Watkins, 2 Gill & J. 326, 20 Am. Dec. 438; Keener, Quasi-Contr. 189, 438, 440; Woodward, Quasi-Contr. §§ 285, 286; Patterson v. Prior, 18 Ind. 440, 81 Am. Dec. 367; Patterson v. Crawford, 12 Ind. 241; Abbott v. Fremont, 34 N. H. 432; Greer v. Critz, 53 Ark. 247, 13 S. W. 764; Peter v. Steel, 3 Yeates, 250; Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Butler, 187 Ala. 51, 65 So. 804.

Messrs. Herbert A. Rice, Attorney General, and Zechariah Chafee, Jr., for defendants:

The decision of the constitutional question is unnecessary, because the plaintiff cannot recover in this action even if the statute be unconstitutional and prison contract labor held to be slavery.

Price v. Neal, 3 Burr. 1354, 1 W. Bl. 390; Thompson v. Bronk, 126 Mich. 455, 85 N. W. 1084; Sloss Iron & Steel Co. v. Harvey, 116 Ala. 656, 22 So. 994; Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Cotton, 116 Ala. 669, 23 So. 1007; Maltby v. Harwood, 12 Barb. 473; Williams v. Finch, 2 Barb. 208; Alfred v. Fitzjames, 3 Esp. 3; Franklin v. Waters, 8 Gill, 322; State use of Clements v. Van Lear, 5 Md. 91; Livingston v. Ackeston, 5 Cow. 531; Cooper v. Cooper, 147 Mass. 370, 9 Am. St. Rep. 721, 17 N. E. 892; Payne's Appeal, 65 Conn. 397, 33 L.R.A. 418, 48 Am. St. Rep. 215, 32 Atl. 948; Graham v. Stanton, 177 Mass. 321, 58 N. E. 1023.

The letting of prison labor by the state under contract is not slavery within the Rhode Island Constitution.

Nelson v. People, 33 Ill. 390; Heirn v. Bridault, 37 Miss. 209; Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3, 22, 27 L. ed. 835, 843, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18; Bynum v. Bostick, 4 Desauss. Eq. 265; Brandon v. Planters' & M. Bank, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 340, 18 Am. Dec. 48; Beaty v. Judy, 1 Dana, 101; Jarman v. Patterson, 7 T. B. Mon. 644; State v. Hannah, 10 La. Ann. 131; Westbrook v. State, 133 Ga. 578, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 591, 66 S. E. 788, 18 Ann. Cas. 295; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hydrick, 109 Ark. 231, 160 S. W. 196; De Lacy v. Antoine, 7 Leigh, 438; Cunningham v. Bay State Shoe & Leather Co. 25 Hun, 210; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Boyle, 83 Ark. 302, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 317, 103 S. W. 744, 13 Ann. Cas. 167; Barrington v. Logan, 2 Dana, 432; Miller v. Dwilling, 14 Serg. & R. 442; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 69, 21 L. ed. 394, 406; Cooley, Const. Lim., 7th ed. p. 423; Nugent v. Arizona Improv. Co. 173 U. S. 338, 43 L. ed. 721, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461; Bucka- L.R.A. 1916D.

lew v. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. 112 Ala. 146, 20 So. 606; Hodges v. United States, 203 U. S. 1, 17, 51 L. ed. 65, 69, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 6; Topeka v. Boutwell, 53 Kan. 20, 27 L.R.A. 593, 35 Pac. 819; Mason & T. Co. v. Main Jellico Mountain Coal Co. 87 Ky. 467, 9 S. W. 391; Kennedy v. Meara, 127 Ga. 68, 56 S. E. 243, 9 Ann. Cas. 396; Re Dassler, 35 Kan. 678, 12 Pac. 130; Peonage Cases, 123 Fed. 671; Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U. S. 275, 282, 41 L. ed. 715, 717, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 326; Monroe v. Meuer, 35 La. Ann. 1192; Chicago v. Williams, 254 Ill. 360, 98 N. E. 666.

Messrs. Irving Champlin, James Harris, and John C. Knowles also for defendants.

Johnson, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case is before this court on a constitutional question certified by the superior court under Gen. Laws 1909, chap. 298, § 1.

The action is in assumpsit on quantum meruit. The question certified is raised by the third count of the declaration, which alleges in substance that the plaintiff, on October 10, 1910, was convicted of entering a shop in the nighttime with the intent to commit larceny, was sentenced to a term of three years' imprisonment at hard labor in the state prison in the county of Providence, and was there imprisoned from October 10, 1910, to and including June 25, 1913; that on December 24, 1912, a contract was entered into between defendant and the board of control and supply, pursuant to § 21 of chapter 825 of the Public Laws of 1912, which transferred to the board of control and supply all the power and authority previously vested in the board of state charities and corrections over the labor of prisoners and other inmates of state institutions, "with power in said board to sell the products of such institutions, and make such contract respecting the labor of the prisoners and inmates of such institutions as said board may deem proper," and provided that "all orders, agreements, and contracts made by said board with respect to said labor shall be observed and obeyed by the officers in charge of the prisoners and other inmates of such institutions;" that pursuant to said contract the labor and services of the plaintiff were furnished to the defendant, and accepted and hired by it, and the plaintiff was employed by the defendant and for its benefit without the plaintiff's consent and against his will, from January 1, 1913, to and including June 25, 1913; that during that period the plaintiff was compelled, by force and threats, against his will, to perform labor and services in accordance with the provisions of the said contract, and by his labor and services manufactured shirts in accordance therewith, and the profits from his said labor and services were received and retained by the defendant, subject only to the payment to the state of Rhode Island, pursuant to the terms of the said contract, of the sum of 50 cents per dozen shirts manufactured through the plaintiff's labor and services; that the reasonable value of the said services was $3.50 per day, and that no part of the value of the said labor and services or the product thereof, and no compensation whatever therefor, was ever paid to the plaintiff. It is further alleged: "That said § 21 of said act, in authorizing and giving to the said board power to make such contracts respecting labor of the prisoners as said board may deem proper, is unconstitutional, in that it is repugnant to, and in violation of, article 1, § 4, of the Constitution of Rhode Island, and such contract between the said state by the said board, and the defendant, the Crescent Garment Company, is therefore illegal, null, and void."

A fictitious promise by the defendant in consideration of the promise to pay the plaintiff the reasonable value of his services, amounting to the sum of $1,000, and the breach of that promise, are then alleged. The contract in question is made a part of the third count, and annexed thereto as "Exhibit A." Its material provisions are: The state agrees to furnish, and the company agrees to accept and hire, the labor and services of not less than 250 inmates of the Rhode Island state prison and of the Providence county jail. The contract, however, provides that if the state can furnish more or cannot furnish so many as 250, the company shall accept the services of such number as can be furnished; it being understood that all available inmates shall be furnished. Such inmates are to be employed in the factory within the prison in making shirts, with machinery and materials furnished by the company, which is to pay to the state 50 cents per dozen for all shirts manufactured under the contract. It is provided that the working day shall last from "7 or 7:30 A. M. to 12 noon, and from 1 P. M. to 4:30 or 5:30 P. M., and on Saturday from 7 or 7:30 A. M. to 12 noon." The company is to employ a superintendent and assistants, subject to the approval of said board, and said employees are always to be subject to such rules and regulations as said board may prescribe. The 6th section is as follows: "Sixth. The party of the second part further agrees to impart all needful instructions to said inmates employed hereunder in the manufacture of said shirts, and to employ at its own expense a superintendent and such other assistants as may be necessary to impart such instructions and to direct and superintend the manufacture of said shirts, but the employment of said superintendent and said assistants shall be subject to the approval of the board of control and supply, on behalf of the party of the first part, and said superintendent and assistants shall at all times be subject to such rules, regulations, and limitations as said board of control and supply may from time to time prescribe, the said board of control and supply reserving the right to deny admission to or to eject from said factory any person whom said board may for cause regard as objectionable, or whom said board may deem guilty of any violation of the rules of said prison or of any breach of conduct therein; and it is understood and agreed that said party of the first part shall at all times have the right to control and govern said inmates, to regulate their conduct, and to assign the tasks to be performed under this agreement, and further to make and institute all rules and regulations for the proper discipline and guidance of said inmates, and at any time to change the same, and further to forbid and prevent any work, or any manner or method of performing the same, that may be deemed injurious to the health, dangerous to the person, or subversive of prison discipline."

When it appeared that the third count of the declaration brought in question the constitutionality of § 21 of chapter 825 of the Public Laws of 1912, the superior court certified the case to this court for the determination of the constitutional question.

It is necessary first to consider whether the determination of the constitutional question is necessary for the disposition of the case. The plaintiff alleges that pursuant to said contract the labor and services of the plaintiff were furnished to the defendant and accepted by it; that he was employed by the defendant, and that he was compelled by force and threats against his will to work for the defendant. He does not allege that he was so compelled to labor by the defendant, and that allegation cannot be inferred for him. The compulsion of which he complains, therefore, must have been exercised by the state, and if the statute was invalid the wrong done the plaintiff in compelling him to work for the defendant was done by the state. If, however, the contract made under said § 21 reduced the plaintiff to the condition of slavery, it may be argued that the defendant would be liable to an action of assumpsit upon a tort committed by it in receiving said labor. In so receiving the labor of the plaintiff, was the defendant guilty of a breach of duty which it owed to said plaintiff? If so, did said breach of duty violate a right of the plaintiff? Clearly there was neither a breach of duty nor a violation of right, unless said contract and its enforcement reduced the prisoner to the condition of a slave. He could not have been the slave of the defendant, for under the contract the control over him was reserved to the state. If the state was the master of the plaintiff as a slave, it clearly only became such by virtue of the contract with the defendant and the carrying out of the same, as prior thereto it was simply the custodian of a convict sentenced to the state prison for a definite term at hard labor. If the state thus became the master of the slave, the wrong done the plaintiff by the defendant could only consist in entering into said contract and receiving under it the labor of the plaintiff, and thereby assisting in the completion of the transformation of the condition of the plaintiff from that of a convict into that of a slave.

Where the labor of a convict has been received by a contractor under a contract which was illegal, either through want of authority to make the contract, or a void commitment, or holding to labor after a valid commitment had expired, it has been held that the law will raise an implication of a promise upon the basis of the tort so committed by the contractor. Thus, in Greer v. Critz, 53 Ark. 247, 13 S. W. 764, the statute placed the management and control and the hiring of convicts under the jurisdiction of the county courts. Under a contract with the judge of the county court, in vacation of the court, the convict was delivered to the contractor to work out his fine, and worked for the contractor under said contract. The court held that there was no power or authority given by the statute to the judge of the county court, in vacation of said court, to make a contract for that purpose, which could be done alone by the order of the court itself, and held that the defendant, being a party to the contract, was bound to know of this lack of authority, and that as he had the benefit of the plaintiff's services he was obliged to pay for them. In Patterson v. Crawford, 12 Ind. 241, a person was convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary by a court which had no jurisdiction, and was compelled by the warden to labor for a contractor. The court (page 244) said: "That the defendant knew of the labor charged in the complaint, and assented to it, is a proposition which the facts appearing in the record will not allow us to doubt; and for aught that appears in the defense in question, he did know that Armstrong had not been legally convicted. The defendant, being lessee of the state prison, and entitled by law to the labor of all those legally imprisoned, and of no others, had a right to know, and was, in our opinion, bound to know, who were legally in the warden's custody. But there is really nothing in the second defense inconsistent with the fact of the work having been done for the defendant at his request, and with his knowledge of all the circumstances."

In Patterson v. Prior, 18 Ind. 440, 442, 81 Am. Dec. 367, the court said: "At the time the appellee was convicted and sent to the penitentiary, the court of common pleas had no jurisdiction in that behalf; hence the conviction and judgment were nullities, and furnish the appellants no protection for the tort committed in confining him in the penitentiary. Patterson v. Crawford, supra. The appellants must be presumed to have known the law, and that they had no legal right to imprison the appellee, or cause him to labor. That they may have been responsible to him in some form cannot be doubted. They undoubtedly committed a tort, and the question here is whether the tort can be waived, and an action maintained on an implied assumpsit? We will first examine this question so far as it relates to Patterson. He, it seems, was the lessee of the penitentiary, and received all the benefit of the appellant's labor. He must be presumed to have assented to the performance of the labor, and, being benefited thereby, the law implies a promise to pay what it is reasonably worth. . . . In our opinion, so far as Patterson is concerned, the tort may be waived, and an action be maintained on the implied assumpsit. The case, however, is entirely different as to Miller, the warden of the penitentiary. He received no benefit of the plaintiff's labor, and, not having been benefited, there is, as to him, no consideration to support an implied assumpsit to pay."

In Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Butler (June 4, 1914) 187 Ala. 51, 65 So. 804, the court said: "Alex Butler was convicted of petit larceny. He was sentenced to hard labor for one hundred ten days as punishment for the crime. The costs in the cause amounted to $29.35, and he was sentenced to additional hard labor for the county until the costs were paid at the rate of 40 cents per day. Under the law the defendant was entitled to work out his costs at the rate of 75 cents per day, instead of at the rate of 40 cents per day. When, therefore, the prisoner had performed hard labor for the county for the period for which he was sentenced as punishment for his crime, and had also performed additional hard labor for a sufficient number of days at the rate of 75 cents per day to pay his costs, he was then entitled to his discharge, and any further imprisonment of the prisoner became illegal. Ex parte Haley, 1 Ala. App. 528, 56 So. 245. The judgment of the court sentencing the prisoner to hard labor showed the above situation. Ibid. . . . The law definitely fixed the exact date upon which this convict's term expired, and any labor which the appellant required him to perform after that date was without warrant of law, at a time when the appellant had no legal right to the custody of the convict, and at a time when the law may well raise an implied contract to pay him for the value of his services."

In the case at bar, the convict was not delivered to the contractor. The defendant, therefore, could not become the master, even though the making and enforcement of the contract made the plaintiff a slave. The only possible master in such case would be the state, which retained the control of the convict. If the defendant was guilty of a tort, therefore, it could only be in receiving from the state the labor of the convict, who had been made a slave by the contract into which defendant had entered with the state.

If the plaintiff was so made a slave, and the defendant, knowing him to be a slave, so received his labor, we think such conduct on the part of the defendant would constitute a tort, upon which the law would raise an implication of a promise to pay therefor. Would he be bound to have that knowledge? We are unable to say that he would not be so bound. The plaintiff's case rests entirely upon his assumption that by the contract made under the statute and its enforcement he was made a slave. That can only be determined by the decision of the constitutional question certified. We will therefore consider the constitutional question.

Section 4 of article 1 of the Constitution reads: "Slavery shall not be permitted in this state." We do not need to follow the elaborate arguments of plaintiff's counsel to come to the conclusion that the clause of the Rhode Island Constitution under consideration had the same effect upon slavery as the 13th Amendment to the Federal Constitution, and that slavery as a legal status ceased to exist within this state upon its adoption. And we have no doubt that, like the 13th Amendment, said provision of the Rhode Island Constitution, while designed to forbid slavery as it existed in this country and as it had existed in Rhode Island, doubtless applies equally to all races of men.

Was the aforesaid condition of the plaintiff slavery? Black's Law Dictionary, 2d ed. p. 1092, gives the following definitions: L.R.A.1916D.

"Slave. A person who is wholly subject to the will of another; one who has no freedom of action, but whose person and services are wholly under the control of another. Webster. One who is under the power of a master, and who belongs to him, so that the master may sell and dispose of his person, of his industry, and of his labor, without his being able to do anything, have anything, or acquire anything, but what must belong to his master. La. Civ. Code, art. 35."

"Slavery. The condition of a slave; that civil relation in which one man has absolute power over the life, fortune, and liberty of another."

In 3 Bouvier's Law Dictionary, 3082, a slave is defined as: "One over whose life, liberty, and property another has unlimited control. Every limitation placed by law upon the absolute control modifies, and to that extent changes, the condition of the slave. In every slaveholding state of the United States the life and limbs of a slave were protected from violence inflicted by the master or third persons."

Webster's New International Dictionary defines a slave as: "A person held in bondage to another; one held as a chattel; one whose person and services are under the control of another as owner or master."

The Century Dictionary gives the following definitions:

"Slave. A person who is the chattel or property of another and is wholly subject to his will."

"Slavery. (1) A state of servitude; the condition of a slave; bondage; entire subjection to the will and commands of another; the obligation to labor for a master without the consent of the servant; the establishment of a right in law which makes one person the absolute master of the body and the service of another. (2) The keeping or holding of slaves; the practice of keeping human beings in a state of servitude or bondage."

In Douglass v. Ritchie, 24 Mo. 177 (1857), the court said: "Our system of slavery resembles that of the Romans rather than the villenage of the ancient common law, and hence both the community and the courts have looked to the Roman rather than to the old common law of England for rules applicable to it. [Citing cases.] Under the former law, slaves were things, and not persons; they were not subjects of civil rights, and, of course, were incapable of owning property or of contracting legal obligations; they and all that appertained to them belonged to their master, and they were under his dominion. In a word, slavery was then defined to be an institution by which one man is made the property of another.' Just. Inst. lib. 1, tit. 3. And such undoubtedly is our African slavery; and accordingly the slave's incapacity to be the subject of civil rights,—as to own property, or contract a legal obligation,—which flows from the nature of the institution, is adopted by our people in practice and recognized in the decisions of our courts."

In Westbrook v. State, 133 Ga. 578, 582, 583, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 591, 66 S. E. 788, 791, 18 Ann. Cas. 295, a convict had been convicted of murder, and the case was before the supreme court on exceptions. The court said: "Upon conviction the convict may lose his liberty for the time being, and may be required to perform hard labor, but he does not lose security of his person against unlawful invasion. The security of person, except as expressly provided by statute, remains his right; and if it be unlawfully invaded, he may resist such unlawful invasion as if there had been no conviction."

133 Ga. 584: "Our attention has been called to the case of Jim v. State, 15 Ga. 535, where it was held: 'The homicide of his master, overseer, or lawful employer, by a slave, in resistance to an assault made upon him, must be either justifiable homicide or murder.' But we think a convict stands upon a different footing from a slave, and his rights are not so restricted as it was ruled in that case with respect to a slave. The convict occupies a different attitude from the slave toward society. He is not mere property, without any civil rights, but has all the rights of an ordinary citizen which are not expressly or by necessary implication taken from him by law. While the law does take his liberty, and imposes a duty of servitude and observance of discipline for the regulation of convicts, it does not deny his right to personal security against unlawful invasion."

In Laws of Rhode Island 1798, page 607, an act relative to slaves and their manumission for support, it is provided:

"Section 8. And be it further enacted that no person born within this state on or after the 1st day of March, A. D. 1784, shall be deemed or considered a servant for life, or a slave; and that all servitude for life, or slavery of children to be born as aforesaid, in consequence of the condition of their mothers, be and the same is hereby taken away, extinguished, and forever abolished.

"Section 9. And be it further enacted that every child born on or after the said 1st day of March, A. D. 1784, whose mother is or shall be a slave, shall be supported and maintained by the owner of the mother, until such child arrive at the age of twenty-L.R.A.1916D.

one years: Provided the owner of the mother shall, during that time, hold her in slavery."

These sections without change appear in Public Laws 1822, page 443, and were in force until 1844. The expressions used in said § 8, "a servant for life, or a slave," and "all servitude for life, or slavery," indicate clearly that slavery and servitude for life were considered interchangeable expressions. Moreover, the use of the word "owner" in § 9 shows that slavery was considered to be the ownership of one human being by another. The word "slave," as used in the above statute, clearly meant a person held under the well-known institution of slavery. The members of the convention living under this statute would naturally have it in mind when they used the word "slavery" in the Constitution, and would use it with the same meaning. The rights of a prisoner in Rhode Island are far wider than those of a slave. A slave had no property rights whatever, and could neither sue nor be sued, except that he might sue to enforce his freedom. In Cobb on Slavery, p. 235, it is said: "Of . . . the right of private property the slave is absolutely deprived."

And (page 238): "A slave cannot take by descent, there being in him no inheritable blood."

The rights of a prisoner in Rhode Island in regard to property and access to the courts are as follows: Gen. Laws 1909, chap. 354, § 35: "No conviction or sentence for any offense whatsoever shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture of estate."

Section 36 provides that every person convicted of murder or arson is civilly dead.

Section 53: "No person who shall be sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison shall have any power, during his imprisonment, to make any will or any conveyance of his property or of any part thereof."

These statutes are construed and the whole subject discussed in Kenyon v. Saunders, 18 R. I. 590, 26 L.R.A. 232, 30 Atl. 470 (1894), where it was held that a man in prison for a term of years for felony has such an interest in the personal estate of his wife, if she died intestate, as to entitle him to contest the validity of the will, although he could not administer on her estate, and that he was entitled to prosecute an appeal from the decree of the probate court admitting his wife's will to probate, and to give the bond required by statute in order to take an appeal. Stiness, J., said: "If it should be held that his conviction deprives him of the right to appeal, then he would thereby also be deprived of the power ever to enforce his right to the property itself. . . . A convict is neither civilly dead, nor deprived of his rights of property; and, if this be so, he should be entitled to enforce such right when it is necessary to do so."

The opinion goes on to hold that the convict may give a valid appeal bond. Thus, a convict can have an interest in property, while a slave cannot; a convict can sue, while a slave cannot. This distinction remains, whether or not the convict's labor is subject to a contract. While his rights are considerably limited because of his imprisonment, he still retains many important rights which a slave lacks. Employment of prisoners at hard labor existed before the adoption of the Constitution. Section 10 of chapter 8 of "An Act Concerning Crimes and Punishments," passed February 3, 1838 (Pub. Laws 1822-44, p. 981), provided: "Every person who shall be sentenced to imprisonment for life, or the term of one year or more, for any one offense, shall be imprisoned in the state prison at Providence, and there kept at hard labor, in separate confinement."

While no contracts for the labor of convicts have been shown before 1842, when our Constitution was drafted, the act concerning crimes and punishments, chap. 10, § 1, enacted February 3, 1838 (Pub. Laws 1822-44, p. 999), provides that the inspectors of the state prison "shall advise with the warden as to the purchase of necessary supplies and provisions for the convicts and materials to be manufactured by them, and as to the sale of all articles made in the said prison; . . . nor shall they be in any way interested in any contract for the supplies of the same, or the labor of the convicts."

The Constitution was drafted by the convention November 5, 1842, and by its provisions was to go into effect, if adopted, on the first Tuesday of May, 1843. June 27, 1845, the general assembly passed an act providing that "the keeper of each county jail, except the jail in the county of Providence, shall be allowed in full for his services under this act, 50 per cent of all the profits on the labor done under his care and oversight by persons committed to such jail." Pub. Laws 1844-57, p. 625.

The first act specifically providing for letting the services of prisoners by contract is Public Laws of Rhode Island, 1844-57, p. 672 (January, 1847), § 4 of which provided: "The warden, under the direction of the inspectors, may let the services of the prisoners to contractors for the kinds of work before specified."

A similar provision is included in every subsequent revision of the statutes to and L.R.A.1916D.

including Gen. Laws 1909, chap. 360, §§ 9, 12. Thus, although the validity of prison labor contracts has never been before our courts, it has been repeatedly recognized by legislatures during a period of certainly sixty-eight years. During all that time it had never been publicly questioned until the present suit was brought. While such protracted, continuous, and thorough acquiescence is not conclusive, it is a strong argument; and the settled opinion and practice of many legislatures are entitled to serious consideration before it is overthrown, even though it has not the authority of a judicial decision.

The plaintiff's counsel cite definitions of slavery from Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 537, 41 L. ed. 256, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1138; Hodges v. United States, 203 U. S. 1, 51 L. ed. 65, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 6; Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 3, 27 L. ed. 835, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 18. In Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. at page 542, 41 L. ed. 257, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1140, slavery was defined as follows: "Slavery implies involuntary servitude,—a state of bondage; the ownership of mankind as a chattel, or at least the control of the labor and services of one man for the benefit of another, and the absence of a legal right to the disposal of his own person, property, and services."

In Hodges v. United States, 203 U. S. at page 17, 51 L. ed. 69, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 8, it was said: "A reference to the definitions in the dictionaries of words whose meaning is so thoroughly understood by all seems an affectation, yet in Webster 'slavery' is defined as 'the state of entire subjection of one person to the will of another.'"

In Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. at page 22, 27 L. ed. 843, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 29, the court said: "The long existence of African slavery in this country gave us very distinct notions of what it was, and what were its necessary incidents. Compulsory service of the slave for the benefit of the master, restraint of his movements except by the master's will, disability to hold property, to make contracts, to have a standing in court, to be a witness against a white person, and such like burdens and incapacities, were the inseparable incidents of the institution."

In their argument plaintiff's counsel select the definition from Plessy v. Ferguson, supra, as the "most careful and accurate one to be found in the books." In commenting upon it they pass by the first part, viz., "Slavery implies involuntary servitude,—a state of bondage; the ownership of mankind as a chattel,"—and say: "According to this definition the elements of slavery are: (1) The control of the labor and services of a person (2) for the benefit of another, and (3) the absence of a legal right in the former to the disposal of his own person, property, and services. We submit that these elements clearly exist under the contract by which the plaintiff was compelled to work for the defendant in the present case: (1) The labor and services of the plaintiff were controlled directly by the contractor, and he was compelled by force and threats, against his will, to perform the tasks assigned to him. (2) The benefit or profit from his services accrued to the contractor, subject to the fixed payments to the state; the plaintiff himself was entitled to no benefit from those services. (3) The plaintiff was without legal right, under the contract, to dispose of his person, property, or services, either by working for the state, some other contractor, or himself, or by not working at all. As to his person and services this is clear. His right to the disposal of his property was equally nonexistent; a convict may not make a will or any conveyance of his property or any part thereof during his imprisonment. Kenyon v. Saunders, 18 R. I. 590, 592, 26 L.R.A. 232, 30 Atl. 470; R. I. Pub. Stat. chap. 248, § 52."

The statement that the labor and services of the plaintiff were controlled directly by the contractor is not borne out by the allegations of plaintiff's declaration, or by the provisions of the contract annexed thereto. The compulsion alleged in the third count of the declaration is not set out as that of the defendant. As to the benefit or profit from his services, his labor was a part of his sentence, and was furnished to the contractor by the state for a compensation fixed in the contract. His inability to dispose of his person or services did not arise from the contract, but from his status as a convict under sentence in prison. His services, being a part of his sentence, could not be disposed of or controlled otherwise than by the state. His disabilities in regard to the disposal of his property are due to the provisions of the statutes, applicable alike to all convicts, and were not imposed by the contract made under said § 21 of chapter 825 of the Public Laws of 1912.

Plaintiff's counsel say in their brief: "It may finally be contended that our reasoning carries us too far, and, if adopted, would lead to the result that the state cannot compel convicts to labor for itself, either without compensation or at a compensation fixed by the state. That problem is not now before this court. The only question now under consideration is whether uncompensated contract labor by convicts is within the constitutional prohibition; any additional questions of this nature may be dealt with when they arise. Hence we need L.R.A.1916D.

neither affirm nor deny that either of the situations suggested would violate the constitutional prohibition. At the same time, it is proper to call the court's attention to the clear distinction which exists between the status of a convict who is obliged to work for the state and that of the convict who is compelled to labor for anyone to whom the state sees fit to let or sell his services. The former is slavery as defined in Plessy v. Ferguson, supra: 'A control of the labor and services of one man for the benefit of another, and the absence of a legal right to the disposal of his own person, property, and services.' But the latter is slavery in the strictest sense of the word; it is chattel slavery such as existed in the South prior to 1870. The distinctive feature of that slavery was 'the ownership of mankind as a chattel,' involving as it did a right in the owner to lease or sell his slave at will. Here the state stands in the place of owner, and the contractor is the lessee or purchaser for a term of years, of the services of the convict. This amounts in substance to a disposal of the convict himself, since it entails of necessity the practical control of the convict's person, as well as his services, by the lessee's agent. It is true that the latter has not an absolute power over the convict's person. Neither did the lessee of a slave in antebellum days; he was obliged to use reasonable care and moderation in the treatment and discipline of the slave hired by him, and was liable to the owner for any injury resulting from an abuse of his power."

Plaintiff's counsel have thus furnished a definition of the kind of slavery they seek to establish, not "the status of a convict who is compelled to work for the state," which they claim is slavery as defined in Plessy v. Ferguson, supra, but "that of the convict who is compelled to labor for anyone to whom the state sees fit to let or sell his services." Of this they say: "The latter is slavery in the strictest sense of the word; it is chattel slavery such as existed in the South prior to 1870. The distinctive feature of that slavery was 'the ownership of mankind as a chattel,' involving as it did a right in the owner to lease or sell his slave at will."

The condition of slavery sought to be established is a synthetic slavery, made up from the incidents inherent in the condition of being a convict lawfully under sentence and the fact that said convict was compelled to work pursuant to the contract made under the statute. As we have seen, the alleged direct control by the contractor is not present. The plaintiff's inability to dispose of his person, property, and services is in no way due to the contract of which he complains, but is an incident of his condition as a convict. Then, on the other hand, there are present rights which are not those of a slave, as the right to sue and to enter into a contractual obligation in the necessary prosecution of his suit, and in short all the rights of an ordinary citizen which are not necessarily taken from him by reason of his condition as a convict. The condition of alleged slavery which he has constructed fills the requirements of no definition which has been cited, not even the one he selects as the most accurate one to be found in the books. That requires "a state of bondage,—the ownership of mankind as a chattel." That portion of the definition he passes by, and depends upon the remaining portion, viz.: "At least, the control of the labor and services of one man for the benefit of another, and the absence of a legal right to the disposal of his own person, property, and services." Of the portions thus selected, the words "the control of the labor and services of one man for the benefit of another" constitute the sum total of material for the construction of the condition of slavery claimed, as "the absence of a legal right to dispose of his own person, property, or services" is incident to his legal status as a convict under sentence for a term in state prison, and does not in any way result from the contract. As to said first part of said selected portion of the definition, his counsel seem to recognize the necessity of a master for the slave, and say that "the labor and services of the plaintiff were controlled directly by the contractor," which is not alleged in the declaration, adding, "and he was compelled by force and threats, against his will, to perform the tasks assigned him," which last is alleged in the declaration, but the declaration fails to allege that he was thus compelled by the defendant.

As we have seen, it is not claimed that to cause a prisoner to work for the state is a violation of the constitutional provision forbidding slavery, but that to cause him to work upon the materials of another than the state, under a contract between such other person and the state, in the prison of the state, under the control of the state, the state receiving compensation for said work, and the convict not receiving compensation therefor, results in the transformation of the labor which is imposed upon the convict as a part of his sentence into that of a slave, and constitutes a condition of slavery. If this contention is sound, it follows that, while the state may compel the convict to work for the state upon the materials of the state in its workshop situated in the prison, the state must own the materials upon which the work is done or the L.R.A.1916D.

convict cannot lawfully be compelled to work. The state must therefore engage in business in which it directly employs the convict upon its own materials or it cannot lawfully compel him to work at all. Does the convict work any the less for the state when he is compelled to work upon the property and with the appliances of a contractor with the state, in the prison of the state, under the control of the state, for a wage paid to the state by the contractor under a contract made with the state, than when he so works upon materials owned by the state? It is claimed that he is compelled to work for the benefit of another, and not for the state. True, his labor is done upon materials which are not the property of the state. The contractor with the state, however, only has the labor done thereon, for which he pays the state, and which it was the right of the state to have done as a part of the sentence imposed upon the convict. We cannot think that the condition of the convict is changed by such work upon the materials of the contractor from his condition as a convict into that of a slave, either of the state or the contractor.

We see no reason to doubt that, in adopting § 4 of article 1 of the Constitution, the convention and the people had in mind slavery as it then existed in some of the states of the Union and as it had existed in this state. The word "slavery" at that time was used both in our statutes and in common parlance to mean a very definite thing, namely, the institution of slavery. We see no reason to suppose it was used in the Constitution in any other sense. The fact that prison labor existed, without question, contemporaneously with the adoption of the Constitution, is also strong evidence that the prohibition was not intended to include such labor. The long acquiescence in the legislative exercise of the power to let prison labor, beginning in January, 1847, is also a strong argument in favor of the validity of that power. We are of the opinion that the plaintiff has entirely failed to establish his contention that his status under said contract was that of a slave.

Because the statute empowers the board of control and supply to "make such contract respecting the labor of prisoners and inmates of such institutions as said board may deem proper," and provides that "all orders, agreements, and contracts made by said board with respect to said labor shall be observed and obeyed by the officers in charge of the prisoners and other inmates of such institutions," plaintiff's counsel argue that the statute "obviously authorized the board to delegate to the contractor complete control over the person and the conduct of the prisoner while at work (subject to the restrictions as to corporal punishment heretofore noted), as well as over his labor;" that "the power conferred on the board, and not the extent to which it is exercised, is the test of the statute's validity," and "that a court, in passing on the constitutionality of a statute, is not confined to its language, but may look to its necessary or natural effect and its natural operation." Section 21 of chapter 825, Pub. Laws 1912, reads: "Section 21. All the power and authority now vested in, and exercised by, the board of state charities and corrections over the labor of prisoners and other inmates of the institutions now under the control and management of the board of state charities and corrections are hereby transferred to and vested in the board created by this act, with power in said board to sell the products of such institutions and make such contract respecting the labor of the prisoners and inmates of such institutions as said board may deem proper, and all orders, agreements and contracts made by said board with respect to said labor shall be observed and obeyed by the officers in charge of the prisoners and other inmates of such institutions. For the purpose of the performance of their duties under this act the members of the board shall have all the powers and privileges conferred upon and enjoyed by the members of the state board of charities and corrections under the provisions of chapter 360 of the General Laws, and any acts in amendment thereof, of visiting such institutions and conferring with the prisoners and inmates therein."

The only labor for which contracts are authorized by the statute is that of prisoners and inmates of the institutions. All orders, agreements, and contracts with respect to such labor are to be observed and obeyed by the officers in charge of the prisoners and other inmates of the institutions. The board is authorized to visit such institutions and confer "with the prisoners and inmates therein." It is evident that the statute contemplates only the labor of such prisoners and inmates while prisoners and inmates of the institutions. There is no indication of an intent to authorize the making of a contract whereby the state shall part with or permit any interruption of its lawful control over said prisoners and inmates. The statute authorizes the board to "makes such contract respecting the labor of prisoners and inmates of such institutions as it may deem proper." This can only mean a contract respecting such labor; and there cannot be imported into the statute the authority on the part of the board to interfere with or to modify or to terminate the lawful control of the state over said prisoners and other inmates of the institutions. The discretion given to the board in the making of such contracts is a lawful discretion as to the subject-matter of such contracts, and does not authorize the exercise of arbitrary power by the board in disposing of the control and custody of the prisoners and inmates of the state institutions. We find nothing in the statute which violates the constitutional provision forbidding slavery, or which in its necessary or natural operation tends to bring about such a result.

Our decision is that § 21 of chapter 825 of the Public Laws of Rhode Island, January, 1912, is not in violation of article 1, § 4, of the Constitution of Rhode Island. The papers in the case, with our decision indorsed thereon, will be returned to the Superior Court for the Counties of Providence and Bristol for further proceedings.

Annotation—Constitutional objections to convict labor contracts.

For the constitutionality of imprisonment for breach of contract for labor or rental, see note to Ex parte Hollman, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 242.

For the right to compel prisoners to labor, see Topeka v. Boutwell, 27 L.R.A. 593, and note.

For convict labor or hard labor as a cruel and unusual punishment, see note to State ex rel. Garvey v. Whitaker, 35 L.R.A. 566.

This note deals only with cases involving the question as to whether contracts for the leasing of convict labor are intrinsically constitutional. The question whether the state has the power to compel convicts to labor, either as punishment or as part of the prison discipline, L.R.A.1916D.

where the convicts are not leased to third parties, is not considered; nor are cases considered in which the question was as to whether, in a particular case, a sentence to hard labor was excessive or cruel and unusual punishment.

The few cases passing upon the constitutionality of contracts leasing to private persons the labor of persons serving sentence upon conviction of crime are in accord with ANDERSON v. CRESCENT GARMENT Co. ante, 651.

Thus, in State v. McCauley (1860) 15 Cal. 429, the court holds that a contract made by the state leasing the state's prison and the labor of the convicts therein for a term of years was constitutional, saying: "The objection to the constitutionality of the act on the second ground, that it authorizes the transfer of the convicts to private individuals, and a lease of the labor of future convicts, is untenable. The power over the whole subject of punishment for crime is vested in the legislature. The only limitation upon its exercise is the inhibition against the infliction of cruel and unusual punishments, which are held to mean those of a barbarous character, and unknown to the common law. The first object of punishment is the protection of society; the reformation of prisoners is only subsidiary and incidental to this. Their conviction has subjected them to a constitutional, involuntary servitude; and their labor and the proceeds of it belong to the state, and may be disposed of in such way as the legislature, in its discretion, may determine. The practice of leasing out the labor of convicts prevails in several, and, as we are informed, in a majority of the states; and the power of the legislature to authorize contracts of this kind has never, we believe, been questioned. The rights of every lessee must, of course, be subordinate to the right of the governor to pardon and thereby discharge convicts from custody, and to such modifications in the extent of punishment as may be made by future legislation."

In Georgia Penitentiary Cos. v. Nelms (1882) 71 Ga. 301, the court holds that there is no provision of the Constitution of the state which prohibits the legislature from authorizing the governor to enter into contracts disposing of the labor of convicts of the state, provided that in making such contracts of lease the state reserves the police power over them.

In Mason & F. Co. v. Main Jellico Mountain Coal Co. (1888) 87 Ky. 467, 9 S. W. 391, it is held that a statute authorizing the leasing of convicts to labor for private individuals or corporations, where such convicts had been sentenced to punishment by confinement in the penitentiary at hard labor and solitary confinement, was not an ex post facto law in the sense that it authorized the infliction upon each convict of another and greater punishment than he was adjudged to suffer.

In State v. Adams (1803) 1 Brev. (S. C.) 279, it was held that a statute providing that one against whom has been found a charge of bastardy, and who will not give the security required by the act for the support of the child, shall be bound to servitude for any time not exceeding four years, was constitutional, the court saying that for any particular immoral or disorderly act the legislature could deprive a person temporarily of his personal liberty, and "the mode by which this restraint shall be imposed can make no difference, unless the same should be unusually harsh or cruel. The compelling a citizen to serve as a bondsman or apprentice, for a term not exceeding four years, cannot be a more severe regulation than to compel a prisoner to labor in a penitentiary house for a given time; and is very different from a state of slavery for life."

In McGonagill v. Evans, (1889) 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. (Willson) 565, the court says it sees no reason why a convict, after serving his term of imprisonment, may not be hired out to pay off the fine and costs.

But it is only as a punishment for crime that involuntary servitude is legal.

Thus, in Re Thompson (1893) 117 Mo. 83, 20 L.R.A. 462, 33 Am. St. Rep. 639, 22 S. W. 863, it is held that the hiring out of a vagrant to the highest bidder for the term of six months, on a verdict of vagrancy before a justice of the peace, as authorized by statute, subjects him to involuntary servitude, and is in violation of the 13th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and of the Constitution of Missouri, it being conceded that the person charged with vagrancy had been guilty of no crime, considering the terms of the statute under which the proceedings were had against him.

R. L. S.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

TALMAN F. HULBERT

v.

FRED W. HULBERT et al.

and

HELEN STORY et al., Exrs., etc., of Leonard Story, Deceased, Appts.
WILLIAM F. BACON, Resp't.

(216 N. Y. 430, 111 N. E. 70.)

Judgment — co-ordinate — execution — priority.

Where a judgment is a lien on the debtor's real estate from the time of docketing, no priority can be secured in case the liens of several judgments, by reason of their existence when title to real estate is acquired, simultaneously attach thereto, in favor of one of them, by issuing execution thereon

Note. — As to whether priority between judgments, the liens of which have attached simultaneously, may be obtained by priority of execution proceedings, see annotation following this case, post, 669.

and having the property advertised for sale by the sheriff.

For other cases, see Judgment, III. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Willard Bartlett, Ch. J., and Cuddeback and Pound, JJ., dissent.)

(January 4, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendants from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, affirming a judgment of a Special Term for Seneca County directing payment on certain judgment liens from proceeds arising from the sale of the interest of defendant Fred W. Hulbert in certain real estate, in a proceeding for the partition of the estate. Modified and affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George E. Zartman, for appellants:

The three judgments became liens upon the real property at the same time.

Goetz v. Mott, 21 Abb. N. C. 246, 1 N. Y. Supp. 153; Re Hazard, 73 Hun, 22, 25 N. Y. Supp. 928, affirmed on opinion below in 141 N. Y. 586, 36 N. E. 739.

The judgment of the church did not obtain priority of lien by the issue of the execution and the sale thereunder.

Atlas Ref. Co. v. Smith, 52 App. Div. 109, 64 N. Y. Supp. 1044; Wood v. Colvin, 5 Hill, 228; 1 Black, Judgm. § 450; Wilkinson v. Paddock, 57 Hun, 191, 11 N. Y. Supp. 442, affirmed in 125 N. Y. 748, 27 N. E. 407; Re Hazard, 141 N. Y. 586, 36 N. E. 739.

Mr. William F. Bacon, in propria persona:

The lien of the judgment docketed by the church obtained a preference over the liens of the two Story judgments against the interest which the judgment debtor subsequently acquired in the real estate in question, since the church, by placing an execution in the hands of the sheriff and proceeding to a sale thereunder, took the requisite measures for effectuating its lien, and so, by its superior diligence, turned the scale of equal rights; and the purchaser on the execution sale should receive from the moneys now in the hands of the county treasurer the amount of his bid, with interest to the date of payment.

Re Hazard, 73 Hun, 22, 25 N. Y. Supp. 928, affirmed in 141 N. Y. 586, 36 N. E. 739; Atlas Ref. Co. v. Smith, 52 App. Div. 109, 64 N. Y. Supp. 1044; Green v. Burke, 23 Wend. 498; Wood v. Colvin, 5 Hill, 228; Waterman v. Haskin, 11 Johns. 228; 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 796; 1 Black, Judgm. § 450; 23 Cyc. 1380; Spring v. Sandford, 7 Paige, 550; Vaughn v. Ely, 4 Barb. 159; Smith v. Colvin, 17 Barb. L.R.A.1916D.

157; Elsworth v. Woolsey, 19 App. Div. 385, 48 N. Y. Supp. 486, affirmed in 154 N. Y. 748, 49 N. E. 1096; Treacy v. Elhis, 45 App. Div. 492, 61 N. Y. Supp. 600.

Seabury, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding in an action of partition for the distribution of the proceeds of a sale of real property. On March 7, 1904, St. Paul's Church of the village of Waterloo, New York, docketed a judgment for $906.84 against Fred Hulbert. On April 21, 1904, judgments for $2,830.57 and $2,351.71, respectively, were docketed against said Hulbert by the defendant Story, now deceased. All of these judgments were filed and docketed in the office of the clerk of Seneca county. At the time these judgments were docketed Hulbert was without property. In 1910, on the death of his father, Hulbert inherited an undivided one-third interest in the real estate which it was sought to partition in this action. On November 24, 1913, pursuant to leave granted by the court, the St. Paul's Church issued an execution on its judgment against the property of said Hulbert. On February 6, 1914, the sheriff of Seneca county sold Hulbert's undivided interest in said real estate to one Bacon, who is a defendant herein, for the sum of $1,437.10, and issued to him a sheriff's certificate of sale which he now holds. The present action for partition or sale was not commenced until after the execution of the St. Paul's Church had been placed in the hands of the sheriff. The interest of the defendant Hulbert in said premises was sold in the partition action March 28, 1914, for $1,753.36, which sum has been paid into the court subject to its further order. The proceeds of this sale are insufficient to pay all of the judgment liens in full. The appellants who are executors of the estate of Story claim that these proceeds should be applied pro rata on all of the liens. The respondent, Bacon, claims, and he has been accorded by the court below, a preference for his lien, and the payment thereof has been ordered to be made in full. It is clear that Bacon acquired no rights as against the owner of the Story judgments by virtue of the sale of the property to him and the delivery by the sheriff of a sheriff's certificate of sale, unless the fact that the execution issued by the St. Paul's Church and the act of the sheriff in advertising the property for sale served to give to the lien of the St. Paul's Church a preference over the liens of the Story judgments. It is necessary, therefore, to inquire what the status of the judgment liens was, and whether the act of the St. Paul's Church in issuing an execution upon its lien, and the act of the sheriff in advertising the property for sale, gave to that lien a preference over the others.

Pursuant to the settled rule, which is not questioned by either party upon this appeal, the three judgments referred to became liens on the after-acquired property of the judgment debtor at the time of its acquisition by the debtor. Re Hazard, 73 Hun, 22, 25 N. Y. Supp. 928, affirmed on opinion below in 141 N. Y. 586, 36 N. E. 739. The liens of these three judgments, therefore, attached simultaneously to the interest of Hulbert upon his acquiring title to that interest on the death of his father. It was held below that the judgment of the St. Paul's Church acquired priority by reason of the execution issued thereon and the act of the sheriff in advertising the property for sale. The theory upon which the ruling was made was that the act of the St. Paul's Church in issuing the execution was such an exhibition of diligence as to entitle that judgment creditor to a preference over the liens owned by the other judgment creditors. The only authorities relied upon by the learned appellate division to sustain this view were the cases of Adams v. Dyer, 8 Johns. 347, 350, 5 Am. Dec. 344, and Waterman v. Haskin, 11 Johns. 228. In Adams v. Dyer, supra, there is a short per curiam opinion which says: "Perhaps, the mere act of delivery of the execution to the sheriff did not gain a preference as to the lands, but by the act of the sheriffs in making advertisement of the lands for sale the first execution was begun to be executed. Here was an act by which priority, in some respects, was gained. There was priority as to the time of sale, and that priority could not be defeated by the second execution."

The case of Waterman v. Haskin, supra, announces the same conclusion, relying solely upon the authority of Adams v. Dyer, supra. Although our attention has not been called to any subsequent case in this jurisdiction which has followed the decision announced in these two cases, it must be conceded that the rule announced by them has been followed in other jurisdictions. Elston v. Castor, 101 Ind. 426, 51 Am. Rep. 754; Lowry v. Reed, 89 Ind. 442; Smith v. Lind, 29 Ill. 24; Lippencott v. Wilson, 40 Iowa, 425; Burney v. Boyett, 1 How. (Miss.) 39. Notwithstanding that the decision in Adams v. Dyer and Waterman v. Haskin, supra, has been followed in other jurisdictions, the rule announced by these decisions was early questioned in this state. In Wood v. Colvin, 5 Hill, 228, 230 (1843), Bronson, J., speaking for the court, said: "It has on several occasions been taken for granted that there must be a levy on real estate; but the point has never been so adjudged. The cases are collected in Green v. Burke, 23 Wend. 498. When the judgment is a lien upon the land, it is not necessary that the sheriff should make any formal levy or seizure before proceeding to advertise and sell. It would be an idle ceremony for him to go to the land, or make an inventory of it, or do any other act of the like nature. The judgment binds the land, which is already in the custody of the law before the execution issues. The execution comes as a power to enable the creditor to reap the fruits of the seizure already made. After lands were subjected to sale on execution, and before the judgment was made a lien (see per Chancellor Lansing in Catlin v. Jackson, 8 Johns. 546), the sale of lands and of goods on execution stood substantially upon the same footing, and a levy or seizure was necessary in the one case as well as in the other. But when the judgment was afterwards made a lien on the land, there was no longer any reason for requiring a levy before the sheriff proceeded to advertise and sell. The seizure was already made when the execution came to his hands. Lawyers and judges have still continued to speak of the supposed necessity of a levy upon land, without adverting to the fact that the reason for the rule had entirely ceased. But, as there is nothing but dicta upon the point, we feel ourselves at liberty to say that, since the judgment has been made a lien upon the land, no formal levy or seizure by virtue of the execution is necessary."

A good deal of confusion has arisen and the decisions seem not to be in harmony as to the status of the judgment lien. This condition seems to have arisen because of the statutory changes that have been made. A review of the changes which the law upon this subject has undergone will tend to a better understanding of the existing rule which we are called upon to apply to this case. At common law, when a judgment had been rendered for a debt, the sheriff was directed to cause the sum needed to be made (feri facias) out of the goods and chattels of the defendant, or levied (levari facias) out of his goods and the fruits of his land, but the land itself was not subject to be taken in satisfaction of the debt.

"Our common law," says Pollock & Maitland in their History of English Law, "will not seize his land and sell it or deliver it to the creditor; seigniorial claims and family claims have prevented men from treating land as an available asset for the payment of debts." Vol. 2, 2d ed. p. 596.

In 1285, by virtue of the Statute of Westminster II. (13 Edw. I. chap. 18), the election was given to a creditor who sued for such debt or damages, to have a writ to the sheriff "for levying the debt of the lands and chattels, or that the sheriff deliver to him all the chattels of the debtor (except his oxen and beasts of the plow) and a moiety of his land until the debt be levied." The writ of elegit was founded upon this statute. It was subject to certain restrictions and operated differently even as to chattels from a fiery facias. 2 Tidd, Pr. 939. These restrictions need not now be commented upon, as our purpose will be served by tracing the procedure that was pursued under it in reference to the lands of the debtor. If the debtor had no land, the sheriff need not take or return an inquisition. If there were lands, it was necessary that the inquisition should be taken and returned, describing the land with convenient certainty, and after it is taken the sheriff delivers a moiety to the plaintiff by metes and bounds. 2 Tidd, Pr. 940. It was formerly usual for the sheriff to deliver actual possession of a moiety of the lands, but at the time Mr. Tidd wrote his Practice of the King's Bench (1807) the sheriff was only required to deliver legal possession, and in order to obtain actual possession the plaintiff must proceed by ejectment. The writ of elegit, however, has been said to be "almost unknown in the United States." Freeman, Executions, § 370. There are, however, instances of its use in Virginia, Alabama, North Carolina, and Delaware. Ibid. Although authorized in New York, in practice it is doubtful if it was ever adopted. In commenting upon it Chancellor Lansing said: "Whether the elegit was ever introduced in practice is doubtful, as the small value of the income of real estates afforded little inducement to resort to it as a means of satisfying a debt due upon a judgment." Catlin v. Jackson, supra, at page 547 of 8 Johns.

Prior to 1732 no judicial sale of land could be made in New York under any common-law process. Such a sale was expressly prohibited by the so-called "Charter of Liberties & Privileges," which was enacted by the colonial legislature October 30, 1683. Laws of the Colony of New York, 1664-1719, vol. 1, p. 111. By a subsequent statute passed soon afterwards by the same legislature a levy "by extent on the defendant's lands or against the debts goods and chattels & for want thereof his person" was authorized. November 2, 1683, chapter 12, Laws of the Colony of New York, 1664-1719, vol. 1, p. 134. While these colonial statutes seem to have sanctioned the elegit, it is probable, as already L.R.A. 1916D.

remarked, that in practice that writ was not used. The act of 5 Geo. II. chap. 7, which was applicable to the "plantations and colonies in America," provided that after September 29, 1732, the lands of the debtor "shall be liable to and chargeable with all just debts, etc." This statute was intended to enable British subjects in England to sell real estates on execution in the colonies in order to satisfy the debts due to them. It received a liberal construction which extended it to all judgments. Catlin v. Jackson, 8 Johns. 520, at page 547. Under this statute the fiery facias was the appropriate writ under which the lands could be sold, but in several essentials the effect of the execution was necessarily different from a fiery facias levied upon personal property only. Catlin v. Jackson, supra, at page 547, of 8 Johns; Hanson v. Barnes, 3 Gill & J. 359, 367, 22 Am. Dec. 322.

By the act of 1774 (Laws of the Colony of New York, 1769-1775, vol. 5, p. 637) provision was made for docketing the judgment in the name of the person against whom the judgment was entered, and it was declared that a judgment "not docketed and entered in the books" should not affect lands as to purchasers or mortgagees, or have any preference against heirs, executors, or administrators. In 1787 (Laws of New York, 1785-1793, vol. 2, chap. 56, p. 467) and in 1801 (Laws of 1801, chap. 105) these provisions were substantially re-enacted. These statutes provided that the land of the debtor should be subject to sale in the same manner as his personal property, and made provision for the docketing of the judgment, and provided that a judgment not docketed should not affect lands as to purchasers or mortgagees. Whether the legal effect of these statutes was to make the judgment itself a lien upon the real estate of the debtor it is not necessary to determine. In Koning v. Bayard, 2 Paine, 251, Fed. Cas. No. 7924, decided in 1829, it was held that such was their legal effect. The first statute to specifically declare that "the said judgment shall be a lien on such lands, etc.," was the Revised Laws of 1813 (vol. 1, chap. 50, p. 500). By that statute it was enacted: "That all and singular the lands, tenements, and real estate, of every person against whom any judgment shall have been obtained in any court of record, for any debt, damages, costs or other sum of money, shall be subject to be sold upon execution to be issued upon such judgment, and the said judgment shall be a lien on such lands, tenements, and real estate: Provided," etc.

This statute also provided that a judgment not docketed should not affect any lands and tenements as to purchasers and mortgagees. This statute has been several times re-enacted, amended, and amplified (2 Rev. Stat. p. 3, chap. VI, title 4, art. 2, §§ 11, 12, and Laws 1840, chap. 386), and the substance of it is expressed in the present provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to this subject. See §§ 1250 and 1251 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

By virtue of the statutory changes which have been made in relation to this subject, a judgment, upon being filed and docketed, becomes a lien upon the real estate of the debtor. It is no longer necessary that an execution should be issued upon the judgment in order to cause the judgment to become a lien upon real estate. Adams v. Dyer, supra, decided in 1811, and Waterman v. Haskin, decided in 1814, had under consideration judgments that were docketed prior to the enactment of chapter 50 of the Revised Laws of 1813. At the time these two cases were decided the legal effect of the statutory change that had taken place had not been determined. Waterman v. Haskin, supra, was decided solely upon the supposed authority of Adams v. Dyer, supra, and the short opinion that was rendered in Adams v. Dyer ignored the question whether any statutory change had been made. Whether this was because the judgment itself was not deemed a lien prior to the statute of 1813, and the judgments under consideration in these cases were entered prior to the passage of that act, it is needless to speculate.

Of course, it is true that, if the judgment actually became a lien upon the land, it can make no difference whether it is a lien by virtue of express statutory enactment or by necessary implication from other language used in the statute. It is, however, a significant fact that at the time Adams v. Dyer, 8 Johns. 347, 350, 5 Am. Dec. 344, and Waterman v. Haskin, 11 Johns. 228, were decided it was an open and undecided question in this state whether the lien attached upon the filing of the judgment, or whether subsequent action by way of execution must be taken in order to cause the lien to attach. It was not until more than fifteen years after these cases were decided that it was first held in Koning v. Bayard, supra, that under earlier statutes, by implication, the judgment became a lien from the date of filing. Even after this decision, as Judge Bronson pointed out in Wood v. Colvin, 5 Hill, 228, 230, the effect of the statutory provision was not fully appreciated by judges and lawyers. The fact that this question was undetermined when Adams v. Dyer and Waterman v. Haskin, supra, were decided, and that it was not U.R.A.1916D.

determined until subsequent statutory enactments had made the original legislative purpose clear, explains why the court in these cases assumed that the rule prevailing as to the acquisition of a lien upon personal property also prevailed as to real property, and accorded a preference to the judgment creditor first taking proceedings by way of execution. The statute has now removed any doubt that may have existed on the subject, and declared that the lien attaches as to land from the filing of the judgment. Under these circumstances the ruling in Adams v. Dyer and Waterman v. Haskin, supra, should not be so applied as to make the unnecessary act of issuing an execution the ground for according, as between creditors of equal rank, to one creditor a priority over another. To so apply these decisions is to fail to give effect to the existing statutory provisions on this subject.

Whatever the legal effect of the early statutes may have been, it is perfectly clear that since 1813 the judgment itself is a lien upon the real property of the debtor. The legal effect of this statutory rule is that from the moment a judgment is duly filed and docketed legal rights in the real estate of the debtor attach. In the case now under consideration the liens of the three judgments attached simultaneously to the property of Hulbert upon his acquisition of the interest derived from his father. By virtue of the statute they were at that time equal liens entitled to share pro rata in the proceeds of the debtor's property. Such being the case, how can it be held that the issuing of the execution and the advertising by the sheriff—acts which would be an idle ceremony—should give a preference to the creditor? Once a lien is acquired it is a right which cannot be lost by the performance of an unnecessary act by another creditor. With as much reason could it be held that, as between two mortgagees holding mortgages of equal rank, the one who showed the greatest diligence in commencing an action of foreclosure should acquire a preference over the other. Under the terms of the statute the judgments of the appellants became liens on the real property of Hulbert of equal rank with the lien of the judgment of the St. Paul's Church. The liens of these judgments of the appellants, having attached, did not forfeit their position of equality and become subordinate to a lien of equal rank, merely because their owners did not do a useless thing. In Rankin v. Scott, 12 Wheat. 177, 179, 6 L. ed. 592, 593, Chief Justice Marshall said: "The principle is believed to be universal that a prior lien gives a prior claim, which is entitled to prior satisfaction out of the subject it binds, unless the lien be intrinsically defective, or be displaced by some act of the party holding it which shall postpone him, in a court of law or equity, to a subsequent claimant. The single circumstance of not proceeding on it until a subsequent lien has been obtained and carried into execution has never been considered as such an act."

The diligence of a junior judgment creditor could not affect the lien of a senior judgment creditor, and, if it could not affect the lien of a senior judgment creditor, it cannot affect the lien of equal rank. The principle that equity favors the diligent has no application where one creditor displays his diligence in the doing of useless and unnecessary things. The liens of the three judgments attached when Hulbert acquired the property. The issuing of an execution upon one of the judgments could not affect the relative rank of the liens as between themselves. It is urged that, although this reasoning was adopted in Rockhill v. Hanna, 4 McLean, 554, Fed. Cas. No. 11,980, where the court refused to follow Adams v. Dyer and Waterman v. Haskin, supra, that case was not followed in the United States Supreme Court. In Rockhill v. Hanna, 15 How. 189, 196, 14 L. ed. 656, 659, the United States Supreme Court considered the question presented in Rockhill v. Hanna, 4 McLean, 554, Fed. Cas. No. 11,980, and intimated an opinion in accord with the rule declared in Adams v. Dyer and Waterman v. Haskin, supra, but the decision of the court was not placed on that ground, the court saying: "But we do not think it necessary to rest the decision of this case merely on the question of diligence, or to decide whether this doctrine has been finally established as the law of Indiana. The plaintiff's lien does not, by the statement of this case, stand on an equality as to date with that of the other judgments. By electing to take the body of his debtor in execution he has postponed his lien, because the arrest operated in law as an extinguishment of his judgment."

Under the circumstances disclosed, and in view of the fact that Adams v. Dyer and Waterman v. Haskin, supra, declare a rule contrary to our existing statute, we feel compelled to hold that these decisions are no longer controlling upon us, and that we should give effect to the rule declared in the statute.

The order appealed from should be modified by directing that the fund now deposited in court should be distributed pro rata between the three judgments, and, as L.R.A.1916D.

so modified, the order should be affirmed, without costs to either party.

Chase, Collin, and Hogan, JJ., concur.

Willard Bartlett, Ch. J., dissenting:

I dissent from the judgment about to be rendered in this case. I think it is in conflict with the established law of this state as it has existed for more than a century. It squarely overrules two decisions of our old supreme court, the doctrine of which has been adopted in other states and approved by the Supreme Court of the United States; and this without any change in conditions which in my opinion suffices to justify such action.

In the present case three judgments stood duly docketed in Seneca county against the defendant Hulbert, when, in 1910, upon the death of his father, he inherited a one-third interest in the real estate sought to be partitioned in this action. The three judgments thus simultaneously became liens upon the property so acquired by the judgment debtor. Re Hazard, 73 Hun, 22, 25 N. Y. Supp. 928, affirmed on opinion below in 141 N. Y. 586, 36 N. E. 739. Prior to the commencement of the partition suit, and pursuant to leave of court duly granted, an execution against the property of the defendant Hulbert had been issued to the sheriff of Seneca county on one of the three judgments, which was in favor of St. Paul's Church of Waterloo, New York; and the sheriff subsequently sold the judgment debtor's interest in the real estate inherited from his father to the respondent, William F. Bacon. The question presented by this appeal is whether St. Paul's Church acquired a preference for its lien over the liens of the other two judgments by the steps which it had taken to enforce its judgment,—to wit, the issue of an execution and causing the property to be advertised for sale thereunder. The courts below have held, without dissent, that the judgment in favor of St. Paul's Church had thus become entitled to priority. The leading cases relied upon as authority for this decision—which it is now proposed to reverse—are Adams v. Dyer, 8 Johns. 347, 5 Am. Dec. 344, and Waterman v. Haskin, 11 Johns. 228, both decided by the old supreme court, the former in 1811, when Kent was chief justice, and the latter in 1814, when Kent had become chancellor and had been succeeded as chief justice by Smith Thompson, who subsequently became an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. With them on the bench were such men as Ambrose Spencer, William W. Van Ness, and Joseph C. Yates; so that the judicial ability of the court can hardly be questioned by New York lawyers. They decided that, where judgments were equal as to the date of the lien, the issue of execution upon one of the judgments, the advertisement of the lands for sale thereunder, and the sale thereof by the sheriff, entitled the plaintiff in that judgment to have his claim first satisfied out of the property. In the second case it was held to be enough to establish the priority of such a judgment that the sheriff who received the execution thereon had begun to execute the process first; he "thereby turned the scale of equal right and gained a priority by his vigilance." Waterman v. Haskin, supra.

That the doctrine of these cases and cases to the same effect in other states has been regarded as establishing the law generally in accordance with the rule therein laid down appears from the statements by the leading text writers and in the American and English Encyclopedia of Law.

"If two or more judgments, on account of their contemporaneous rendition or docketing, or from any other cause, are equally entitled to precedence as liens on real estate of the judgment debtor, this equality may be destroyed in order to give precedence to the lien holder who first attempts to subject any specific real estate to the payment of his lien." 2 Freeman, Judgm. 4th ed. § 374.

In Rorer on Judicial Sales, § 703, the author states the rule thus: "If several judgment creditors have judgments of equal date, and their judgments are in law all liens on the real estate of the same defendant, the one that levies thereon first obtains priority."

In the American & English Encyclopedia of Law, 2d ed. vol. 17, p. 796, we find:

"It may be laid down as a general rule that where liens of judgment are equal, one judgment creditor may acquire a priority over another by superior vigilance in executing his judgment. Thus, in some cases it has been held that, when judgments in favor of different persons and against the same defendant are rendered or recorded on the same day, the judgment creditor first issuing execution and levying upon the debtor's property acquires a prior right to satisfaction. And the same rule has been applied to judgments rendered at the same term where by statute such judgments are made equal liens on the defendant's real estate."

I make these quotations simply to show that the doctrine of priority by execution where the judgment liens are equal is not a peculiarity of New York jurisprudence. I will cite a few cases from other jurisdictions in which it has been adopted and applied.

tions in which it has been adopted and applied.

The case of Elaton v. Castor, 101 Ind. 426, 51 Am. Rep. 754, resembles the present case in the fact that the judgment debtor became the owner of the lands in controversy after the rendition of the several judgments against him. These previously existing judgments, therefore, became equal liens on the land; but it was held that the one of the holders of such liens who first caused execution to be issued and levied on such land obtained a lien which was superior to that of the other judgments. The rationale of the doctrine is thus explained in the opinion: "Judgments are liens upon the real estate of the judgment debtor because the statute makes them such. This lien is given for the purpose of collection. Mr. Freeman says: 'A judgment is not a specific lien on any particular real estate of the judgment debtor, but a general lien upon all his real estate, subject to all prior liens, either legal or equitable, irrespective of any knowledge of the judgment creditor as to the existence of such liens.' 'In short, a judgment creditor has no jus in re, but a mere power to make his general lien effectual by following up the steps of the law, and consummating his judgment by an execution and levy on the land.' Section 338. And so it was said in the case of Gimbel v. Stolte, 59 Ind. 446, 451, distinguishing a mortgage and judgment lien: 'There can be no doubt that a law which gives a judgment creditor a lien on the real estate of the debtor relates solely to the remedy.' When the liens are thus equal, and one of the judgment creditors first pursues the remedy and exercises the power of making his lien effectual by following up the steps of the law by an execution and levy, he thereby makes his consummated lien superior, which until then was but equal."

To the same effect is Smith v. Lind, 29 Ill. 24, where the court said: "While the lien was made equal, diligence was left to its reward. Under the general law, the lien of judgments is equal, but the vigilant creditor can acquire a preference in the payment of his judgment . . . by first issuing his execution. If one creditor who is precisely equal to another in point of lien shall get an advantage by the use of superior diligence in discovering property, making a levy and sale of it, where is the hardship or injustice?"

In Bruce v. Vogel, 38 Mo. 100, 106, the supreme court of Missouri followed the rule in Adams v. Dyer, supra, saying: "While the statute makes the liens equal, it does not deprive a party of any advantage he may gain by the exercise of superior diligence. If one creditor who is exactly equal to another as regards liens, by energy, perseverance, and diligence, discovers property whereon to levy and make his money, justice demands that he shall reap the fruits of his industry. He may have gone to great labor and expense in investigating records and ferreting out and bringing to light property out of which to satisfy his execution; and to allow another person who had slept on his rights, and neither encountered labor or furnished money, to stand on an equality with him, would be inequitable. 'Vigilantibus, non dormientibus, jura subveniunt.' The laws assist those who are vigilant, not those who sleep over their rights. We are well satisfied, on principle, that where judgment liens are equal, one judgment creditor can get priority over another by his superior vigilance and watchfulness. The execution issued on the judgment rendered in favor of Brown was fairly entitled to priority, as it was first placed in the hands of the officer, and the levy and sale were made under it; and the money could not be diverted from it and applied to others subsequently issued, and under which there was neither levy nor sale."

In Bliss v. Watkins, 16 Ala. 229, decided in 1849, the supreme court of Alabama said: "It seems to be well settled in New York, where judgments constitute a lien upon land, that where two judgments are rendered on the same day, although neither judgment creditor has the preference as a lien, yet, if one of the creditors first take out execution, and proceed to levy and sell, his execution must be first satisfied, by reason of his superior diligence, although the other creditor put his execution in the hands of the sheriff before the sale. Waterman v. Haskin and Adams v. Dyer, supra."

Where the liens created by the judgments are equal, the money should be awarded to the creditor who first began execution of his judgment. There is nothing unreasonable in this, and it is but carrying out the spirit of our statute in respect to the subject of lien. It is giving the priority to the most vigilant, as is done by the statute in respect to personal property, which gives the preference to the party who first places his f. fa. in the sheriff's hands, although it may have issued upon a junior judgment."

In Iowa it is held that, where judgments are entered on the same day, and become liens against the real estate of the judgment debtor, the judgment creditor who first issues execution and sells obtains a preference (Lippencott v. Wilson, 40 Iowa, 425); but the courts of that state make a L.R.A.1916D.

distinction as to after-acquired property. It is held that under such circumstances a different rule prevails, and that the issuance of execution and the sale do not give a preference. No reason for the distinction is stated, except that the two cases do not come within the same rule. Kisterson v. Tate, 94 Iowa, 665, 58 Am. St. Rep. 419, 63 N. W. 350. I am unable to perceive any difference in principle.

This review of the development of the rule asserted in the cases of Adams v. Dyer and Waterman v. Haskin, supra, indicates that it is rather firmly embedded in our general jurisprudence. On what ground is it proposed to overrule these time-honored authorities, the doctrine of which appears now for the first time to be questioned in this state? As I understand the prevailing opinion, it is simply because the judgments under consideration in the Adams and Waterman Cases were docketed prior to the enactment of chapter 50 of the Revised Laws of 1813, which contained the first express declaration that a judgment should be a lien on land. It is perfectly clear, however, that the judgments considered in these two cases were liens upon the lands of the judgment debtor. In the first place, in each case the court said so. I quote: "We must then consider the judgments equal as to the date of the lien," etc. Adams v. Dyer, supra. "By the 2d section of the 'Act Concerning Judgments and Executions,' passed the 31st of March, 1801, a judgment lien attaches upon land from the time of filing the record of judgment." Waterman v. Haskin, supra.

While it is quite true that under the statutes then in force judgments were not expressly declared to be liens upon real estate, those statutes necessarily implied that such was the law. The phraseology of the act of 1801 referred to in the Waterman Case was substantially the same as that of the act of 1787 considered by the circuit court of the United States in Koning v. Bayard, 2 Paine, 251, Fed. Cas. No. 7,924, decided by Mr. Justice Smith Thompson, sitting as circuit justice in 1829; and he held that the declaration in the act of 1787, that no judgment should affect land but from the time of the filing of the roll and the docketing of the judgment, necessarily implied that upon that being done the judgment should affect the land, and was equivalent to saying that it should then become a lien.

If a judgment actually is a lien upon land, I cannot see what difference it can possibly make whether it has become a lien by reason of an express statutory declaration to that effect, or by reason of necessary implication from other language used in the statute. If, as was virtually held in the case last cited, the declaration in the Revised Laws of 1813 merely expressed what had been necessarily implied before, I cannot comprehend how the enactment of the later statute can be regarded as furnishing any basis for the distinction made in the prevailing opinion.

One of the main purposes for which this court exists is to preserve the harmony and consistency of judicial decisions, finally determining the rights of litigants; and this can only be done by maintaining a due regard for precedents. If we overrule these two precedents, it seems to me that we warn counsel and the lower courts that they can no longer rely on authority to guide the former in giving advice or the latter in rendering decisions. If the lapse of time or later statutory enactments had brought about changed conditions which required us to take a different view from that taken by the old supreme court, I might agree with my brethren; but I can discover no change which affects the principle on which those cases were decided.

For these reasons, I dissent and vote for the affirmance of the final order appealed from without modification.

Cuddeback and Pound, JJ., concur with Willard Bartlett, Ch. J.

Annotation—May priority between judgments, the liens of which have attached simultaneously, be obtained by priority of execution proceedings.

The liens of judgments rendered against a common debtor may attach equally to the debtor's real estate by reason of the judgments having been rendered on the same day, at the same term, or by reason of becoming liens upon the after-acquired property of the judgment debtor.<sup>1</sup> In jurisdictions in which judgment liens thus attach equally to the judgment debtor's property, the question arises whether priority can be obtained by one of the judgment creditors who first begins execution proceedings. Until the decision in HULBERT v.

HULBERT, ante, 661, the courts were practically uniform in holding that priority could be obtained by one of such judgment creditors who first caused execution to issue and levy to be made upon the debtor's property.<sup>2</sup> A number of the cases supporting the majority rule relied upon Adams v. Dyer and Waterman v. Haskin, infra, note 3, cases which, since the decision in HULBERT v. HULBERT, are no longer authority. This rule is applied whether the judgment liens are equal because of the judgments having been rendered on the same day,<sup>3</sup> at <sup>1</sup> Judgment liens do not thus become equal liens upon the debtor's property in all jurisdictions. In the case of judgments rendered on the same day, fractions of a day are considered in some jurisdictions. In the case of judgments becoming liens on after-acquired property, the original priority is retained in some jurisdictions, and in others the lien of the judgment is held not to attach to after-acquired property in the absence of execution. On liens on after-acquired property, see note to Moore v. Jordan, 42 L.R.A. 209.

It was held proper to inquire into the fraction of a day for the purpose of determining the priority of judgment liens in Smith v. Ship (1835) 1 How. (Miss.) 234, a case in which executions on judgments taken by default on the same day were issued on the same day, and levied on the same day, on the property sold, the only difference being that one of the executions was received by the sheriff before the other, and the judgment of this creditor was first entered on the minutes. This court had previously held, however, in a case reported in the same volume, Burney v. Boyett (1834) 1 How. (Miss.) 39, that priority was obtained by one of several judgment creditors whose judgments were rendered on the same day, by the issuance of execution and sale of the property. In the Burney Case nothing is said as to the fraction of a day being considered in determining priority.

<sup>2</sup> See cases cited in notes 3, 4, and 5.

One of two judgment creditors whose judgments became liens on the same day on the property of a bondsman in replevin for the judgment debtor, who first issues execution and has it levied on the land of the replevin bondsman, obtains a priority over the other judgment creditor. Lowry v. Reed (1882) 89 Ind. 442.

That a priority is obtained by proceeding to execution seems to have been the theory of the imperfectly reported case of Waymire v. Staley (1828) 3 Ohio, 368, where, in the case of several judgment creditors, the liens of whose judgments had become equal because of a failure to levy execution upon the property of the debtor within twelve months from the rendering of their judgments, one such creditor, who had first put his execution into the sheriff's hand, was held to have thereby obtained a preference to the fund.

<sup>3</sup> Bliss v. Watkins (1849) 16 Ala. 229 (fi. fas. issued on both judgments on the same day. One was handed to the sheriff and levied upon the debtor's property and sale had thereunder. On the day of sale the same term,<sup>4</sup> or by reason of their attaching at the same time upon after-acquired property.<sup>5</sup>

the fi. fa. of the other creditor was handed to the sheriff. This delay in handing the fi. fa. to the sheriff was a fact considered in holding that the first creditor had obtained a preference).

Hollcraft v. Douglass (1888) 115 Ind. 139, 17 N. E. 275 (no other execution issued); Wilson v. Baker (1879) 52 Iowa, 428, 2 N. W. 481 (execution issued and property sold before other judgment creditor proceeded); Bruce v. Vogel (1866) 38 Mo. 100 (executions were issued on other judgments before sale, but not till after execution and levy).

In Burney v. Boyett (1834) 1 How. (Miss.) 39, three judgments were rendered on the same day against the same defendant. An execution was issued to the sheriff, and by him levied upon a negro girl, on one of the judgments; three days thereafter an execution was issued and levied upon the same girl upon a second judgment; thereafter an execution was issued on the third judgment and levied upon other property of the judgment debtor; the slave was sold under the first two executions levied, and the last of the judgment creditors to levy an execution claimed the proceeds; this was denied him, the court stating that his execution was not instrumental in producing the money by the sale of the slave, and he could not claim to have it appropriated to the payment of his demand.

An opinion in accord with this rule is expressed in Rockhill v. Hanna (1853) 15 How. (U. S.) 189, 14 L. ed. 656, where judgment creditors who had issued executions which had been levied on the debtor's land were held to have obtained a priority over other judgment creditors whose judgments were rendered on the same day. But, as stated in HULBERT v. HULBERT, ante, 661, the decision was not rested on this point alone, but on the additional fact that the complaining creditor had elected another remedy which operated as an extinguishment of his judgment, so that it was not on an equality with that of the other judgment.

Adams v. Dyer (1811) 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 347, 5 Am. Dec. 344, and Waterman v. Haskin (1814) 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 228, holding in accord with these cases, can no longer be considered the law in New York, since the decision in HULBERT v. HULBERT. These cases are sufficiently discussed in the opinion in HULBERT v. HULBERT.

In holding that judgments entered on the same day obtained no priority because of the actual hour of the day on which they were entered, but that all must be considered equal, it is stated, in Metzler v. Kilgore (1831) 3 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 249, 23 Am. Dec. 76, that "it has never been thought material in Pennsylvania to inquire how or on whose judgment the money has been made," and the decision in Adams v. Dyer L.R.A.1916D.

The rule applies also to equitable interests where judgments are liens upon such interests. The party who first is disappointed. It is not clear that the property was sold under an execution issued on one of the judgments, so that it does not appear that the question under annotation was directly raised. See a discussion of the general doctrine prevailing in Pennsylvania as to liens on after-acquired lands, in the note to Moore v. Jordan, 42 L.R.A. 212.

So, in the case of judgment liens created at the same time and by the same decree, the creditor who enforces his lien by the issuance and levy of an execution obtains a preference. Shirley v. Brown (1883) 80 Mo. 244. In this case the execution had been issued and levied, and sale had taken place, before any steps were taken by the other judgment creditor to enforce his lien.

<sup>4</sup>Smith v. Lind (1862) 29 Ill. 24. The judgment of the creditor who obtained a preference was rendered and docketed first in point of time; an execution was issued and immediately placed in the hands of the sheriff; on the subsequent day the judgment of the creditor who was contending for a pro rata distribution was rendered and execution issued and put in the hands of the sheriff. It seems no property was levied upon at the time, but subsequently the first judgment creditor discovered real estate of the judgment debtor and directed a levy to be made upon it; this was done and the property afterwards sold to the judgment creditor. The statute in this case made a judgment a lien from the time it was entered on the judgment docket of the court, but contained a proviso that, as between judgment creditors and other parties claiming under the lien of judgments rendered at the same term of the court, or on the same day in vacation, there should be no preference or priority of the lien of one judgment over that of another.

Bradley v. Heffernan (1900) 156 Mo. 653, 57 S. W. 763. The execution was issued, levy made, and also the property sold before the other judgment creditor began proceedings to enforce his judgment.

In Gay v. Rainey (1878) 89 Ill. 221, 31 Am. Rep. 76, this point does not seem to have received special consideration. It is stated in that case that creditors whose judgments were rendered at the same term of court were entitled under the statute to share pro rata in the proceeds arising from the sale by the sheriff, no matter on which judgment and execution the sale was actually made, all the executions being at the time in the sheriff's hands. It appears that, on the first execution having been returned no property found, one of the creditors was diligent in ordering an alias fi. fa. to issue, while the other judgment holders delayed some time. Beyond the above statement there is nothing contained in the opinion on this point.

<sup>5</sup>Michaels v. Boyd (1848) 1 Ind. 259 (creditor whose judgment was obtained last causes an execution to issue and levy to be made obtains priority, as in case of a bond for title<sup>6</sup> held by the judgment debtor, or an equity of redemption.<sup>7</sup> Equitable interests are more frequently reached by creditors in equitable actions, a subject not considered in this note, which is confined to priority as between creditors who reach the debtor's property by execution and levy.

The supreme court of Iowa makes a distinction between judgment liens which are equal because of having been rendered on the same day, and those which are equal because attaching to after-acquired property, holding in the former case that priority may be obtained by the issuance of execution and levy upon the property of the debtor,<sup>8</sup> but in the latter case that no priority can be obtained.<sup>9</sup>

The reason most commonly advanced in point of time first issued execution; after a levy on this, execution was issued on the other judgment and levy made. By statute a judgment was made a lien from the time of its rendition); Elston v. Castor (1884) 101 Ind. 426, 51 Am. Rep. 754, holding that the issuance and levy of the lien upon one of the judgments and a sale thereunder destroy the equality of the lien, so that the remaining judgment creditors occupy the position of junior lien holders. The execution under which the property was sold was the only one issued and levied.

One of two judgment creditors obtained a priority which was sustained in Chapron v. Cassady (1842) 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 661, by taking an assignment from the judgment debtor of his equitable interest in after-acquired land, against another judgment creditor who had failed to comply with the statutory requirements as to perfecting his judgments.

<sup>6</sup> Lippencott v. Wilson (1875) 40 Iowa, 425. Before the premises were sold the other judgment creditors had begun an equitable action to subject the real estate which was held by the judgment debtor under a bond for title, the legal title being in his vendor, to the payment of the judgments; the creditors who thus began the equitable action claimed to be entitled to the preference because of the superior diligence in commencing an action in equity. It was held, however, that the equitable interest of the debtor was subject to execution and levy, and the other creditors, who had taken this action previously to the commencement of the equitable action, were entitled to priority.

<sup>7</sup> This rule was applied in Cook v. Dillon (1859) 9 Iowa, 407, 74 Am. Dec. 354, where the judgment debtor, previously to the judgments, however, had conveyed his land in trust to secure a debt, and the liens of the judgments were held to attach L.R.A.1916D.

in support of the majority rule is diligence on the part of the creditor in pursuing his remedies.<sup>10</sup>

It is the theory of some cases that the judgment creditor has merely a general lien with power to make it effectual by execution and levy upon specific property; that the judgment creditor who first pursues the remedy and exercises the power of making his lien effectual by execution and levy thereby makes his consummated lien superior, which until then was but equal.<sup>11</sup>

In some cases a search has been required to discover the debtor's property. In such a case the rule finds additional support. The creditor who has expended time and money in searching out property is entitled to profit by his effort.<sup>12</sup>

Thus, giving priority to the creditor who proceeds with execution does not conflict with the rulings that a judgment to the proceeds of the land in the hands of the trustee after a sale in accordance with the trust deed. The court held that it devolved upon the judgment creditors to take some step to have the fund appropriated to the payment of their judgments; that the trustee was under no duty to make search and inquiry whether there were any liens upon the money in his hands; that it devolved upon the parties claiming to hold such liens to give notice of them and to enforce them at the earliest practicable moment, and that, accordingly, a judgment creditor who had issued execution and had it levied upon the land held by the trustee, and another who had issued execution and, on the day of the sale of the land by the trustee, had attached the trustee as garnishee, were entitled to a preference over another creditor who became a purchaser of the land, but failed to take any action on his judgment. It seems that the priority was made to depend upon the attachment, and not on the execution and levy upon the land. At any rate, no point is made of the fact that one of the executions was not levied upon the land.

See Chapron v. Cassady, supra, note 5.

<sup>8</sup> See Iowa cases cited in note 3, supra.

<sup>9</sup> Kisterson v. Tate (1895) 94 Iowa, 665, 58 Am. St. Rep. 419, 63 N. W. 350. The opinion in this case is very brief, and an earlier Iowa case having to do with another matter is relied upon as authority.

<sup>10</sup> Cook v. Dillon (Iowa) supra. It is stated that the law favors the diligent creditor, and will suffer no interference by one who has slept on his rights for the purpose of taking from him the fruits of his superior diligence. See the facts in this case, supra, note 7.

<sup>11</sup> Elston v. Castor (1884) 101 Ind. 426, 51 Am. Rep. 754.

<sup>12</sup> Bruce v. Vogel (1866) 38 Mo. 100.

Smith v. Lind (1862) 29 Ill. 24. The court concludes by stating that "on prin-lien which is superior by seniority cannot be overthrown by a junior judgment lien. There the preference is completed by seniority. In case of equal liens there is no seniority, and the preference is brought about by the superior diligence ciple and authority we are satisfied where liens of judgments are equal, one judgment creditor can get a priority over another by superior vigilance in executing his judgin following up the steps of the law, and, in a sense, appropriating the property by the levy of an execution.<sup>12</sup>

The reasoning in support of not giving priority to the creditor is set forth in HULBERT v. HULBERT, ante, 661.

ment, and that vigilance was fully shown by the plaintiff in this case."

<sup>12</sup> Elston v. Castor (Ind.) supra.

W. A. E.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

MARK READER, Plff. in Err.,

v.

FRANK FARRISS.

(— Okla. —, 153 Pac. 678.)

Quo warranto — claimant out of possession.

1. Quo, warranto, or a proceeding in the nature thereof, lies only against one who is in the possession and user of the office, and not against one who merely lays claim to the office, or who has never been admitted thereto.

For other cases, see Quo Warranto, II. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Pleading — supplemental petition — subsequently occurring facts.

2. If, on the facts stated in the petition, no cause of action exists against the defendant, and no relief can be granted against him on those facts, subsequently occurring facts cannot be made a part of the plaintiff's case, and he will not be permitted to file a supplemental petition alleging such additional facts to enable him to maintain the action which he has instituted, as the office of a supplemental complaint is not to supply facts which, being necessary to the maintenance of the action, have been omitted from the original complaint, but is to bring into the record new facts which will enlarge or change the kind of relief to which the plaintiff is entitled, and enable the court to render a final judgment upon the facts existing at the time of its rendition.

For other cases, see Pleading, I. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — curing defective action.

3. If the cause of action which it was sought to enforce by the original petition did not exist at the time when that pleading was filed, it cannot be created, cured, or aided by matters subsequently occurring and set up in a supplemental petition.

For other cases, see Pleading, I. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Sharp, J., dissents.)

(December 7, 1915.)

Headnotes by KANE, Ch. J.
L.R.A.1916D

ERROR to the District Court of McClain County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in a proceeding to try title to the office of county sheriff. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Nagle & Reynolds, J. M. Bishop, and C. G. Moore, for plaintiff in error:

An action in the nature of quo warranto cannot be brought except against a person in actual possession of the office or franchise.

Rex v. Whitwell, 5 T. R. 85; 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 672; 17 Enc. Pl. & Pr., p. 407.

It was error to refuse defendant's written demand for a jury trial.

Bradford v. Territory, 1 Okla. 366, 34 Pac. 66; State ex rel. West v. Cobb, 24 Okla. 662, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 639, 104 Pac. 361.

Messrs. Dorset Carter and Franklin & Mauldin for defendant in error.

Kane, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action in the nature of quo warranto, commenced by the defendant in error, plaintiff below, against the plaintiff in error, defendant below, for the purpose of trying the title to the office of sheriff of McClain county. The parties hereafter will be designated "plaintiff" and "defendant," respectively, as they appeared below.

It seems that the parties were rival candidates for the office of sheriff at the election held in November, 1914, and that the certificate of election was issued to the defendant, who was the Socialist candidate; whereupon this quo warranto proceeding was instituted by the plaintiff, who was the Democratic candidate, prior to the time either of the candidates was entitled to or had taken possession of the office. After a motion to strike the petition on the ground that it was prematurely filed was overruled, the defendant continued to save the question raised by his motion to strike, but finally issues, both of law and fact, were joined, and the cause was duly set for trial at a date subsequent to that on which the defendant had taken the oath of office and entered upon the duties of his office as sheriff. Upon the cause being called for trial, the defendant again objected to any further action therein, upon the ground that it was prematurely commenced, whereupon the court, without requiring any previous notice to the defendant or making any terms as to costs, granted leave to file instanter a supplemental petition alleging, in effect, that, subsequent to filing his original petition, the defendant entered into actual possession of the office, and is now performing the duties thereof. The trial court also entered an order requiring the defendant to file his answer to the supplemental petition within twenty-four hours. At the expiration of the twenty-four-hour period the court overruled a motion for a continuance filed by the defendant, and, upon his refusal to answer the supplemental petition, ordered that his answer to the original petition be refiled as an answer to the supplemental petition, to all of which the defendant objected and excepted. Upon the trial to the court which immediately followed there was judgment to the effect that neither party was entitled to the office of sheriff, and the same was declared vacant, whereupon both parties instituted separate proceedings in error for the purpose of reviewing the action of the trial court.

Note. — As to whether original petition or complaint which states no cause of action may be aided by supplemental pleading, see annotation following this case, post, 676.

In view of the conclusion reached by the court, the foregoing statement is sufficient to present all questions necessary for a review. The plaintiff in error contends: (1) That the petition was prematurely filed; (2) that, inasmuch as no cause of action existed in favor of the plaintiff, and no relief could be granted on the facts stated in the original petition, the subsequently occurring facts could not have been material to the plaintiff's case, and therefore it was error to permit him to file a supplemental petition setting up such additional facts to enable him to maintain his action. We are of the opinion that both these contentions are well founded. In a very early case Rex v. Whitwell, 5 T. R. 85, Mr. Justice Buller said: "No instance has been produced in which the court have granted an information in nature of quo warranto, where the party against whom it was applied for has not been in the actual possession of the office."

The same may be said to-day. From that time to this an unbroken line of authorities, both in England and this country, are to the same effect.

The prevailing modern rule is stated in L.R.A.1916D.

17 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 407, where the authorities are collected, as follows. "Quo warranto, or a proceeding in the nature thereof, lies only against one who is in the possession and user of the office, and not against one who merely lays claim to the office, or who has never been admitted thereto."

This proposition, however, is not seriously disputed by counsel for the plaintiff, but they take their stand more firmly upon the second, and insist that, if the original petition was immaterially filed, then that matter was cured by the filing of the plaintiff's supplemental petition, which, they say, was pursuant to § 4795, Rev. Laws 1910, which provides: "Either party may be allowed, on notice, and on such terms, as to costs, as the court may prescribe, to file a supplemental petition, answer or reply, alleging facts material to the case, occurring after the former petition, answer or reply."

In support of this position they cite several Kansas and one Iowa case, which states, it seems, have similar statutes. Williams v. Moorehead, 33 Kan. 609, 7 Pac. 226; Simpson v. Vose, 31 Kan. 227, 1 Pac. 601; Flint v. Dulany, 37 Kan. 332, 15 Pac. 208; Gribben v. Clement, 141 Iowa, 144, 133 Am. St. Rep. 157, 119 N. W. 596. We have examined these cases, and are of the opinion that in the Kansas cases cited the statute is properly construed and applied, but we do not believe the cases are in point. There seems to be some confusion in the Iowa cases touching the question. If the case from that state, cited by counsel for the defendant, can be said to be an authority supporting his contention, it is difficult to reconcile it with Dennison v. Soper, 33 Iowa, 183, and Zalesky v. Home Ins. Co. 102 Iowa, 613, 71 N. W. 566, which seem to support a contrary view.

Undoubtedly, the general rule governing the right to file supplemental pleadings is as follows: "If, on the facts stated in the complaint, no cause of action exists against the defendant, and no relief can be granted against him on those facts, subsequently occurring facts cannot be made a part of the plaintiff's case, and he will not be permitted to file a supplemental complaint alleging such additional facts to enable him to maintain the action which he has instituted, as the office of a supplemental complaint is not to supply facts which, being necessary to the maintenance of the action, have been omitted from the original complaint, but is to bring into the record new facts which will enlarge or change the kind of relief to which the plaintiff is entitled, and enable the court to render a final judgment upon the facts existing at the time of its rendition."

This text, which is taken from 21 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 18, is supported by a great array of authorities, among which we find the case of Rogers v. Hodgson, 46 Kan. 276, 28 Pac. 732. This was an action to recover upon a promissory note which was given to secure the same. By a supplemental petition the plaintiff undertook to allege such defaults as would entitle him to recover 12 per cent interest from the date of the mortgage, instead of the 7 per cent rate stipulated therein, which the trial court refused to permit him to file. This ruling was not disturbed on appeal; the supreme court holding that the record did not disclose any abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court. Mr. Justice Johnston, who delivered the opinion for the court, stated, however, that the trial court would have been warranted in allowing the supplemental petition to be filed, alleging additional defaults which would have entitled the plaintiff to recover a greater amount, but he also further says that "if there had been no default before the commencement of the action, the plaintiff would hardly be entitled to enlarge his action by a supplemental petition setting forth subsequent defaults or grounds of forfeiture which did not exist at the commencement of the suit."

The quoted portion of the opinion supports the text. This was the prevailing rule in Kansas for a long time prior to the time we adopted our statute governing supplemental pleadings from that state. In another somewhat analogous Kansas case, Brown v. Galena Min. & Smelting Co. 32 Kan. 528, 4 Pac. 1013, it was held: "The pleadings all relate to the time of the commencement of the suit, the same as if filed at that time, and the rights of the parties are to be determined as they existed when suit was commenced. An amended petition in a suit stands in the place of and as a substitute for the original petition, which is superseded by it, and must be based on the facts and causes of action as they existed at the time the original petition was filed; and, if a right of action did not exist when the original petition was filed, one cannot be created by filing an amended petition."

It seems perfectly reasonable and logical to us that, if the cause of action which it was sought to enforce by the original petition did not exist at the time when that pleading was filed, it cannot be created, cured, or aided by matters subsequently occurring and set up in a supplemental petition. By the terms of the statute the facts alleged must be "material to the case," L.R.A.1916D.

clearly indicating that they must relate to a cause of action which had previously accrued, and be pertinent to the rights or liabilities of the parties connected with that cause of action. A few cases in addition to those hereinbefore cited, holding to this effect, are: Continental Constr. & Improv. Co. v. Vinal, 48 Hun, 620, 1 N. Y. Supp. 200 (Sup. Ct. Gen. T.); Bostwick v. Menck, 4 Daly, 68; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. United Lines Teleg. Co. 47 Hun, 315; Mitchell v. Taylor, 27 Or. 377, 41 Pac. 119; Meyer v. Berlandi, 39 Minn. 438, 1 L.R.A. 777, 12 Am. St. Rep. 663, 40 N. W. 513; Smith v. McGaughey, 13 Tex. 464; Orton v. Noonan, 29 Wis. 541; Hill v. Den, 121 Cal. 42, 53 Pac. 642; Barker v. Prizer, 150 Ind. 4, 48 N. E. 4.

Probably, if the trial court had required the plaintiff to give the notice and make reasonable terms, as required by statute, as to costs, and allowed the defendant such a reasonable time to answer the supplemental petition and get ready for trial as to make it appear that his action did not result in a miscarriage of justice, or deprive the defendant of any substantial constitutional or statutory right, the court would be justified in applying the harmless error statute (Rev. Laws 1910, § 6005). But such is not the case, and no useful purpose would be subserved by further speculating on what might have been.

For the reasons stated, the judgment of the court below is reversed, and the cause remanded, with directions to take such further proceedings therein, not inconsistent with this opinion, as it may deem proper.

All the Justice concur, except Sharp, J., who delivers an opinion expressing his views.

Sharp, J., dissenting:

With the rule that quo warranto, or a proceeding in the nature thereof, lies only against one who is in the possession and user of the office, and not against one who merely lays claim to the office, or who has never been admitted thereto, I have no disposition to take issue. By § 4919, Rev. Laws 1910, the writ of quo warranto and proceedings by information in the nature of quo warranto are abolished; but it is there provided that the remedies theretofore obtainable in those forms may be had by a civil action, and, as held in Newhouse v. Alexander, 27 Okla. 46, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 602, 110 Pac. 1121, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 674, permits a private person to contest with another private person the right or title to a public office. The remedy afforded being that of a civil action, under the statute the pleadings in such an action are governed in general by the rules applicable to pleadings in ordinary civil actions. 32 Cyc. 1447. Statutes relating to amendments in civil suits are generally held applicable to quo warranto, or to a proceeding in the nature thereof. Com. v. Commercial Bank, 28 Pa. 386; State ex rel. Ballard v. Greene, 87 Vt. 94, 88 Atl. 515; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Gleason, 12 Fla. 190; West End v. State, 138 Ala. 295, 36 So. 423; Hinze v. People, 92 Ill. 406; Kelly v. State, 79 Miss. 168, 30 So. 49; Gunton v. Ingle, 4 Cranch, C. C. 438, Fed. Cas. No. 5,870; High Extr. Legal Rem. § 737; Spelling, Inj. & Extr. Rem., § 1856.

The right of the plaintiff to file an amended petition in a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto, for the same reason, in proper cases, would afford the right to file supplemental pleadings, as authorized by § 4795, Rev. Laws 1910. The only material change found in the supplemental petition from that contained in the original petition is the allegation that on the 4th day of January, 1915, the defendant qualified and took possession of the office of sheriff, and was continuing to exercise the authority of that office conferred upon him by law. Defendant's entrance into office was pursuant to the certificate of election issued to him by the county election board of McClain county November 6, 1914. The statute, as we construe it, makes the filing of supplemental pleadings a matter of discretion with the trial court. This discretion was exercised in favor of the plaintiff, by permitting him to file the supplemental petition. In Smith v. Smith, 22 Kan. 699, in an opinion by Judge Brewer, the application for leave to file a supplemental petition was denied, and the question presented was whether reversible error had been committed. It is said in the opinion: "We do not understand that a party may commence suit before a cause of action accrues, and then, after it accrues, as a matter of right, file a supplemental petition alleging the facts showing this. A party may not sue on a note two months before it matures, and then upon maturity demand, as a right, the filing of a supplemental petition showing the maturity. We do not mean that a court may not allow this, or that it may never be done; but it is not a matter of right."

In State ex rel. Dawson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 85 Kan. 649, 118 Pac. 872, it was urged that the action had been prematurely brought, for the reason that the defendants had eighty-seven days remaining in which to comply with the order in question, and that hence it was impossible for them to have already failed to obey. It was held that the allegations of the petition fairly showed a present determination not to perform, and that the defendants expressed no willingness to obey the order when sued, but contested its validity, and, under the circumstances, the action was not premature. It was said that the ninety days allowed by the statute for compliance with the order of the board of railroad commissioners "has now long since passed, and the defendants still refuse performance, and undertake to justify their course by the contention that the order is invalid."

And, further, that "a peremptory writ commanding such compliance at this time ought not to be withheld on the ground that, when the matter was first brought to the attention of the court, it was still possible for the defendants to obey the order within the statutory period. Even an ordinary civil action brought before the plaintiff's right has fully matured may be proceeded with, in the discretion of the court, upon the filing of a supplemental pleading (Smith v. Smith, 22 Kan. 699, 703; King v. Hyatt, 51 Kan. 504, 37 Am. St. Rep. 304, 32 Pac. 1105). And an action for damages for breach of contract may be maintained before the arrival of the time for its performance, where its obligation is denied (Caley v. Mills, 79 Kan. 418, 100 Pac. 69)."

In Brown v. Stuart, 90 Kan. 302, 133 Pac. 725, it was held to be wholly within the sound discretion of the court to permit the filing of a supplemental petition; while in Atkinson v. Kirkpatrick, 90 Kan. 515, 135 Pac. 579, citing Howard v. Johnston, 82 N. Y. 271, it was said that the provision of the Code allowing supplemental pleadings authorizes the court to permit a defendant to set up a set-off or counterclaim based upon facts arising since the filing of the original petition. After citing the statute of that state permitting the filing of supplemental pleadings, the court, in Halfmoon Bridge Co. v. Canal Board, 213 N. Y. 160, 107 N. E. 344, held that the trial court had a discretion to permit or refuse a supplemental pleading, but that such discretion must be exercised reasonably, and not capriciously or wilfully. In Jensen v. Dorr, 159 Cal. 742, 116 Pac. 553, it was held to be an abuse of discretion to refuse leave to defendant to set up by supplemental answer the bankruptcy discharge obtained subsequent to the commencement of the action as a bar to any personal judgment, where proper application was made therefor within a reasonable time. Other cases bearing upon the question at issue are: Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hadley, 179 Ind. 429, 45 L.R.A. (N.S.) 796, 101 N. E. 473; Milliken v. McGarrath, 164 App. Div. 110, 149 N. Y. Supp. 484; Henry

v. Montezuma Water & Land Co. 55 Colo. 182, 133 Pac. 747; Gribben v. Clement, 141 Iowa, 144, 133 Am. St. Rep. 157, 119 N. W. 596.

The statute authorizing the filing of supplemental petitions has been construed and given effect by this court in Wade v. Gould, 8 Okla. 690, 59 Pac. 11; Reynolds v. Hill, 28 Okla. 533, 114 Pac. 1108; Prince v. Gosnell, — Okla. —, 149 Pac. 1162. Our statute permitting amendments is very broad, and that permitting the filing of supplemental pleadings, it seems, vests in the trial court a full discretion in the matter of filing a supplemental petition, and leaves to the court the authority to permit the same to be done, upon such terms as to costs as the court may prescribe. In the case at bar the supplemental petition brought into the case no fact not known to the defendant. Indeed, at every stage of the proceedings, he had urged the precise objection that was met by the supplemental pleading. The trial was begun on March 25th, or almost three months after defendant had qualified and assumed the duties of the office. The court had already acquired jurisdiction of the action, though the original petition was defective. There was no change of parties, the subject-matter remained the same, and the object of the proceedings was the same. State ex rel. Wood v. Baker, 38 Wis. 71; State ex rel. Rose v. Job, 205 Mo. 1, 103 S. W. 493; Hunnicut v. State, 75 Tex. 233, 12 S. W. 106.

I believe the majority opinion of this court is in conflict with both the spirit and letter of § 6005, Rev. Laws 1910; for it certainly cannot be said that, by reason of the action of the trial court in permitting the supplemental petition to be filed, a miscarriage of justice resulted, or that in doing so the trial court violated a constitutional or statutory right of the defendant. This statute, and § 4791, providing that errors or defects in the pleadings or proceedings, not affecting the substantial rights of the adverse party, should furnish no grounds for reversal on account of such error, were intended to prevent the reversal of judgments upon mere technicalities, and to give regard to the merits of a controversy. The purpose of the former provision of the statute is recognized by the majority opinion, but it is said, in effect, that because the court refused to allow the defendant a reasonable time to answer the supplemental petition, and to prepare for trial, the court would not be justified in applying the statute. That the court may or may not have committed an error in ruling the defendant to answer on the following day presents another and different assignment of error from that under consideration. The point I urge is that, upon the record, no error or abuse of discretion was committed by the trial court in permitting the filing of the supplemental petition.

The opinion takes no account of the former decision of the court in Lewis v. Bandy, — Okla. —, 144 Pac. 624, where it is said in the syllabus: "Where the original petition alleges an intent upon the part of defendant to usurp the duties and functions of a particular office, it is not error for the court to permit an amendment to allege that such usurpation had, in fact, occurred."

The statement of the case is somewhat involved, though it appears that the action was begun November 20, 1912, and we may fairly assume from the statement in the syllabus and from the law fixing the time that the term of office of county commissioners shall begin that the "amendment" was filed after the defendant had entered upon the discharge of the duties of his office. In such circumstances a supplemental, and not an amended, petition, would have been the proper pleading, though the point does not appear to have been made.

I am, for the reasons stated, unable to concur in the opinion of the court.

Annotation—May original petition or complaint which states no cause of action be aided by supplemental pleading.

For effect upon right of foreign corporation to maintain suit, of compliance with local law after suit is instituted, see the notes to National Fertilizer Co. v. Fall River Five Cents Sav. Bank, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 561, and Amalgamated Zinc & Lead Co. v. Bay State Zinc Min. Co. 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 492; and also the case of Shipman, D. R. & Co. v. Portland Constr. Co. (1913) 64 Or. 1, 128 Pac. 989. L.R.A.1916D.

The rule.

It is a general principle that an original petition or complaint which states no cause of action cannot be aided by supplemental pleading.

Eng.—Godfrey v. Tucker (1863) 33 Beav. 280, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 559, 9 Jur. N. S. 1188, 9 L. T. N. S. 359, 12 Week. Rep. 33; Atty. Gen. v. Avon (1863) 11 Week. Rep. 1050, 2 New Reports, 564, 9 Jur. N. S. 1117; Tonkin v. Lethbridge (1811) G. Cooper, 43.

Fed.—Emerson v. Hubbard (1888) 34 Fed. 327; Putney v. Whitmire (1895) 66 Fed. 385.

Ala.—Hill v. Hill (1846) 10 Ala. 527; Land v. Cowan (1851) 19 Ala. 297 (as stating the rule); Vaughan v. Vaughan (1857) 30 Ala. 329; Planters' & M. Mut. Ins. Co. v. Selma Sav. Bank (1879) 63 Ala. 585; Scheerer v. Agee (1896) 113 Ala. 383, 21 So. 81 (in effect).

Cal.—Wittenbrock v. Bellmer (1880) 57 Cal. 12; Hill v. Den (1898) 121 Cal. 42, 53 Pac. 642; Morse v. Steele (1901) 132 Cal. 456, 64 Pac. 690.

Conn.—Dickerman v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (1899) 72 Conn. 271, 44 Atl. 228.

D. C.—Morrison v. Shuster (1881) 1 Mackey, 190.

Fla.—Neubert v. Masaman Bros. (1896) 37 Fla. 91, 19 So. 625.

Ill.—Brownback v. Keister (1906) 220 Ill. 544, 77 N. E. 75.

Ind.—Patten v. Stewart (1865) 24 Ind. 332; Simmons v. Lindley (1886) 108 Ind. 297, 9 N. E. 360; Chapman v. Jones (1897) 149 Ind. 434, 47 N. E. 1065, 49 N. E. 347; Barker v. Prizer (1897) 150 Ind. 4, 48 N. E. 4 (stating the rule).

Kan.—Brown v. Galena Min. & Smelting Co. (1884) 32 Kan. 528, 4 Pac. 1013.

Me.—Birmingham v. Lesan (1885) 77 Me. 494, 1 Atl. 151.

Md.—Bannon v. Comegys (1888) 69 Md. 411, 16 Atl. 129.

Mass.—Nichols v. Rogers (1885) 139 Mass. 146, 29 N. E. 377; Bernard v. Toplitz (1893) 160 Mass. 162, 39 Am. St. Rep. 465, 35 N. E. 673.

Minn.—Meyer v. Berlandi (1888) 39 Minn. 438, 1 L.R.A. 777, 12 Am. St. Rep. 663, 40 N. W. 513.

Miss.—Brown v. Bank of Mississippi (1856) 31 Miss. 454.

N. J.—Edgar v. Clevenger (1835) 3 N. J. Eq. 258.

N. Y.—Haddow v. Lundy (1874) 59 N. Y. 320 (stating the rule); McMahon v. Allen (1855) 12 How. Pr. 39, affirmed in (1856) 3 Abb. Pr. 89; Watson v. Thibou (1863) 17 Abb. Pr. 184; McCullough v. Colby (1859) 4 Bosw. 603; Muller v. Earle (1874) 5 Jones & S. 388 (as stating the rule); Morange v. Morange (1880) 2 Month. L. Bull. (N. Y.) 30; Halsted v. Halsted (1894) 7 Misc. 23, 27 N. Y. Supp. 408; Berford v. New York Iron Mine (1890) 25 Jones & S. 404, 8 N. Y. Supp. 193; Staunton v. Swann (1886) 10 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 12; Lafayette Trust Co. v. Peck (1900) 133 App. Div. 370, 117 N. Y. Supp. 336; Continental Constr. & Improv. Co. v. Vinal (1888) 14 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. L.R.A.1916D.

293, 1 N. Y. Supp. 200; Banigan v. Nyack (1898) 25 App. Div. 150, 49 N. Y. Supp. 199; South Shore Traction Co. v. Brookhaven (1907) 53 Misc. 392, 102 N. Y. Supp. 1074; Tiffany v. Bowerman (1874) 2 Hun, 643; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. United Lines Teleg. Co. (1888) 47 Hun, 315.

Okla.—Reader v. Farriss, ante, 672.

Tex.—Bradford v. Hamilton (1851) 7 Tex. 55.

Wash.—Lawrence v. Pederson (1904) 34 Wash. 1, 74 Pac. 1011; Gunby v. Ingram (1910) 57 Wash. 97, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 232, 106 Pac. 495; Keeler v. Parks (1913) 72 Wash. 255, 130 Pac. 111.

W. Va.—Straghan v. Hallwood (1887) 30 W. Va. 274, 8 Am. St. Rep. 29, 4 S. E. 394.

Thus, an action prematurely brought cannot be aided by a supplemental complaint. Morse v. Steele (1901) 132 Cal. 456, 64 Pac. 690.

Where it appeared that the plaintiff sued as the assignee of a mortgage from a corporation, the assignment being executed by its president, who had no such authority, it was held that the plaintiff could not succeed on showing a ratification since the commencement of the action, nor file a supplemental complaint for that purpose. Wittenbrock v. Bellmer (1880) 57 Cal. 12.

An action for services as worth so much, where the plaintiff had been placed by the defendant in possession of land which, under the contract for services, he was to receive, cannot be aided by showing that since the commencement of the suit the plaintiff had quit and surrendered the land, as he had no cause of action for the relief demanded when he brought his suit. Hill v. Den (1898) 121 Cal. 42, 53 Pac. 642.

The subsequent dismissal of the injunction suit cannot be set up by a supplemental pleading by plaintiff in an action for damages for wrongful injunction commenced after the injunction had been dissolved, but while the cause was still pending, as he had no right of action till the original cause was disposed of. Brown v. Galena Min. & Smelting Co. (1884) 32 Kan. 528, 4 Pac. 1013, quoted from in Reader v. Farriss.

One having no title at all to the cause of action may not set up by supplemental complaint his acquirement of a title pendente lite. Emerson v. Hubbard (1888) 34 Fed. 327; Bannon v. Comegys (1888) 69 Md. 411, 16 Atl. 129; Staunton v. Swann (1886) 10 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 12; Bradford v. Hamilton (1851) 7 Tex. 55; Atty.-Gen. v. Avon (1863) 11 Week.

Rep. (Eng.) 1050, 2 New Reports, 564, 9 Jur. N. S. 1117.

In Atty.-Gen. v. Avon (1863) 11 Week. Rep. (Eng.) 1050, the court, in holding that the plaintiff, having no title to sue when the bill was filed, could not avail himself of a title afterwards created, said: "The power of adding new matter by amendment was given by Stat. 15 & 16 Vict. chap. 86, only in those cases where a supplemental bill could have been filed under the old practice; but a supplemental bill was the continuation, not the commencement, of a suit, and it was contrary to the practice of the court to allow a plaintiff to seek, either by amendment or supplemental bill, relief to which he was not entitled at the time of the filing of the original bill."

One claiming to redeem a mortgage without title may not show by supplemental bill that he has bought in the title since filing the original bill. Tonkin v. Lethbridge (1811) G. Cooper (Eng.) 43 (this case is reported with great obscurity, but Story on Equity Pleading, § 339, and other authorities, adopt this construction of it).

In Evans v. Bagshaw (1869) L. R. 8 Eq. (Eng.) 469, it was held that a reversioner not in possession cannot bring partition, nor aid his bill by alleging other title acquired pendente lite.

In Pilkington v. Wignall (1817) 2 Madd. Ch. (Eng.) 240, it was held that the plaintiff, who filed a bill to redeem from a mortgage, having no title to do it, could not show by amended bill that he had acquired title since the filing of the original bill (but it is not stated what the result would have been on a supplemental bill).

The plaintiff suing for infringement of patents will not be permitted by supplemental bill to set up an assignment of claims for infringement which he did not own at the time of bringing the action. Emerson v. Hubbard (1888) 34 Fed. 327.

But a partial title may be strengthened pendente lite and set up by supplemental bill. See in illustration, Reeve v. North Carolina Land & Timber Co. (1905) 72 C. C. A. 287, 141 Fed. 821, certiorari denied in (1906) 203 U. S. 588, 51 L. ed. 329, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 776; Jaques v. Hall (1855) 3 Gray (Mass.) 194; Lowry v. Harris (1867) 12 Minn. 255, Gil. 166; Mutter v. Chauvel (1828) 5 Russ. Ch. (Eng.) 42.

Where complainant had an imperfect but inchoate title, and, after bringing the suit, simply perfected it by obtaining a valid sheriff's deed in place of an invalid one "which attempted to convey L.R.A.1916D.

the same title," it was proper to bring this in by supplemental bill. Reeve v. North Carolina Land & Timber Co. (1905) 72 C. C. A. 287, 141 Fed. 821, certiorari denied in (1906) 203 U. S. 588, 51 L. ed. 329, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 776.

In Jaques v. Hall (1855) 3 Gray (Mass.) 194, the court said, in sustaining a supplemental bill where some title was shown in the original bill: "The rule sought to be applied to this case, and one well sustained by authority, is that a bad title, set up in the original bill, cannot be aided by a supplemental bill, setting up a new and distinct title. . . . It is where the right to maintain the original bill wholly fails that no supplemental bill as to new matter can be filed. But it is not so where the plaintiff has subsequently strengthened an inchoate title, as in Mutter v. Chauvel (1828) 5 Russ. Ch. (Eng.) 42."

Jaques v. Hall (Mass.) supra, was followed in Lowry v. Harris (1867) 12 Minn. 255, Gil. 166, where, however, the court held that any objection was waived.

In Mutter v. Chauvel (Eng.) supra, one claiming under his father's will was permitted by supplemental bill to show a release from his sisters.

It was held in Humphreys v. Humphreys (1734) 3 P. W. Wms. (Eng.) 349, that the next of kin suing for the intestate's assets may show by amended bill that she had taken out administration since filing the original bill, where Lord Chancellor Talbot, in overruling the objection that there was an amended, and not a supplemental, bill, said that it was sufficient that the next of kin "had now taken out letters of administration, which, when granted, related to the time of the death of the intestate, like the case where an executor, before his proving the will, brings a bill, yet his subsequent proving the will makes such bill a good one, though the probate be after the filing thereof."

In Swatzel v. Arnold (1869) Woolw. 383, Fed. Cas. No. 13,682, it was held that an administrator in another jurisdiction, who had brought an action to foreclose a mortgage, might ask leave to amend, and, after this had been granted, might procure letters of administration in the jurisdiction, as the defect was not radical, he had an interest in the matter, the payment to him would have been a good payment, but the better practice would have been for him to have applied by supplemental bill.

Chancellor Walworth expressed the view that a foreign executor ought to be allowed to show that, since filing a bill, he had taken out local letters, in Buck v. Buck (1844) 11 Paige (N. Y.) 170, where he said, in dismissing a bill on another ground: "The taking out letters testamentary here, if the bill was properly filed by the personal representatives of the decedent, was a matter of form merely, and the liberty to make such amendment, and to retain the ne exeat, would be a proper exercise of judicial discretion. Such an amendment is an exception to the general rule that matters arising after the filing of the bill are not the proper subjects of amendment."

But in Mason v. Hartford, P. & F. R. Co. (1882) 10 Fed. 334, where administrators brought a bill of revivor and it appeared they had not been appointed administrators in the jurisdiction, they were not allowed to set up that they had taken out local letters since the suit was brought.

In Austin v. Jones (1892) 47 Kan. 565, 28 Pac. 621, it seems to have been held that some title in ejectment may be aided by showing, by supplemental petition, perfecting deeds and facts since the commencement of the action.

In Williams v. Moorehead (1885) 33 Kan. 609, 7 Pac. 226, the plaintiff, being in possession, but having, it seems, no other valid title, brought an action to quiet title, and was allowed to allege by supplemental petition a title acquired since suit brought.

Where time is not material, the plaintiff in specific performance, not having a title in fee, may show a title gained since the bill was filed; i. e., by act of Parliament passed since. Wynn v. Morgan (1802) 7 Ves. Jr. (Eng.) 202.

An action for specific performance may be aided by deed in confirmation of the plaintiff's title, made since the action was brought, where it is proper, in view of all the equities. National Webster Bank v. Eldridge (1874) 115 Mass. 424.

In Reformed Protestant Dutch Church v. Mott (1838) 7 Paige (N. Y.) 77, 32 Am. Dec. 613, it was held that "it is not a matter of course, however, to dismiss a bill for specific performance merely because the title was not perfect at the commencement of the suit, although that may be a sufficient reason for giving costs to the defendant, if he has not made any unreasonable objection to the title. A specific performance may be decreed if it appears by the report of a master that a perfect title can be made to the purchaser at the time of making such report, unless the purchaser has been materially injured by the delay." L.R.A.1916D.

Contra.

The only cases against the general rule seem to be (1) a few cases considering that it is not controlling in equity (see next subdivision), (2) certain Iowa cases (see "Iowa cases"), a case in the Ohio circuit court (see infra, "creditors' bills"), and one or two Kansas cases.

The Kansas cases seem in the main to follow the rule, but in Shaffer v. School Dist. (1899) 8 Kan. App. 751, 61 Pac. 759, it was held that a petition to recover on school district warrants may be aided by showing by supplemental petition an act of the legislature, passed after action brought, validating the issue of the warrants, which had no prior validity. The court observed that there was an equitable obligation on the school district for the warrants.

And in King v. Hyatt (1893) 51 Kan. 504, 37 Am. St. Rep. 304, 32 Pac. 1105, cited in the dissenting opinion in Readers v. Farris, the plaintiff, suing to recover land, was allowed by supplemental petition to set up an after-acquired title, but it does not appear whether or not he had any title at all before acquiring such title.

Equity cases follow the rule.

The general rule applies not only in law, but also in equity. Godfrey v. Tucker (1863) 33 Beav. (Eng.) 280, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 559, 9 Jur. N. S. 1188, 9 L. T. N. S. 359, 12 Week. Rep. 33; Atty-Gen. v. Avon (1863) 11 Week. Rep. (Eng.) 1050, 2 New Reports, 564, 9 Jur. N. S. 1117; Tonkin v. Lethbridge (1811) G. Cooper (Eng.) 43; Emerson v. Hubbard (1888) 34 Fed. 327; Putney v. Whitmore (1895) 66 Fed. 385; Reeve v. North Carolina Land & Timber Co. (1905) 72 C. C. A. 287, 141 Fed. 821; Hill v. Hill (1846) 10 Ala. 527; Vaughan v. Vaughan (1857) 30 Ala. 329; Planters' & M. Mut. Ins. Co. v. Selma Sav. Bank (1879) 63 Ala. 585; Scheerer v. Agee (1896) 113 Ala. 383, 21 So. 81; Morrison v. Shuster (1881) 1 Mackey (D. C.) 190; Neubert v. Massman Bros. (1896) 37 Fla. 91, 19 So. 625; Brownback v. Keister (1906) 220 Ill. 544, 77 N. E. 75; Patten v. Stewart (1865) 24 Ind. 332; Birmingham v. Lesan (1885) 77 Me. 494, 1 Atl. 151; Bernard v. Toplitz (1893) 160 Mass. 162, 39 Am. St. Rep. 465, 35 N. E. 673; Nichols v. Rogers (1885) 139 Mass. 146, 29 N. E. 377; Brown v. Bank of Mississippi (1856) 31 Miss. 454; Edgar v. Clevenger (1835) 3 N. J. Eq. 258; Haddow v. Lundy (1874) 59 N. Y. 320 (as stating the rule); Banigan v. Nyack (1898) 25 App. Div. 150, 49 N. Y. Supp. 199; South Shore Trac- tion Co. v. Brookhaven (1907) 53 Misc. 392, 102 N. Y. Supp. 1074; Morange v. Morange (1880) 2 Month. L. Bull. (N. Y.) 30; Halsted v. Halsted (1894) 7 Misc. 23, 27 N. Y. Supp. 408; Gunby v. Ingram (1910) 57 Wash. 97, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 232, 106 Pac. 495; Keeler v. Parks (1913) 72 Wash. 255, 130 Pac. 111; Straughan v. Hallwood (1887) 30 W. Va. 274, 8 Am. St. Rep. 29, 4 S. E. 394. See also Ferrier v. Ferrier (1843) 4 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 296.

"If the original bill is wholly defective, so that no valid decree could be made thereon, the party cannot, by filing a supplemental bill, founded upon matters which have subsequently taken place, sustain the proceedings originally commenced." Walworth, Chancellor, in Candler v. Pettit (1828) 1 Paige (N. Y.) 168, 19 Am. Dec. 399, where, however, a supplemental bill was held proper.

"We have found no authority that goes so far as to authorize a party who has no cause of action at the time of filing his original bill, to file a supplemental bill in order to maintain his suit upon a cause of action that accrued after the original bill was filed, even though it arose out of the same transaction that was the subject of the original bill." Pinch v. Anthony (1865) 10 Allen (Mass.) 470, 2 Mor. Min. Rep. 593, where the court allowed a supplemental bill.

"If an orator has no case in equity when he brings his original bill, he cannot make one by a supplemental bill setting up a new cause of action." International Paper Co. v. Bellows Falls Canal Co. (1914) — Vt. —, 90 Atl. 943.

In Mellor v. Smither (1902) 52 C. C. A. 64, 114 Fed. 116, the court, in holding a supplemental bill proper, said: "The correct decision of this case turns on the question whether or not the plaintiff, at the time he filed his bill, had a cause of action. If he had no cause of action, then he cannot, by amendment or supplemental bill, introduce a cause of action that accrued thereafter, even though it arose out of the same transaction that was the subject of the original bill."

In New York Secur. & T. Co. v. Lincoln Street R. Co. (1896) 74 Fed. 67, the court, in holding a supplemental bill proper, said: "The question is whether the original bill set forth a substantial cause of action; for it is admitted by counsel for complainant that if the original bill fails to set up a state of facts justifying the relief sought, or, in other words, fails to set up a cause of action then existing, a supplemental bill, based L.R.A.1916D.

upon facts occurring after the filing of the original bill, cannot be sustained.

See also the quotation from Atty-Gen. v. Avon (1863) 11 Week. Rep. (Eng.) 1050, 2 New Reports, 564, 9 Jur. N. S. 1117 (supra, under "The rule").

In Putney v. Whitmire (1895) 66 Fed. 385, where several parties filed a bill in equity in the United States circuit court, each party's claim being less than $2,000, and later filed a supplemental bill alleging that, since filing the original bill, some of the complainants had assigned to others, thus increasing the claim of the latter to a sum above the jurisdictional amount, the court, in holding that the jurisdictional defect had not been cured by the supplemental bill, said: "The rule is that if an original bill is defective, and there is no ground for proceeding upon it, it cannot be sustained by filing a supplemental bill founded upon matters which have subsequently taken place."

A premature action is not aided by a supplemental complaint setting up facts occurring since the suit was brought. Gunby v. Ingram (1910) 57 Wash. 97, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 232, 106 Pac. 495 (foreclosure); Bernard v. Toplitz (1893) 160 Mass. 162, 39 Am. St. Rep. 465, 35 N. E. 673 (bill to redeem from a mortgage); Keeler v. Parks (1913) 72 Wash. 255, 130 Pac. 111.

On a bill in equity for the construction of a will by heirs against the mortgagees of a legatee, where it was held that the legatee took under a condition subsequent, which he had failed to perform, the plaintiffs could not succeed without entry, and could not show entry since filing the original bill. Birmingham v. Lesan (1885) 77 Me. 494, 1 Atl. 151.

Where a will gave the widow the right to pick out fifteen slaves, she could not maintain an action against the heirs and administrators for the fifteen slaves where she did not pick them out until after the bringing of the action, and endeavored to set up the matter by supplemental bill, as the cause of action did not accrue until after the suit was brought. Vaughan v. Vaughan (1857) 30 Ala. 329.

—divorces.

A divorce a vinculo cannot be had on acts of adultery committed since the suit was brought. Ferrier v. Ferrier (1843) 4 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 296, where nothing is said of any supplemental pleading.

On the authority of this case the court denied a motion to file a supplemental bill in the like case of Morange v. Mo-range (1880) 2 Month. L. Bull. (N. Y.) 30.

In Halsted v. Halsted (1894) 7 Misc. 23, 27 N. Y. Supp. 408, it was held that "in an action for divorce a vinculo matrimonii the plaintiff cannot recover upon proof merely that the defendant has committed an act of adultery since the action was commenced (Ferrier v. Ferrier (N. Y.) supra), for the obvious reason that the adultery proved is not the adultery alleged and complained of. Thus, the cause of action assigned is unproved. The subsequent adultery is ground for a new and independent action, and leave, therefore, to set it up by supplemental complaint, should not be granted. Milner v. Milner, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 114; Morange v. Morange (N. Y.) supra."

In Hill v. Hill (1846) 10 Ala. 527, where a man brought an action against his wife for divorce from bed and board on the ground of cruelty, and stated that she had left his house and gone to the state of Mississippi, he would not afterwards be allowed to bring in a supplemental bill asking for a divorce a vinculo, charging a voluntary abandonment by the wife for the space of three years, it appearing by the court's opinion that this cause of action did not exist at the time of the filing of the original bill.

—creditors' bills.

A creditor's bill is not supported by judgment obtained as a creditor after the filing of the bill, he not being a judgment creditor at that time. Morrison v. Shuster (1881) 1 Mackey (D. C.) 190; Brown v. Bank of Mississippi (1856) 31 Miss. 454; Edgar v. Clevenger (1835) 3 N. J. Eq. 258.

The same is true where no execution had been issued and returned before the suit was brought. Neubert v. Massman Bros. (1896) 37 Fla. 91, 19 So. 625.

A creditors' bill which was not good, as it was brought within six months from the judgment, and no elegit had been issued, could not be supported by amendment showing a mortgage acquired pending the suit. Godfrey v. Tucker (1863) 33 Beav. (Eng.) 280, 33 L. J. Ch. N. S. 559, 9 Jur. N. S. 1188, 9 L. T. N. S. 359, 12 Week. Rep. 33.

In Banigan v. Nyack (1898) 25 App. Div. 150, 49 N. Y. Supp. 199, it was held that a receiver in supplemental proceedings, suing before execution, could not set up later executions on judgments in favor of third parties on which he was also appointed receiver.

But there may be equity in the original bill although there had not been L.R.A.1916D.

judgment and execution at law. Thus, complainant, pending a suit at law against the defendant, brought a bill against him, praying an injunction and ne exeat, and he was allowed to show a later judgment and execution at law, as the original bill was sustainable on the ground that the bail had become insolvent, and this was sufficient for the ne exeat. Candler v. Pettit (1828) 1 Paige (N. Y.) 168, 19 Am. Dec. 399.

It has been held in two cases in Ohio and one in New York, that the reversal of the judgment in the case at law on which a creditors' bill rests, and a subsequent new judgment for the plaintiff at law, may be set up by supplemental bill. Stoddard v. Myers (1837) 8 Ohio, 203; Gibbon v. Dougherty (1859) 10 Ohio St. 365; Merrihew v. Kingsbury (1912) 150 App. Div. 40, 134 N. Y. Supp. 452. The Ohio cases do not seem to consider this as any infringement of the general rule, while the New York case puts its decision on the ground that the rule is not controlling in equity. (For a fuller statement of the New York case, see infra, under "—view that rule is not controlling in equity.")

In Stoddard v. Myers (Ohio) supra, the court said: "It is assumed that when the right to recover, in the bill in equity, was taken away by the reversal of the judgment, the suit ceased to be pending, so far as to bind the property. We are not satisfied that this position is a sound one. No such distinction is to be found in the books. But the doctrine seems plain that by the institution of a suit, the subject of litigation is placed beyond the power of the parties to it; that whilst the suit continues in court, it holds the property to respond to the final judgment or decree. This suit, instituted in 1831, was regularly continued until the final decree in 1835. The supplemental bill was engrafted into the original bill, and became identified with it. The whole was a lis pendens, effectually preventing an intermediate alienation."

In Gibbon v. Dougherty (Ohio) supra, the court said: "The subject-matter of the suit and the parties in the action, as well as the object of the suit, all continued to be before the court. The substantial object was the payment of the debt of the judgment debtor; and the reversal of that judgment for an irregularity was in no sense an intimation of its payment, or a relinquishment of the claim of the plaintiff to enforce its payment in the manner and by means expressed in the petition. The law, which never requires a vain thing, would not, therefore, require a plaintiff, after having the irregularity in the judgment cured by a new judgment expressing the same debt, [to] incur the delay and expense of dismissing the suit and commencing de novo, when the entire proceeding could be perfected by a supplemental petition."

Contrary to the general rule it was held in Seofield v. Excelsior Oil Co. (1905) 27 Ohio C. C. 347, that a petition by a creditor of a corporation alleged to be insolvent, which is bad as not stating a judgment and execution against the company, may be aided by a supplemental petition showing such a judgment and execution since the suit was brought. The court does not refer to the rule nor to any distinction between law and equity in the matter.

—view that rule is not controlling in equity.

There are a few cases which take the view that in equity the rule is not controlling. Woodbridge v. Pratt & W. Co. (1897) 69 Conn. 304, 37 Atl. 688; Butler v. Butler (1823) 4 Litt. (Ky.) 202; Merrihew v. Kingsbury (1912) 150 App. Div. 40, 134 N. Y. Supp. 452.

In Woodbridge v. Pratt & W. Co. (Conn.) supra, the court, in holding that the plaintiff could recover in an equity action for an accounting prematurely brought, said: "An action at law can only be supported on the facts existing when it was first brought. It rests on the charge of a breach of duty, for which, at common law, the defendant was liable to immediate arrest and imprisonment. In such a proceeding, if it appears that the plaintiff had suffered no wrong which would support his suit, when the process was served, there can be no recovery. Equitable proceedings rest upon different foundations, and in them the parties can always rely on new matter, if properly pleaded. The plaintiff asked for both legal and equitable relief, but the latter only was awarded him by the judgment. Had he put the allegations of the fourth or fifth count in the shape of a supplemental complaint, the accounting ordered would have been entirely proper. His failure to present his cause of action in that form cannot invalidate the judgment unless the defendant was injuriously affected by it. Gen. Stat. § 1135. Nothing appears upon the record to indicate that such can have been the result. It had full opportunity, under the pleadings as they stood, to offer all testimony and present all claims of which it could have availed itself upon a trial under a supplemental complaint." The court does not cite any authority for the view that the rule is not controlling in equity.

In Butler v. Butler (1823) 4 Litt. (Ky.) 202, an action for alimony on the ground of abandonment when, at the time of suit brought, the necessary year of abandonment had not expired, but it did expire before the decree, the court, in intimating that this fact might have been set up by new pleading, said, though it was not necessary to the result: "It will be admitted that the trial of an issue, in a court of common law, determines upon the controversy as it stood at the commencement of the action, except such issues as are formed on the plea of puis darreign continuance; and that if there was, at the commencement of suit, no cause of action, it is fatal, however strong it may have become afterwards. But the rule in a court of equity is somewhat different. The chancellor is not tied down to such strictness as to refuse relief in all cases where the bill was filed prematurely. Redress may sometimes be given in such case, and the costs of the suit may be imposed upon the complainant, which accrued before the cause of complaint had arrived at maturity, as a penalty upon his haste." The court does not support its view with any authority.

In Merrihew v. Kingsbury (1912) 150 App. Div. 40, 134 N. Y. Supp. 452, referred to supra under "—creditors' bills," the court allowed a supplemental complaint where, as it states the case, "the plaintiff obtained a judgment against defendant Parrott, and issued execution, which was returned unsatisfied, whereupon the present action was brought in the nature of a creditors' bill, to set aside a conveyance of land made by her to appellant Kingsbury, and by him transferred to the other defendants, in alleged fraud of the plaintiff's rights. Thereafter the judgment obtained against Parrott was set aside and the cause retried, resulting in another judgment for a similar amount except for increased interest. The plaintiff issued an execution upon this latter judgment, which was returned unsatisfied, and then moved to be allowed to file a supplemental complaint, alleging the recovery of the second judgment and the issuance and return of execution unsatisfied thereon." The court said: "If the action were one at law it would have been improper to allow a supplemental pleading setting forth acts subsequent to the commencement of the action for which an independent action might have been brought. John D. Park & Sons Co.

v. Hubbard (1910) 198 N. Y. 136, 91 N. E. 261. The action, however, is in equity, where full relief may be given up to the time of trial. . . . Nor will such applications be denied on the theory that a cause of action is not stated in the original pleading, not only because the amendment may cure that defect, but because the pleading should not be tested on such a motion. Brewster v. F. G. Brewster Co. 138 App. Div. 139, 122 N. Y. Supp. 1019." Brewster v. F. G. Brewster Co. is not an authority for the proposition that the supplement may cure a pleading which does not state a cause of action. It was there said: "Unless the insufficiency of the original pleading has been authoritatively adjudicated, the motion for leave to serve the supplemental pleading will neither be denied on the theory that a cause of action is not stated in the original pleading, nor on the theory that it will be of no avail, for those questions should be left to be decided on demurrer, or on motion for judgment on the pleadings, or on the trial, whereby the party desiring to interpose the pleading will be afforded a clear legal right to review any adverse decision or ruling."

Iowa.

In Iowa, with one or two exceptions, the rule is not regarded.

Upon an action to reform a marine insurance policy and for a loss incurred, it was held that the petition gave the court jurisdiction, and therefore, although the action was brought within sixty days from the time of loss, whereas, by the policy, the company was not held to pay a loss until after sixty days, the plaintiff might, by supplemental bill, show that the sixty days had expired. Franklin Ins. Co. v. McCrea (1854) 4 G. Greene (Iowa) 229.

Where the defendant set up that notes sued on were not to become due and payable until he was released as indorser on certain notes given by the plaintiff, it was held that the plaintiff might show by supplemental complaint that, since the commencement of the suit, the plaintiff had paid off the notes on which the defendant was indorser, as the original cause of action was not on the release, but on the notes. Davenport v. Mitchell (1863) 15 Iowa, 194.

In Dennison v. Soper (1871) 33 Iowa, 183, while there is no mention of a supplemental pleading, the court held that a surety on a note, who, before its maturity, brought an action alleging that the other makers had disposed in part of their property, and were attempting to dispose of the balance, with intent to defraud their creditors, could not show that, since the bringing of the action, he had paid the note.

In Bloom v. State Ins. Co. (1895) 94 Iowa, 359, 62 N. W. 810, the plaintiff sued on a policy of fire insurance, the premium note not having been paid at the time of the fire, but having been collected by the company thereafter and after the suit was brought. The court apparently considered that the company had waived the objection as to time of payment, and said: "A point is made that the payment of the note was made after the action was commenced, and that if no right of action existed when the suit was commenced the plaintiff should fail. It appears from the abstract that the plaintiff filed a substituted petition on the 15th day of February, 1893, and that the defendant filed its answer on the 18th day of April, 1893. Both of these pleadings were filed some time after the premium note was fully paid. So far as the petition was based upon the complete payment of the premium, it was in the nature of a supplemental pleading."

In Zalesky v. Home Ins. Co. (1897) 102 Iowa, 613, 71 N. W. 566, where, under the fire insurance policy sued on, an appraisal was a condition precedent to the bringing of a suit on the policy, it was held that a demand for, or acquiescence in an appraisal after suit was brought should not be set up by supplemental bill.

In Little v. Pottawattamie County (1904) 127 Iowa, 376, 101 N. W. 752, where the statute provided that "no action shall be brought against any county on an unliquidated demand until the same shall be presented to such board [of supervisors] and payment demanded and refused or neglected," it was held that the plaintiff might by supplemental petition set up a demand and refusal subsequent to suit brought. The court said, inter alia: "Action having been prematurely brought, the plaintiff should be allowed, after presenting his claim, and being met with a refusal to pay, to file an amendment or supplement to his petition, reciting the facts, and, after paying or offering to pay the costs down to the time the payment was refused, be permitted to proceed with the case. . . . The only discordant note, if there be any, is Zalesky v. Home Ins. Co. (Iowa) supra. But in that case the plaintiff had no cause of action for more than nominal damages until ascertained by an appraisal, and it was held that as he had, by reason of a contract between the parties, stipulated that no suit should be brought until an appraisal was made, and then only for the amount of the appraisal, he could not, by supplemental petition, show that after the bringing of the original action he had made a demand for an appraisal. The case was decided wholly on the contract limitations made by the parties, and the statutes relied upon by plaintiff herein, as well as by plaintiff in that case, with reference to the filing of amended or supplemental petitions, were held not applicable. Moreover, the plaintiff in that case did not file a supplemental petition, as we understand it. He asked for a continuance of the case, that he might make demand for an appraisal; and the trial court—erroneously, as we held—granted his request. This for the plain reason that a plaintiff cannot ask a delay of his suit that he may either perfect or create a substantial cause of action. What was said in the case must be construed with reference to the facts involved. True, after the continuance was granted in that case, a supplemental petition was filed; but it was the order granting the continuance in the case for the purpose of maturing or creating the cause of action which was the controlling feature."

In Gribben v. Clement (1909) 141 Iowa, 144, 138 Am. St. Rep. 157, 119 N. W. 596, the plaintiff brought an action on a note and mortgage, given to secure him as surety for the defendant, before he had paid the principal's debt, and later paid it and set this up in a supplemental pleading and succeeded. The court, in affirming the judgment, pointed out that while, at the time of suit brought, the debt had not been paid, the plaintiff had authorized the bank which held it and where he had an account to pay it and charge it to his account, but further stated: "The old rule which required an action to be abated, merely because prematurely brought, has been borne down by the trend of modern decisions. Under the later decisions, if the plaintiff's cause of action is complete and mature before it comes to a hearing, he will ordinarily be permitted to try it out on its merits. If the action was prematurely brought, the court has full power to impose proper terms upon the plaintiff for the full protection of the defendant. The usual terms imposed are that plaintiff be required to pay all costs incurred prior to the maturity of his cause of action. If other terms ought in justice to be imposed, the court has plenary power in L.R.A.1916D.

the matter. The rule is to permit a supplemental petition to be filed and to allow the case to proceed. See Little v. Pottawattamie County (1904) 127 Iowa, 381, 101 N. W. 752; Bloom v. State Ins. Co. (1895) 94 Iowa, 359, 62 N. W. 810." The court distinguished the cases of Dennison v. Soper (1871) 33 Iowa, 183, and Zalesky v. Home Ins. Co. (1897) 102 Iowa, 621, 71 N. W. 566, but did not seem to approve the Dennison Case.

Miscellaneous.

Where the defendant, in an action for contribution on a joint account of the parties with a broker, claimed that there was a balance still due on the joint account, and that the action would not lie until this was paid or the plaintiff deducted it, the court said: "Assuming that to have been the situation when the bill was filed in July, 1894, it would seem that the statute of limitations has long since run against the brokers, and on the report the brokers must be taken to have acquiesced in that as the practical ending of all claims or their part, and the action can now be maintained. That an action may be maintained if outstanding debts due the partnership are barred, see Williams v. Henshaw (1832) 12 Pick. (Mass.) 380, 23 Am. Dec. 614. A fact occurring after the filing of the bill which makes good the plaintiff's cause of action may be set up by amendment. Chancery Rule 25." Hill v. Fuller (1905) 188 Mass. 195, 74 N. E. 361.

In Rogers v. Davenport (1880) 11 Reporter, 167, mem. also reported in 23 Hun (N. Y.) 353, where, in an action on a judgment of another state, the answer alleged that the appearance of the attorney in the other state was unauthorized, it was held that the plaintiff was properly allowed to serve a supplemental complaint upon the promissory note on which the judgment was obtained, but that the defendant should have been allowed the taxable costs of his defense if he wished to allow judgment to be entered on the note.

In an action against officers for seizure of merchandise, the defense was that the property was taken by attachment as the property of a third person, to which the plaintiff replied by general denial, and later the attachment was discharged on the ground that the alleged causes were untrue, and it was held proper for the plaintiff, by amended reply, to set up the discharge. Simpson v. Voss (1884) 31 Kan. 227, 1 Pac. 601, where the court said: "The discharge of the attachment related back to the issuance of the order of attachment, and swept away the defense that, by virtue of the attachment proceedings, the defendants below officially took possession of the property claimed. After the attachment was dissolved, they could not justify thereunder."

In Fahs v. Roberts (1870) 54 Ill. 192, an action was brought to enjoin the sheriff from selling certain property under execution as not the subject of levy, and it was held that it might not be shown by supplemental bill that the judgment on which the execution rested had been reversed since bringing the injunction suit. The ground of the decision probably is that the reversal of the judgment was not germane to the injunction suit. The court, however, apparently states that there was no ground for the injunction originally, although it also shows that of the three kinds of property levied on, two kinds were exempt from levy.

Where the plaintiff, after bringing an action of infringement of a patent, was enjoined from proceeding against the customers of a certain person, of whom the defendant was one, it was proper by supplemental bill to set up the eventual success of the plaintiff in said injunction suit. Kryptok Co. v. Haussmann & Co. (1914) 216 Fed. 267.

State ex rel. Dawson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (1911) 85 Kan. 649, 118 Pac. 872, is sufficiently referred to in the dissenting opinion in READER v. FARRISS, ante, 672. It will be noticed that the action was held not premature.

Smith v. Smith (1879) 22 Kan. 699, also is sufficiently referred to in such dissenting opinion.

The holding ascribed in the dissenting opinion to Brown v. Stuart (1913) 90 Kan. 302, 133 Pac. 725, was in a case where it was held that the court had jurisdiction before the after-occurring facts.

Orton v. Noonan (1873) 29 Wis. 541, cited in the opinion in READER v. FARRISS ante, 672, related to a supplemental answer, as did Halfmoon Bridge Co. v. Canal Board (1914) 213 N. Y. 160, 107 N. E. 344, cited in the dissenting opinion. B. B. B.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

TENNESSEE COAL, IRON, & RAILROAD COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

WILEY GEORGE.

(233 U. S. 354, 58 L. ed. 907, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 587.)

Statutes — full faith and credit — venue of transitory action.

The enforcement by the Georgia courts of the cause of action given by Ala. Code, § 3910, to a servant against the master, for injuries occasioned by defective machinery, does not deny full faith and credit to the provision of § 6116 of that Code, that "all actions under § 3910 must be brought in a court of competent jurisdiction within the state of Alabama, and not elsewhere."

For other cases, see Conflict of Laws, II. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(Mr. Justice Holmes dissents.)

(April 13, 1914.)

Note. — As to extraterritorial effect of statute limiting jurisdiction in which action may be brought, see annotation following this case, post, 688.

For validity of provision in contract as to place where action must be brought, see annotation following Nashua River Paper Co. v. Hammermill Paper Co. post, 696. L.R.A.1916D.

ERROR to the Court of Appeals of the State of Georgia to review a judgment which affirmed a judgment of the City Court of Atlanta in favor of plaintiff in an action founded on a provision of the Alabama Code giving a right of action to a servant against the master for injuries occasioned by defective machinery. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Alexander W. Smith, for plaintiff in error:

The condition or limitation put upon a right of action created by statute, and not existing at common law, inheres in the right itself, and follows it into other jurisdictions.

Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Wallace, 223 U. S. 481, 490, 56 L. ed. 516, 522, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 205; The Harrisburg, 119 U. S. 199, 30 L. ed. 358, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 140; Davis v. Mills, 194 U. S. 451, 454, 48 L. ed. 1067, 1070, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 692; Munos v. Southern P. Co. 2 C. C. A. 163, 2 U. S. App. 222, 51 Fed. 188; Stern v. La Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, 110 Fed. 996; The Edna, 185 Fed. 206; United States use of Gibson Lumber Co. v. Boomer, 106 C. C. A. 164, 183 Fed. 726; Coyne v. Southern P. R. Co. 155 Fed. 683.

Such a condition or limitation need not be contained in the same statute. It operates the same way if it be specially attached to such a statutory right of action subsequently and in a different statute.

Davis v. Mills, 194 U. S. 451, 454, 48 L. ed. 1067, 1070, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 692.

The courts of the United States take judicial notice of the public laws of each state of the Union.

Mills v. Green, 159 U. S. 651, 657, 40 L. ed. 293, 295, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132.

Where a limitation to local courts was affixed to a cause of action existing at the common law, and independently of the statute affixing it, the limitation was disregarded in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sowers, 213 U. S. 55, 53 L. ed. 695, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397. A well-defined distinction exists between cases based on common-law liability and those depending on statutory rules of liability.

Charleston & W. C. R. Co. v. Miller, 113 Ga. 15, 38 S. E. 338; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 382, 28 L. ed. 787, 789, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 184; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1161; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 378, 379, 37 L. ed. 772, 777, 778, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 914; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Castle, 224 U. S. 541, 56 L. ed. 875, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 606; Employer's Liability Cases (Howard v. Illinois C. R. Co.) 207 U. S. 463, 537, 52 L. ed. 297, 326, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 141; Second Employers' Liability Cases (Mon-dou v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co.) 223 U. S. 1, 49, 56 L. ed. 327, 345, 38 L.R.A. (N. S.) 44, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 169, 1 N. C. C. A. 875; Mobile & B. R. Co. v. Holborn, 84 Ala. 133, 4 So. 146, 13 Am. Neg. Cas. 125.

"Interstate venue," or venue as between different countries, is jurisdictional. "Municipal venue," or venue as between different places in the same jurisdiction, as a rule has to do with procedure merely.

Ellenwood v. Marietta Chair Co. 158 U. S. 105, 108, 39 L. ed. 913, 914, 15 Sup. Ct. Rep. 771; Companhia de Mocambique v. British South Africa Co. [1892] 2 Q. B. 358, 61 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 663, 66 L. T. N. S. 773, 40 Week. Rep. 650.

There is a profound distinction between the existence of jurisdiction in a given court and its proper exercise in a given case therein.

Smith v. McKay, 161 U. S. 355, 358, 40 L. ed. 731, 732, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 490; Louisville Trust Co. v. Knott, 191 U. S. 225, 233, 48 L. ed. 159, 162, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 119; United States v. Larkin, 208 U. S. 333, 338, 52 L. ed. 517, 519, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 417; Fore River Shipbuilding Co. v. Hagg, 219 U. S. 175, 55 L. ed. 163, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185; Van Fleet, Collateral Attack, chap. 4.

Whenever a right of action has become fixed and a legal liability incurred, that L.R.A.1916D.

right of action may be pursued and that liability enforced in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Dennick v. Central R. Co. 103 U. S. 11, 18, 26 L. ed. 439, 441; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593, 36 L. ed. 829, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 905; Stewart v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 168 U. S. 445, 42 L. ed. 537, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105; Whitman v. National Bank, 176 U. S. 559, 44 L. ed. 587, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 477.

The principle involved is closely analogous to that found in the decisions relative to the enforcement of "death statutes" enacted in one state and invoked in another. All restrictions and limitations therein found are enforced everywhere.

Slater v. Mexico Nat. R. Co. 194 U. S. 120, 126, 48 L. ed. 900, 902, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 581; Chambers v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 207 U. S. 142, 52 L. ed. 143, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 34.

So, also, it is analogous to the application of statutes of limitations of the locus in the forum.

Davis v. Mills, 194 U. S. 451, 457, 48 L. ed. 1067, 1071, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 692; Selma, R. & D. R. Co. v. Lacey, 49 Ga. 106.

So, also, it is analogous to the question of statutory venue of suits under the act of Congress authorizing actions on contractor's bonds in government work.

Davidson Bros. Marble Co. v. United States, 213 U. S. 10, 16, 53 L. ed. 675, 677, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 324; United States use of Gibson Lumber Co. v. Boomer, 106 C. C. A. 164, 183 Fed. 726; United States v. Congress Constr. Co. 222 U. S. 199, 56 L. ed. 163, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 44.

Mr. Reuben R. Arnold, for defendant in error:

The decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sowers, 213 U. S. 55, 53 L. ed. 695, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397, which was a decision upon a similar statute of New Mexico, is controlling.

There are many cases where the forum, in enforcing the law of another state, has enforced the substantive rights created by such state through statute, and has ignored attempted conditions imposed by the lex loci which deal only with the remedy.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Whitton, 13 Wall. 270, 20 L. ed. 571; Husted v. Missouri P. R. Co. 143 Mo. App. 623, 128 S. W. 282; Philes v. Missouri P. R. Co. 141 Mo. App. 561, 125 S. W. 555.

In the following cases the right of action was sustained in transitory actions in one state under the laws of another state, and various provisions of the lex loci regulating the remedy, which were claimed to be a part of the right itself, were disregarded.

Stewart v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 168 U. S. 445, 42 L. ed. 537, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105; Hollenbach v. Elmore & H. Contracting Co. 174 Fed. 845; Southern R. Co. v. Decker, 5 Ga. App. 21, 62 S. E. 678; Southern R. Co. v. Robertson, 7 Ga. App. 154, 66 S. E. 535; Holmes v. Barclay, 4 La. Ann. 63.

The lex loci relating to remedy, even though those laws may have been parcel of the same general enactment in which the rights were created, does not apply to the forum, and it is clear that the Federal Constitution and act of Congress upon the full faith and credit proposition are not in conflict with the general current of authority.

Minor, Conf. L. § 192, p. 476; Storey, Conf. L. §§ 539, 540, 556, 558; Stevens v. Brown, 20 W. Va. 450; Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hurd, 56 L.R.A. 196, note; Herrick v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 31 Minn. 11, 47 Am. Rep. 772, 16 N. W. 413.

It would be impossible to transplant all the remedies provided by the lex loci to the lex fori and make them parts and conditions of the rights granted. The jurisdiction and powers of the courts of the several states vary, and each state must apply its own machinery to rights granted in another state, as the machinery cannot be transferred. This applies to the forms of action, the process, the sufficiency of the pleadings, etc.

22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1383, 1384; 4 Sutherland, Damages, § 4280.

Mr. Justice Lamar delivered the opinion of the court:

Wiley George, the defendant in error, was an engineer employed by the Tennessee Coal, Iron, & Railroad Company at its steel plant in Jefferson county, Alabama. While he was under a locomotive repairing the brakes, a defective throttle allowed steam to leak into the cylinder, causing the engine to move forward automatically, in consequence of which he was seriously injured. He brought suit by attachment, in the city court of Atlanta, Georgia, founding his action on § 3910 of the Alabama Code, which makes the master liable to the employee when the injury is "caused by reason of any defect in the condition of the ways, works, machinery, or plant connected with or used in the business of the master or employer."

The defendant filed a plea in abatement in which it was set out that § 6115 of that Code also provided that "all actions under § 3910 must be brought in a court of competent jurisdiction within the state of Alabama, and not elsewhere." The defendant thereupon prayed that the action be abated L.R.A.1916D.

because "to continue said case of said statutory cause of action given by the statutes of Alabama, and restricted by said statutes to the courts of Alabama, would be a denial so far as the rights of this defendant are concerned of full faith and credit to said public acts of the state of Alabama in the state of Georgia, contrary to the provisions of art. 4, § 1 of the Constitution of the United States." A demurrer to the plea in abatement was sustained and the judgment for the plaintiff thereafter entered was affirmed by the court of appeals. The case was then brought to this court.

The record raises the single question as to whether the full faith and credit clause of the Constitution prohibited the courts of Georgia and enforcing a cause of action given by the Alabama Code, to the servant against the master, for injuries occasioned by defective machinery, when another section of the same Code provided that suits to enforce such liability "must be brought in a court of competent jurisdiction within the state of Alabama, and not elsewhere."

There are many cases where right and remedy are so united that the right cannot be enforced except in the manner and before the tribunal designated by the act. For the rule is well settled that "where the provision for the liability is coupled with a provision for the special remedy, that remedy, that alone, must be employed." Pollard v. Bailey, 20 Wall. 527, 22 L. ed. 378; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Wallace, 223 U. S. 490, 56 L. ed. 522, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 205; Stewart v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 168 U. S. 445, 42 L. ed. 537, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 105; Fourth Nat. Bank v. Francklyn, 120 U. S. 753, 30 L. ed. 828, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757.

But that rule has no application to a case arising under the Alabama Code relating to suits for injuries caused by defective machinery. For, whether the statute be treated as prohibiting certain defenses, as removing common-law restrictions, or as imposing upon the master a new and larger liability, it is in either event evident that the place of bringing the suit is not part of the cause of action,—the right and the remedy are not so inseparably united as to make the right dependent upon its being enforced in a particular tribunal. The cause of action is transitory, and like any other transitory action can be enforced "in any court of competent jurisdiction within the state of Alabama. . . ." But the owner of the defective machinery causing the injury may have removed from the state, and it would be a deprivation of a fixed right if the plaintiff could not sue the defendant in Alabama because he had left the state, nor sue him where the defendant or his property could be found because the statute did not permit a suit elsewhere than in Alabama. The injured plaintiff may likewise have moved from Alabama, and for that, or other, reason may have found it to his interest to bring suit by attachment or in personam in a state other than where the injury was inflicted.

The courts of the sister state, trying the case, would be bound to give full faith and credit to all those substantial provisions of the statute which inhered in the cause of action, or which named conditions on which the right to sue depend. But venue is no part of the right; and a state cannot create a transitory cause of action and at the same time destroy the right to sue on that transitory cause of action in any court having jurisdiction. That jurisdiction is to be determined by the law of the court's creation, and cannot be defeated by the extraterritorial operation of a statute of another state, even though it created the right of action.

The case here is controlled by the decision of this court in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sowers, 213 U. S. 55, 70, 53 L. ed. 695, 702, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397, where the New Mexico statute, giving a right of action for personal injuries, and providing that suits should be brought after certain form of notice in a particular district, was preceded by the recital that "it has become customary for persons claiming damages for personal injuries received in this territory to institute and maintain suits for the recovery thereof in other states and territories, to the increased cost and annoyance and manifest injury and oppression of the business interests of this territory and the derogation of the dignity of the courts thereof." Despite this statement of the public policy of the territory, the judgment obtained by the plaintiff in Texas was affirmed by this court in an opinion wherein it was said that where an action is brought in "another jurisdiction, based upon common-law principles, although having certain statutory restrictions, such as are found in this [territorial] act, as to the making of an affidavit, and limiting the time of prosecuting the suit, full faith and credit is given to the law when the recovery is permitted, subject to the restrictions upon the right of action imposed in the territory enacting the statute. . . . When it is shown that the court in the other jurisdiction observed such conditions, and that a recovery was permitted after such conditions had been complied with, the jurisdiction thus invoked is not defeated because of the provision of the statute" requiring the suit to be brought in the district where the plaintiff resides or where the defendant, if a corporation, has its principal place of business.

It is claimed, however, that the decision in the Sowers Case is not in point because the plaintiff was there seeking to enforce a common-law liability, while here he is asserting a new and statutory cause of action. But that distinction marks no difference between the two cases because in New Mexico common-law liability is statutory liability,—the adopting statute (Comp. Laws, § 1823) providing that "the common law, as recognized in the United States of America, shall be the rule of practice and decision."

The decision in the Sowers Case, however, was not put upon the fact that the suit was based on a common-law liability. The court there announced the general rule that a transitory cause of action can be maintained in another state even though the statute creating the cause of action provides that the action must be brought in local domestic courts.

In the present case the Georgia Court gave full faith and credit to the Alabama act and its judgment is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Holmes dissents.

Annotation—Extraterritorial effect of statute limiting jurisdiction in which action may be brought.

This note deals merely with the question whether the courts of one state, territory, or country will, under the full faith and credit provision of the Federal Constitution, or upon principles of comity, respect a provision of a statute of another, purporting to confine the jurisdiction of certain actions to the courts of the latter, and is not concerned with the power of a state or territory to impair or affect the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, except so far as the statute in question attempts to preclude the jurisdiction of a Federal court sitting in another state or territory, treating such court the same as the courts of the other states. The scope of the note, therefore, excludes the cases dealing with the power of a state to require a foreign corporation, as a condition of doing business within the state, to stipulate against the removal of suits to the Federal courts. A particular phase of that subject is discussed in the note to Harrison v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. L.R.A.1915F, 1187.

For validity of provision in contract as to place where action must be brought, see annotation to Nashua River Paper Co. v. Hammermill Water Co. post, 691.

The following quotation from Home Ins. Co. v. Morse (1874) 20 Wall. (U. S.) 445, 22 L. ed. 365, one of the leading cases on the subject just referred to, and therefore on its facts not within the scope of this note, is given here as pertinent to the question under consideration: "Every citizen is entitled to resort to all the courts of the country, and to invoke the protection which all the laws or all those courts may afford him. A man may not barter away his life or his freedom, or his substantial rights. . . . In a civil case he may submit his particular suit by his own consent to an arbitration, or to the decision of a single judge. So he may omit to exercise his right to remove his suit to a Federal tribunal, as often as he thinks fit in each recurring case. In these aspects any citizen may no doubt waive the rights to which he may be entitled. He cannot, however, bind himself in advance by an agreement which may be specifically enforced, thus to forfeit his rights at all times and on all occasions, whenever the case may be presented."

The question as to whether a court of one state will entertain an action upon a cause of action arising in another has generally been discussed from the point of view of comity, and the effect of the full faith and credit provision on this question has received but little attention, except in the comparatively rare instances where the statute of the state or territory in which the cause of action arose has attempted to limit the jurisdiction to the courts of that state or territory, and preclude the maintenance of the action in any other. The question as to the jurisdiction of a court of one state or country over an action for personal injuries or for death, arising in another, has been treated, so far as principles of comity are concerned, in the note to Boston & M. R. Co. v. Hurd, 56 L.R.A. 193. And specific aspects of the question in relation to actions for death are discussed in other notes that may be found by consulting the Index to L.R.A. Notes under the title, "Conflict of laws," subtitle, "Personal injuries; death."

The decisions of the United States Supreme Court in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sowers (1909) 213 U. S. 55, 70, 53 L. ed. 695, 702, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397, and TENNESSEE COAL, IRON & R. Co. v. GEORGE, ante, 685, seem to have definitely settled that a court of one state is not bound, under the "full faith and credit" provision of the Federal Constitution, to refuse jurisdiction of a cause of action arising in another state or territory because of a provision of the statute of the latter purporting to restrict the jurisdiction to its own courts. And this seems to be true so far as the "full faith and credit" provision is concerned, whether the action be regarded as based on a common-law or a statutory cause of action.

There is some conflict among the cases as to whether such a provision should be respected upon principles of comity.

In the Sowers Case, a citizen of Arizona brought an action in Texas to recover for personal injuries sustained in New Mexico while in the employment of the defendant railroad company as a brakeman. The statute of New Mexico (after reciting that it had become customary for persons claiming damages for personal injuries received in the territory to institute and maintain suits therefor in other states and territories, to the increased cost and annoyance, and manifest injury and oppression, of the business interests in the territory, and the derogation of the dignity of the courts thereof,) provided in § 1 that there should be no civil liability under either the common law or any statute of the territory for personal injuries inflicted or death caused in the territory, unless the person claiming damages should make an affidavit as to the matters therein provided, and should commence an action within one year after such injuries occurred "in the district court of this territory in and for the county of this territory where the claimant or person against whom such claim is asserted resides, or, in event such claim is asserted against a corporation, in the county in this territory where such corporation has its principal place of business," it being further "expressly provided and understood that such right of action is given only on the understanding that the foregoing conditions precedent are made a part of the law under which right to recover can exist for such injuries;" and the statute further provided, in § 3, that "it shall be unlawful for any person to institute, carry on, or maintain any suit for the recovery of any such damages in any other state or territory." The Texas court of civil appeals (Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sowers (1906) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 99 S. W. 190) affirmed a judgment for the plaintiff, and held that such provision did not defeat the jurisdiction of the courts of Texas; and as already shown its judgment was sustained by the United States Supreme Court. The latter court, however, treated the question simply from the point of view of the "full faith and credit" provision, and not from the point of view of comity. The Supreme Court took the view that the full faith and credit demanded by the Federal Constitution was accorded to the New Mexico statute when the Texas court respected the requirements of the statute as to the making of an affidavit in respect of the claim, and the bringing of suit within the specified time. Mr. Justice Holmes dissented upon the ground that the territory could have abolished the right of action altogether if it had seen fit; that it said by its statutes that it would not do that, but would adopt the common-law liability on certain conditions precedent, making them, however, absolute conditions to the right to recover at all; that one of those conditions was that the party should sue in the territory,—a condition that goes to the right and conditions it everywhere. He added: "I am willing to assume that the statute could not prohibit a suit in another state, and, indeed, it recognized that in that particular it might be disobeyed with effect. § 3. But I do not see why the condition in § 1 was not valid and important. If it had been complied with, there might have been a different result."

The doctrine of the Sowers Case was applied in Achison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Mills (1909) 53 Tex. Civ. App. 359, 116 S. W. 852, holding that the provisions of the New Mexico statute above referred to did not prevent a court of Texas from entertaining an action for personal injuries sustained in New Mexico by a resident of California. The argument of the court in this case suggests that perhaps, as a matter of comity at least, the provisions of the New Mexico statute as to jurisdiction might be respected where the cause of action is the statutory one for death. The United States Supreme Court in TENNESSEE COAL, IRON & R. Co. v. GEORGE, ante, 685, however, apparently repudiates any distinction between a common-law liability and a statutory liability so far as the "full faith and credit" provision of the Federal Constitution is concerned, and declares that the decision in the Sowers Case was not put upon the fact that the suit was based on the common-law liability, but that the court there announced the general rule that a transitory cause of action can be maintained in another state even though the statute creating the cause of action provides that the action must be brought in a local domestic court.

In Southern P. Co. v. Dusablon (1908) 48 Tex. Civ. App. 203, 106 S. W. 766, however, the court gave effect to the provisions of the New Mexico statute by holding that an action would not lie in Texas by a resident citizen of New Mexico, for a personal injury received in New Mexico the defendant being a corporation of Kentucky operating a railroad in New Mexico. The Sowers Case was distinguished on the ground that the plaintiff there was not a citizen of New Mexico. The court observed that it had been decided so far as it could be by courts of Texas, that the action for personal injuries under the New Mexico statute is not a statutory one, in the sense that it can be prosecuted and maintained only in the state where the injury was inflicted, and, as indicated, the decision refusing to entertain the action was put upon the ground that the plaintiff was, at the time his cause of action accrued and when the suit was brought, a resident citizen of New Mexico.

In Swisher v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1907) 76 Kan. 97, 90 Pac. 812, it was held that the notice required by the New Mexico statute as a condition of an action for death was an essential part of the cause of action, and that an action could not be maintained in Kansas for a death in New Mexico unless that notice had been given. The court emphasized the point that there was no right of action for death at common law, and none existed in New Mexico except as created by statute, and declared generally that when a cause of action which did not exist at common law is created by the statute of another state or territory, such cause of action, when presented to the courts of Kansas for enforcement, will be held to consist, not merely of right given, but of the conditions and limitations of the statute of the place where it was created. The report in this case sets out the provisions of the New Mexico statute with reference to jurisdiction, but the opinion makes no specific allusion to them. They would perhaps have been sufficient to bring the case within the principle above stated, even though there had been no other conditions of the action prescribed by the statute.

In Lessendon v. Missouri P. R. Co. (1911) 238 Mo. 247, 142 S. W. 332, the Missouri supreme court said that it saw no reason why a state which creates a right of action may not impose the condition that it shall be enforced only in the courts of the state; and further, that if the state court to which the cause of action is carried should decline to take jurisdiction of it, on the ground that the statute of the state which created it forbade its removal, it would only be giving full faith and credit to the law of the sister state. The court attempted to distinguish Acheson, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sowers (1908) 213 U. S. 55, 53 L. ed. 695, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397, upon the ground that that was a case of a common-law right of action for personal injuries, whereas the action in the case at bar was based upon a statutory cause of action (the Kansas statute making railroads liable for injuries inflicted upon employees through the negligence of fellow servants). What was said on this point, however, was obiter, as the Kansas statute was construed not to create a condition that the action be brought in that state. Although the distinction by which the court sought to sustain its obiter statement on this point is apparently repudiated by the United States Supreme Court in Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. George, supra, so far as the "full faith and credit" provision is concerned, the validity of the distinction so far as the principles of comity are concerned, is not necessarily affected. A writ of error in the Lessenden Case was dismissed by the United States Supreme Court for want of jurisdiction (225 U. S. 696, 56 L. ed. 1262, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 838).

A clause of a Nevada statute, following a provision declaratory of the common law as to the liability of one who inflicts an injury on another, to the effect that such liability "shall exist only in so far as the same shall be ascertained and adjudged by a state or Federal court of competent jurisdiction in this state," was upheld and given effect in Coyne v. Southern P. Co. (1907) 155 Fed. 683, holding that a Federal court sitting in Utah would not take jurisdiction of an action for personal injuries arising in Nevada. The court said that the plaintiff's right was no less an exclusively statutory right because the same facts would have created a right under prior common-law principles; and that, viewed as a statutory right, it must be admitted that the state creating the right can attach to it any valid condition, so that when the right is sought to be vindicated in another state or in a foreign country, the condition must be applied. There was no reference in this case to the "full faith and credit" provisions.

In Shields v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. (1896) 119 N. O. 380, 25 S. E. 951, it was held, in effect, that the trial court erred L.R.A.1916D.

in rendering a judgment for the defendant in an action against an Ohio insurance company upon a demurrer ore tenus to the jurisdiction, on the ground that under the provisions of its charter an action could be brought against the defendant company only in the state of Ohio. The court observed that permission to a foreign corporation to do business outside the state where it is created is always with the proviso that it is subject to the laws of the forum, and has no greater privileges than domestic corporations under its statutes. The report of the case does not disclose the terms of the provision of the charter. It appeared that the corporation had a branch office in North Carolina.

In Hutchison v. Ward (1908) 192 N. Y. 375, 127 Am. St. Rep. 909, 85 N. E. 390, holding that an action would lie in New York to recover the amount remaining due upon a bond secured by a mortgage upon real property in New Jersey, after applying the proceeds derived from a sale under a decree of the court of chancery of the latter state, the contract being a New Jersey contract and governed by the law of that state, the court alluded to the fact that there was nothing in the New Jersey statute which confined the action on the bond to the courts of that state; and the opinion, perhaps, carries some implication that if there had been such a provision, it would have been respected.

A provision of a Louisiana statute chartering a railroad company, that the company should be sued only at its domicile, was construed in Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Fife (1912) — Tex. Civ. App. —, 147 S. W. 1181, to relate only to the venue of an action brought in Louisiana, and not to apply to an action brought in another state, and therefore the entertaining of an action in another state did not deny full faith and credit to the Louisiana statute. G. H. P.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

NASHUA RIVER PAPER COMPANY
v.
HAMMERMILL PAPER COMPANY.

(223 Mass. 8, 111 N. E. 678.)

Contract — stipulation as to court — validity.

A provision in a commercial contract between citizens of different states, that no action upon it shall be instituted in other than a specified court of one of the states, is invalid as against public policy. For other cases, see Contracts, III. c. 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 12, 1916.)

R EPORT by the Superior Court for Suffolk County for the determination by the Supreme Judicial Court of questions arising in an action brought to recover a balance due plaintiff for goods sold and delivered and money paid to the defendant. Judgment for plaintiff.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Harold S. Davis, for plaintiff:

The agreement to bring suit only in Pennsylvania is collateral, and is not available to defeat the present action, even if valid.

Bauer v. International Waste Co. 201 Mass. 197, 87 N. E. 637; Dawson v. Fitzgerald, L. R. 1 Exch. Div. 257, 45 L. J. Exch. N. S. 893, 35 L. T. N. S. 220, 24 Week. Rep. 773; Perkins v. United States Electric Light Co. 16 Fed. 513; Boston & L. R. Corp. v. Nashua & L. R. Corp. 139 Mass. 463, 31 N. E. 751; Nute v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. 6 Gray, 174; Hall v. People's Mut. F. Ins. Co. 6 Gray, 185.

A private agreement cannot deprive the court of its jurisdiction over the parties and the subject-matter.

Electric Welding Co. v. Prince, 200 Mass. 386, 128 Am. St. Rep. 434, 86 N. E. 947; Hall v. People's Mut. F. Ins. Co. 6 Gray, 185; Meacham v. Jamesstown, F. & C. R. Co. 211 N. Y. 346, 105 N. E. 653, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 851; Savage v. People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. 45 W. Va. 275, 31 S. E. 991; Benson v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 174 N. Y. 83, 66 N. E. 627; Matt v. Iowa Mut. Aid Asso. 81 Iowa, 135, 25 Am. St. Rep. 483, 46 N. W. 857; Slocum v. Western Assur. Co. 42 Fed. 235; The Etona, 64 Fed. 880; Gough v. Hamburg Amerikanische Packetfahrt Aktiengesellschaft, 158 Fed. 174; Guaranty Trust & S. D. Co. v. Green Cove Springs & M. R. Co. 139 U. S. 137, 35 L. ed. 116, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 512; Sanford v. Commercial Travelers' Mut. Acci. Asso. 147 N. Y. 326, 41 N. E. 694; Buel v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. 24 Misc. 660, 53 N. Y. Supp. 749; Bartlett v. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co. 46 Me. 500; Roberts v. Knights, 7 Allen, 449; Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co.

Note.—For validity of provision in contract as to place where action must be brought, see annotation following this case, post, 696.

As to extraterritorial effect of statute limiting jurisdiction in which action may be brought, see annotation following Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. George, ante, 685. L.R.A.1916D.

v. George, 233 U. S. 354, 58 L. ed. 997, ante, 685, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 587; Bellows Falls Power Co. v. Corn. 222 Mass. 51, 109 N. E. 891.

The agreement in question is contrary to public policy.

Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 445, 22 L. ed. 365; Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Cleveland Woolen Mills, 27 C. C. A. 212, 54 U. S. App. 290, 82 Fed. 508; Rea's Appeal, 13 W. N. C. 546; Benson v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 174 N. Y. 83, 66 N. E. 627; Savage v. People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. 45 W. Va. 275, 31 S. E. 991; Healy v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 385; Darling v. Protective Assur. Soc. 71 Misc. 113, 127 N. Y. Supp. 486; Prince Steam Shipping Co. v. Lehman, 5 L.R.A. 464, 39 Fed. 704; Blair v. National Shirt & Overalls Co. 137 Ill. App. 413; McLean v. Tobin, 58 Misc. 528, 109 N. Y. Supp. 926; Reichard v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. 31 Mo. 518.

Messrs. Brandeis, Dunbar, & Nutter and J. Butler Studley, for defendant:

The construction and legal effect of the contract are governed by the law of Massachusetts.

Mittenthal v. Mascagni, 183 Mass. 19, 69 L.R.A. 812, 97 Am. St. Rep. 404, 66 N. E. 425; Atwood v. Walker, 179 Mass. 514, 61 N. E. 58; Brockway v. American Exp. Co. 168 Mass. 257, 47 N. E. 87, 2 Am. Neg. Rep. 561; Baxter Nat. Bank v. Talbot, 154 Mass. 213, 13 L.R.A. 52, 28 N. E. 163; Morgan v. New Orleans, M. & T. R. Co. 2 Woods, 244, Fed. Cas. No. 9,804; Hamlyn v. Talisker Distillery [1894] A. C. 202, 6 Reports, 188, 71 L. T. N. S. 1, 58 J. P. 540.

By ¶ 11 of the contract dated December 1, 1910, action in this jurisdiction against this defendant is prohibited.

Daley v. People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. 178 Mass. 13, 59 N. E. 452.

The provision is valid.

Mittenthal v. Mascagni, 183 Mass. 19, 69 L.R.A. 812, 97 Am. St. Rep. 404, 66 N. E. 425; Daley v. People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. supra.

If the assignor could not have brought this action in Massachusetts, it is obvious that the present plaintiff cannot maintain it.

Earnshaw v. Whittemore, 194 Mass. 187, 80 N. E. 520.

Mr. Robert Weston also for defendant.

Rugg, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question is whether, in a contract between a manufacturer and its sales agent, a provision is valid to the effect that "no action at law, equity, or chancery shall be instituted or maintained by the corporation in any court of any state of the United States or in any circuit or district court of the courts of the United States, against the company, other than in the courts of the common pleas of the state of Pennsylvania."

This stipulation occurs in an ordinary commercial contract between a corporation incorporated and domiciled in this commonwealth and another corporation incorporated under the laws of Pennsylvania.

It becomes necessary to review some of the cases. Nute v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. 6 Gray, 174, was an action upon a policy of insurance, one stipulation of which, incorporated in the contract by reference to the by-laws of the company, was in substance that any "action shall be brought at a proper court in the county of Essex." It was held that this stipulation was not binding, and that an action could be brought in any county where the venue properly might be laid. The general principle on which this decision was made to rest was that it was not within the province of parties to enter into an agreement concerning the remedy for a breach of a contract, which is created and regulated by law. Considerations of public policy were adverted to as supporting the conclusion, but not giving decisive weight. Chief Justice Shaw, in concluding the discussion, said: "The greatest inconvenience would be in requiring courts and juries to apply different rules of law to different cases, in the conduct of suits, in matters relating merely to the remedy, according to the stipulations of parties in framing and diversifying their contracts in regard to remedies."

In Hall v. People's Mut. F. Ins. Co. 6 Gray, 185, the provision of the contract of insurance was explicit to the effect that no action should be brought upon the policy except in the county of Worcester. Chief Justice Shaw, in giving the opinion of the court, after adverting to Nute v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. as substantially deciding the question, said: "The court were of opinion that a stipulation in an original contract, that in case of breach the suit shall be brought in a particular county, or, in other words, that a suit shall not be brought in a county in which it is directed by law to be brought, is not a proper matter of contract. After a contract has been made and broken, the remedy is regulated by law, and of course must be governed by the law of the forum where the remedy is sought. . . . It is a well-settled maxim that parties cannot, by their consent, give jurisdiction to courts where the law has not given it; and it seems to follow, from L.R.A.1916D.

the same course of reasoning, that parties cannot take away jurisdiction where the law has given it."

The same point was decided in Amesbury v. Bowditch Mut. F. Ins. Co. 6 Gray, 596, 603. In Roberts v. Knights, 7 Allen, 449, it was held that a British subject who had shipped in England as seaman for an entire voyage, under a statutory law which provided that under such contract no seaman should sue for wages in any court abroad except in case of discharge or danger to life, nevertheless might bring an action against the master of the vessel although both parties were residents of Great Britain. It commonly has been thought that "such law enters into the terms of the contract and becomes a part of its obligation." Hanscom v. Malden & M. Gaslight Co. 220 Mass. 1, 7, 107 N. E. 426. Therefore the refusal of the court to give any heed to the British statute is significant, although there was no discussion of the point here raised. These cases generally have been understood as supporting the proposition that parties could not contract that their disputes arising under the contract should be litigated in a single court or in the courts of a particular jurisdiction.

It was held in Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 445, 22 L. ed. 365, that a statute making it a condition precedent to the granting of the privilege to a foreign corporation to do business within a state, that it would not remove suits from state to Federal courts, was unconstitutional, and a contract to that effect was invalid. It there was said, at page 451 of 20 Wall: "A man may not barter away his life or his freedom, or his substantial rights. . . . In a civil case he may submit his particular suit by his own consent to an arbitration, or to the decision of a single judge. So he may omit to exercise his right to remove his suit to a Federal tribunal, as often as he thinks fit, in each recurring case. In these aspects any citizen may no doubt waive the rights to which he may be entitled. He cannot, however, bind himself in advance by an agreement which may be specifically enforced, thus to forfeit his rights at all times and on all occasions, whenever the case may be presented."

This point was reaffirmed expressly in Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co. 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. ed. 148. This principle has been followed in numerous decisions of circuit and district Federal courts. Prince Steam Shipping Co. v. Lehman (D. C.) 5 L.R.A. 464, 39 Fed. 704; Slocum v. Western Assur. Co. (D. C.) 42 Fed. 235; The Etona (D. C.) 64 Fed. 880; Gough v. Hamburg Amerikan- ische Packetfahrt Aktiengesellschaft (D. C.) 158 Fed. 174; United States Asphalt Ref. Co. v. Trinidad Lake Petroleum Co. (D. C.) 222 Fed. 1006.

It was held in Benson v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 174 N. Y. 83, 86, 66 N. E. 627, in substance that parties cannot in the ordinary case by contract deprive courts of competent jurisdiction of their power to adjudicate causes, on the ground that that jurisdiction is prescribed by law and it cannot be increased or diminished by agreement of parties. In Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Cleveland Woolen Mills, 27 C. C. A. 212, at 214, 54 U. S. App. 290, 82 Fed. 508, at page 510, it was said by Lurton, J.: "The policy [of insurance] . . . contained a stipulation that no suit in law or equity should be brought upon it except in the circuit court of the United States. This provision, intended to oust the jurisdiction of all state courts, is clearly invalid. Any stipulation between contracting parties distinguishing between the different courts of the country is contrary to public policy and should not be enforced."

To the same effect, see Savage v. People's Bldg. L. & Sav. Asso. 45 W. Va. 275, 282, 31 S. E. 991; Bartlett v. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co. 46 Me. 500; Reichard v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. 31 Mo. 518; Indiana Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Routledge, 7 Ind. 25; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Stankard, 56 Ohio St. 224, 49 L.R.A. 381, 60 Am. St. Rep. 745, 46 N. E. 577; Owsley v. Yerkes, 109 C. C. A. 250, 187 Fed. 560; First Nat. Bank v. White, 220 Mo. 717, 737, 132 Am. St. Rep. 612, 120 S. W. 36, 16 Ann. Cas. 889; Healy v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 385, 392, 393; Matt v. Iowa Mut. Aid Asso. 81 Iowa, 135, 25 Am. St. Rep. 483, 46 N. W. 857; Shuttleworth v. Marx, 159 Ala. 418, 428, 49 So. 83. In many of these cases the opinion of this court by Chief Justice Shaw in Nute v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. 6 Gray, 174, has been cited and relied on as an authority. Attempts to place limitations by contract of the parties upon the powers of courts as to actions growing out of the particular contract, or to oust appropriate courts of their jurisdiction, have been regarded with disfavor and commonly have been held invalid. Guaranty Trust & S. D. Co. v. Green Cove Springs & M. R. Co. 139 U. S. 137, 140, 35 L. ed. 116, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 512; Meacham v. Jamestown, F. & C. R. Co. 211 N. Y. 346, 352, 353, 105 N. E. 653, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 851. It might be argued with force that the law as to the enforcement of rights arising out of personal injuries was imported into the terms of a contract for hire. Yet it has been decided that statutory limitations to L.R.A.1916D.

the effect that a right of action for personal injuries shall be confined to the state where it occurred are invalid. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Sowers, 213 U. S. 55, 70, 53 L. ed. 695, 702, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 397; Tennessee Coal Iron & R. Co. v. George, 233 U. S. 354, 58 L. ed. 997, ante, 685, 34 Sup. Ct. Rep. 587.

So far as we are aware, the current of authority (with the exceptions presently to be noted) is unbroken in support of the principle laid down in Nute v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. 6 Gray, 174, although that principle is followed by compulsion of authority and under protest by Judge Hough in United States Asphalt Ref. Co. v. Trinidad Lake Petroleum Co. (D. C.) 222 Fed. 1006. There are two of our own cases where the principle was not applied and which appear to be exceptions to it. In Daley v. People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. 178 Mass. 13, 59 N. E. 452, an action was brought by a citizen of this commonwealth which involved the construction of a condition contained in his certificate of membership in the defendant corporation, to the effect that "any action brought against this association by any shareholder shall be brought . . . in the county of Ontario, state of New York."

It was held that this condition of the contract should be enforced. After stating that it was not meant to overrule Nute v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. supra, the court said: "Here we are dealing with a New York corporation, most of whose members would live in New York, and the greater part of whose dealings and contracts naturally would take place also in New York. There, we take it from Greve v. Aetna Live Stock Ins. Co. 81 Hun, 28, 30 N. Y. Supp. 668, which was put in evidence, the condition would be an answer to an attempt to sue in another county. The condition, at least so far as we have occasion to consider it, refers to suits by members of the corporation as such. It is perfectly reasonable, and as applied to a New York corporation in view of the New York law cannot be held contrary to the policy of Massachusetts with regard to such contracts as happen . . . to be concluded on this side of the boundary line. . . . It will be understood that we are speaking of parties standing in an equal position, where neither has any oppressive advantage or power, and that our decision as to the validity of the condition as a defense does not go beyond the particular circumstances of this case."

It is obvious that the assumption based upon Greve v. Aetna Live Stock Ins. Co. supra, that such a contract would be valid under the laws of New York, was an important factor in the reasoning of the court. The Daley Case was decided in February, 1901. It was held, however, in Benson v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. supra, decided in March, 1903, that Greve v. Ætna Live Stock Ins. Co. did not state correctly the law of New York, and precisely the same condition that was before this court in Daley v. People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. was there adjudged to be invalid and unenforceable. If the Benson Case had been decided earlier than the Daley Case, and the law of New York had been proved in the Daley Case, as declared finally and conclusively in the Benson Case, instead of the erroneous view put forward in the decision of the Greve Case by an inferior court, an important link in the chain of reasoning by which the conclusion in the Daley Case was reached would have been wanting. The binding force of such a decision is open to question. Kapiolani v. Atcherley, 238 U. S. 119, 59 L. ed. 1229, 35 Sup. Ct. Rep. 932. The reasoning and ground of the decision well might have been different, although possibly the result might have been the same upon the ground that certificates of membership in the New York corporation were accepted with the inherent limitation and restriction explained at length in Longyear v. Hardman, 219 Mass. 405, 106 N. E. 1012. As the decision in the Daley Case was expressly confined to its own peculiar circumstances, it can hardly be considered as substantially narrowing the authority of Nute v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. supra. In Mittenthal v. Mascagni, 183 Mass. 19, 60 L.R.A. 812, 97 Am. St. Rep. 404, 66 N. E. 425, the parties were both nonresidents. The action was on a contract made in Florence, Italy, where the defendant, a subject of the King of Italy, had his home, and where the plaintiffs, citizens of New York, elected a domicile by a provision of the contract. It related to a concert tour through the various states of this country, and was partly to be performed in Florence, and contained the provision that the courts of Florence, Italy, should have exclusive jurisdiction of any difference between the parties, except that the defendant reserved a right of action in New York for a payment of his recompense due under the contract. It was held that under the circumstances of hurried travel through many different jurisdictions, it was reasonable that the parties should fix upon the jurisdiction of the domicile of the defendant as the one where disputes should be adjusted. As both the parties were nonresidents, they had no standing in the courts of this state as matter of strict right, but only as matter of comity. National Teleph. Mfg. Co. v. Du Bois, 165 Mass. 117, 30 L.R.A. 628, 52 Am. St. Rep. 503, 42 N. E. 510. It therefore was regarded as appropriate to yield to the terms of a contract between the parties having such obvious foundation in convenience and reason, although the court well might have declined to exercise any jurisdiction of the case on the ground that the parties were aliens. Nute v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. supra, was referred to in the opinion, and not treated as overruled. In this connection Palmer v. Lavers, 218 Mass. 286, 291, 105 N. E. 1000, 1002, may be adverted to, where it was said that "where one of two parties to a possible litigation, in order to obtain a release from what is equivalent to an attachment, agrees that the judgment of the court of first instance shall be final, that agreement does not come within that principle [that is, the principle of Nute v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. supra], and that it is an agreement which is binding and will be enforced."

That decision has no relevancy to the question now presented. Nor is the question here raised, whether the parties may by contract provide that their respective rights growing out of the agreement shall be determined according to the law of a particular jurisdiction. See Brandeis v. Atkins, 204 Mass. 471, 476, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 280, 90 N. E. 861; Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 136, 27 L. ed. 104, 108, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102; Greer v. Poole, L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. 272, 274, 49 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 463, 42 L. T. N. S. 687, 28 Week. Rep. 582, 4 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 300.

The Daley and Mittenthal Cases, as to the points adjudicated, while not extending the doctrine of the Nute Case, do not overrule it, and are not inconsistent with it. All three of these cases may be treated as stating the law applicable to the several states of facts presented to the court. The Nute Case lays down the general principle. The other two cases stand as sound upon their several states of facts. To extend them to the present case involves overruling the Nute Case. That case, as has been pointed out, states a general principle which has been adopted and prevails in all Federal courts by reason of the binding decisions of the United States Supreme Court in Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. 445, 22 L. ed. 365, and Doyle v. Continental Ins. Co. 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. ed. 148. The same rule prevails generally in all states where the question has arisen. It relates to a matter as to which uniformity of decision and harmony of law among the several jurisdictions of this country are desirable. It would be unfortunate if contracts touching a subject of general commercial interest, and which may be broadly operative as to jurisdiction, should be held valid in one state and invalid in all others. All these circumstances bring us to the conclusion that the clause in the contract here in question is unenforceable, and that therefore the action can be maintained in the courts of this commonwealth.

The plaintiff's demurrers to the defendant's answer in abatement and to the part of the answer in bar setting up the same matter must be sustained. The case is to stand for disposition upon the issues raised by the answer to the merits.

So ordered.

Annotation—Validity of provision in contract as to place where action may be brought.

As indicated by the title, the present annotation is confined to contractual provisions to the exclusion of statutory provisions. As to extraterritorial effect of statute limiting jurisdiction in which action may be brought, see annotation to Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. George, ante, 685.

Cases like Palmer v. Lavers (1914) 218 Mass. 286, 105 N. E. 1000, upholding a contract waiving a right to appeal, and Terre Haute Brewing Co. v. Ward (1913) — Ind. App. —, 102 N. E. 395, upholding a contract waiving a right to change of venue, as applied to an existing right or claim of right, are not within the scope of this annotation.

The ultimate question as to whether a stipulation purporting to limit the courts in which an action on the contract may be brought shall be respected doubtless pertains to the remedy, and so is governed by the law of the forum; hence, the validity of a stipulation according to the law of the place where the contract is made does not necessarily render it effective in another jurisdiction in which an action, contrary to its terms, is brought. It is so held in Meacham v. Jamestown, F. & C. R. Co. (1914) 211 N. Y. 346, 105 N. E. 653, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 851, with reference to stipulations, for arbitration. (Such stipulations, however, are not within the scope of the note.)

It may be observed, however, that upon the assumption that it is not contrary to the public policy of the forum to respect and enforce a stipulation confining actions on the contracts to the courts of another state, it may become necessary to test the validity of the stipulation by the law of another state or country which governs as to the substantive rights of the parties, since the stipulation may be invoked on the theory that it does not affect the remedy merely, but attaches as a condition of the contract and of the substantive rights of the parties, and that theory would depend upon the validity of the stipulation. L.R.A. 1916D.

tion tested by the property law of the contract (see on this point Daley v. People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Assn. (1901) 178 Mass. 13, 59 N. E. 452, infra).

The courts in general refuse to respect or enforce contractual provisions to the effect that any action based upon the contract shall be brought in a certain court or in the courts of a certain state or district, whether such provision is invoked to defeat the jurisdiction of a court of another state or of another district of the same state as that of the court or district specified. This is upon the general ground that it is not competent for the parties by their contract, in advance, to oust the jurisdiction of the courts, and is sometimes assimilated to the principle which invalidates stipulations for arbitration of all questions that may arise under a contract.

Thus, a provision in a by-law of a mutual insurance company to which the policies are expressed to be subject, that any action on the policy shall be brought in a certain county, where the company is established, or a negative provision that the action shall not be brought in another county, is not binding on the assured so as to prevent the bringing of an action in another county. Nute v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. (1856) 6 Gray (Mass.) 174; Hall v. People's Mut. F. Ins. Co. (1856) 6 Gray (Mass.) 185; Amesbury v. Bowditch Mut. F. Ins. Co. (1856) 6 Gray (Mass.) 596. In the Nute Case, which is a leading case on the subject, Chief Justice Shaw distinguished such a provision from limiting the time within which an action shall be commenced, declaring in effect that the latter is a condition annexed to the acquisition and continuance of a legal right, and depends on contract and the acts of the parties; while the other is a stipulation concerning the remedy, which is created and regulated by law.

A provision in a Lloyd's policy against bringing suit in any court other than the court of highest jurisdiction was held in Blair v. National Shirt & Overalls Co.

(1907) 137 Ill. App. 413, to be void as against public policy, and hence not to interfere with the right to bring the action before a justice of the peace.

A stipulation in a policy of insurance that no action shall be maintained except in the county where the principal office of the insurer is situated is invalid. Matt v. Iowa Mut. Aid Asso. (1890) 81 Iowa, 135, 25 Am. St. Rep. 483, 46 N. W. 857. The court cited May on Insurance, § 490, to the effect that "a condition in the contract limiting the venue or place where the action shall be brought is invalid." The action was brought in another county of the same state in which the county specified was situated.

A clause in a policy of insurance that any action to enforce the same must be brought in the supreme court, county of New York, state of New York, is invalid. The constitution and statutes determine the jurisdiction which shall be exercised by the courts of the state, and, their jurisdiction having been lawfully conferred, they cannot be prevented from exercising it when it is properly invoked, by private contract of individuals. McLean v. Tobin (1908) 58 Misc. 528, 109 N. Y. Supp. 926. In this case apparently the provision was set up as a defense to an action on the policy, and not as a ground for a change of venue.

A stipulation in an insurance contract restricting the jurisdiction to a certain court was held in Darling v. Protective Assur. Soc. 71 Misc. 113, 127 N. Y. Supp. 486, to be invalid, as it attempted to deprive a party of rights given to him by the Constitution and statutes of the state.

Prior to the act of 6 Edw. VII. chap. 19, § 22 (0), declaring that an agreement which provides for the place of trial of an action shall be of no force or effect, but declares that the provisions of the section shall not apply or be available until the defendant shall make a motion to change the venue or place of trial, the courts had respected and given effect to stipulations in contracts for the sale of machinery to the effect that the trial of any action arising out of the contract should take place in the county where the head office of the company (the seller) was located, by granting the defendant's (seller's) motion for a change of venue to that county (see Wright v. Ross (1906) 11 Ont. L. Rep. 113), or denying a motion for a change of venue from that county (see Goodison Thresher Co. v. Wood (1905) 6 Ont. Week. Rep. 19). The statute in question, however, was held in Bell v. Goodison Thresher L.R.A. 1916D.

Co. (1906) 12 Ont. L. Rep. 611, to apply to a contract made before its enactment.

Upon the authority of the Nute Case and other cases in Massachusetts, it was held in NASHUA RIVER PAPER CO. v. HAMMERMILL PAPER CO. ante, 691, that a stipulation in a contract between a manufacturer and its sales agent, one party being a corporation of Massachusetts and the other of Pennsylvania, that no action at law, equity, or chancery should be instituted in any court of any state or in any Federal court of the United States, other than the court of common pleas of the state of Pennsylvania, was held unenforceable, and did not preclude an action in a court of Massachusetts.

So, a stipulation in a policy of marine insurance issued at Toronto, Canada, by a corporation organized and doing fire and marine insurance business there, and having a branch office in New York for fire insurance only, to the effect that any action on the policy should be brought in a court in the city of Toronto and not elsewhere, is not a valid stipulation; nor will a Federal court sitting in New York decline jurisdiction of the suit, the libellants all being citizens of the United States and two of them being residents of New York. Slocum v. Western Assur. Co. (1890) 42 Fed. 235.

A stipulation in a policy of insurance that no suit in law or equity shall be brought upon it except in the circuit courts of the United States is intended to oust the jurisdiction of the state courts. Any stipulation between contracting parties distinguishing between the different courts of the country is contrary to public policy, and should not be enforced. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Cleveland Woolen Mills (1897) 27 C. C. A. 212, 54 U. S. App. 290, 82 Fed. 508.

A stipulation in a contract of mutual fire insurance that if the assured should not acquiesce in the determination of the directors on his claim, he may bring an action against the company for the loss, which action shall be brought at a proper court in the county in New Hampshire where the company was organized, was held in Bartlett v. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co. (1859) 46 Me. 500, not to be binding upon the insured, especially where the directors neglected to ascertain and determine the amount of the loss. The decision, however, was not put solely upon the narrower ground, but was referred to the general principle that after a contract has been broken, the remedy is regulated by law, and must be governed by that of the forum where redress is sought, citing the Nute Case.

A stipulation in a contract of insurance waiving all right to bring any action for any claim under the policy, except in the courts of the state in which the company was organized, was held void in Reichard v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. (1862) 31 Mo. 518, as contrary not only to public policy, but also to the provision of the Missouri statute in relation to foreign insurance companies. It does not appear in this case where the policy was issued or the insured was domiciled, but presumably in Missouri.

A stipulation in a charter party that all disputes should be settled at the point of discharge only is against public policy and void, and a motion based on such stipulation, and addressed to the discretion of the court to decline jurisdiction of a suit to recover freight money, cannot prevail. Prince Steam Shipping Co. v. Lehman (1889) 5 L.R.A. 464, 39 Fed. 704. The court said that, the provision being void, it made no difference which party sought to take advantage of it.

In Benson v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. (1903) 174 N. Y. 83, 66 N. E. 627, reversing (1901) 67 App. Div. 319, 74 N. Y. Supp. 506, involving a provision in a contract of a building and loan association that "any action brought against this association (defendant) shall be commenced within six months after filing proofs in the county of Onondaga and state of New York," the court said that such condition, if valid (and it may be so in this case, since, the principal office of the defendant being in the county of Onondaga, that was the county where the Code authorized the action to be brought), "affected only the venue of the action. If, in violation of the stipulation, the plaintiff brought his action in another county, the defendant's remedy was to move to have the place of trial changed to that in which the plaintiff had agreed it should be brought. The Code provides in what counties the venue of an action may be laid, but if, in contravention of those provisions, the venue is laid in another county than that prescribed, the remedy given is a motion to change the place of trial. The erroneous practice neither affects the jurisdiction of the court nor defeats the cause of action. The same principle controls the case before us."

Similar provisions in the contracts of New York building and loan associations were held contrary to public policy and unenforceable in the courts of another state, upon the ground that the jurisdiction of the courts cannot be ousted in that way, in Healey v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. (1901) 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 385; Savage v. People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. (1898) 45 W. Va. 275, 31 S. E. 991.

The decision in Greve v. Aetna Live Stock Ins. Co. (1894) 81 Hun, 28, 30 N. Y. Supp. 668, that a stipulation in a policy of insurance that any action or suit to enforce a claim arising thereunder shall be brought in a certain county of the state, is valid and may be set up as an answer to an action brought in another state, is apparently overruled by Benson v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. (1903) 174 N. Y. 83, 66 N. E. 627.

In the Nute Case, the court placed no great reliance upon considerations of public policy, though it said that, so far as they went, they were opposed to the admission of a defense based on such a stipulation; but that the "greatest inconvenience would be in requiring courts and juries to apply different rules of law to different cases, in the conduct of suits, in matters relating merely to the remedy, according to the stipulations of parties in framing and diversifying their contracts in regard to remedies."

In Meacham v. Jamestown, F. & C. R. Co. (1914) 211 N. Y. 346, 105 N. E. 653, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 851, Cardozo, J., remarked that if an agreement that a foreign court shall have exclusive jurisdiction is to be condemned, it is not saved by a declaration that resort to the foreign court shall be deemed a condition precedent to the accrual of the cause of action.

In Buel v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. (1898) 24 Misc. 646, 53 N. Y. Supp. 749, the court was apparently of the opinion that, if the provision in a trust deed securing railroad bonds, that in certain contingencies the trustee might file a bill in equity against the company in a court of equity in the state of Ohio, were to be construed to deny the right of a bondholder to maintain such a suit in another state, it would be contrary to public policy and void.

In Rea's Appeal (1883) 13 W. N. C. (Pa.) 546, the court, while unwilling to say that a clause in a trust agreement restricting the jurisdiction to the court of a certain county was entirely without effect, and that jurisdiction may not thereby be conferred upon the court of the county named, was clearly of the opinion that the general jurisdiction of other courts throughout the commonwealth is not thereby ousted.

In Carveth v. Railway Asbestos Packing Co. (1913) — Ont. —, 9 D. L. R. 631, that court said that the election by the parties to the contract of a domicile at a place in Quebec where the contract was made fell far short of an agreement not to sue in a court of any other province; but added that probably any agreement not to resort to the courts of Ontario, even when the contract is made abroad, would be regarded as against public policy and void.

There is an intimation in the Nute Case that perhaps such a stipulation might not be void in its creation, and that possibly it might be regarded as an executory contract upon which an action would lie, and upon which damages, if any were sustained, might be recovered. And in the Hall Case (1856) 6 Gray (Mass.) 185, the chief justice remarked that even if such a stipulation is of any legal force, it is an executory contract only, and cannot be specifically carried into effect and enforced by the court having jurisdiction of the cause and the parties.

No case, however, has been discovered involving the validity and effect of such a stipulation as the basis of a claim for damages. In all the cases cited in the note the stipulation was invoked for the purpose preventing the maintenance of the action in a court other than that designated.

The above cases are not, of course, opposed by cases like Indiana Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Routledge (1855) 7 Ind. 25; Howard v. Kentucky & L. Mut. Ins. Co. (1852) 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 282; Sanders v. Hillsborough Ins. Co. (1862) 44 N. H. 238; Portage County Mut. Ins. Co. v. Stukey (1849) 18 Ohio, 455; and Arnet v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Mut. Ins. Co. (1867) 22 Wis. 516, and possibly other cases, which hold, or assume, that a provision in the charter or a private law governing an insurance company, to the effect that any action against the company must be brought in a certain court or district, will be respected and enforced, if unrepealed and applicable to the facts of the case, since the provisions are statutory, and not contractual merely. The effect of such statutory provisions is not within the scope of this note. As to their effect in other states, see annotation following Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. George, ante, 685.

Exceptions.

Occasionally, such contractual stipulations have been respected when the circumstances seem to make them reasonable and their enforcement proper. L.R.A.1916D.

Thus, in Mittenthal v. Mascagni (1903) 183 Mass. 19, 60 L.R.A. 812, 97 Am. St. Rep. 404, 66 N. E. 425, it was held not contrary to the public policy of Massachusetts to give effect to a stipulation in a contract made in Italy between the defendant, a domiciled citizen of that country, and the plaintiff, a citizen of New York, who had by the contract elected a domicile in Italy, by which exclusive jurisdiction was given to the Italian courts of all differences or questions between the parties, saving only jurisdiction of suits by the defendant to recover his compensation, which was given to the courts of New York; and it was accordingly held that a court of Massachusetts would not take jurisdiction of an action to recover damages for an alleged breach of the contract. The contract in this case contemplated a concert tour through Canada and the United States; and the decision as a precedent is cut down by the opinion in NASHUA RIVER PAPER CO. v. HAMMERMILL PAPER CO. ante, 691, to the particular facts and circumstances of the case which made the stipulation not an unreasonable one, especially the circumstance of hurried travel through many jurisdictions in the performance of the contract, and the inconvenience of having actions brought in any state in which the parties might be temporarily present. The opinion in the Mittenthal Case suggests a somewhat broader ground of decision than that subsequently ascribed to it by NASHUA RIVER PAPER CO. v. HAMMERMILL PAPER CO.

In Daley v. People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Assn. (1901) 178 Mass. 13, 59 N. E. 452 (opinion by Chief Justice Holmes, now of the United States Supreme Court), it was held that a provision of a certificate of membership in a New York building and loan association, that any action against the association by a shareholder should be brought in a certain county of the state of New York, was valid and should be enforced. The opinion referring to the Nute Case, observed that that was a somewhat hesitating decision and ought not to be pressed so far as to dispose of the case at bar. Continuing, the court said: "We are dealing with a New York corporation, most of whose members would live in New York, and the greater part of whose dealings and contracts naturally would take place also in New York. There, we take it from Greve v. Aetna Live Stock Ins. Co. (1894) 81 Hun, 28, 30 N. Y. Supp. 668, which was put in evidence, the condition would be an answer to an attempt to sue in another county. The condition, at least so far as we have occasion to consider it, refers to suits by members of the corporation as such. It is perfectly reasonable, and as applied to a New York corporation in view of the New York law cannot be held contrary to the policy of Massachusetts with regard to such contracts as happen, by the accidents of postoffice communication, to be concluded on this side of the boundary line. The language is different from that used in Nute v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co., and stronger. It plainly purports to attach a condition to the contract, and we are of opinion that it does so effectually. It is not intimated in Nute v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. that when such a condition is attached to a contract and is valid, there is any technical difficulty in enforcing it as an answer to an action in another place. It is true that in this case the question is not between counties, but between states, and that our decision requires a resident of Massachusetts to go elsewhere for a remedy upon a contract made here. Reichard v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co. (1862) 31 Mo. 521. But objections of this sort may be made to appear more serious than they are. Courts are less and less disposed to interfere with parties making such contracts as they choose, so long as they interfere with no one's welfare but their own."

The fact pointed out by NASHUA RIVER PAPER CO. v. HAMMERMILL PAPER CO. ante, 691, and confirmed by Benson v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. (1903) 174 N. Y. 83, 66 N. E. 627, that the Daley Case was decided under a misapprehension induced by Greve v. Aetna Live Stock Ins. Co. (N. Y.) supra as to the validity and effect of the stipulation tested by the law of New York, does not seem to destroy altogether the force of the Daley Case as an authority for the general proposition that such a stipulation should be respected. The misapprehension as to the law of New York seems merely to affect the minor premise of the argument, viz., that the stipulation in the particular case was a condition attached to the contract; it is not apparent that it affects the major premise, viz., that such a condition if attached to the contract, ought to be respected. In other words, the misapprehension does not impair the intrinsic force of the chief justice's argument as applied to a stipulation valid by the proper law of the contract. The decision itself in the NASHUA RIVER PAPER CO. CASE, however, undoubtedly detracts from the Daley Case as an authority on the question.

The criticism of the Daley Case by the court of appeals in Benson v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. (N. Y.) supra, seems to be directed against the major premise of the argument, and not merely against the minor premise. The court of appeals said: "In the opinion there delivered [the Daley Case] the case of Nute v. Hamilton Mut. Ins. Co. is not overruled, but distinguished in the fact that in the earlier case the stipulation prescribed in what county the action should be brought, while in the later case it required the action to be brought in another state, New York. We do not see that the difference in circumstance justified any distinction in principle. In the latter case [the Daley Case] the learned court said, referring to such a condition in the agreement: 'It plainly purports to attach a condition to the contract, and we are of opinion that it does so effectually.' We assume that this is to say that the parties have agreed that the shareholder should have no cause of action against the defendant unless his action was brought in the specified county in the state of New York, and that therefore, when he brings a suit elsewhere, his cause of action is not established. We think this argument proves too much. It is difficult to see why it would not uphold an agreement that all claims against the parties should be determined by arbitrators, and not by the courts. It might be said with as much force in such a case as in the one now before us that the cause of action could, under the agreement, accrue only on the decision of the arbitrators. Yet nothing is better settled than that agreements of the character mentioned are void. . . . We think the doctrine of the Nute Case is the true one, that the stipulation affects the remedy, not the cause of action."

An agreement upon a valuable consideration, not to bring any action in the state of New York upon or in respect of a judgment, but to bring such action, if at all, in Russia, is not void, as contrary to public policy, under the rule that forbids an agreement to withdraw from ordinary jurisdiction of the courts future and unknown controversies. Gitler v. Russian Co. (1908) 124 App. Div. 273, 108 N. Y. Supp. 793, reversing (1907) 55 Misc. 553, 106 N. Y. Supp. 886.

In Meacham v. Jamestown, F. & C. R. Co. (1914) 211 N. Y. 346, 105 N. E. 653, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 851, holding an arbitration stipulation invalid, Cardozo, J., observed that whether a contract which purports to preclude any action except in a foreign court is always invalid need not be determined, but added that there may be exceptional circumstances where resort to the courts of another state is so obviously convenient and reasonable as to justify the court in yielding to the agreement of the parties and declining jurisdiction, and referred to Mittenthal v. Mascagni (1903) 183 Mass. 19, 60 L.R.A. 812, 97 Am. St. Rep. 404, 66 N. E. 425. He added that if any exceptions to the general rule are to be admitted, they ought not to extend to a contract where exclusive jurisdiction has been bestowed, not on the regular courts of another sovereignty, but on private arbitrators.

In Giener v. Meyer (1796) 2 H. Bl. (Eng.) 603, it was held that a Dutch seaman having entered into articles at a Dutch port with the master of a Dutch ship, in which he agreed not to institute any suit against the master in foreign countries or cite him before any judge or magistrate, but to abide by the adjudication of their own courts, an English court would not take jurisdiction of an action against the master for wages, although the ship and cargo were confiscated in an English port, and the voyage thereby ended. The lord chief justice said: "Although no persons in this country can by an agreement between themselves exclude themselves from the jurisdiction of the King's courts, and though it must be admitted that contracts are transitory, and that a personal action follows the person, and that the contract in question is of such a nature as to be agreeable to our laws, yet when the parties, who are foreigners, bind themselves in their own country not to sue in any other, and when by suing here they put the defendant under an intolerable hardship, I think we ought to look into the contract in order to see what effect it would have, and how it could be enforced in the country where it was made, that we may not do any thing here unjust or contrary to the laws of that country. Now it appears to me to be good according to my apprehension of those laws, or at least, as there is no evidence to show that it is not good, we must presume it to be so. Then the first thing that stares us in the face is an agreement that they will not resort to our laws. There is nothing unreasonable in this; the parties are domiciled in Holland, the contract is to perform the whole voyage ending in Holland, and to seek their remedy in their own courts of L.R.A.1916D.

justice. . . . Now, it is obvious that the master would be placed in a very cruel situation, if, after the ship and cargo were confiscated, he was to be sued in a foreign country for wages for a voyage, the proceeds of which might be either remitted or on board the ship so confiscated; the effect of it might be to cause him to lie in a foreign jail, perhaps for life. It seems therefore to me more reasonable to send the parties to their own country, there to pursue their remedy."

Lord Ellenborough, speaking of a similar stipulation, in Johnson v. Machielsne (1811) 3 Campb. (Eng.) 44, 13 Revised Rep. 745, said that if it were merely the regulation of a foreign government, he should leave that government to enforce it by punishing the infraction of it, or by any other means that might be more effectual, but it being a personal contract between individuals expressly stipulating that the mariners shall not sue the captain for wages in foreign parts, it was impossible to say that it was void.

In Kirchner v. Gruban [1909] 1 Ch. (Eng.) 413, 78 L. J. Ch. N. S. 117, 99 L. T. N. S. 932, 53 Sol. Jo. 151, involving an agreement between a German firm and a German subject who represented the firm in the United Kingdom, by which they submitted themselves in all cases of dispute to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Leipsic courts, the court said that prima facie such an agreement is one by which the parties are bound, and upon which the court must act, unless for some cause there is reason to think that the matter ought to be determined otherwise than by the tribunal to which the parties have deliberately agreed to submit their differences. In this case, the firm sued out a writ for an injunction to restrain the defendant from engaging in any other business than that of the plaintiffs until after the date prior to which he had agreed by the contract not to give notice of discontinuance; and for an injunction to restrain him from divulging matters relating to the plaintiff's business. The defendant entered a conditional appearance to the writ, and asked that the writ of summons and service thereof be set aside, or in the alternative that all proceedings in the action be stayed, on the ground of the agreement to submit to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Leipsic courts. The court was of the opinion that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the first injunction asked, because it would in effect compel specific performance of a contract of service; and that their right to the second injunction asked depended upon the existence of an implied contract on the part of an employee, involving the construction of the written contract, which the English court was precluded from construing by the express agreement of the parties. The court accordingly concluded that no cause had been shown why the parties should not be held to their agreement to refer all disputes to the Leipsic courts.

G. H. P.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.
(Department No. 1.)

DAISY D. IMLER et al., Appts.,
v.
NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY et al., Respts.

(— Wash. —, 154 Pac. 1086.)

Railroad — licensee on tracks — reliance on customary movement of train.

1. A licensee walking along a double track railroad cannot rely on a custom to move trains on the respective tracks only in one direction, so as to permit recovery in case, to avoid a train approaching him on one track, he steps on to the parallel track and is hit by a train on it coming from the same direction as the other, for which he did not look.

For other cases, see Railroads, II. c, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — absence of headlight — proximate cause.

2. Absence of headlight on an engine which runs down a licensee on the track does not render the railroad company liable for the injury, if such absence was not the proximate cause of the injury.

For other cases, see Railroads, II. d, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — duty due licensee.

3. One walking along a fenced and guarded railroad track in the country is not, although a licensee, entitled to the protection which the railroad company is required to afford to persons crossing its tracks at regularly established crossing places.

For other cases, see Railroads, II. d, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — view of track — liability for injury.

4. The mere fact that the engineer had an unobstructed view of the track for more than a mile does not render the company liable for injury to one hit by the train

Note.—As to right of one on railroad track to rely on custom to move trains on certain track only in one direction, see annotation following this case, post, 706.

As to duty of railroad company to keep lookout for trespassers on track, see notes to Smith v. Norfolk & S. R. Co. 25 L.R.A. 287; Frye v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1069; and Martin v. Hughes Creek Coal Co. 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 264. L.R.A.1916D.

while walking along the track, if there is nothing to show that the injured person was in fact on the track while the train was approaching him for that distance.
For other cases, see Railroads, II. d, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 7, 1916.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court for Thurston County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful death of plaintiffs' decedent. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hugo Metzler, Ben S. Sawyer, and Gordon & Easterday, for appellants: Plaintiffs' decedent was a licensee, and not a trespasser.

Roth v. Union Depot Co. 13 Wash. 540, 31 L.R.A. 855, 43 Pac. 641, 44 Pac. 253; Great Northern R. Co. v. Thompson, 47 L.R.A.(N.S.) 506, 118 C. C. A. 79, 199 Fed. 395; Dotta v. Northern P. R. Co. 36 Wash. 506, 79 Pac. 32; Hamlin v. Columbia & P. S. R. Co. 37 Wash. 450, 79 Pac. 991.

Defendants are liable for gross, wilful, and wanton neglect, even though deceased was a trespasser.

East St. Louis Connecting R. Co. v. O'Hara, 150 Ill. 580, 37 N. E. 918, 11 Am. Neg. Cas. 416; Palmer v. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. 112 Ind. 250, 14 N. E. 70; 1 Thomp. Neg. 2d ed. § 22; Shumacher v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 39 Fed. 174; Overton v. Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. 1 Ind. App. 436, 27 N. E. 651; Rhymes v. Jackson Electric R. Light & P. Co. 85 Miss. 140, 37 So. 708; Roth v. Union Depot Co. supra; Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Longino, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 87, 118 S. W. 198; Young v. Clark, 16 Utah, 42, 50 Pac. 832, 3 Am. Neg. Rep. 315; Brown v. Boston & M. R. Co. 73 N. H. 568, 64 Atl. 196; Conley v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 89 Ky. 402, 12 S. W. 764.

Deceased being a licensee, the railroad company owed additional care toward him to use ordinary precaution in both discovering and avoiding the injury.

McConkey v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 35 Wash. 58, 76 Pac. 526, 16 Am. Neg. Rep. 258.

The question of contributory negligence was for the jury, and not for the court.

Gregg v. Northern P. R. Co. 49 Wash. 189, 94 Pac. 911; Thompson v. Northern P. R. Co. 35 C. C. A. 357, 93 Fed. 384; Northern P. R. Co. v. Baxter, 109 C. C. A. 635, 187 Fed. 787.

Messrs. George T. Reid, J. W. Quick, and L. B. da Ponte, for respondents:

Deceased was a trespasser.

McConkey v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 35 Wash. 55, 76 Pac. 526, 16 Am. Neg. Rep. 258; Dotta v. Northern P. R. Co. 36 Wash. 506, 79 Pac. 32; Hamlin v. Columbia & P. S. R. Co. 37 Wash. 448, 79 Pac. 991; Schug v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 102 Wis. 515, 78 N. W. 1090, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 239; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Eicher, 202 Ill. 556, 67 N. E. 376; Spicer v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 34 W. Va. 514, 11 L.R.A. 385, 12 S. E. 553; Burg v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 90 Iowa, 106, 48 Am. St. Rep. 419, 57 N. W. 680; Ward v. Southern P. Co. 25 Or. 433, 23 L.R.A. 715, 36 Pac. 166.

If it should be held that the deceased was a licensee at the time he received the injuries resulting in his death, still plaintiffs cannot recover.

Williamson v. Southern R. Co. 104 Va. 146, 70 L.R.A. 1007, 113 Am. St. Rep. 1032, 51 S. E. 195; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Eicher, 202 Ill. 556, 67 N. E. 376; Northern P. R. Co. v. Jones, 75 C. C. A. 205, 144 Fed. 47.

Statutes requiring electric headlights are in the same class as those requiring the sounding of whistles at public crossings, or the ringing of bells at public places. They are for the protection of those who are where they have a legal right to be.

Williamson v. Southern R. Co. supra; Ellis v. Southern R. Co. 90 C. C. A. 270, 163 Fed. 686; Lynch v. Great Northern R. Co. 38 Mont. 511, 100 Pac. 616; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Bradford, 20 Ind. App. 348, 67 Am. St. Rep. 252, 49 N. E. 388; Toomey v. Southern P. R. Co. 86 Cal. 374, 10 L.R.A. 139, 24 Pac. 1074.

The railroad company was not negligent in running the north-bound train on the south-bound track.

Boulden v. Louisville & N. R. Co. — Ky. —, 112 S. W. 936; Morgan v. Northern P. R. Co. 116 C. C. A. 223, 196 Fed. 449.

Chadwick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Joseph Imler, while walking along the track of the defendant railway company on the evening of the 4th of November, 1912, was struck and killed by one of defendant's work trains. The place of the accident was between the stations of Centralia and Bucoda, where the company maintains a double-track railway which is fenced and L.R.A.1916D.

guarded at all proper places with cattle guards. Imler had been at work during the day at a farm about a mile and a half south of Bucoda, where he lived. He left the place of his employment about dusk, and followed a road or footpath to the right of way of respondent company. He entered on the right of way either through, or by climbing over, a gate which had been left for the convenience of the owner of the land; the place having been formerly maintained as a private crossing. The crossing had been abandoned about three years before when the company double-tracked its road. The gates had not been removed. Imler had apparently gone but a short distance in the direction of Bucoda when he was struck and killed.

The testimony shows, notwithstanding the fact that respondent maintained a double-track railroad, a part of its transcontinental system, over which some forty trains passed each way every day, and with the track properly guarded, that the people in the neighborhood had for a long time been accustomed to use the right of way and the tracks as a footpath in going to and from their homes situated near the tracks. At times some had ridden bicycles along and between the tracks. One witness testifies that he had ridden a motorcycle, and another that he had seen a man riding along the tracks on horseback.

It is contended by the appellants that the use of the tracks and the right of way by the public in the manner indicated had continued for so long a time that a license to use the tracks as a footpath is implied, and respondent did not use that degree of care which it owed to deceased as a licensee, and is liable to answer in damages. Negligence is charged in that respondent's train was running against traffic, that is, running north on the south-bound tracks; that the headlight was not burning or was so defective as to give no warning; that the train was running at an excessive rate of speed (the testimony does not sustain a finding that it was running more than 35 miles an hour); that at the time of the happening of the accident a north-bound passenger train equipped with a powerful electric headlight, and with cars and coaches brilliantly lighted, was going north on the north-bound track; that the lights from the passenger train sufficiently lighted the track and that portion of the right of way upon which the deceased was walking to enable the engineer and fireman to see and observe him in time to give him warning of his peril; and further that the noise and light caused by the passing of the passenger train held the attention of the deceased, and he relied upon the fact that the west track was habitually used by south-bound trains, and was induced to believe that the south-bound track was, and would be, free and clear of obstructions from behind, and the light and noise and confusion of the passenger train made it impossible for him to hear and discover the approach of the work train.

It is shown that deceased was about forty-five years of age, in the possession of all of his faculties, and had, at one time, been a section hand working along the track where he was killed, and hence had knowledge of the frequent use of the tracks.

As material to the history of the case, although not a fact essential to our holding, there was a public highway leading into Bucoda at about the same distance from the place where the deceased was working as was the railroad track. At the close of plaintiff's testimony, the trial judge took the case from the jury and entered a judgment of nonsuit.

Much of the briefs are taken up with the discussion of the inquiry as to whether deceased was a trespasser or licensee. We shall not inquire whether deceased was a trespasser. We shall assume that he was a licensee, although it may well be doubted whether any person can claim a license to use a railway track, more especially the double track of a transcontinental system over which trains run with great frequency, as a footpath, where, as in this case, the track is laid in the open and between stations and is fenced and guarded. Under such circumstances, it has been held that a use, however long continued, will not imply a license. Burg v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 90 Iowa, 106, 48 Am. St. Rep. 419, 57 N. W. 680; Ward v. Southern P. Co. 25 Or. 433, 23 L.R.A. 715, 36 Pac. 166. And such would seem to be the logical result of the opinion of this court in the case of Hamlin v. Columbia & P. S. R. Co. 37 Wash. 448, 79 Pac. 991, and Dotta v. Northern P. R. Co. 36 Wash. 506, 79 Pac. 32. The duty of a railroad company to a licensee is defined in the case of McConkey v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 35 Wash. 55, 76 Pac. 526, 16 Am. Neg. Rep. 258, as follows: "In the case of the licensee, the company, when moving trains, is charged with the additional duty of being in a state of expectancy as to the probable presence of persons upon the track at places where travel thereon is known to be customary and frequent. The care required in the case of the licensee, therefore, calls for both reasonable lookout in advance, and a reasonable effort to avoid injury after presence is discovered."

The determinative question is, therefore, whether the engineer and fireman, or L.R.A.1916D.

either of them, discovered the presence of the deceased and his peril in time to avoid the accident.

There is no testimony that would warrant us in holding that respondent's agents were remiss in the performance of their duty to the deceased; that is, to keep a lookout and avoid any wanton or wilful injury. The engineer testifies that he was keeping a lookout, and that he did not see the deceased until just the moment he was struck. This is not disputed by the testimony of anyone, nor do we find the physical or admitted facts to be contrary to his declaration.

In Spicer v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 34 W. Va. 516, 11 L.R.A. 385, 12 S. E. 553, a recovery was denied under the following state of facts: "He is not at a street crossing, but purely for his own convenience is walking on the track from Sixteenth to Twentieth street; and seeing a train moving towards him on the track on which he is walking, he steps upon the next track; and being blinded by the headlight of the engine approaching, and his hearing dulled by it, or more likely because he did not look for a train on the track to which he stepped, he is scarcely on that track before he is struck by a train which is being backed from the depot to the shops, receiving injury from which he dies in about an hour. No one questions that the company was simply exercising, on ground belonging to it, its lawful business, and that the deceased was not in the public highway, but using the track for his own convenience, when he could have used a walk or path but a few yards distant, outside the tracks, or an alley but a short distance further away. What duty did the company owe him, under these circumstances, except that it should not wilfully or wantonly hurt him? Where could the deceased have found a more deadly, dangerous walk? And he was fully aware of this, for he was an employee of the company, was well acquainted with the yard and works of the company there, but not in service in the yard nor on duty then or there. Indeed, his daily contact and familiarity with the railroad operations lulled him into a feeling of security and negligence which cost him his life when but twenty-one or twenty-two years of age. He was in possession of all the natural senses and faculties which tell of danger and aid us in self-preservation amid perils surrounding us."

Although there is no testimony to sustain it, we think the assumption of appellants, as set forth in that part of their complaint describing the presence of the passenger train, is a fair theory of the immediate circumstances and conditions. The deceased was evidently on the west side of the west track when struck, for the bruises on his body indicate that he was struck just above the hip by the pilot beam. At the time the two trains were running nearly parallel, and the deceased must have assumed that the passenger train was the only train approaching, and, there being an utter absence of testimony that he had been walking for any distance on either track, he must have stepped upon the ties immediately in front of the work train without looking, resting upon the assumption that a train on the west track, if any, would come from the north, and not from the south. It follows that the only contention that can be advanced with any show of reason is that respondent was bound to operate its trains "with traffic" in all instances, and that licensees may rest secure in the belief, and act upon it without looking, that all trains will move in the customary manner. Whatever the rights of a licensee may be, railroad tracks are laid for the convenience of those who operate them, and the public which employs them, and those who ride upon their cars. A licensee cannot, from the nature of things, having in mind the public duty of the carrier, assume that a railroad company will not, or may not, use its property as will best serve, or as may be necessary at times to serve, its primary purposes. It cannot be held guilty of negligence if, in the performance of its functions as a public carrier, it suspends its own rules for the time being for the movement of its trains, and sends a train forward against traffic. We might as well hold that a train running ahead of time or behind time would have to flag its way to protect those who were accustomed to use its track as a footpath in country districts; for, if appellants' theory be good, a licensee might as well rest under the assumption that if a train did not pass the point of his use at a given time, or upon schedule time, it would have no rights which he was bound to respect or to take notice of.

In all cases then, we come to the one question whether the company kept a lookout, and whether the presence of the licensee was discovered in time to prevent the accident. As we have said, the testimony in this case not only does not sustain such a finding, but is contrary to it.

The fact is apparent and conclusive that the deceased acted upon the assumption that but one train was approaching from the south, and that the west track was clear. Such assumptions find no favor in the law. A similar contention was made in Boulden v. Louisville & N. R. Co. — Ky. —, 112 S. W. 936. The court there held L.R.A.1916D.

that the company had a right to run its trains on either of the two tracks. "The court properly instructed the jury that the defendant had the right to use either track, as otherwise they might have thought it negligent for the defendant to run the train in question on the east track. Persons who walk along a railroad track are under obligations to keep out of the way of trains, and they cannot complain that the train is run on one track and not on another. There was nothing in the plaintiff's conduct to apprise the operatives of the train that he was ignorant of its approach, or to impose upon them the duty of taking extra precautions for his safety, until he, without looking back to see if the train was coming, suddenly placed himself in peril when the train was right upon him."

See also Morgan v. Northern P. R. Co. 116 C. C. A. 223, 196 Fed. 449.

In Northern P. R. Co. v. Jones, 75 C. C. A. 205, 144 Fed. 47, instead of running against traffic, a train was running off its schedule. The court, in holding that the company was not negligent in so operating its trains, said: "In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McClish, 53 C. C. A. 60, 115 Fed. 268, it was said: 'Even in the case of a licensee, there is, under such circumstances, the highest duty to exercise the utmost degree of vigilance in looking out for approaching engines or cars. . . . The track is the property of the railroad company, which it has the legal right to use at any and all times.' The rule is well established that it is the duty of a traveler to stop and look and listen before crossing or walking along a railroad track. He has no right to assume at any time of the day or night that trains will not be run over the track. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Houston, 95 U. S. 697, 24 L. ed. 542, 7 Am. Neg. Cas. 345; Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 114 U. S. 615, 29 L. ed. 224, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1125; Northern P. R. Co. v. Freeman, 174 U. S. 379, 43 L. ed. 1014, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 763. Said the court in Elliott v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 150 U. S. 248, 37 L. ed. 1071, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 86: 'The track itself, as it seems necessary to iterate and reiterate, is itself a warning. It is a place of danger. It can never be assumed that cars are not approaching on a track, or that there is no danger therefrom.' The defendant in error was a miner of the age of thirty-four years, and was in the full possession of his senses. According to his own testimony, he walked upon the railroad track a distance of more than half a mile without once looking back or stopping to listen for an approaching train. In so doing, it must be held that he was guilty of gross negligence, which, irrespective of negligence in the failure of the engineer to discover him on the track, is sufficient to bar his right of recovery. It was no excuse for his failure to take such precautions that the wind was blowing in his face, or that the noise of a waterfall may have deadened the sound of an approaching train. Those circumstances only rendered the use of his senses the more imperative. It was his duty continually to exercise vigilance."

We attach no importance to the contention that the headlight on the train was not burning, or was so dim as to afford no protection to the deceased. There is no testimony even tending to show that the lack of a headlight, or its defective character, was the proximate cause of the injury. Appellants' testimony shows that the electric headlight of the passenger train illuminated the track and the right of way. Another headlight would have added no security to the deceased.

Appellants rely principally on the cases of Roth v. Union Depot Co. 13 Wash. 525, 31 L.R.A. 855, 43 Pac. 641, 44 Pac. 253; Northern P. R. Co. v. Baxter, 109 C. C. A. 635, 187 Fed. 789; and Great Northern R. Co. v. Thompson, 47 L.R.A. (N.S.) 506, 118 C. C. A. 79, 199 Fed. 395. These cases, like many that might be cited, are either crossing cases, or cases from cities and towns where population is congested and the public have been accustomed to cross the tracks or to use them as a thoroughfare. Recoveries are allowed in such cases because a higher duty rests upon a railroad company under such circumstances. In moving trains over and across the streets of cities, or through depot grounds, or in switch yards, the railroad company, from the nature of things, must have its trains under control and be constantly alert to the possibility of injuring persons or property. This is a condition which is generally compelled or regulated by statute or ordinance. But we do not find it to be so held in any of the cases where, as in this case, a fenced and guarded track was used, not as a crossing, but as a footpath in the country and between stations.

The crossing cases may be further distinguished. They rest in implied license upon legal grounds, as differentiated from the acts or conduct of the parties as they may arise in a particular case. In consequence, a duty is put upon the court in all such cases to measure the relative rights, as well as the relative obligations, of the parties to the action. The company is held to a rule of strict accountability, because it is necessary for men and traffic to cross railway tracks in the pursuit of their legitimate undertakings and conveniences. The law charges a company with a knowledge that they will do so. Whereas one who walks along a railroad track using it as a footpath, especially where the track is in the country and fenced, cannot claim the protection given to those who do things of necessity, for, from the very nature of things, he is using the track for his personal comfort and convenience. Men must, and therefore may, move from one side of a track to another at places established by the company, or so long used by the public as to imply a license, resting under the assumption of legal right. But the one who does not cross, but loiters, or crosses the barriers that have been erected to warn him and save him from the consequences of his folly, can claim no more than that he shall not be wantonly or wilfully injured if his peril is discovered in time to prevent his injury. The cases all rest in the same sound principle which controls every exploration into the law of negligence; that is, that the degree of care in every case shall be measured, not by any abstract rule, but by reference to the facts and circumstances attending the particular case.

There is no merit in the contention that the respondent's engineer had an unobstructed view of the track for more than a mile, and should have discovered the peril of the deceased. There is no evidence that deceased was on the track, and we cannot hold, as a matter of law, that the engineer was bound to anticipate that a man walking along the right of way would step in front of a railway train without exercising any care for his own safety.

Affirmed.

Morris, Ch. J., and Fullerton, Mount, and Ellis, JJ., concur.

Annotation—Right of one on railroad track to rely on custom to move trains on certain track only in one direction.

IMLER v. NORTHERN P. R. Co. ante, 702, in holding that a licensee on the railroad tracks has no right to rely on the custom of the company to operate its trains in one direction only on certain tracks, is in L.R.A.1916D.

accord with the authorities that have considered the question under annotation.

Thus, which of its tracks would or should be used by a railroad company for its various trains is a matter for the exclusive determination of the railroad company. Morgan v. Northern P. R. Co. (1912) 116 C. C. A. 223, 196 Fed. 449.

So, persons walking along a railroad track have no right to rely upon the fact that trains are ordinarily run only in one direction on a particular track. (Fed.) Ibid.

In Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Hart (1877) 87 Ill. 529, one who, while using the railroad track as a pathway, was struck by a switching engine proceeding south on a north-bound track, urged, as excuse for not looking toward the north, the practice of the railroad company in running only north-bound trains on this track, but the court stated that he was not justified in relying upon any such practice, as the company had the right to change it at any time and to run their trains at all times in either direction, and any dependence upon such former practice was at his risk; that this practice before did not excuse the exercise of caution and vigilance in looking for approaching trains in both directions. The court added, however, that the proof showed satisfactorily that this practice did not prevail as to switching engines and trains being switched in the yards at this point.

Also in Boulden v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (1908) — Ky. —, 112 S. W. 936, cited in IMLER v. NORTHERN P. R. Co. ante, 702, an action for injuries by one who, while walking along a railroad track, in order to avoid a puddle, stepped on the east track, which was customarily used by trains going north, and was struck by a train going south, it was held that negligence could not be predicated on the fact that, contrary to its custom, the railroad company for some reason or other operated this train south on the east track. The court stated that persons who walk along a railroad track are under obligations to keep out of the way of trains, and cannot complain if the trains run on one track and not on another.

So, in Stearman v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. (1895) 6 App. D. C. 46, an action for the death of one while walking along railroad tracks, alleged to have been due to negligence of the railroad company in running its trains, in holding that a verdict was properly directed for the defendant, the court said: "The fact that trains had not usually been run upon the eastern track into the city, in which direction she was walking, or had not been seen by the witness to run in that direction, makes but little, if any, difference. It does not appear that there was any law or regulation governing the running of trains upon that track, and the fact that the train which did the injury was running into the city thereon would tend to show at least that there was no rule or invariable custom controlling its use."

And in Holmes v. South Pacific Coast R. Co. (1893) 97 Cal. 161, 31 Pac. 834, one, while waiting for a train at the station, walked up and down the tracks and was struck by a train coming up from behind, and it was held that the liability of the railroad company could not be made to depend upon the question whether or not the deceased did or did not know that the railroad company ran its trains on the left-hand track, and so evidence was held to be irrelevant that, with the exception of that particular road, it was the universal custom in the operation of double-track railroads to run trains upon the right-hand track.

But in Sullivan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. (1900) 73 Conn. 203, 47 Atl. 131, where one lawfully on the railroad tracks was struck by an engine backing west on an east-bound track, it was held that there was no contributory negligence as a matter of law, considering that a passenger train was coming in the same direction at the same time upon the other track, so that it was easy to see how deceased, having looked and listened, may have seen and heard only the approaching passenger train, and may have reasonably supposed that while he was passing over the east-bound track he was in no danger from a train going west upon that track. It was also held that under the facts disclosed by the evidence it could not be said that the railroad company was not guilty of negligence in unnecessarily and improperly running its engine west on the east-bound track.

And contributory negligence of a traveler about to cross railroad tracks was held in Greenawaldt v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (1905) 165 Ind. 219, 74 N. E. 1081, to be a question for the jury, where, with knowledge that the railroad company had established the custom of running its train east on the north track and west on the south track, in reliance on such custom, and in view of the fact that a long freight train headed west was standing on the south track so as to obscure her vision to the west, she directed all her attention to ascertaining whether a train was approaching from the west and, hearing none, proceeded to cross and was struck by a train on the north track which approached from the east without warning signal.

Railroad employees.

That in consequence of a wreck on its line it became necessary for the railroad to operate east-bound trains on the west-bound track was held, in Graham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. (1912) 25 Ont. L. Rep. 429, 19 Can. Ry. Cas. 232, 1 D. L. R. 554, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1053, not to be of itself such negligence as to warrant recovery for injuries sustained by track repairers who were working on such west-bound tracks in reliance upon the custom to operate only west-bound trains over such track, and in ignorance of anything making it necessary to change such customary mode of operating trains.

So, also, in Belt R. Co. v. Skszypczak (1907) 225 Ill. 242, 80 N. E. 113, it was held that an experienced track repairer who was working on tracks had no right to assume that a track would be used only for trains running in a certain direction, because customarily used only for such trains, where he had seen an engine leave a train and go down the track to a watering tank, and he must have known that the engine would probably return from that direction for the remainder of the train. At least, the circumstances, the court said, were such as to put him upon his guard to watch for the return of that engine over the track upon which he was working.

In Stewart v. Washington & G. F. Electric R. Co. (1903) 22 App. D. C. 496, an action for injuries to an employee of an electric railroad company whose barns were located outside the city limits, while walking along the right of way, the only means of reaching the barn, caused by being struck by a car coming up from his rear on the left-hand track, it was conceded that the company had full control and right to run their cars over their railroad at such time and over such of their tracks as they might deem it necessary for the execution of their work; and that it was no violation of duty to anyone to run their cars upon one track rather than another, when the exigency or convenience of the service undertaken by them rendered it proper in their judgment so to do; but it was contended that if there be a change made in the operation of the railroad, either as to the time of running or as to the direction of trains on several tracks, there should be notice given of such a change to employees and others concerned, so that they might pursue their course accordingly. The court, in denying this contention, said: "This would certainly be an unusual requirement and one that might be very embarrassing in the operation of a railroad on L.R.A. 1916D.

important occasions. All parties coming in contact with the operation of a railroad must be presumed to know that the owner has entire control and direction of the course and manner of operation, and so long as there be no contractual obligation or public duties violated, the owner must be allowed to exercise his own judgment and discretion in the use of his property." The court added that when the accident occurred the car was not at any stopping place nor at any crossing of either a public or private way, where signals were required, but it was passing where it was entitled to an unobstructed right of way.

And Kinnare v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (1895) 57 Ill. App. 153, a car washer stepped from a car and, without looking toward the south, walked north along the south-bound track, and was struck from the rear by cars being backed into the station for the purpose of making up a south-bound train. It was contended that he had a right to rely upon the fact that the track upon which he stepped was what was known as the outgoing or south-bound track, and that he was therefore excused from looking in any direction except that from which outgoing trains would approach him, or that, if he was at all negligent in not looking in the other direction, his negligence was slight, and that the negligence of the company was gross in comparison. The court stated, however, that the doctrine of comparative negligence was no longer the law of the state, and so, as a condition to recovery, a person injured must be found to be in the exercise of ordinary care for his own safety, and the injury must result from the negligence of the defendant. In holding that the contributory negligence of the party injured was such as barred recovery, the court said: "We fail to find in the evidence any near approach to the exercise of ordinary care by the deceased for his safety. He stepped from a train in a yard where the switching of cars was continually going on, and, without looking in but a single direction, walked a distance of several feet with apparently no heed of his surroundings, and placed himself directly in front of a moving car when no more than 3 feet from it. The slightest attention on his part would have shown him the danger he was incurring, and if he chose to avoid the exercise of any diligence, others should not be held responsible. He should have looked in both directions . . . . The deceased was accustomed to the system of switching which prevailed in the yard, and must have known that the track upon which outgoing trains passed must necessarily be used, as it always had been, to back cars into the station upon, in order that they might make up the trains that should pass out."

But in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Trisler (1910) 140 Ky. 447, 131 S. W. 198, a railroad employee who was walking toward the depot on the railroad track and was struck by an inbound train was held not guilty of contributory negligence in relying on the custom of the railroad company to run inbound trains in on another track, especially in view of the fact that when he passed the switch he saw that it was set to run that train in on such other track. J. H. B.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.
(In Banc.)

GUARANTY TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK, Appt.,
v.
MOBILE & OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY.

(— Miss. —, 70 So. 585.)

Carrier — forged bill of lading — ordering valid one — liability.

1. A railroad company which receives goods for shipment, issues bills of lading therefor, and telegraphs the broker of the consignor of their receipt, is not liable to one who purchases, on the faith of the tele-

Note.—While an extensive search has disclosed no other case passing upon the liability of a carrier which confirms the receipt for shipment, of goods corresponding to the description in a forged bill of lading, the decision upon this point in GUARANTY TRUST Co. v. MOBILE & O. R. Co. seems clearly to be correct. It has been stated that a common carrier is not estopped, even by a non-negotiable bill of lading signed by its agent, from denying that the goods were actually received as therein stated, especially where the action is between itself and the alleged shipper. "And even as against a bona fide consignee or indorsee, the great weight of authority seems to be in favor of the doctrine that the carrier is not estopped by the bill of lading, fraudulently or mistakenly issued by its agent, from showing that no goods were shipped as therein stated." 10 R. C. L. 773. And if a carrier is not estopped from showing that no goods were shipped, by a bill of lading issued by its agent, either fraudulently or mistakenly, it seems clear that it should not be estopped from so showing, by the mere confirmation of the receipt for shipment, of goods corresponding to those described in a forged bill of lading, especially where it had no knowledge of the forgery, and either negligently or mistakenly confirmed the receipt of the goods, or, as in GUARANTY TRUST Co. v. MOBILE & O. R. Co., had actually received such goods and issued a valid bill of lading therefor. In the latter case, the nonliability of the carrier under the forged bill of lading, on the ground of estoppel or otherwise, seems especially clear, as it was not guilty of any fraud or even negligence, but merely congram, a draft with a forged bill of lading for similar property attached, because it honors the order of a purchaser of the true bill to stop shipment without giving the broker an opportunity to protect interests which may be acquired on the faith of the telegram.

For other cases, see Bills of Lading, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — confirmation of forged bill of lading — liability.

2. A railroad company is not liable, on the ground of estoppel, to a purchaser of a draft with forged bill of lading attached, because, without knowledge of the forgery, it confirms by telegram to the broker, upon which the purchaser relies, the receipt of firmed, in good faith, the receipt of goods which it had in fact received for shipment, and which, without its knowledge, corresponded to the description in a previously forged bill of lading.

As to the liability of a carrier to a bona fide holder upon a bill of lading issued by the negligence or mistake of its agent without the delivery of any goods to the carrier, see notes to Roy & Roy v. Northern P. R. Co. 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 302; Franklin Trust Co. v. Philadelphia, B. & W. R. Co. 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 828; and Sealy v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 41 L.R.A.(N.S.) 500.

As to the constitutionality of a statute making a bill of lading conclusive proof of the receipt of property, see note to Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Bent, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 821.

Upon the conclusiveness of a bill of lading as to the character and amount of goods, as between the carrier and a bona fide transferee, see note to Thomas v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1177.

For the rights and liabilities of the assignee of a bill of lading with draft attached, as against the consignee, who does not get the goods or who finds them defective, see notes to Finch v. Gregg, 49 L.R.A. 679; Haas v. Citizens' Bank, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 242; Mason v. Nelson, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1221; Cosmos Cotton Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1173; and Springs v. Hanover Nat. Bank, 52 L.R.A.(N.S.) 241.

Upon the right of the discounter of a draft as to property covered by a bill of lading attached to the draft, see note to American Thresherman v. De Tamble Motors Co. 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 644.

A. C. W.

goods corresponding to those described in the forged bill, when such goods are actually received and a valid bill of lading issued for them.

For other cases, see Estoppel, III. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 7, 1916.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lowndes County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover money advanced by plaintiff on forged bills of lading, for which loss defendant was alleged to be responsible. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. W. J. Lamb, for appellant:

The sending of the telegram by the agent of the defendant was a complete ratification of the two bills of lading, and the direct cause of the trouble and loss to plaintiff.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 189, 889; Norton v. Shelby County, 118 U. S. 451, 30 L. ed. 189, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1121; Scott v. Buchanan, 11 Humph. 470; Hatton v. Stewart, 2 Lea, 234; Ansonia v. Cooper, 64 Conn. 544, 30 Atl. 760; Curnane v. Scheidel, 70 Conn. 13, 38 Atl. 875; 23 Cyc. 1528; Carter v. Pomeroy, 30 Ind. 438; Hartman v. Hornsby, 142 Mo. 368, 44 S. W. 242; First Nat. Bank v. Drake, 29 Kan. 311, 44 Am. Rep. 646; Goodwin v. East Hartford, 70 Conn. 18, 38 Atl. 876.

When the defendant sent the telegram in question, it was as fully bound to all intents and purposes as if it had given Steel, Miller, & Company direct authority to sign the bills of lading.

First Nat. Bank v. Drake, 29 Kan. 311, 44 Am. Rep. 652; Gunther v. Ullrich, 82 Wis. 222, 33 Am. St. Rep. 32, 52 N. W. 88; Uniontown Grocery Co. v. Dawson, 68 W. Va. 332, 69 S. E. 845, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 148.

Because of being asked to send this unusual telegram, that fact alone was sufficient to put the defendant on inquiry, and it owed a public duty to make the inquiry, and give the proper information regarding this shipment of cotton.

29 Cyc. 1114; Parker v. Foy, 43 Miss. 266, 5 Am. Rep. 484; Shaw v. North Pennsylvania R. Co. (Shaw v. Merchants' Nat. Bank) 101 U. S. 557, 25 L. ed. 892; Searles Bros. v. Smith Grain Co. 80 Miss. 688, 32 So. 287; Jasper Trust Co. v. Kansas City M. & B. R. Co. 99 Ala. 416, 42 Am. St. Rep. 79, 14 So. 546; The Protection, 42 C. C. A. 489, 102 Fed. 516.

Defendant having elected to deliver the cotton to the banking company at Columbus, it did so at its own risk, and is liable to the plaintiff for its value.
L.R.A.1916D.

6 Cyc. 425; Garden Grove Bank v. Humeston & S. R. Co. 67 Iowa, 526, 25 N. W. 761; Hieskell v. Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank, 89 Pa. 155, 33 Am. Rep. 745; The Protection, 42 C. C. A. 489, 102 Fed. 516; Walters v. Western & A. R. Co. 56 Fed. 369.

Defendant is estopped from denying its liability to the plaintiff for the loss it has sustained.

Leather Mfrs. Nat. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96, 29 L. ed. 811, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 657; Bank of United States v. Bank of Georgia, 10 Wheat. 340, 23 L. ed. 337; Daniels v. Tearney, 102 U. S. 415, 26 L. ed. 187; Staton v. Bryant, 55 Miss. 272; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 431; Davis v. Bowmar, 55 Miss. 671; Clark v. Parsons, 69 N. H. 147, 76 Am. St. Rep. 158, 39 Atl. 898; Mask v. Allen, — Miss. —, 17 So. 82; Money v. Ricketts, 62 Miss. 209; Armour v. Michigan C. R. Co. 65 N. Y. 111, 22 Am. Rep. 610; Griswold v. Haven, 25 N. Y. 595, 82 Am. Dec. 380; Midland Nat. Bank v. Missouri P. R. Co. 132 Mo. 492, 53 Am. St. Rep. 514, 33 S. W. 521.

Mr. William Baldwin also, for appellant:

The cotton, as soon as it was delivered to the defendant railroad company by Steel, Miller, & Company, became at once the property of the plaintiff and was his cotton, so far as Steel, Miller, & Company was concerned.

Lovell v. Newman, 113 C. C. A. 39, 192 Fed. 753, 227 U. S. 412, 57 L. ed. 577, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 376; The Idaho, 93 U. S. 576, 23 L. ed. 978; Hentz v. Lovell, 113 C. C. A. 48, 192 Fed. 762; Pyle v. Texas Transport & Terminal Co. 121 C. C. A. 664, 203 Fed. 1023, 192 Fed. 725.

Messrs. S. R. Prince and J. M. Boone, for appellee:

It was the legal duty of defendant to recognize and honor its bills of lading. Steel, Miller, & Company were named as consignees in the bills of lading, making them, therefore, both consignor and consignee, and under the law they were presumed to be the owners, and must be treated by the carrier as the absolute owners, of the property, until notified to the contrary, and in the absence of such notice, delivery to the consignee will discharge the carrier.

Hutchison, Carr. 2d ed. § 130; Elliott, Railroads, 2d ed. § 1426; Butler v. Smith, 35 Miss. 465; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Organ Power Co. 92 Miss. 781, 46 So. 254.

The only reasonable and natural thing which the agent could imagine would be a negotiation in connection with the valid lading.

Stanford v. Lyon, 37 N. J. Eq. 94; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 427; Houston v.

Witherspoon, 68 Miss. 190, 8 So. 515; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 426, 427.

An estoppel does not apply except as to past and present facts. This being true, the effort to create an estoppel against defendant as to maintenance of a status, which would necessarily be a covenant as to the future, must fail.

11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 425, 426; Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mowry, 96 U. S. 544, 24 L. ed. 674.

Fraud perpetrated through the device of a false bill of lading may work injury to an innocent party, which cannot be redressed by a change of victim.

Friedlander v. Texas & P. R. Co. 130 U. S. 416, 32 L. ed. 991, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570.

Stevens, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On, and for a long time prior to, April 20, 1910, the firm of Steel, Miller, & Company was engaged in the cotton business, with their principal office at Corinth, Mississippi. It appears that one A. L. Jones was their agent at Columbus, Mississippi, and in the course of their business they would buy and ship cotton to the compress at Columbus, and that the Columbus Insurance & Banking Company would furnish the money to pay for the cotton and take over as its security the compress receipts and bills of lading. The firm had a broker in the city of New York, one F. Van Gerpen, to whom they would send bills of lading covering export shipments, insurance certificates, and foreign exchange. This broker would sell sixty-day drafts upon foreign purchasers of cotton, to banking establishments in New York city, assigning to the bank bills of lading, invoices, insurance, etc. The record of this case discloses that Steel, Miller, & Company, on or about April 20, 1910, forwarded to its broker in New York foreign exchange, insurance certificate, and two documents purporting to be bills of lading covering, respectively, 100 bales marked RGCY, and 100 bales marked RAEN, consigned to Steel, Miller, & Company, Bremen, Germany, via New Orleans, Louisiana. These ladings purported to have been issued by the Mobile & Ohio Railroad Company at Columbus, Mississippi, but in truth and in fact they were false and forged. Van Gerpen offered to the Guaranty Trust Company, appellant herein, these forged bills of lading and foreign exchange attached. It so happened at the time that the firm of Knight, Yancey, & Company, a cotton firm of Decatur, Alabama, had failed some days prior, and on account of this big failure the exchange purchaser of appellant would not buy the paper offered by Van Gerpen until appellant should receive evidence satisfactory to it that the cotton had in fact been delivered to the railroad company for shipment. When appellant declined to buy the exchange Van Gerpen thereupon telegraphed Steel, Miller, & Company to have the railroad wire him they had received the cotton for shipment. On April 22, 1910, Mr. Jones, the agent at Columbus, acting under instructions from Steel, Miller, & Company, secured compress clearances for 200 bales of cotton for shipment, and in accordance with the usual custom himself prepared bills of lading in his office and carried them to the railroad office for issuance and execution. Mr. Jones accordingly arranged with the railroad agent for the shipment of 100 bales of cotton marked RGCY, and 100 bales marked RAEN, consigned, routed, and marked exactly like the cotton appeared to have been shipped and marked by the forged ladings then in New York city. At the same time Mr. Jones had the agent of the railroad company at Columbus to sign a telegram to Van Gerpen, reading as follows:

Columbus, Miss., April 22, 1910.

F. Van Gerpen, 15 Williams St., New York.

We have received for shipment to Bremen from Steel, Miller, & Company one hundred marked RGCY, and one hundred RAEN, routed via New Orleans.

[Signed] W. E. Kennedy, Agent, M. & O. R. R. Co.

This telegram was written out by Mr. Jones, and was delivered to the telegraph company and the fee for its transmission paid by Jones. At this time neither the agent of the railroad company nor Mr. Jones, as agent of Steel, Miller, & Company, knew anything of any forged ladings having been sent by Steel, Miller, & Company to Van Gerpen, or of any forged ladings being in New York, and no one connected with the railroad company at Columbus had any intimation whatever that forged ladings were out, or that anyone connected with Steel, Miller, & Company intended to use the telegram in negotiating any false bills of lading. The true bills of lading made out by Mr. Jones in his cotton office at Columbus were dated April 19th, but were not executed by the railroad until April 22d, three days later, and complaint is made by appellant of the action of the railroad company in antedating the true ladings. When Van Gerpen received the telegram above set out, he attached it to the same papers he had before that time offered to the purchasing agent of appellant, and on the representation of facts stated in the telegram, succeeded in selling to appellant the foreign exchange, and received from appellant $15,240.18. After Mr. Jones received the true ladings he turned them over to the Columbus Insurance & Banking Company, which, as a holder of the true ladings, stopped the shipment of the 200 bales of cotton covered by the true ladings and sold the cotton on the market to a third party. The cotton had not been fully loaded on the cars when the shipment was ordered stopped, and of course the cotton never left the station in Columbus before it was disposed of by the Columbus Insurance & Banking Company. According to the testimony of Van Gerpen, the foreign exchange and forged bills of lading were sold to appellant on the 25th; and according to the testimony of Kennedy, the agent of the railroad company, instructions to hold the shipment were not given him until about 3:30 o'clock P. M. of the 25th, and then Mr. Kennedy was advised that it would be the following day before these instructions could be made definite. The record further shows that on the 26th Mr. Kennedy wired Van Gerpen that the shipment had been stopped and the true ladings recalled or surrendered. This brought to light the fact that forged ladings had been transferred, but the loss had then already occurred. The foreign exchange draft which Van Gerpen sold to appellant was never honored, and consequently appellant received nothing of value, but, on the contrary, lost the money advanced on the forged ladings. It thereupon filed its declaration in the circuit court of Lowndes county, claiming from the appellee herein the money lost by it as aforesaid. The declaration is in two counts, the first of which complains of the non-delivery of the cotton covered by the apparently valid bills of lading purchased and held by appellant, while the second count seeks to recover the $15,000 out of which appellant was defrauded, basing the right of recovery on the allegation that appellant was misled by the telegram sent by the agent of appellee to Van Gerpen. Proper issue was joined on both counts, evidence was heard by the court, the facts as above stated were developed, and a peremptory instruction was given in favor of appellee as defendant in the court below.

It is the contention of appellant that the railroad company caused the loss complained of; that the railroad company knew, or ought to have known, that the telegram was sent for the purpose of negotiating invoices and bills of lading for cotton, and that it was wrong for the railroad company to send this telegram. It is the further contention of appellant that after having sent the telegram it was the duty of the railroad company to hold the cotton for shipment until L.R.A.1916D.

Van Gerpen, the party to whom the telegram was addressed, could take legal steps to protect his interests or the interests of anyone relying upon the information contained in the telegram. It is the further contention of appellant that the telegram gave validity to and ratified the forged ladings then in New York.

The main point stressed in the oral argument of counsel for appellant is the contention that appellee, on the facts of this case, misled appellant and caused the loss. No action was taken by appellant against the Columbus Insurance & Banking Company or its assignee. On the contrary, it is claimed that appellant has no recourse against anyone except appellee, Steel, Miller, & Company being insolvent and its estate having been administered in bankruptcy. What is it, therefore, that appellee has wrongfully done or failed to do? The request for the telegram came from the agent of Steel, Miller, & Company, and not from appellant. The telegram was addressed to the broker of the shipper, and not to appellant. This telegram, furthermore, stated the truth. There is no misrepresentation in it of an existing fact. The business of appellee is, of course, to receive and transmit shipments of freight. Its duty in that regard was not violated. It, as common carrier, evidenced its contract with the shipper by and with the true bills of lading. The shipment of the 200 bales of cotton in question was, and must necessarily be, controlled by the true ladings, and the rights of the true holder of these ladings must be recognized and respected. The railroad company was obliged to deliver the cotton to the holder in good faith of the true ladings. There could not therefore be in this case any ratification of forged ladings. If the railroad company was justified in stopping the shipment on the order of the true holder of the good ladings, how have the rights of appellant been by appellee invaded?

The question then presents itself whether appellee is in fault in sending the telegram. It must be conceded that there was nothing unlawful in the bare fact of sending this message. It was sent at the request of the shipper and for his accommodation. It stated the absolute truth. This is not a case, therefore, where the party representing a fact is afterwards estopped from denying the fact to the hurt or injury of another. But it is contended that the agent of appellee was familiar with the way foreign shipments of cotton were handled, and that he ought to have known this telegram was intended for the use of appellant in selling its paper or in disposing of its ladings. The law would accord the right, however, even to a railroad company, to indulge the presumption of good faith on the part of its customers, and not require it to presume a felony had been, or would be, committed. The agent of appellee might well have thought the telegram would be of some service to Steel, Miller, & Company or to its broker in handling or disposing of the shipment of cotton actually receipted for. But just why the agent should have presumed false and forged ladings would be offered to the banking establishments of New York city it is difficult to conceive. The agent might well presume that the true ladings would be sold, and the telegram in question neither added to nor took away anything from the true ladings or the exact contract evidenced thereby. There is not the slightest proof of bad faith on the part of any of the agents or employees of appellee. Mr. Jones himself was ignorant of the false ladings. There is therefore no element of estoppel in this case.

It will be noted that this is not a contest between Steel, Miller, & Company, or its trustee in bankruptcy, and the holder of the forged ladings. The rights of third parties have intervened, and their superior rights are conceded by appellant.

As a matter of fact, the loss in this case was occasioned by the false and forged ladings. With the purchase by appellant of these forged documents appellee had nothing to do. While the case of Friedlander v. Texas & P. R. Co. 130 U. S. 416, 32 L. ed. 991, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 570, may not be directly in point, the court in that case uses language applicable to the case at bar: "The law can punish roguery, but cannot always protect a purchaser from loss, and so fraud perpetrated through the device of a false bill of lading may work injury to an innocent party, which cannot be redressed by a change of victim."

The peremptory charge given appellee in the court below was proper, and the case is accordingly affirmed.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.
(Division No. 2.)

CITY OF ST. LOUIS, Appt.,
v.
ST. LOUIS, IRON MOUNTAIN, & SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY et al.

REGAL BUGGY COMPANY, Respnt.

(— Mo. —, 182 S. W. 750.)

Damages — eminent domain — leasehold — removal from property.

1. The allowance of damages for the condemnation of a leasehold under the right of eminent domain does not include compensation for the cost of removal of the stock from the property to a new location, or its depreciation because of such removal, nor for the injury to the business because of interruptions during removal.

For other cases, see Damages, III. 1, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — value of fixtures.

2. The value of fixtures is to be included in the award for the condemnation of property under the right of eminent domain, lessened, in case the condemner permits them to be retained by the owner, by their market value as affixed to the property condemned, in estimating which the cost of tearing them out and installing them elsewhere is to be considered.

For other cases, see Damages, III. 1, 2, a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 6, 1916.)

Note. — For injury to, or expense of removing, personalty, as an element of damage for taking real estate, see annotation following this case, post 719.
L.R.A.1916D.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for the city of St. Louis awarding compensation to the respondent buggy company in a proceeding to condemn certain land for a bridge approach. Reversed.

Statement by Faris, P. J.:

The city of St. Louis brought this action to condemn a strip of land for the western approach to its municipal bridge. Damages were assessed in favor of the several defendants by a commission of three freeholders, to whose report the city filed exceptions. The case came on for hearing in the circuit court of the city of St. Louis, wherein the exceptions of appellant city were overruled, and it appealed.

The Regal Buggy Company, respondent herein, was the lessee for years of one parcel of the real estate which was condemned in this action. The lease of respondent, at the date of the making of the commissioners' report, had a little over three years to run. Specifically touching the land occupied by respondent, the commission assessed the value of said land taken, plus the damages to the remainder of the parcel, at the sum of $41,310. They then apportioned this sum by allowing to the owner thereof $38,610, and to this respondent as lessee the sum of $2,700, being the appraised value of its lease over and above the monthly rent reserved. After making allowances of damages aforesaid, the commission allowed the respondent the further sum of $8,450 on account of injury to its business, and for its damages and expenses arising from the removal of the fixtures and personal property of respondent from the premises condemned to a new location, and for installing said property therein. The commissioners' report, which was approved by the circuit court upon exceptions taken thereto, states the specific elements of damages going to make up the last-mentioned sum thus: "(1) For the cost of removal of their several stocks of goods and fixtures from their present place of business to new locations, and installing said goods and fitting said fixtures therein; (2) for depreciation in the value of such goods and fixtures caused by the removal and reinstallation of the same; (3) for injury to their said businesses caused by the interruption of the same during the period of removal of their said stocks of goods and fixtures."

The allowance of damages for the three items above enumerated is the sole matter of contention here. It is conceded even that if these three items were proper subjects of damages, then the amount allowed respondent therefor is fair and reasonable; but appellant contends that under the laws of eminent domain of this state, no such damages may be paid by the condemnor to him whose land is taken for public uses.

These three propositions and the contentions of appellant and respondent pro and con, respectively, form the points up for decision.

Messrs. Charles H. Daues and Truman P. Young, for appellant:

In cases where land to be condemned is under lease, the measure of damages in favor of the lessee is the market value of his lease over and above the rent reserved.

2 Lewis, Em. Dom. § 719; Hughes v. Hood, 50 Mo. 350; Baltimore v. Rice, 73 Md. 307, 21 Atl. 181.

Where land is condemned for public use, there can be no allowance of damages for the cost of removing personal property, or for injury to such property during the process of removal, or for interruption of business, whether the land is occupied by the owner or by a lessee.

St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. v. Knapp-Stout & Co. Co. 160 Mo. 396, 61 S. W. 300; Springfield Southwestern R. Co. v. Schweitzer, 173 Mo. App. 650, 158 S. W. 1058; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Porter, 112 Mo. 361, 20 S. W. 568; Cobb v. Boston, 109 Mass. 444; 2 Lewis, Em. Dom. § 727; Re New York & B. Bridge, 4 N. Y. Supp. 222; New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. Pierce, 35 Hun, 306; Edmonds v. Boston, 108 Mass. 535; Williams v. Com. 168 Mass. 364, 47 N. E. 115; Re New York, W. S. & B. R. Co. 35 Hun, 693; Becker v. Philadelphia & R. Terminal R. Co. 177 Pa. 253, 35 L.R.A. L.R.A.1916D.

583, 35 Atl. 617; Ranlet v. Concord R. Corp. 62 N. H. 561.

In cases where an allowance has been made for the cost of moving personal property or for interruption to business, the decision has been based upon peculiar provisions of the statutes or Constitution, and such decisions recognized that the general rule, in the absence of such provisions, does not allow the recovery of such damages.

Blincoe v. Choctaw, O. & W. R. Co. 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 890, and note, 16 Okla. 286 83 Pac. 903, 8 Ann. Cas. 689.

The Missouri cases which have allowed damages for the removal of property have done so only in those cases where the condemnor would have had to pay the entire value of the property removed, if it were allowed to stay upon the land. In order to reduce the amount of damages, buildings and appurtenances found upon the land condemned may be removed and the cost of removal charged as a proper element of damages.

Hannibal Bridge Co v. Schaubacher, 57 Mo. 582; Chicago, S. F. & C. R. Co. v. McGrew, 104 Mo. 282, 15 S. W. 931; St. Louis v. Brown, 165 Mo. 545, 56 S. W. 298; Kansas City v. Morse, 105 Mo. 511, 16 S. W. 893; St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. v. Clark, 121 Mo. 169, 26 L.R.A. 751, 25 S. W. 192, 906.

These cases do not sustain the proposition that a lessee or owner may recover the cost of the removal of personal property or damages for injury to business.

Springfield Southwestern R. Co. v. Schweitzer, 173 Mo. App. 650, 158 S. W. 1058.

Messrs. Rassieur, Kammerer, & Rassieur, for respondent:

Section 21 of the Bill of Rights protects private property in personalty as fully as it does in real estate.

Chicago, S. F. & C. R. Co. v. McGrew, 104 Mo. 282, 15 S. W. 931; Hannibal Bridge Co. v. Schaubacher, 57 Mo. 582; St. Louis v. Abeln, 170 Mo. 318, 70 S. W. 708; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. United States, 148 U. S. 312, 37 L. ed. 463, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 622.

Under the state Constitution and the provisions of the city charter authorizing condemnation proceedings, the commissioners properly assessed as damages the cost of removing respondent's stock of goods and fixtures, the depreciation in value of its goods and fixtures caused by removal and reinstallation, and the injury to its business caused by the interruption of same during the period of removal.

St. Louis v. Abeln, 170 Mo. 318, 70 S. W. 708; Chicago, S. F. & C. R. Co. v. McGrew, 104 Mo. 282, 15 S. W. 931; Hannibal

Bridge Co. v. Schaubacher, 57 Mo. 582; St. Louis v. Brown, 155 Mo. 545, 56 S. W. 298; Blincoe v. Choctaw, O. & W. R. Co. 16 Okla. 286, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 890, 83 Pac. 903, 8 Ann. Cas. 689; Metropolitan West Side Elev. R. Co. v. Siegel, 161 Ill. 638, 44 N. E. 276; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 47 Mich. 393, 11 N. W. 212; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Weiden, 70 Mich. 390, 38 N. W. 294; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Getz, 113 Pa. 214, 6 Atl. 356; James McMillin Printing Co. v. Pittsburg, C. & W. R. Co. 216 Pa. 504, 65 Atl. 1091.

Faris, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

As forecast, there is no contention made by appellant that respondent as the owner of a lease for a term of years was not entitled to compensation therefor; nor that the amount of damages awarded as the market value of respondent's lease, to wit, $2,700, is unfair or unreasonable. It is only the damages awarded for the three items set out in our statement herein that are in controversy.

I. For convenience of discussion we will consider all items or elements of damages together, except that having to do with the fixtures, which we leave for subsequent separate discussion, since, under the law as we view it, this may be conveniently done. In brief, these elements have to do with the allowance of damages (a) for the removal of the stock of goods of respondent from the right of way taken to a new location and placing them therein; (b) for depreciation in the value of said goods, caused by such removal and reinstallation; and (c) for injury to the business of respondent on account of the interruption or cessation thereof during the period of removal of said stock of goods and fixtures.

When this case was argued, the writer was of the opinion that it ought to be affirmed upon principle, if not upon authority; but, upon coming to examine the authorities, I have been forced to a different view. Coming to the question of authority first, we have had our attention directed to but one case squarely on all fours in favor of the allowance of damages for the expense of removal of personal property from the right of way condemned. That is the case of Blincoe v. Choctaw, O. & W. R. Co. 16 Okla. 286, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 890, 83 Pac. 903, 8 Ann. Cas. 689. In the latter case the question of the allowance of such expenses was squarely before the court, and he whose lease was taken was adjudged entitled to expenses of removing certain personal property, to wit, lumber, from the lands taken. In that case, however, the learned court admitted that the rule in other jurisdictions was contrary to the conclusion reached; but it held that the law in Oklahoma warranted a different holding because of the language of the statute of that state, which in substance required the commission to consider the injury which the owner of the land might sustain, and assess the damages caused him by reason of the appropriation of his lands.

The case of Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Getz, 113 Pa. 214, 6 Atl. 356, is urged upon us as announcing a rule in favor of the contention that damages of the sort here under discussion may be allowed; but that case did not deal with ordinary personal chattels, but apparently with machinery and fixtures. Besides, the Pennsylvania court, in the later case of Becker v. Philadelphia & R. Terminal R. Co. 177 Pa. 252, 35 L.R.A. 583, 35 Atl. 617, held to the contrary, in that they held that it was proper to refuse to allow proof as to the expense of the removal from such land of the personal property of him whose land was being taken, and said that the expense of such removal could not be considered as an element of damages for the condemnation of real estate for public uses.

The case of Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Schneider, 127 Ill. 144, 2 L.R.A. 422, 20 N. E. 41, is urged as an authority for the awarding of damages of the sort here under discussion. But we need not consider whether that case is an authority or not, for the reason that it was distinguished and practically overruled by the later case of Braun v. Metropolitan West Side Elev. R. Co. 166 Ill. 434, 46 N. E. 974. So, we cannot see that respondent's contentions are at all aided by either of the above cases.

The case of Covington Short-Route Transfer R. Co. v. Piel, 87 Ky. 267, 8 S. W. 449, is cited by respondent as an authority for a modicum of the position taken by it. This case seems to an extent to bear out respondent's contention touching the phase of its right to damages for and during the interruption of its business caused by the taking of its property. We need not consider whether this is so or not, nor need we microscopically analyze the latter case, but pass it by, saying merely that it is opposed in its doctrine by the great weight of authority everywhere and in this state as well, and that in reaching the conclusion stated the learned court wholly overlooked and failed to consider the necessarily hypothetical and speculative character of such damages. United States v. Wiener, 127 C. C. A. loc. cit. 385, 210 Fed. 832.

The rule announced by Mr. Lewis, in his excellent work on Eminent Domain, is as follows: "While it is proper to show how the property is used, it is incompetent to go into the profits of the business carried on upon the property. No damages can be allowed for injury to business. The reason is that the Constitution and the statutes, as ordinarily worded, require only that just compensation shall be made for the property taken. Just compensation, as we have already seen, where an entire property is taken, is the market value of the property, and, where a part is taken, it is the value of the part taken and damages to the remainder by the taking and use of the part for the purpose proposed. The business conducted upon the property is not taken, and the owner can remove it to a new location or continue it upon the part of the property which remains. Any incidental loss or inconvenience in business which may result from a removal or change consequent upon the taking must be borne by the owner for the sake of the general good in which he participates. In a few instances, the statute has expressly provided that compensation should be made for injury to business." 2 Lewis, Em. Dom. § 727; Central P. R. Co. v. Pearson, 35 Cal. 247; Pause v. Atlanta, 98 Ga. 92, 58 Am. St. Rep. 290, 26 S. E. 489; Jacksonville & S. E. R. Co. v. Walsh, 106 Ill. 253; Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Dresel, 110 Ill. 89; De Buol v. Freeport & M. River R. Co. 111 Ill. 499; Braun v. Metropolitan West Side Elev. R. Co. 166 Ill. 434, 46 N. E. 974; Cook & R. Co. v. Sanitary Dist. 177 Ill. 699, 62 N. E. 870; Marshall v. Chicago, 77 Ill. App. 351; Sanitary Dist. v. McQuirl, 86 Ill. App. 392; Whitman v. Boston & M. R. Co. 3 Allen, 133; Cobb v. Boston, 109 Mass. 438; Pegler v. Hyde Park, 176 Mass. 101, 57 N. E. 327; Sawyer v. Metropolitan Water Board, 178 Mass. 267, 59 N. E. 658; Bailey v. Boston & P. R. Corp. 182 Mass. 537, 66 N. E. 203; Boston Belting Co. v. Boston, 183 Mass. 254, 67 N. E. 428; Nashua River Paper Co. v. Com. 184 Mass. 279, 68 N. E. 209; St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. v. Knapp-Stout & Co. Co. 160 Mo. 396, 61 S. W. 300; St. Louis, M. & S. E. R. Co. v. Continental Brick Co. 198 Mo. 698, 96 S. W. 1011; Mt. Washington Road Co.'s Petition, 35 N. H. 134; Ranlet v. Concord R. Corp. 62 N. H. 561; Re Public Parks, 53 Hun, 280, 6 N. Y. Supp. 760; Van Buren v. Fishkill & M. Waterworks Co. 50 Hun, 448, 3 N. Y. Supp. 336; Re Grade Crossing, 17 App. Div. 54, 44 N. Y. Supp. 844; Re Gilroy, 26 App. Div. 314, 49 N. Y. Supp. 798; Cincinnati Iron Store Co. v. Cincinnati Southern R. Co. 9 Ohio C. C. N. S. 103, 29 Ohio C. C. 719; Schuykill Nav. Co. v. Farr, 4 Watts & S. 362; Schuykill Nav. Co. v. Thoburn, 7 Serg. & R. 411; Pittsburgh & W. R. Co. v. Patterson, 107 Pa. 461; Hamilton v. Pittsburgh, B. & L. L.R.A. 1916D.

E. R. Co. 190 Pa. 51, 51 L.R.A. 319, 42 Atl. 369; Schonhardt v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 216 Pa. 224, 65 Atl. 543; Porter v. Scranton City, 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 218; Fuller v. Edings, 11 Rich. L. 239; Eddings v. Seabrook, 12 Rich. L. 504; Richmond, P. & C. R. Co. v. Chamblin, 100 Va. 401, 41 S. E. 750; Hunter v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (Fitzhugh v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co.) 107 Va. 158, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 124, 59 S. E. 416; Stadler v. Milwaukee, 34 Wis. 98; Esch v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 72 Wis. 229, 39 N. W. 129; Union S. B. Co. v. Chicago (C. C.) 39 Fed. 723; Biggs v. London, L. R. 15 Eq. 376, 28 L. T. N. S. 336; Reg. v. Vaughan, L. R. 4 Q. B. 190, 38 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 49, 17 Week. Rep. 115.

In the case of Pause v. Atlanta, 98 Ga. 92, 58 Am. St. Rep. 290, 26 S. E. 489, the Georgia supreme court said: "The measure of her damages is the injury to her property which is injuriously affected by the public improvement. In arriving at that damage, neither the profits in the business conducted on the premises, nor the cost to the tenant of fixtures and improvements placed therein, nor the articles purchased for the purpose of enabling the lessee to conduct the business, nor diminution in the value of fixtures, improvements, or articles such as are removed by the lessee, can be recovered as damages; but the increased value of the premises for rent in consequence of the putting in of such fixtures and improvements may properly be considered in computing the damages to the leasehold estate."

The general rule as regards including, as elements of damages, expenses of removal of personal property, as well as that regarding the status of fixtures, below discussed, is thus stated by Mr. Lewis: "Fixtures upon the property taken must be valued and paid for as part of the real estate, and any depreciation in the value of fixtures upon the part not taken is to be taken into consideration, the same as damage to the soil itself. Where a railroad was laid through premises which had been fitted up for a water cure, so as to render it unsuitable for that purpose, it was held that the owner was entitled to the difference between what the fixtures and appurtenances were worth in connection with the property as a water cure (not exceeding their reasonable cost), and what they were worth to be removed from the premises and applied to other purposes. In a case in Pennsylvania it was held proper to show the expense of removal of machinery and fixtures as bearing upon the value of the property as it stood. But the damages to personal property, or the expense of removing it from the premises, cannot be considered in estimating the compensation to be paid. But when both parties proceed upon the theory that the owner is entitled to the cost of removing machinery, the condemning party cannot complain. Where the statute provided that the commissioners should "inspect said real property and consider the injury which such owner may sustain by reason of such railroad; and they shall assess the damages which said owner will sustain by such appropriation of his land," it was held that the words in italics required that compensation should be made for the removal of personal property." 2 Lewis, Em. Dom. § 728, citing Blincoe v. Choctaw, O. & W. R. Co. 16 Okla. 286, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 890, 83 Pac. 903, 8 Ann. Cas. 809, supra.

But this matter has also been before our Missouri courts, and, if we are now to hold that respondent is entitled to damages for the three elements under discussion, we must of necessity overrule two Missouri cases wherein the point involved was squarely lodged, and wherein it was held that no such compensation is allowable under our laws. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. v. Knapp-Stout & Co. 160 Mo. 396, 61 S. W. 300; Springfield Southwestern R. Co. v. Schweitzer, 173 Mo. App. 650, 158 S. W. 1058. In the Knapp-Stout Case, supra, at page 412 of 160 Mo., Judge Gantt, writing the opinion of the court, in defining the measure of damages, and touching the identical question of the allowance of damages of the sort here under discussion, said: "It is the settled law of this court that the measure of compensation and damages in cases in which only a part of a tract is condemned, as in the case at bar, is the market value of the land taken for the right of way, and the damages to the remainder by reason of the railroad running through it, less any benefits that are peculiar to the tract of land arising from the running of the road through it. Mississippi River Bridge Co. v. Ring, 58 Mo. 491; Wyandotte K. C. & N. W. R. Co. v. Waldo, 70 Mo. 629; Kansas City, C. & S. R. Co. v. Story, 96 Mo. 611, 10 S. W. 203; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Baker, 102 Mo. 553, 15 S. W. 64. Injury to business, loss of profits, inconvenience to the owner, damage to personal property, or the expense of removing it, are not to be estimated as distinct elements of damages."

In the very late case ruled by the Springfield court of appeals, practically all of the Missouri cases were examined and discussed, and such of them as seem upon casual glance to oppose the conclusion reached were successfully distinguished. Many of these cases are urged upon us as announcing a different rule, but we do not think they so far announce a different rule when carefully considered, and when the precise point upon which judgment is regarded, as to warrant us in overruling those on all fours; a fortiori, when they but follow the overwhelming weight of the authorities upon these questions everywhere. Since all of these cases have been so lately fully and ably discussed in Springfield Southwestern R. Co. v. Schweitzer, supra, we need not take up space to consider them again.

In the Knapp-Stout Case, supra, precisely the same question was before this court that was before the Oklahoma court in the Blincoe Case, viz., the question of whether he whose land was taken for public uses could recover the expenses necessarily incurred in the removal of personal property from the land, to wit, lumber, lying thereon. In both cases parts of lumber yards were taken, yet we ruled that such expenses were not proper elements of damages.

At first glance, it is to be conceded that there exists a difficulty in finding a reason for not compensating the owner of personal chattels who is compelled to remove them, for his expense in so removing them to a point at least beyond the edge of the right of way. It is equally clear, on the other hand, that no logical reason can be found for compensating him for the expense of removal beyond such point. This is so, for the reason that A might desire to move his chattels only into the next adjoining house, while B might desire to have his taken several blocks or even several miles, and C, on the other hand, his business being broken up, might desire to remove his goods to some other place or city. No reason in logic therefore can be found for the condemner's paying more than is sufficient to move the personal property off the right of way. A rule which would require the condemner to do more would be variant and indefinite, and therefore speculative.

It is obvious that a lessee stands in no better condition touching his right to be compensated for expenses of this sort than does the owner of the fee. In fact, the reasons are more cogent for permitting the owner of the fee to recover as damages expenses of this sort than they are in favor of the lessee, for the lessee may be compelled to move at the end of his term; and, since his occupancy of the premises is founded on contract, it may even be said that the presumption is that he will move. Or if there be no such presumption, or no presumption either way, the lessee is not aided by a discussion of this moving matter, for arguments in his favor in this behalf are founded upon the presumption that he will renew his lease and remain at the end of his term. But as regards the owner whose lands are taken, no requirement exists for his removal at any time, unless he sells the premises,—a contingency too remote for consideration in this connection.

We apprehend that back of the rule against allowing damages of this nature also lie the considerations that loss of profits during removal is necessarily so speculative as to afford as a measure of computation no rule except a mere guess; that likewise, beyond the mere moving of goods to a point just outside the bounds of the right of way condemned, the expenses of removal being variant, damages would be arbitrary and highly speculative, and removal but to a point only just beyond the edge of the right of way would fall into the category de minimis; and that, moreover, the inclusion of expenses of removal of personal property and compensation for loss of profits during removal is merged and included in the price paid for the easement to the owner, or to the lessee, as the case may be. Viewed as a forced purchase by the public for the public good, as a condemnation action is in the last analysis, the latter consideration seems of great weight; for, if he whose land is condemned had voluntarily sold his land to a private purchaser, ordinarily no thought would occur to either one, absent agreement to that end, that the seller should be compensated by the buyer for the removal from the sold premises of mere personal goods and chattels. That one is a voluntary sale, and the other an involuntary sale, does not peculiarly detract from the force of the argument.

But be all these things as may be, the overwhelming weight of authority, both in this state and in all other jurisdictions, is as we hold, and having had other views in the beginning, by reason of the apparent, rather than real, crying inequities in the case, we have yet been compelled to follow the law as it is written both here and elsewhere. To rule otherwise would necessitate the overruling of at least two Missouri cases squarely in point, and of most carefully distinguishing three or four other cases. Chicago, S. F. & C. R. Co. v. McGrew, 104 Mo. 282, 15 S. W. 931; Hannibal Bridge Co. v. Schaubacher, 57 Mo. 582; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Porter, 112 Mo. 361, 20 S. W. 568.

We therefore hold, in consonance with the great weight of authority everywhere, that respondent was not entitled to recover for loss of profits in its business during the removal of its stock of goods; nor for the expense of the removal of its stock of goods and personal property, as contradistinguished from fixtures, from its old location, which was condemned, to a new location; nor for the depreciation in value of such personal property and stock of goods, caused by such removal and reinstallation.

II. What we have said above disposes of a part of the contentions involved in contention 1 supra; that is, to that part of this contention having to do with the cost of the removing of mere personal property and chattels. The other phase of the case mooted in both contentions 1 and 2, viz., that touching the cost of removal of trade fixtures, which we left over for subsequent separate discussion, presents a somewhat different question. We assume, of course, nothing further appearing, that the word "fixtures" is used in its legal and technical sense, and not as a mere mercantile designation applied to chairs, tables, iron safe, et id omne genus.

A fixture appertains to the real estate itself, which real estate to the extent, at least, of an easement therein, is being taken by condemner. We need not enter into any intricate discussion of fixtures (since such a discussion does not belong here) for the reason above given, which is well settled, to wit, that a trade fixture such as is herein involved, and such as was to an extent involved in the case of Hannibal Bridge Co. v. Schaubacher, supra, is a part of the realty; and since it passes ordinarily, as between vendor and vendee, upon a voluntary sale, we see no reason why it should not pass to the condemner upon an involuntary transfer, such as this is. We find nothing in the Missouri cases, nor in the cases from other jurisdictions, which seriously militates against this view. Those mentioned below sustain it. It seems to be right on principle; to do full justice and afford full compensation.

In passing we may say, arguendo, that the view that the owner should be compensated for the expense of tearing out, moving, and reinstalling fixtures in another location, has much of logical cogency. But it seems out of consonance with our own rulings, and subject to the objection that the expense of carriage from the old to the new location would be speculative, and so, having reached a view which affords full compensation for the injury done, we hesitate to overrule our former holdings. Many of the cases from other jurisdictions which have been urged upon us as sustaining all of respondent's contentions are cases which allowed compensation for removing and reinstalling fixtures, and ruling that such compensation was permissible. This for the reason that if the owner of the land or lease condemned take such fixtures off the hands of the condemner, who ordinarily does not want them, thus minimizing the damages accruing, both the owner and the condemner ought to be held to the rule that their reciprocal duty toward each other is to so act as not unduly to augment the damages arising from the appropriation of the land.

In a very late case, decided in the United States circuit court of appeals for the second district, it was held that an award in a condemnation proceeding for the value of certain trade fixtures, to wit, machinery of an engraving plant, was proper; the court holding that, in condemnation proceedings where the land is taken in invitum, the rule which obtains as to such fixtures is analogous to that between vendor and vendee, and not that between landlord and tenant. United States v. Wiener, 127 C. C. A. 382, 210 Fed. 832. In the latter case the court quoted with approval what was said in Re Avenue A, 66 Misc. 488, 122 N. Y. Supp. 321, wherein it was ruled: "The city took the entire buildings as they stood, including the trade fixtures therein, and for the purposes of this proceeding they must all be regarded as real property; that is, as between the tenant and the city, the trade fixtures were real property and must be paid for by the city the same as a building, and the tenant was under no more obligation to remove them than he would be to remove a building if he were the owner. As between the tenant and the owner, however, the trade fixtures were personalty, and could be removed, and therefore any award made for them would go to the tenant."

In the above case of United States v. Wiener, the court, upon the other phases of this case discussed supra, says: "There seems to be no authority for an allowance for the removal of the business as distinguished from the plant and machinery. The district court allowed $2,500 as damages which may result from the change of location. This was based upon hypothesis and speculation, and we are unable to find any controlling authority to support the award."

Since houses, which are but fixtures to real estate, pass to condemner (Kansas City v. Morse, 105 Mo. loc. cit. 519, 16 S. W. 893), and since trade fixtures, under the vendor and vendee rule, would pass to the buyer, they pass here to the condemner, and it must pay for them. Respondent, absent an election on its part and consent of the city to that end, could not take fixtures which the city had condemned, nor obtain as damages pay for moving property which by condemnation became that of the city. Ibid. Springfield Southwestern R. Co. v. Schweitzer, 173 Mo. App. 650, 158 S. W. 1058.

It follows from all this that respondent was entitled to be paid the reasonable market value of its fixtures (contradistinguished from mere goods and chattels) which were contained in, and affixed to, the leased premises condemned. But the apparent present status of the instant case causes us to further rule that, if appellant does not want these fixtures, and respondent elects, or has elected, to take them (or, as seems probable, has already taken them), then damages which appellant will be held to pay as such value of them should be recouped to the extent of their reasonable market value, as they stood in their old location, when confronted, however, as diminishing such value, by the necessity of immediately tearing them out and reinstalling them elsewhere.

Upon the other phases of the case, and to the extent last discussed upon the latter one, we are of the opinion that the court erred, and that for such error this case must be reversed and remanded, to be retried in such wise as is not inconsistent with the views herein expressed. Let this be done.

All concur.

Petitions for rehearing and to transfer to the court in banc denied February 14, 1916.

Annotation—Injury to, or expense of removing, personalty, as an element of damage for taking real estate.

This annotation is supplementary to the note to Blincoe v. Choctaw, O. & W. R. Co. 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 890.

As to the right to compensation for fixtures in a building taken, see note to Jackson v. State, L.R.A.1915D, 492.

For loss of profits from suspension of business while moving, as an element of damage in eminent domain, see note to Fitzhugh v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 124. L.R.A.1916D.

Among the later decisions, it has been held, in accord with the general rule as stated in the earlier note, that depreciation in the value of personal property located on real estate taken for a public purpose, due to the taking, or the cost of removing it therefrom, cannot be considered in estimating the compensation to be paid. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Anderson (1908) 88 Ark. 129, 113 S. W. 1030, 16 Ann. Cas. 784; and see St.

LOUIS v. ST. LOUIS, I. M. & S. R. Co. ante, 713.

At least, the cost of removing personal property from premises condemned for a public use is not a distinct element of the compensation payable. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. v. Knapp-Stout & Co. Co. (1900) 160 Mo. 396, 61 S. W. 300; Central P. R. Co. v. Pearson (1868) 35 Cal. 247; Re New York, W. S. & B. R. Co. (1885) 35 Hun (N. Y.) 633.

And, as stated in St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. v. Knapp-Stout & Co. Co. (Mo.) supra, "damage to personal property or the expense of removing it are not to be estimated as distinct elements of damages," upon the condemnation of land for a railroad right of way.

So, a tenant of property taken under condemnation proceedings, with a lease three years yet to run, cannot recover compensation for the cost of removing his personal property from the condemned premises to a new location. "The reasons for not allowing this damage are (1) that the tenant would have to move anyhow, and this is one of the encumbrances attaching to the act of placing personal property on leased premises; (2) it is not within the language of the Constitution,—that the expense of moving it is neither a taking nor a damaging of the property; and (3) that a verdict would necessarily be based upon conjecture, as one tenant might locate his personal property within a few feet or a few yards or a few blocks of the place from which it is removed; another might move it a mile distant (as in this case), and another might go still farther. The cost of removal would apparently differ greatly. As our supreme court has ruled in no uncertain terms that the expense of removing personal property from condemned premises cannot be recovered by the owner of such personal property, it is our plain duty to follow that ruling." Springfield Southwestern R. Co. v. Schweitzer (1913) 173 Mo. App. 650, 158 S. W. 1058.

And a tenant of real estate taken under the right of eminent domain, whose lease expired shortly after the time when he was compelled to leave the premises by reason of the taking thereof, is not entitled to recover, as an element of damages caused by the taking, the expenses of removing his property to a new place of business, as he "would have had to leave the premises [upon the expiration of the lease] and could have recovered nothing for being forced to do so." L.R.A.1916D.

Emery v. Boston Terminal Co. (1901) 178 Mass. 172, 86 Am. St. Rep. 473, 59 N. E. 763.

But in Springfield Southwestern R. Co. v. Schweitzer (Mo.) supra, it was held that a tenant of condemned real estate is entitled to recover for the damages sustained by his personal property in moving, from breakage and deterioration. The court said: "It became necessary for the tenant to remove the machinery and property, and if it could not be moved without being damaged the tenant should be paid for such damage as ensued, because it is expressly provided by our Constitution that property shall not be taken or damaged without just compensation."

In James McMillin Printing Co. v. Pittsburg, C. & W. R. Co. (1907) 216 Pa. 504, 65 Atl. 1091, which was an action against a railroad company by a subtenant of property taken by it in the construction of its road, to recover the loss sustained by the taking, which action had been tried by both sides on the theory that there could be a recovery of the reasonable cost of removing the plaintiff's personal property from the premises taken, in addition to the value of the lease,—the defendant itself having requested an instruction that, there being no evidence of the value of the unexpired term of the lease, the measure of damages was the actual amount shown to have been expended in the removal of the property, and that the verdict should be limited to that amount,—the court, holding that, under these circumstances, the defendant could not, on appeal, complain of the fact that the cost of removing the personalty was submitted as a distinct item for which there could be a recovery, and not merely as evidence of the value of the right of which the plaintiff was deprived, said: "Market value is an unsatisfactory test of the value to a tenant of a leasehold interest. It is really no test at all, because a lease rarely has any market value. Generally it is not assignable at the will of the tenant, and he pays in rent all that the right of occupation is worth. The right of which he is deprived, and for which he is entitled to full compensation, is the right to remain in undisturbed possession to the end of the term. The loss resulting from the deprivation of this right is what he is entitled to recover. The value of the right he is forced to sell cannot ordinarily be measured by its market price, for there is no market for it; nor can it always be measured by the difference between the rent reserved and the rental value if the lease should be a favorable one. If, as was the case here, a tenant engaged in a business requiring the use of heavy machinery and appliances should secure a new place equally well adapted to his business and at the same rent, he would still be at the expense of removal and at a loss because of the stoppage of his business. These are matters to be considered in connection with others, not as substantive elements of damage, but as tending to prove the value of the leasehold interest."

And in North Coast R. Co. v. Kraft Co. (1911) 63 Wash. 250, 115 Pac. 97, which was an action by a public service corporation against the lessee of a building which it had purchased for railroad purposes, to condemn the leasehold interest, it was held that evidence showing the expense of moving the lessee's personal property to a new place of business, and the damages to the same resulting from the removal, "was admissible, not as a basis for a specific claim, but as showing the value of the unexpired term," the court further saying: "'Damages,' in law, means an adequate compensation for the loss suffered or the injury sustained. The rule itself is well settled and simple of statement, but its application is often attended with difficulty on account of the great diversity of circumstances surrounding different cases where the principle is sought to be applied. As was said in Seattle & M. R. Co. v. Scheike (1892) 3 Wash. 625, 29 Pac. 217, 30 Pac. 503: 'It is difficult, if not impossible, to lay down a rule of universal application as to what may be considered as elements of damage, as the equities of the parties must more or less depend upon the particular facts and circumstances of each case.' This is particularly true as applied to a leasehold which may have no market value in excess of the rent reserved. The appellant is entitled to be paid the value of the unexpired term. The items under consideration are but constituent elements of that value. In principle, and according to what we consider the better authority, they are not recoverable as something apart from the leasehold interest. They form an essential part of its value."

Under a constitutional provision forbidding the legislature to enact any law "whereby property shall be taken or damaged for public uses without just compensation," and a statutory provision in accordance therewith, that in condemnation proceedings commissioners must be appointed "to ascertain what will be a just compensation for the land or other property, or for the interest or estate therein, proposed to be condemned for its uses, and to award the damages, if any, resulting to the adjacent or other property of the owner, or to the property of any other person," etc.,—it has been held that the expense to the tenant of land used for the storage of lumber, of which land a strip had been taken for widening a street, of removing the lumber piled upon the strip taken, and of removing and replacing his fences, should be allowed as an element of his just compensation. Richmond v. Williams (1913) 114 Va. 698, 77 S. E. 492.

Similarly, in St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Capps (1872) 67 Ill. 607, which was an action on the case for damages for the construction of a railroad in a public street in front of the plaintiff's place of business, under a city ordinance requiring the railroad company to pay for "all damages that may accrue to the property owners on said Main street by reason of the construction of said railroad," the court said: "Appellee is entitled to damages for interruption to his business during such time as would have been necessarily employed in accommodating himself to another place of business equally eligible, and his removal thereto. . . . The necessary reasonable expenses attending the removal will be an element of damage. It cannot be permitted appellee to remain in that locality transacting business at a loss, in order to make appellants chargeable therefor in the shape of damages."

And in Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Hock (1886) 118 Ill. 587, 9 N. E. 205, which was a condemnation proceeding, the court said: "The inconvenience and cost of removal of the business from the premises condemned are mentioned as elements of damages proper for consideration. This, however, is in harmony with the ruling in St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Capps (Ill.) supra."

In Re Briggs Ave. (1909) 196 N. Y. 255, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 273, 89 N. E. 814, 17 Ann. Cas. 1032, which was an appeal in a proceeding for the opening and widening of a street, in which the appellant sought to recover the value of a building which the city had previously taken and paid for in another street opening proceeding, and which he had purchased at auction and moved, in bad faith, onto the land sought to be acquired by the city in this proceeding,—the appellant having been awarded, for the building, only the amount which it would cost him to move it off the strip of land taken in this proceeding, together with all other expenses incidental to the moving,—the court, holding that the appellant could not recover the value of the building, because, under the circumstances, it retained its character as personal property, said: "The municipality in this case does not seek to condemn the building except as it is a part of the real property necessary to be taken by it. As personal property the owner can remove it from the premises. Just compensation to the owner of the lands taken does not require that such building so moved upon such lands shall be used to enhance the damages to be paid to him. Such a building so planted should be treated as personal property and the damages awarded accordingly. The appellant should not complain of the award made to him by the commissioners."

It will be noted, however, that the award in this case was not based upon a right to recover the expense of removal, but was merely the just compensation required by statute for the property taken, which compensation, under the circumstances of this case, was fixed at the cost of removing the building, that cost being less than the market value of the building as real estate. A. C. W.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

B. F. DAVIS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

P. A. JANEWAY, Admr., etc., of W. H. Jacobs, Deceased, et al.

(— Okla. —, 155 Pac. 241.)

Contract—to move postoffice—validity.

Plaintiff's grantor and defendant's assignor entered into a written contract. The object sought was to move the postoffice from one location to another (lot 11, block 11), and to maintain or cause it to be maintained at the latter place for five years, and to accomplish the object defendant D.'s assignor, M., was to use his influence, and such influence as he could bring to bear upon the Department, to procure the removal, and in payment therefor the plaintiff J.'s grantor, R., was to pay $5 per month for five years. A lien was given by R. on lot 14, block 11, to secure the payment. Held: (a) That plaintiff's petition to cancel the lien contract, showing the above state of facts, did not state a cause of action, and the court erred in overruling the demurrer thereto. (b) That the contract was void as against public policy and good morals. (c) That the plaintiff took the land encumbered with the apparent lien with full knowledge of all that has transpired, and, having declared on the contract, was in pari delicto with the defendant, and it was the duty of the court to have sustained the demurrer and dismissed the petition without further relief to either party. For other cases, see Contracts, III. c. 4; III. g. 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(January 1, 1916.)

Headnote by WATTS, C.

Note.—For contract as to location of public buildings, see annotation following this case, post, 727. L.R.A.1916D.

ERROR to the District Court for Washita County to review a judgment overruling a demurrer to a petition filed for the cancelation of a lien contract and for the quieting of plaintiff's title to certain real estate as against any claims of defendants. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Mr. A. E. Pearson, for plaintiff in error:

The presumption is always in favor of assuming that people enter into contracts for legitimate purposes, and legitimate purposes only. And to assume the contract which is sued on in this case was entered into for unlawful purposes, for the purpose of accomplishing an end that was against public policy, is entirely out of harmony with the law.

Kling v. Fries, 33 Mich. 275; Curtis v. Gokey, 68 N. Y. 300; Lorillard v. Clyde, 86 N. Y. 384; 2 Elliott, Contr. § 650; Fearnley v. De Mainville, 5 Colo. App. 441, 39 Pac. 73; Bryan v. Dyer, 28 Ill. 188.

If said contract is contrary to public policy, plaintiff is not entitled to the relief asked for in his petition.

9 Cyc. 546; Holman v. Johnson, Cowp. pt. 1, p. 341; Edwards v. Randle, 63 Ark. 318, 36 L.R.A. 174, 58 Am. St. Rep. 108, 38 S. W. 343; Cohn v. Heimbauch, 86 Wis. 176, 56 N. W. 638; St. Louis, J. & C. R. Co. v. Mathers, 71 Ill. 592, 22 Am. Rep. 122.

Messrs. Massingale & Duff, for defendants in error:

The contract, a copy of which is identified as exhibit "A" to the plaintiff's petition in the trial court, is void as against public policy.

Hare v. Phaup, 23 Okla. 575, 138 Am. St. Rep. 852, 101 Pac. 1050; Woodman v. Innes, 47 Kan. 26, 27 Am. St. Rep. 274, 27

Pac. 125; Molacek v. White, 31 Okla. 693, 122 Pac. 523; Enid Right of Way & Townsite Co. v. Lile, 15 Okla. 317, 82 Pac. 810; Elkhart County Lodge v. Crary, 98 Ind. 238, 49 Am. Rep. 746; Filson v. Himes, 5 Pa. 452, 47 Am. Dec. 422; Meguire v. Corwine, 101 U. S. 108, 25 L. ed. 899; Providence Tool Co. v. Norris, 2 Wall. 45, 17 L. ed. 868.

Plaintiff is absolutely innocent of any wrongdoing, and his administrator is in a position to assail the invalidity of this contract.

6 R. C. L., p. 215.

Watts, C., filed the following opinion:

W. H. Jacobs, defendant in error, plaintiff below, sued B. F. Davis and W. A. McAtee in district court, Washita county. Jacobs died pending litigation, and the case has been revived in the name of P. A. Janeway, administrator, and W. A. McAtee. Defendant Davis filed a general demurrer to the petition, which was overruled. He declined to plead further, gave notice, and appeals. The petition charges:

"Comes W. H. Jacobs, the plaintiff herein, and for cause of action against said defendants states:

"That he is the owner and is in possession of lot 14 in block 11 in the town of Sentinel, in Washita county, Oklahoma; that said defendants claim some interest in said property adverse to this plaintiff; that as near as plaintiff is able to state, the nature of their claim is as follows: That on the 19th day of August, 1910, one C. T. Reese, who was on said day the owner of said lot, and who has since conveyed the same to this plaintiff by warranty deed, entered into a contract with defendant W. A. McAtee, said contract purporting to grant a lien upon said lot for the sum of $300, payable at the rate of $5 per month; that said instrument was acknowledged and filed for record, and was recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Washita county, Oklahoma, on the 10th day of September, 1910, at page 632 of Book 5 of Miscellaneous Records of said office. A copy of said instrument, with the indorsements thereon, is hereto attached, marked for identification Exhibit A, and made a part of this petition.

"That the sole and only consideration for said contract was the undertaking on the part of the said McAtee to procure the removal of the United States postoffice in Sentinel, Oklahoma, from the location where it then existed to lot 11 in block 11 in Sentinel, Oklahoma, and the further agreement that said McAtee would maintain or cause said postoffice to be maintained on the said lot 11 in block 11 in said L.R.A.1916D.

town for said period of five years described in said contract. Said McAtee was to and did use his influence, and such influence as he could bring to bear upon the Department of the Interior of the United States, to procure the removal of said postoffice to said location, all of which was against public policy and illegal, and said contract based upon said consideration is also void and against public policy, and is illegal and unenforceable. Defendant B. F. Davis claims to have some interest in said contract or to be the owner by assignment, and this plaintiff makes him a party to this suit in order that he may set forth such interest as he may claim, and in order that the court may adjudicate and determine the validity of said contract.

"That said contract constitutes a cloud upon the title to this plaintiff's property, and should be canceled and held for naught, and plaintiff's title quieted as against the same for the reason that said contract is wholly void; that plaintiff has no adequate remedy at law,"—praying cancellation of the contract, that his title be quieted, and for costs.

Exhibit A is the written contract between McAtee and C. T. Reese, and is as follows:

Sentinel, Oklahoma, August 1, 1910.

Made this 1st day of August, 1910, between C. T. Reese, of the first part, and W. A. McAtee or order, party of the second part, witnesseth: That the said party of the first part agrees to pay to the said second party or order the sum of five dollars ($5) per month for value received beginning August 1, 1910, and continuing for five years from the date of beginning. It is further agreed and fully understood that this agreement and contract shall be a lien on the following realty in Sentinel, Washita county, Oklahoma: All of lot fourteen (14) in block eleven (11) in Sentinel, Washita county, Oklahoma. It is further agreed and fully understood that in the event the government removes the Sentinel postoffice from lot eleven in block eleven, Sentinel, Oklahoma, that this contract shall be null and void. It is mutually agreed and understood that the covenants and agreements herein contained shall be obligatory upon our heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the said first party and the said second party.

In witness whereof the first parties of the contract have hereunto set their respective hands this 19th day of August, A. D., 1910.

C. T. Reese.

Counsel for defendants in his brief says lot 11, block 11, at the time mentioned in the petition and contract, belonged to Reese, and subsequently was conveyed to defendant Davis.

The question for decision is: Does the petition state a cause of action? This proposition depends on whether: First, the contract viewed in the light of the petition is void; second, if void between the makers, are the assignee of the postoffice contract and grantee of lot 14, block 11, in pari delicto?

Snyder's Comp. Laws 1909 provide:

"Section 1077. . . . The consideration of a contract must be lawful within the meaning of § 1123."

"Section 1123. What is Unlawful.—That is not lawful which is: 1. Contrary to an express provision of law. 2. Contrary to the policy of express law, though not expressly prohibited; or, 3. Otherwise contrary to good morals."

In Pom. Eq. Jur., vol. 2 (3d ed.), we find:

"Section 935. Contracts affecting public relations.—Contracts made for the purpose of unduly controlling or affecting official conduct, or the exercise of legislative, administrative, and judicial functions, are plainly opposed to public policy. They strike at the very foundations of government, and tend to destroy that confidence in the integrity and discretion of public official action which is essential to the preservation of civilized society. The principle is universal, and is applied without any reference to the mere outward form and alleged purpose of the transaction. If a contract does unduly interfere with governmental functions, or with the relations of the citizen towards his own government in any of its departments, whether the interference be direct or indirect, such agreement is illegal, whatever form it may have assumed. . . .

"Contracts interfering with executive proceedings:—These are subject to the same general rules which apply to similar agreements concerning legislation. All agreements, whether made with officials or with third persons, which directly or indirectly control or interfere with the due exercise of executive and administrative functions as prescribed or regulated by law, are clearly illegal."

In Houlton v. Nichol, 93 Wis. 393, 33 L.R.A. 166, 57 Am. St. Rep. 928, 67 N. W. 715, it is said: "All agreements which tend to introduce personal influence and solicitation as elements in procuring and influencing legislative action or action by any department of the government are contrary to sound morals, lead to inefficiency in the public service, and come under the condemnation of the rule here under consideration."

L.R.A.1916D.

In 6 R. C. L. § 152, p. 747, it is said: "Moreover, it has been said that any contract made for the purpose of securing the location of a public office, such as a postoffice, in any certain part of a city or elsewhere, or which prevents, or tends to prevent, the change or removal of such office, when the necessities of business or the interest of the public demands such change or removal, is opposed to public policy, and void, as tending to the injury of the public service, and as subordinating the public welfare to individual convenience or gain. It is true that there is some authority for the view that where it does not appear that improper means were adopted or personal influence used, a contract relating to the location of a public building may be upheld notwithstanding the fact that it is susceptible of the interpretation that personal influence was to be used. But in reaching this conclusion there has evidently been a failure to take into consideration the rule approved by the weight of judicial opinion that contracts of this character are not void because of the conclusion that corruption and wrongdoing and undue influence would be the certain result thereof, but on account of the recognition of the corrupting tendencies of such contracts."

In Elkhart County Lodge v. Crary, 98 Ind. 238, 49 Am. Rep. 746, we find a case in principle very much like the one at bar. The syllabus is as follows: "Contracts—public policy—constructive fraud.—An owner of adjacent property entered into a combination with others and agreed with the owners of a building in a city, if they would offer their building to the government for a nominal rent, to be used as a postoffice for ten years, and use their personal influence and 'proper persuasion' to secure its acceptance, the former would, in case of success, pay the latter a certain sum annually for ten years. The location was chosen and leased accordingly, one of the owners of the building, who was a personal friend of the Postmaster General, having truthfully represented to him that the location was suitable; and their notes were given for the annual instalments. Held, that the consideration of the notes was illegal; the agreement being against public policy, and therefore void."

In commenting upon the moral tendency of such a contract, the court said:

"The material deduction of fact from these subsidiary facts is that the parties formed a combination for the purpose of securing the location of a public office, and as part of the plan the appellants undertook that certain individuals of their number should use their influence with the government officers to effect the purpose of the combination, and that the agreement to pay for such services was contingent upon the success of the scheme. It has long been established that a contract against public policy will not be enforced. This principle is firmly fixed and has often been applied to contracts. There can therefore be no doubt as to the existence of the rule. The only question is as to its applicability to the facts of this case. Where the general public has an interest in the location of an office, a railroad station, or the like, a contract to secure its location at a particular place is held to be against public policy, and not enforceable. . . .

"There are many phases of injury to the public service, and we do not deem it necessary to examine the cases upon the subject, for we think it quite clear that a contract which is made for the purpose of securing the location of an important office connected with the public service, for individual benefit, rather than for the public good, tends to the injury of the public service. The case made by the evidence falls fully within the principle that contracts which tend to improperly influence those engaged in the public service, or which tend to subordinate the public welfare to individual gain, are not enforceable in any court of justice. Pollock, Contr. 279; Anson, Contr. 175; 1 Whart. Contr. §§ 402-414, inclusive. A wholesome rule of law is that parties should not be permitted to make contracts which are likely to set private interests in opposition to public duty or to the public welfare. . . .

"It is not necessary that actual fraud should be shown; for a contract which tends to the injury of the public service is void, although the parties entered into it honestly and proceeded under it in good faith. The courts do not inquire into the motives of the parties in the particular case to ascertain whether they were corrupt or not, but stop when it is ascertained that the contract is one which is opposed to public policy. Nor is it necessary to show that any evil was, in fact, done by or through the contract. The purpose of the rule is to prevent persons from assuming a position where selfish motives may impel them to sacrifice the public good to private benefit. An English author says: 'But an agreement which has an apparent tendency that way, though an intention to use unlawful means be not admitted, or even be nominally disclaimed, will equally be held void.' Pollock, Contr. 286. In the case of Providence Tool Co. v. Norris, 2 Wall. 45, 17 L. ed. 868, the court said: 'All agreements for pecuniary considerations to control the business operations of the government, or the regular administration of justice, or the appointments to public offices, or the ordinary course of legislation, are void as against public policy, without reference to the question whether improper means are contemplated or used in their execution. The law looks to the general tendency of such agreements; and it closes the door to temptation, by refusing them recognition in any of the courts of the country.' . . .

"The contract before us has two infirmities,—one of an agreement for the use of personal influence, and another of an agreement for compensation dependent upon the contingency of success. That we are correct in saying that the agreement is dependent upon a contingency is shown by the fact that the consideration became payable only in the event that the postoffice was located and maintained in appellant's building."

We have quoted extensively from the above case, because, in our mind, the contract as reflected by the allegations in the petition brings it clearly within the rule therein announced, and it answers most all of the contentions made by counsel.

In the case at bar the object sought was to move the postoffice from one location to another (lot 11, block 11), and to maintain or cause it to be maintained at the latter place for five years, and to accomplish the object defendant Davis's assignor, McAtee, was to use his influence, and such influence as he could bring to bear upon the Department, to procure the removal, and in payment therefor Jacob's grantor, Reese, was to pay $5 per month for five years, with a provision that, if the government removed the postoffice from the place last mentioned, then the contract to become null and void.

We think the cases very analogous. In the former, one was to tender his building for a nominal rent for ten years and use "personal influence" and "proper persuasion" to secure an acceptance, and in case of success the other was to pay $5 per month for the term of years. In the latter, one was to procure the removal of and maintain in his own building a postoffice, and use "his own" and such "influence" as he could bring to bear upon the Department to procure the removal, and in the event of success the other was to pay $5 per month for five years. It seems to us for all practical intention and purpose the contracts are substantially the same. This class of contracts we think void as against public policy and good morals. The original parties may not have intended to do any wrong, and the removal of the postoffice, no doubt, was financially a benefit to them, but a great injustice may have been perpetrated on the public and the administrative department of the government; but in such cases one has no right to exchange his "personal influence," etc., for a consideration, and agree to do or have done a thing in which the administrative welfare of the public is concerned, and, when the quid pro quo is thus, a court of equity will not pause to inquire. Spence v. Harvey, 22 Cal. 337, 83 Am. Dec. 69. The law frowns on such dealings, because public interest is not a subject of barter and sale, and, as the law views it, it is better not only to shun evil, but the very appearance of evil. We do not mean, however, to hold that in no instance can a valid contract be made compensating one by contribution or other valid consideration for the use of his property when let to the postoffice department for a minimum rent, but where, like the case at bar, the trick is by "influence," etc., the court will supply that which is left for inference and hold the contract invalid.

In Hare v. Phaup, 23 Okla. 576, 138 Am. St. Rep. 852, 101 Pac. 1050, Dunn, J., distinguished the cases cited therein as well as herein, Fearnley v. De Mainville, 5 Colo. App. 441, 39 Pac. 73, and Bryan v. Dyer, 28 Ill. 188, and discussed and refused to follow Beal v. Polhemus, 67 Mich. 130, 34 N. W. 532.

In Edwards v. Goldsboro, 141 N. C. 60, 53 S. E. 652, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 589, note, 8 Ann. Cas. 479, most of the cases cited herein and many others are coalited and classified and for sake of brevity reference is made thereto.

2. Having held that the contract was void between the makers, it follows that such invalidity continues in the hands of the assignee. But counsel for defendant says: Are the assignee of the postoffice contract and grantee of lot 14 in block 11 in pari delicto? In this case, yes. Plaintiff took the land encumbered with the apparent lien, and in accordance with the allegations of his petition with full knowledge of all that had transpired, and it is therefore a privy in this sense. Besides, he declared in his petition on the contract. If a court of equity in such instances could relieve plaintiff, it could as easily relieve his vendor. Unless the impurity of the contract contaminates all who declare and take under it, the purpose of the law fails, and in such instances one in pari delicto could one minute transgress the law with impunity, and in the next convey his property and be forgiven, a complete ruse whereby a court of equity would punish one and help the other. Under the state of pleadings and facts we think the sins of Reese were visited on Jacobs. Neither party was entitled to relief.

L.R.A.1916D.

In 9 Cyc. 546, it is said: "No principle of law is better settled than that a party to an illegal contract cannot come into a court of law and ask to have his illegal objects carried out; nor can he set up a case in which he must necessarily disclose an illegal purpose as the groundwork of his claim. The rule is expressed in the maxims, 'Ex dolo malo non oritur actio,' and 'In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis.' The law, in short, will not aid either party to an illegal agreement; it leaves the parties where it finds them. Therefore neither a court of law nor a court of equity will aid the one in enforcing it, or give damages for a breach of it, or set it aside at the suit of the other, or, when the agreement has been executed in whole or in part by the payment of money or the transfer of other property, lend its aid to recover it back."

See also Edwards v. Boyle, 37 Okla. 639, 133 Pac. 233.

In Garrison v. Burns, 98 Ga. 762, 26 S. E. 471: "It has been held that it makes no difference whether the illegality of the transaction is made to appear by the plaintiff or by the defendant. See Howell v. Fountain, 3 Ga. 182, 46 Am. Dec. 415, where the following language of Lord Mansfield, in Holman v. Johnson, Cowp. Pt. 1, p. 343, is approved as a correct expression of the law on this subject: 'If from the plaintiff's own statement, or otherwise, the cause of action appears to arise ex turpi causa, or from the transgression of a positive law of this country, then the court says he has no right to be assisted.' In this connection consult also Bugg v. Towner, 41 Ga. 318; Heineman v. Newman, 55 Ga. 262, 21 Am. Rep. 279; Tompkins v. Compton, 93 Ga. 525, 21 S. E. 79. It would seem that the general rule deducible from all the authorities is as stated in Clark, Contr. 491, viz.: 'That the court will not lend its aid to a party who, as the ground of his claim, must disclose an illegal transaction.' We understand this to mean that, whenever either party has to rely upon a contract which is, in fact, illegal, the other party may, in avoidance of it, show its illegality. The plaintiff in the present case does not, it is true, rely on the contract. On the contrary, he seeks to rescind it. But he had to bring it to light, and in making out his case disclose its real nature; and, as it was an executed contract, this gave the defendant the right to invoke the rule that the court should leave them where it found them."

We are of the opinion that the trial court erred in overruling defendant's demurrer, and should have sustained same, dismissed the petition, and denied further relief to either party. We therefore recommend that the judgment of the trial court be reversed, and that it be directed to sustain the demurrer and dismiss the petition.

Per Curiam:
Adopted in whole.

Petition for rehearing denied February 29, 1916.

Annotation—Contract as to location of public buildings.

The earlier cases on this question are considered in a note to Edwards v. Goldsboro (1906) 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 589, of which the present annotation is supplementary.

Generally, as to validity of contract to procure legislative action, see notes to Houlton v. Dunn, 30 L.R.A. 737, and Stroemer v. Van Orsdel, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 212.

As to validity of an agreement by which compensation is dependent upon success in procuring a contract with public officer or board, see notes to Kansas City Paper House v. Foley R. Printing Co. 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) 747, and Hyland v. Oregon Hassam Paving Co. L.R.A.1915C, 823.

A contract by a postmaster, for a consideration, to locate the postoffice in a certain building, is void as contrary to public policy. Benson v. Bawden (1907) 149 Mich. 584, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 721, 113 N. W. 20.

The assignee of the equipment of a postoffice, which the owner had previously assigned to the postmaster in consideration of his locating the office in a certain building, cannot maintain trover for its value, against the postmaster, since the prior contract of assignment is void and the parties are in pari delicto. (Mich.) Ibid.

In an action to recover back post-office equipment which the owner had assigned to the postmaster in consideration of the location of the office in a certain building, it is not error to admit in evidence the contract showing the assignment and the consideration. (Mich.) Ibid.

A contract to pay for services and expenses incurred in procuring the establishment of a postoffice in a particular location in a city, the payments to continue so long as the postoffice is maintained there, not to exceed ten years, is contrary to public policy and void. Hare v. Phaup (1909) 23 Okla. 575, 138 Am. St. Rep. 852, 101 Pac. 1050.

And a contract contemplating the establishment and maintenance of a post-office at a certain place for the private advantage of the signers thereof, as contradistinguished from the interest of the general public, and providing that certain payments should be made contingent upon the accomplishment of such purpose, is contrary to the public policy of this state and void. Whitaker v. First Nat. Bank (1916) — Okla. —, 155 Pac. 1175.

But it has been held that a contract to influence government officials to purchase certain property as a postoffice site is not necessarily void. Bush v. Russell (1913) 180 Ala. 590, 61 So. 373. The court said: "To 'lobby' with department officials for a contract, as alleged in those pleas, does not necessarily imply corruption, but it carries nevertheless a certain commonly understood suggestion of sinister purposes. It does imply a form of personal solicitation which tends to corruption, and is for that reason forbidden. But 'influence' is a much broader term. Standing alone, its moral and ethical implications are indifferent. They may be good or bad. The methods of influence may be legitimate or illegitimate. To say, then, that plaintiff promised 'to influence' the officers of the government, without more, meant nothing. An intention to violate law or morals is not to be presumed."

And such a contract is not to be condemned because of a stipulation for compensation contingent upon the success of the undertaking. Bush v. Russell (Ala.) Ibid.

The rule is well settled that, if a public institution must be located or structure built, private contributions on condition that a particular location is selected are not against public policy. Currier v. United States (1910) 106 C. A. 654, 184 Fed. 700.

So, it was no ground for objection to the selection of a site for a postoffice building that the Secretary of the Treasury was induced to choose it by an agreement of the neighboring property owners to pay the cost thereof in excess of the sum appropriated by Congress, there being no claim that the Secretary was not wholly free from any influence, save his judgment of the suitability of the location and the donations towards its cost. (Fed.) Ibid. W. W. A.

UTAH SUPREME COURT.

WILLIAM B. HUGHES PRODUCE COMPANY, Resp't.,
v.

GEORGE H. PULLEY, Appt.

(— Utah, —, 155 Pac. 337.)

Sale — potatoes — furnishing of sacks — condition precedent.

1. The furnishing of the sacking is a condition precedent to performance of a contract to deliver a certain quantity of potatoes f. o. b. at a certain place, sacks to be furnished by buyer.

For other cases, see Contracts, IV. d, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — delay in demanding performance — effect.

2. A purchaser of potatoes to be delivered in sacks to be furnished by him, f. o. b. at a certain place within thirty days of the execution of the contract, cannot hold the seller for breach of the contract, where performance is refused upon his demand therefor sixty-eight days after such execution. For other cases, see Sale II. a, in Dig 1-52 N. S.

(February 8, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Utah County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for breach of a contract for the sale of potatoes. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. W. N. Whitecotton, for appellant:

Where acts to be performed by the parties to a contract are mutual and dependent, or where the existence of a right in one claiming it depends upon the performance of duties on his part, as by the payment of money or delivery of goods, tender of performance by him is necessary to enable him to enforce the right.

38 Cyc. 132; 3 Elliott, Contr. p. 2098; 1 Beach, Contr. § 298.

Defendant was under no obligation to deliver the potatoes until he had received the sacks, which the plaintiff admits he never delivered nor offered to deliver, either within the life of the contract, nor afterwards, nor at any time at all.

Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Diamond State Iron Co. 126 Ill. 294, 18 N. E. 735; Read v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 49 N. Y. 652; Hughes v. Knott, 138 N. C. 105, 50 S. E. 586, 3 Ann. Cas. 903; Bembridge v. Stoddard, 4 Ind. 587; Blossom v. Shotter,

Note. — As to effect of provision of contract of sale that buyer shall furnish receptacles, see annotation following this case post, 730.
L.R.A.1916D.

59 Hun, 481, 13 N. Y. Supp. 523; Lozes v. Segura Sugar Co. 62 La. Ann. 1844, 28 So. 249; National Coal Tar Co. v. Malden & M. Gaslight Co. 189 Mass. 234, 75 N. E. 625.

When the time limited in the contract had expired, the buyer had no right to make further demands on the seller.

Cazier v. Stack, 45 Utah, 124, 143 Pac. 133.

Messrs. Edward McGurrian and William E. Rydalc, for respondent:

It was the duty of defendant to have the potatoes on board the cars at American Fork within thirty days from February 4th, 1911.

Benjamin, Sales, 7th ed. § 682, p. 701.

It was the duty of the seller to give notice to the buyer at what time and place the potatoes would be on board in American Fork within the thirty days specified.

Cullum v. Wagstaff, 48 Pa. 300, 2 Mor. Min. Rep. 573; Rogers v. Van Hoesen, 12 Johns. 221; McNairy v. Bishop, 8 Dana, 150; Parker v. Selden, 69 Conn. 544, 38 Atl. 212; Stanford v. McGill, 6 N. D. 536, 38 L.R.A. 760, 72 N. W. 938; Dwight v. Eckert, 117 Pa. 490, 12 Atl. 32; Weiseger v. Wheeler, 14 Wis. 109; 5 Elliott, Contr. § 5043; 35 Cyc. 168; 2 Mechem, Sales, §§ 1126, 1127, 1130; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 1073, 1074; Henkle v. Smith, 21 Ill. 238; McKee v. Retter, 10 Ill. 315; Low v. Forbes, 14 Ill. 423.

Frick, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for breach of contract. The action is based upon a certain contract, which was introduced in evidence by the plaintiff as his exhibits A and B. Exhibit A reads:

February 4, 1911.

Received from Wm. B. Hughes Produce Company of Salt Lake City, Utah, ten and no 100 dollars in part payment of six hundred bushels or more of first-class potatoes at $1.25 per hundred sacked, to be delivered f. o. b. cars at American Fork within 30 days from date. Balance of payment to be made on the delivery of said potatoes.

Geo. H. Pulley.

Exhibit B is as follows:

For R. N. Z. potatoes. Price $1.25 per cwt., sacked f. o. b. American Fork. Advances $10.00. Sacks to be furnished by William B. Hughes.

The undisputed evidence is to the effect that plaintiff was doing business in Salt Lake City under the name of William B. Hughes Produce Company, and that he, under that name, entered into the foregoing agreement with the defendant, who was a farmer at American Fork, Utah county, Utah; that the plaintiff at no time furnished any sacks, nor offered to do so, in which to sack the potatoes; that on the 26th day of March, 1911, the defendant, not having heard anything from the plaintiff regarding said potatoes, sold the same for 5 cents less per bushel than the contract price, the price he sold them for being the market price for potatoes at American Fork at that time; that the defendant did not notify the plaintiff of his intention to sell the potatoes; that the plaintiff demanded the potatoes on April 14, 1911, at which time he was informed by the defendant that he had disposed of the potatoes. The plaintiff also testified that the market value of the potatoes "to me" at American Fork in February and March was $1.45 per hundredweight. Upon substantially the foregoing evidence the court found that the defendant had breached the contract, and that the plaintiff, in consequence thereof, was damaged in the sum of $54. Judgment was accordingly entered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant appeals.

The defendant insists that the findings are not supported by the evidence, and that the conclusions of law and judgment are contrary to law. It seems to us that the whole question hinges upon what meaning shall be given to the contract in question. Considering exhibits A and B together for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties, as we must do, what are the terms and conditions of the agreement?

In our opinion they are just these: The defendant sold to the plaintiff at least 600 bushels of first-class potatoes at $1.25 per hundred-weight, to be delivered in sacks f. o. b. cars at American Fork within thirty days from February 4, 1911; that the plaintiff paid the defendant $10 as part payment of the purchase price, the remainder to be paid upon delivery of the potatoes, and the plaintiff further agreed that he would furnish the sacks in which to sack the potatoes. Now, it seems to us that while the defendant had obligated himself to deliver the potatoes as stipulated in the agreement, the plaintiff had bound himself to furnish the necessary sacks in which the potatoes were to be sacked before delivery. If it be held that plaintiff was not required to furnish the sacks, then something he agreed to do must be eliminated from the agreement. How can it reasonably be contended that the plaintiff has complied with the stipulations of the contract, unless it be shown that he had tendered the sacks to the defendant in which the potatoes were to be placed before delivery and shipment? Plaintiff's counsel, however, vigorously insist that the furnishing of the sacks by the plaintiff was not a condition precedent to his right to have the potatoes delivered, because his agreement to furnish sacks was not an essential or material part of the contract. That seems to have been the view taken by the trial court. Indeed, unless that view is taken, the court's conclusions cannot be sustained.

In support of their contention counsel cite and rely on a case from the supreme court of Illinois, namely, McKee v. Retter, 10 Ill. 315, decided in 1848, in which a contract for the sale of wheat, very similar in terms to the one in question here, was passed on, and where it was held that the furnishing of the sacks by the plaintiff was not a condition precedent, and that the defendants were not excused for a failure to deliver the wheat because the plaintiff had not furnished the sacks in which it was to be sacked before delivery. It was held that the failure to furnish the sacks by the plaintiff was too "insignificant" to justify the defendants in refusing to deliver the wheat at the time and place agreed upon. Upon the other hand, counsel for the defendant cites and relies upon a case from the supreme court of Indiana (Russell v. Witt, 38 Ind. 9), where the defendants in error agreed to furnish the sacks in which a certain quantity of clover seed was to be sacked by the plaintiff in error, which the defendants in error had purchased from Russell, and where the defendants in error had failed to furnish the sacks, and Russell then had disposed of the clover seed elsewhere, and was sued for breach of contract. The supreme court of Indiana held that the furnishing of the sacks by defendants in error was a condition precedent to their right to have the clover seed delivered, and reversed the judgment of the court below, which was in their favor. We can see no escape from either the logic or justice of that decision. Nor can we understand how the supreme court of Illinois could logically have arrived at the conclusion that the furnishing of the sacks was a matter too "insignificant" to justify the defendant's failure to deliver the wheat at the time specified in the contract. In arriving at such a conclusion the court in effect held that, although one party to a contract is bound by its stipulations, yet the other is not. It might be that a certain stipulation in a contract is so foreign to the real purpose and intention of the parties in entering into it that a court might well say that the mere failure to comply with such a stipulation by the party agreeing to perform it offers no excuse for the other party to refuse to comply with all of the terms of his agreement. Courts should, however, be very careful not to excuse parties from their obligations by substituting their own judgment for that of the parties with respect to what constitutes a material stipulation in a contract. When courts once enter into that realm, they will find it somewhat difficult to say just where to pause. This court is firmly committed to the doctrine that courts may "enforce, but not create, liabilities." Smith v. Bowman, 32 Utah, 43, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 889, 88 Pac. 687; Blyth-Fargo Co. v. Free, — Utah, —, 148 Pac. 430. While in those cases surety contracts were involved, yet the principle that courts are created to enforce, and not to excuse or create, liability, is just as much involved here as it was in those cases. What right have we to excuse the plaintiff from furnishing the sacks while we enforce the obligation of the defendant to deliver the potatoes, although no sacks were furnished nor tendered him at any time, not even on the 14th day of April, when the delivery of the potatoes was finally demanded by the plaintiff?

Then the further question arises of whether the plaintiff could postpone the demand for the potatoes indefinitely. That is, whether he was, under the terms of the contract, entitled to demand them at any time. The potatoes were to be sacked and delivered within thirty days from February 4, 1911. No sacks were furnished, and no demand was made for the potatoes until April 14th following; that is, not until sixty-eight days had elapsed. If the plaintiff could wait for sixty-eight days, why could he not wait six months before making a demand? True it is that, had the plaintiff not agreed to furnish sacks in which the potatoes were to be placed and delivered, he would have been required to do nothing. Under the terms of the contract the defendant was, however, required to sack the potatoes and to deliver them sacked within thirty days from the making of the contract. He, we think, was not required to comply with those conditions unless he was furnished the sacks in which to place the potatoes. According to the opinion of the supreme court of Illinois in the case referred to, the plaintiff's failure to furnish the sacks did not excuse the defendant from delivering the potatoes, for the reason that if sacks were necessary, he should have provided them. Now, how many sacks, what kind and quality, and what would be the cost thereof to sack 600 bushels of potatoes, we are not advised. It may be that it would have required 600 sacks. It may well be that it would have been difficult for the defendant to obtain that number of sacks at a reasonable price. If he did so, however, he would perhaps have to invest money in an article he did not need, or would perhaps have had to sue the plaintiff to recover back the money he invested in the sacks. In either event he was placed in a dilemma. What right has this, or any, court to place that burden upon him? The language of the contract is plain and unambiguous that the plaintiff was to furnish the sacks. Had the plaintiff complied with the terms of his agreement in that regard, no dilemma nor controversy would perhaps have arisen. The plaintiff, and not the defendant, therefore, is responsible for defendant's failure to deliver the potatoes at the time and place specified in the agreement. That being so, we cannot see how the plaintiff can prevail in an action for a breach of a contract, for which breach he alone is responsible.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded to the District Court of Utah County, with directions to grant a new trial. Costs to appellant.

Straup, Ch. J., and McCarty, J., concur.

Annotation—Sale—Effect of provision of contract that buyer shall furnish receptacles.

This note does not include agreements by the buyer to furnish the means of transportation. As to which party must furnish cars under a contract to ship goods f. o. b., see notes to Samuel M. Lawder & Sons Co. v. Albert Mackie Grocery Co. 62 L.R.A. 795, and Hurst v. Altamont Mfg. Co. 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 928. And later case, R. J. Menz Lumber Co. v. E. J. McNeeley & Co. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1007. L.R.A.1916D.

The cases upon the question under annotation are quite evenly divided.

Thus, in Russell v. Witt (1871) 38 Ind. 9, which is approved in WILLIAM B. HUGHES PRODUCE CO. v. PULLEY, ante, 728, an action by a purchaser of clover seed against the seller, which was defended on the ground that the purchaser did not furnish bags for the transportation of the seed, according to the contract of sale, it was held that the furnishing of the bags was a condition precedent to the obligation of the seller to deliver the seed, and, although it was to be inferred from some of the evidence that the buyer acted on the theory that it was the duty of the seller to notify him when he was ready for the bags, and that it was not his duty under the contract to furnish the bags until he had such notice, the court said that this was a mistaken theory of the law applicable to the case, inasmuch as the contract did not provide for any such notice, nor was there anything in the nature of the transaction that made such notice necessary.

So, in Kellogg v. Nelson (1856) 5 Wis. 125, an action by a buyer of wheat under a contract whereby the seller was to deliver the wheat at the buyer's warehouse, the buyer to furnish bags for hauling it, it was held that the agreement by the buyer to furnish the bags was a part of the consideration for the promise of the seller to sell and deliver the wheat, and, it being a part of the consideration, the buyer should have been prepared to show that that part of the agreement had been performed on his part; saying: "It can make no difference that the thing to be done was trivial, or that it made no material difference to the defendants whether the bags were furnished or not, because, when the liability of the defendant is contingent upon the performance of certain acts by the plaintiff, the latter must show a complete performance or he cannot recover."

And in Austin & McCargar v. Langlois (1908) 81 Vt. 223, 69 Atl. 739, where there was some dispute as to whether the terms of a contract for the sale of hay required the buyer or the seller to bale the hay, one contention being that the buyer was to bale the hay so that it could be delivered on board boat before the close of navigation, the court said that if this claim was established, the baling of the hay was a condition precedent to the buyer's right of action, and his failure to perform that condition discharged the contract.

But in McKee v. Retter (1848) 10 Ill. 315, which is disapproved in WILLIAM B. HUGHES PRODUCE CO. v. PULLEY, an L.R.A.1916D.

action of assumpsit upon a contract for the sale of wheat which defendant agreed to deliver to plaintiff put up in sacks in good shipping order, the sacks to be furnished by the buyer as soon as they could be obtained, it was held that the furnishing of the sacks was a condition precedent to the sacking of the wheat only, and not to its delivery, the failure to furnish the sacks being insignificant as compared with the principal objects of the contract, and their nondelivery being a detriment to the buyer rather than to the seller, who was thereby relieved from the duty of sacking the wheat.

The above case was followed in Low v. Forbes (1853) 14 Ill. 423, in which a contract for the sale of corn provided that the buyer should furnish the sacks in which the seller was to put the corn, but failed to do so, the court saying that it was for the benefit of the buyer that the corn was to be sacked, and if he neglected to furnish the sacks it was no reason why he might not have the corn in bulk.

But in a subsequent suit between the same parties upon a different contract, where a valid subsequent parol agreement between the parties was established, whereby it was stipulated that the buyer should furnish the seller with sacks in which he should sack the corn, and that the seller should not deliver the corn until the sacks were furnished, it was held that this agreement made the delivery of the sacks a condition precedent to the delivery of the corn. (1857) 18 Ill. 568.

In McNairy v. Gathings (1876) 52 Miss. 592, a contract reciting the receipt of $3,000 in full payment for 5,000 pounds of lint cotton, with a further recital that the buyer was to furnish the bagging and rope, and the seller was to gin and bale the cotton, was held to be an absolute and unconditional contract of sale of the cotton, and the failure of the buyer to furnish the bagging and rope was held to deprive him of the right to claim that the seller should bale the cotton, but did not affect his claim upon the seller to deliver the lint cotton.

R. L. S.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.
(In Banc.)

WILLIAM R. CRAWFORD
v.

SEATTLE, RENTON, & SOUTHERN RAIL-WAY COMPANY et al.

AUGUSTUS S. PEABODY, Trustee, etc., et al., Respts.,
v.

SCOTT CALHOUN et al., Receivers of Seattle, Renton, & Southern Railway Company, et al., Appts.

PEABODY, HOUGHTELING, & COM-PANY, Appts.,
v.

SAME, Respts.

(86 Wash. 628, 150 Pac. 1155.)

Conflict of laws — usury — what law governs.

The intention of the parties to a loan to have the contract governed by the law of the borrower's residence with respect to interest, by which the amount reserved is valid, rather than by that of the lender's residence, where it would be void, may be found from the facts that the borrower is a corporation located and doing business in one state, the name of which the bonds securing the loan bear and in which they were actually signed, although they were delivered in the state where the lender resides and are payable there, while the deed of trust securing the bonds permitted advertisement in the state of the borrower's residence in case the bonds were to be paid before maturity, and the appointment by its courts of a new trustee in case the office became vacant; and the same is true with respect to interest on notes executed under similar circumstances, and secured by a pledge of the stock of the corporation. For other cases, see Conflict of Laws, I. b, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(August 11, 1915.)

APPEAL by the receivers from an order of the Superior Court for King County allowing the claims of the trustee in full in a receivership proceeding to wind up the affairs of the insolvent railroad company. Affirmed.

APPEAL by claimant Peabody, Houghteling, & Company from an order of the Superior Court for King County disallowing a part of its claim in a receivership proceeding to wind up the affairs of the insolvent railroad company. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — For conflict of laws as to usury, see annotation following Midland Sav. & L. Co. v. Henderson, post, 750. L.R.A.1916D.

Messrs. Harold Preston, O. B. Thorgrimson, and Scott Calhoun, for the receivers, appellants:

The contracts are governed by the law of Illinois.

Inland Trading Co. v. Edgecombe, 57 Wash. 257, 106 Pac. 768; Libert v. Unfried, 47 Wash. 186, 91 Pac. 776; Thomas v. Price, 33 Wash. 469, 99 Am. St. Rep. 961, 74 Pac. 563; Knight v. American Invest. & Improv. Co. 73 Wash. 380, 132 Pac. 219; Lee v. Hillman, 74 Wash. 408, L.R.A.—, —, 133 Pac. 583, Ann. Cas. 1915A, 759; Re Pittock, 2 Sawy. 416, Fed. Cas. No. 11,189; Arnett v. Pinson, 33 Ky L. Rep. 36, 108 S. W. 852; Lockwood v. Mitchell, 7 Ohio St. 388, 70 Am. Dec. 78; Dugan v. Lewis, 79 Tex. 246, 12 L.R.A. 93, 23 Am. St. Rep. 332, 14 S. W. 1024; Johnson v. Bank of United States, 2 B. Mon. 310; Shaw v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 97 C. C. A. 520, 173 Fed. 752; 2 Whart. Conf. L. 3d ed. p. 1218; Walker v. Lovitt, 250 Ill. 543, 95 N. E. 631; Mills v. Wilson, 88 Pa. 118; Buchanan v. Drovers' Nat. Bank, 5 C. C. A. 83, 6 U. S. App. 566, 55 Fed. 223; Gay v. Rainey, 89 Ill. 221, 31 Am. Rep. 76; Smith v. Myers, 207 Ill. 126, 69 N. E. 858; Baum v. Birchall, 150 Pa. 164, 30 Am. St. Rep. 797, 24 Atl. 620; Hooley v. Talcott, 129 App. Div. 233, 113 N. Y. Supp. 820; Bascom v. Zediker, 48 Neb. 380, 67 N. W. 148; Kline Bros. & Co. v. North Coast F. Ins. Co. 80 Wash. 609, 142 Pac. 7; McElroy v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 84 Neb. 866, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 968, 122 N. W. 27; Northampton Mut. Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Tuttle, 40 N. J. L. 476; Emerson Co. v. Proctor, 97 Me. 360, 54 Atl. 849; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Cohen, 179 U. S. 262, 45 L. ed. 181, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 106; Hieronymus v. New York Nat. Bldg. & L. Asso. 101 Fed. 12; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Beebe, 174 Ill. 13, 43 L.R.A. 210, 68 Am. St. Rep. 253, 50 N. E. 1019; Coats v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 239 Ill. 154, 87 N. E. 929; Hutchinson, Carr. § 212; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Smith, 38 Okla. 157, 132 Pac. 494, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 620; Fish v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 211 N. Y. 374, 105 N. E. 661; Washington F. Ins. Co. v. Maple Valley Lumber Co. 77 Wash. 686, 138 Pac. 553; Hagan v. Barnes, 92 Minn. 128, 99 N. W. 415; Hunter v. Wenatchee Land Co. 36 Wash. 541, 79 Pac. 40; McGarry v. Nicklin, 110 Ala. 559, 55 Am. St. Rep. 40, 17 So. 726; McAllister v. Smith, 17 Ill. 328, 65 Am. Dec. 651; Akers v. Demond, 103 Mass. 318; Barnes v. Whitaker, 22 Ill. 608; Maynard v. Hall, 92 Wis. 565, 66 N. W. 715; Woodruff v. Hill, 116 Mass. 310; Stix v. Mathews, 63 Mo. 371; Baum v. Birchall, 150 Pa. 164, 30 Am. St. Rep. 797, 24 Atl. 620; State Bank v. King, 244 Pa. 291, 90 Atl. 453;

Long v. Symonds, 216 Mass. 595, 104 N. E. 476; Baxter v. Beckwith, 25 Colo. App. 322, 137 Pac. 901; True v. Northern P. R. Co. 126 Minn. 72, 147 N. W. 948; Davis v. McColl, 179 Mo. App. 198, 166 S. W. 1112; Colonial Nat. Bank v. Duerr, 108 App. Div. 215, 95 N. Y. Supp. 810; Merchants' Bank v. Brown, 86 App. Div. 599, 83 N. Y. Supp. 1037; Cherry v. Sprague, 187 Mass. 113, 67 L.R.A. 33, 105 Am. St. Rep. 381, 72 N. E. 456; Wylie v. Cotter, 170 Mass. 356, 64 Am. St. Rep. 305, 49 N. E. 746; Exchange Bank v. Appalachian Land & Lumber Co. 128 N. C. 193, 38 S. E. 813; Daniell v. Boston & M. R. Co. 184 Mass. 337, 68 N. E. 337; E. L. Welch Co. v. Gillett, 146 Wis. 61, 130 N. W. 879; John A. Tolman Co. v. Reed, 115 Mich. 71, 72 N. W. 1104; Hallam v. Telleren, 55 Neb. 255, 75 N. W. 560; Carey v. Schmeltz, 221 Mo. 182, 119 S. W. 946.

Messrs. Peters & Powell, Higgins & Hughes, and Hyman Zettler, for respondents Peabody et al., and Peabody Company, appellants:

Both the bond and note transactions are governed by the laws of Washington, and are therefore not usurious.

Robinson v. Bland, 2 Burr. 1077; 9 Cyc. 665, 666; 5 R. C. L. p. 938; Mayer v. Roche, 77 N. J. L. 681, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 763, 76 Atl. 235; Griesemer v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 10 Wash. 202, 38 Pac. 1031, 1034; Jacobs v. Credit Lyonnais, L. R. 12 Q. B. Div. 589, 53 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 156, 50 L. T. N. S. 194, 32 Week. Rep. 761, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 338; Whart. Conf. L. 3d ed. § 510g, pp. 1195, 1204; Hall v. Cordell, 142 U. S. 116, 117, 35 L. ed. 956, 958, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 154; Mott v. Rowland, 85 Mich. 561, 48 N. W. 638; Dugan v. Lewis, 79 Tex. 246, 12 L.R.A. 93, 23 Am. St. Rep. 332, 14 S. W. 1024; Chapman v. Robertson, 6 Paige, 627, 31 Am. Dec. 264; Scott v. Perlee, 39 Ohio St. 63, 48 Am. Rep. 421; Arnold v. Potter, 22 Iowa, 194; Vliet v. Camp, 13 Wis. 198; Richards v. Globe Bank, 12 Wis. 692; Kellogg v. Miller, 2 McCrary, 395, 13 Fed. 198; Jackson v. American Mortg. Co. 88 Ga. 756, 15 S. E. 812; United States Sav. & L. Co. v. Beckley, 62 L.R.A. 35, note; Pennsylvania Mortg. Invest. Co. v. Simms, 16 Wash. 247, 47 Pac. 441; Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 27 L. ed. 104, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102; Re Missouri S. S. Co. L. R. 42 Ch. Div. 341, 58 L. J. Ch. N. S. 721, 61 L. T. N. S. 316, 37 Week. Rep. 696; Hamlyn v. Talisker Distillery [1894] A. C. 202, 6 Reports, 188, 71 L. T. N. S. 1, 58 J. P. 540; Spurrier v. La Cloche [1902] A. C. 446, 71 L. J. P. G. N. S. 101, 51 Week. Rep. 1, 86 L. T. N. S. 631, 18 Times L. R. 606; Green v. Northwestern L.R.A.1916D.

Trust Co. 128 Minn. 30, post, 739, 150 N. W. 229; 39 Cyc. 899.

Even if the bond and note transactions were governed by the laws of Illinois, they would not be usurious because of the Illinois statute prohibiting to corporations the defense of usury.

Curtis v. Leavitt, 15 N. Y. 152; Southern Life Ins. & T. Co. v. Packer, 17 N. Y. 51; Butterworth v. O'Brien, 23 N. Y. 275; Stewart v. Bramhall, 74 N. Y. 85; Cook, Corp. 6th ed. p. 2641; Whart. Conf. L. 3d ed. § 510r; 3 Thomp. Corp. 2d ed. § 2252; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. § 538; Belmont State Bank v. Hoge, 35 N. Y. 65; Ballston Spa Bank v. Marine Bank, 16 Wis. 120; Lyon v. Ewings, 17 Wis. 61; Lane v. Watson, 51 N. J. L. 186, 17 Atl. 117, affirmed in 52 N. J. L. 550, 10 L.R.A. 784, 20 Atl. 894; Binghamton Trust Co. v. Auten, 68 Ark. 299, 82 Am. St. Rep. 295, 57 S. W. 1105; Junction R. Co. v. Bank of Ashland, 12 Wall. 226, 20 L. ed. 385; American C. R. Co. v. Miles, 52 Ill. 174; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Hadden, 28 Ill. 260; Hurd v. Marple, 2 Ill. App. 403. Mr. Will H. Thompson, amicus curiæ.

Parker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There are here involved two separate claims of creditors filed in the superior court for King county in the receivership proceedings of the Seattle, Renton, & Southern Railway Company, an insolvent corporation, the affairs of which are being wound up in these proceedings.

The claim of Augustus S. Peabody, as trustee for the holders of the bonds of the railway company, is sought to be made a preferred claim against all of the property of the railway company by virtue of a trust deed given to secure the payment of the bonds. While this claim is sought to be enforced in the receivership proceedings, the trustee seeks, in effect, the foreclosure of the trust deed as a mortgage, a sale of the property in the hands of the receivers, and the payment of his claim from the proceeds thereof in preference to all other creditors of the railway company.

The claim of Peabody, Houghteling, & Company is that of a general creditor, and rests upon notes evidencing a loan made by them to the railway company, which loan was secured by the pledging of all of the shares of the capital stock of the railway company by the owners thereof, William R. Crawford and John B. Berryman, as evidenced by collateral agreements executed by the railway company, Crawford, Berryman, Peabody, Houghteling, & Company, and Augustus S. Peabody, as trustee.

These claims were separately heard and determined in the superior court. The claim of Augustus S. Peabody, as trustee, under the bonds and trust deed securing them, was allowed by the superior court in full, including interest at the rate specified therein, as a preferred lien upon the property in the hands of the receivers. From the order entered so allowing this claim the receivers have appealed. The superior court allowed upon the claim of Peabody, Houghteling, & Company only the amount of money they actually parted with in making the loan to the railway company upon its notes, and disallowed all claim for interest as provided for in the notes. From the order so entered upon this claim Peabody, Houghteling, & Company have appealed.

The principal defense made in the superior court by counsel for the receivers against the allowance of these claims, as it is also made here, is that the contracts upon which the claims are rested are usurious under the laws of Illinois, and that such contracts are referable to and governed by the laws of Illinois. The superior court rendered its decision as to each claim upon the theory that the contracts were referable to and governed by the laws of Illinois; that the interest provided for in the bonds, together with the bonus or discount reserved, was not in amount sufficient to make that transaction usurious under the laws of Illinois; but that the interest provided for in the notes, together with the bonus or discount reserved, was sufficient to make that transaction usurious under the laws of Illinois. The highest rate of interest permitted to be contracted for under the laws of Illinois is 7 per cent, and when any higher rate of interest is contracted for with reference to the laws of that state, the whole of such interest so contracted for is forfeited, and the lender is entitled to recover only the principal sum so loaned. The learned trial judge concluded that the interest contracted for in the bond transaction, including the bonus or discount reserved, did not exceed 7 per cent, but that the interest so contracted for in the note transaction did exceed 7 per cent. We may concede for present purposes that the interest contracted for in the note transaction, together with the bonus or discount reserved, amounted to approximately 8 per cent. The interest contracted for in the bond transaction did not in any event exceed  $7\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. The highest rate of interest permitted to be contracted for under the laws of Washington is 12 per cent. Rem. & Bal. Code, § 6251 (P. C. 263, § 3). The main question here for determination is: Were these contracts made with reference to the laws of Illinois or the laws of Washington? If the former should be found controlling, it would then be necessary for us to deal with some additional questions. If the latter be found controlling, such fact will dispose of both claims in favor of Augustus S. Peabody, as trustee, and Peabody, Houghteling, & Company.

The two appeals are presented here together in the same briefs and by the same counsel. The controlling facts relative to both claims touching the question of whether the laws of Illinois or the laws of Washington are decisive of the question of usury are not materially different as we view them. Indeed, counsel do not seem to seriously contend that there is any substantial difference so far as this question is concerned. We shall notice the facts which are substantially the same as to each claim, and which we regard as decisive of each. The Seattle, Renton, & Southern Railway Company is a Washington corporation having its principal place of business during its entire existence in the city of Seattle. Until the appointment of receivers for it upon its becoming insolvent, it owned and operated a street and interurban electric railway wholly within King county, in this state. It never maintained any agency or place of business outside of this state. Peabody, Houghteling, & Company are now, and were at all times here involved, a partnership, with their place of business at Chicago. They are purchasers of and dealers in bonds and other securities. Augustus S. Peabody, one of the trustees named in the deed of trust here involved, is a member of the firm of Peabody, Houghteling, & Company. In January, 1908, William R. Crawford, the president of the railway company, went to Chicago for the purpose of negotiating a loan for the railway company in order to make necessary improvements and betterments of its property and refund its outstanding indebtedness. In February, 1908, he entered into a tentative agreement at Chicago in behalf of the railway company with Peabody, Houghteling, & Company, for a loan of $1,000,000 for the railway company, to be evidenced by bonds of the railway company, and to be secured by a trust deed upon all the property of the railway company. We need not here notice in detail the terms of this tentative agreement, since they became merged in the final contract evidenced by the provisions of the trust deed and the bonds issued thereunder. The trust deed and bonds were accordingly prepared by Peabody, Houghteling, & Company at Chicago, and dated as of May 1, 1908. The trust deed was signed and acknowledged at Chicago by the trustees First Trust & Savings Bank of Chicago and Augustus S. Peabody on June 4, 1908. It was then forwarded by Peabody, Houghteling, & Company, together with $600,000 of the bonds, to the railway company, at Seattle, Washington, where the trust deed was duly signed and acknowledged by the railway company on June 15, 1908, the railway company at the same time signing the bonds so forwarded to it, all in pursuance of resolution of the board of trustees of the railway company made in that behalf. The signed bonds and the trust deed were then forwarded to the trustees at Chicago, where the bonds were delivered by the trustees to Peabody, Houghteling, & Company after they were identified by indorsement thereon by the trustees as being bonds secured by the trust deed, such indorsement being made as provided by the terms of the trust deed. Peabody, Houghteling, & Company then paid the railway company for the bonds by sending direct to the railway company at Seattle, New York exchange amounting to $125,804.68, by paying and satisfying outstanding bonded indebtedness of the railway company which had been incurred by it in the course of its business, which indebtedness was evidenced by bonds then at Chicago, and by paying expenses incident to the examination of the railway company's property and the title thereto at Seattle, which became security for the loan under the provisions of the trust deed and the bonds. The remainder of the bonds here involved secured by the trust deed were thereafter signed, delivered, and paid for in a similar manner.

We now notice the provisions of the trust deed and the bonds constituting the contract here involved, which we regard as shedding light upon the question of the intention of the parties as to whether they made this contract with reference to the laws of the state of Illinois or with reference to the laws of the state of Washington. The general purpose of the loan is recited in the trust deed as follows: "Whereas, said company desires to borrow money for the transaction of its business and the exercise of its corporate rights and privileges, the refunding of its funded debt, and the funding of its unsecured indebtedness, the construction of tracks and the equipment thereof, the extension and improvement of its lines, and for other lawful purposes of its incorporation, and is about to make and issue its first mortgage bonds, of the form, tenor, and effect hereinafter set forth, to the aggregate amount of $1,000,000."

The trust deed specifies the form in which the bonds shall issue; such form being embodied therein in full. By this provision L.R.A.1916D.

and as issued, the bonds have a heading in large capital type as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF WASHINGTON.
SEATTLE, RENTON, & SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.
FIVE PER CENT FIRST MORTGAGE
GOLD BONDS.

The printed filing form upon the back of the bonds is headed the same. The bonds are by their terms payable at Chicago. The bonds refer to the trust deed as security, and the provisions thereof as affecting the rights of the bondholders as follows: ". . . To which trust deed or mortgage reference is hereby expressly made for a particular description of the terms and conditions thereof on which the said bonds are issued and secured, for a description of the nature and extent of the security therefor, and the rights of the bondholders with regard to such security."

The trust deed requires the railway company to furnish to Peabody, Houghteling, & Company monthly sworn statements in detail showing the condition of the company's business and its property. The trust deed provides that the railway company may elect to pay the bonds before maturity, and thereby acquires the right so to do. As a prerequisite to the exercise of this right the railway company "shall publish a notice of its such election and of the date of proposed prepayment in a newspaper of general circulation published in the city of Chicago, state of Illinois, and in a similar newspaper published in the city of Seattle, state of Washington. . . ." It is provided in the trust deed that in the event of the resignation of the trustees, or the rendering of that office vacant for any cause, so that there shall no longer be any person to act in that capacity under the trust deed, "a new trustee may be appointed upon the application of the holder or holders of one eighth ( $\frac{1}{8}$ ) in amount of said bonds then outstanding and unpaid, and upon notice to said company, by the superior court of King county, Washington." For our present purpose we may regard Augustus S. Peabody as the sole acting trustee under the trust deed here involved.

It is well settled by the authorities that the parties to a contract may make the same with reference to the laws of any state or country, and have their contractual rights governed thereby, provided only that such laws have a real, and not a mere fictitious, connection with the subject-matter of the transaction. It is enough to support this power to contract with reference to the laws of some particular state or country that some of the substantial elements of the contract have their situs in the state or country the laws of which the parties intend to control their rights under the contract. The intention of the parties in this respect may be evidenced by express words in the contract, or may be presumed from the facts and circumstances attending the making of the contract. 9 Cyc. 665, 666; 2 Whart. Conf. 3d ed. §§ 510b, 510c.

Of course, where the residence of all parties, as well as every fact and circumstance attending the making of the contract, is in one state, the contract is conclusively presumed to have been made with reference to the laws of that state, and the rights of the parties are governed accordingly. In such cases, and in cases of express provision in the contract evidencing the intention of the parties, there is no room for controversy as to their intention. It is where the contract is silent on that subject so far as express words are concerned, and its elements in some substantial measure have their situs in different states, that the question of what law was intended by the parties to govern their rights thereunder often becomes a difficult one. There is seemingly great conflict in the decisions dealing with this question. Such conflict, however, is probably more apparent than real, and arises from the great number of varying circumstances attending the contracts involved in different cases. Indeed, so marked is this variation of circumstances with which the courts have been called upon to deal that it seems quite impossible to formulate rules applicable alike to all cases. In 2 Wharton, Conf. L. 3d ed. § 510c, the learned author observes: "When the intention of the parties with respect to the governing law is not shown by the express language of their contract, it is necessary to infer or presume it from the terms of the contract in connection with the circumstances surrounding the transaction. These terms and circumstances are of such great variety, and susceptible of so many different combinations, that it is impossible to formulate any rule or set of rules for ascertaining the unexpressed intention of the parties that will cover every case. Each case must therefore depend, to a considerable extent, upon its own circumstances. Certain combinations of terms and circumstances, however, are of such frequent occurrence that they have become the basis of formulated principles or rules for ascertaining the bona fide intention of the parties. Each of these rules rests upon an inference or presumption as to the intention of the parties, drawn from one or more of the terms of the contract, or circumstances of the transaction. It is obvious, therefore, that it is not a hard and fast rule (like the rule, for instance, that the lex situs determines the requisites of an acknowledgment of a deed of real property), but yields to additional circumstances indicating an intention contrary to the inferred or presumed intention on which it rests. It follows, therefore, that these rules are merely prima facie, and that one may give way to another as additional circumstances appear, or that all may yield to circumstances which have never become the basis of a formulated rule, but which nevertheless rebut the presumptions upon which the formulated rules rest."

The problem here involved, as we view it, is to a considerable extent freed from its seeming involved nature when we are reminded that it is a question of fact, rather than one of law, and that all of the rules applicable thereto have to do with presumptions of fact, and not with presumptions of law, since we are not dealing with a case where it can be said, as a matter of law, that the parties intended the laws of any particular state to govern their contractual rights, as when all the elements of the contract have their situs in one state. It would seem unnecessary to review the authorities here to show that they regard the intent of the parties as paramount in controlling the question of what law governs in cases of this nature. The following among numerous authorities are worthy of notice as evidencing this main thought in that great number of cases having to do with the intention of the parties, other than expressed intention and that intention which follows as a matter of law when all the elements of the contract have their situs in one state. In 5 R. C. L. 938, the learned editors state the general rule, with numerous authorities cited in support thereof, as follows: "Fortunately the conflict between the various rules and theories that have been stated is more apparent than real. The majority of them can be reconciled by the application of another rule, namely, that the true test for the determination of the proper law of a contract is the intent of the parties, and this intent, whether express or implied, will always be given effect." See also Mayer v. Roche, 77 N. J. L. 681, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 763, 75 Atl. 235; Richards v. Globe Bank, 12 Wis. 692; Wilson v. Lewiston Mill Co. 150 N. Y. 314, 55 Am. St. Rep. 680, 44 N. E. 959; Jackson v. American Mortg. Co. 88 Ga. 756, 15 S. E. 812, 39 Cyc. 897.

See note in 62 L.R.A. 33.

If we are correct in assuming that this contract has the situs of substantial portions of its elements both in Illinois and in Washington, so as to enable the parties thereto to make the same with reference to the laws of either state, then there comes to our aid in our search for the intention of the parties the presumption of lawful intent on their part in the making of the contract, and also the rule that the contract will, if possible, be given that construction which will render it valid. In 2 Parmeles's Wharton, Conflict of Laws, 3d ed. § 507, after noting circumstances attending the making of contracts which point to the intent of the parties touching the governing law thereof, such as their residence, the place of making and performance of the contract, etc., where the question of usury is involved, the author says: "More reasonable is the view maintained by Savigny, and substantially adopted by Mr. Parsons, that when there are two conflicting laws bearing on this point, that law will be adopted by which the validity of the obligation is best sustained. The applicability of a local law, it is argued, is based on the presumed consent of the parties; but parties cannot be presumed to consent to a local law by which their engagements would be made null."

In Mott v. Rowland, 85 Mich. 561, 566, 48 N. W. 638, 639, dealing with the question of usury where the written obligation might have been made with reference to the laws of either of two different states, the court said: "It cannot be presumed that the parties intended to enter into an illegal contract. The presumption is rather in favor of its validity. The law will presume an honest intention, unless there is something in the nature of the transaction or in the proofs to establish the contrary. Transactions of this kind were and are now common between citizens of the western and those of the eastern states. The parties had an undoubted right to adopt the law of either state, provided they did so in good faith."

In Green v. Northwestern Trust Co. 128 Minn. 30, 36, post, 739, 150 N. W. 229, 231, dealing with the question of interest contracted for, which would be usurious under the laws of one state, and not under another, and the contract evidencing the obligations might have been made with reference to the laws of either state, the court observed: "When the circumstances determinative of the governing law are equivocal, and the determination of what the governing law is must be made by resorting to the presumed intent of the parties as to what law shall govern,—that of one state, which leaves the transaction valid, or that of the other, which makes it usurious and illegal,—a strong presumption is indulged that the intent was to contract with reference to the law of the state where the transaction is valid; and the presumption in a particular case may be conclusive."

In Commercial Bank v. Auze, 74 Miss. 609, 623, 21 So. 754, 755, dealing with a similar question, the court said: "A presumption will never be indulged that a contract is in violation of law when it is capable of any other reasonable construction."

In the text of 39 Cyc. 899, on the subject of usury, the rule is stated with numerous cited authorities in support thereof, as follows: "Every presumption is against an intention to violate the law. Therefore, where the several elements of a contract have their situs in different states, if by the laws of one of the states the contract would be legal, but illegal by the laws of the others, then the parties will be presumed to have contracted with reference to the law of the place wherein the transaction would be valid, rather than in view of the law by which the transaction is illegal, always providing there is no evidence of bad faith, or of any intention to evade the usury laws of the latter state."

In Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 124, 137, 27 L. ed. 104, 108, 1 Sup. Ct. Rep. 102, 112, Justice Matthews, speaking for the United States Supreme Court touching the intention of the parties to a contract not involving the question of usury, however, observed: "Phillimore says: 'It is always to be remembered that in obligations it is the will of the contracting parties, and not the law, which fixes the place of fulfillment—whether that place be fixed by express words or by tacit implication—as the place to the jurisdiction of which the contracting parties elected to submit themselves.' 4 Int. Law, 469. The same author concludes his discussion of the particular topic as follows: 'As all the foregoing rules rest upon the presumption that the obligor has voluntarily submitted himself to a particular local law, that presumption may be rebutted either by an express declaration to the contrary or by the fact that the obligation is illegal by that particular law, though legal by another. The parties cannot be presumed to have contemplated a law which would defeat their engagements. 4 Int. Law, § 654, pp. 470, 471. This rule, if universally applicable, which perhaps it is not, though founded on the maxim, 'Ut res magis valeat, quam pereat,' would be decisive of the present controversy, as conclusive of the question of the application of the law of Louisiana, by which alone the undertaking of the obligor can be upheld. At all events, it is a circumstance, highly persuasive in its character, of the presumed intention of the parties, and entitled to prevail, unless controlled by more express and positive proofs of a contrary intent."

It would seem, then, that where a contract might have been made by the parties thereto with reference to the laws of either one of two or more states, which contract is silent upon the subject of which laws shall govern the rights of the parties thereunder, so far as express language is concerned, and there is fair room for argument that it might have been made with reference to the laws of either state, the presumption of lawful intention on the part of the makers of the contract should be controlling, and result in giving the contract that construction which will make it lawful, rather than that which will make it unlawful. This court, in Pennsylvania Mortg. Invest. Co. v. Simms, 16 Wash. 243, 247, 47 Pac. 441, 443, in harmony with this view, said: "Elementary rules require that such a construction should be given to the contract as will give it force, rather than one which will make it of no effect,"—though that case did not involve a question of conflict of laws.

Counsel for the receivers contend that this is wholly an Illinois contract, because, as they insist, it was made there and performable there. Application of technical rules of law might lead to these conclusions, though there is, in the light of all the facts, fair argument to be made in support of the view that the contract was partly made in Washington, and at least some of its requirements were to be performed there, when we consider the provisions of the trust deed as well as the provisions of the bond. However, we do not think the technical making and required performance of the contract in Illinois is controlling of the intent of the parties, nor as to their right to make the contract with reference to the laws of Washington, in view of the elements of the contract having their situs in this state. We think this contract must be considered as evidenced not only by the bonds, but by the trust deed in connection therewith. The bonds make such reference to the provisions of the trust deed as to make this evident. We then have the following facts pointing to an intention of the parties in the making of the contract to have their rights thereunder governed by the laws of the state of Washington. The railway company, the maker of the trust deed and bonds, is a Washington corporation with its only place of business within this state. It never maintained any place of business outside the state. It signed and acknowledged, and in that sense executed, the trust deed in the state of Washington. It signed, and in that sense executed, the bonds in the state of Washington. As recited in the trust deed, the purpose of the loan was to promote the business of the railway company manifestly L.R.A.1916D.

largely, if not wholly, in the state of Washington. The heading of the bonds, as well as the filing form indorsed thereon, recited, among other things, "State of Washington," thus apparently identifying them as Washington securities. The railway company by the terms of the trust deed was to furnish data to Peabody, Houghteling, & Company monthly touching the condition of its business here, evidently to the end that they might at all times be informed of the condition thereof. The contract, in giving the railway company the right to pay the bonds before maturity at its election, provided that the election of such right should be exercised by publication in a newspaper in the state of Washington, as well as in one in the state of Illinois. The trust deed also provided that in the event of vacancy in the office of trustee, with no one to perform the duties thereof, a trustee might be appointed by the superior court for King county, in this state. We are not prepared to say to just what extent any one of these facts standing alone would influence our decision touching the intent of the parties here in question. But, taking them all together, it seems quite clear to us that the contract is one that might have been made by the parties referable to the laws of the state of Washington, and, applying the presumption of lawful intention on the part of the makers of the contract, we are of the opinion that the scale is turned in favor of the view that the contract was, in fact, made with reference to the laws of this state. This view renders the contract valid and we are quite clear is preferable to one which would render the contract void, as it would be if held to be referable to the laws of Illinois.

We have noticed the authorities with a view of ascertaining general principles applicable, rather than with a view of finding cases dealing with the same state of facts as we have here, since as has been suggested, and as has been rendered evident by our search of the cases, each case must be determined largely upon its own facts. Expressions are found in the decisions, especially in the earlier ones, to the effect that a contract is enforceable by the laws of the state of its execution or by the law of the state of its performance, but such expressions are not without qualification. The decision of this court rendered in Bank v. Doherty, 42 Wash. 317, 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1191, 114 Am. St. Rep. 123, 84 Pac. 872, is of some interest in this connection. In that case the mortgage and note involved were both executed in the state of Montana between residents of that state, the debt being payable there. While the contract was usurious under the laws of the state of Washington, where the mortgaged land was situated, it was not usurious under the laws of the state of Montana. The presumption that the contracting parties were intending to act lawfully was manifestly of some weight, inducing the court to reach its conclusion that the contract was made with reference to the laws of the state of Montana, though that was probably not the controlling consideration. Our conclusion here reached is not out of harmony with the conclusion there reached.

We have stated with reference to the bond transaction only those facts which are, in substance, the same as the facts with reference to the later note transaction. The only substantial difference, so far as we have stated the facts, is that the later note transaction, instead of resting upon a trust deed, rests upon contracts entered into between the railway company, Peabody, Houghteling, & Company, Augustus S. Peabody, a member of that firm, as trustee, William R. Crawford and J. B. Berryman, owners of all the stock of the railway company, in pursuance of which contracts the notes were issued to and paid for by Peabody, Houghteling, & Company, in substantially the same manner as the bonds were issued and paid for. Under those contracts all of the stock of the railway company, the same being owned by Crawford and Berryman, was pledged by them as security for the payment of the note indebtedness, the same being deposited with Augustus S. Peabody, as trustee, the contracts giving the trustee a voice in the affairs of the railway company in behalf of Peabody, Houghteling, & Company to a certain extent as if they were stockholders therein. The duties and the obligations of the railway company under those contracts were substantially of the same nature as under the trust deed and bond contract. The notes were signed by the railway company in the state of Washington, the company had the privilege of paying the notes before maturity, and in the exercise of that privilege were required to publish a notice of their election in a newspaper in the state of Washington, as well as in the state of Illinois, as in the bond contract. The office of trustee, should it become vacant, and there be no one to perform the duties thereof, by the terms of that contract, could be filled by appointment by the superior court of King county, in this state. We think these contracts and the notes issued in pursuance thereof contain as convincing evidence of the intent of the makers thereof to have made the same with reference to the laws of the state of Washington as do the trust deed and bond contract. What has already been said in reference to the law of that contract is applicable to these contracts, and we are of the opinion that they were made by the parties thereto with reference to the laws of the state of Washington, where they are valid.

We conclude, therefore, that the order of the Superior Court, allowing the claim of Augustus S. Peabody, trustee, upon the bonds in full, with interest as therein specified, should be affirmed, and that the order of the Superior Court allowing the claim of Peabody, Houghteling, & Company upon the notes should be set aside, with direction to enter an order allowing that claim in full, with interest as specified in the notes. It is so ordered, and that case is remanded to the Superior Court for further proceedings in accordance with our views herein expressed.

This disposition of the two causes renders it unnecessary for us to notice other questions raised in the briefs.

Morris, Ch. J., and Mount, Main, Holcomb, Ellis, Fullerton, and Crow, JJ., concur.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

J. S. GREEN, Appt.,
v.

NORTHWESTERN TRUST COMPANY et al., Resp'ts.

(128 Minn. 30, 150 N. W. 229.)

Appeal — rejection of evidence — materiality.

1. Though the trial court in an equity

Headnotes by DIBELL, C.

Note. — For conflict of laws as to usury, see annotation following Midland Sav. & L. Co. v. Beats, post, 750.
L.R.A.1916D.

case erroneously excludes testimony bearing upon material facts in issue, and rejects offers to prove them, the case will not be reversed for such errors if, with the facts taken as the party offering the proof claims them to be, there could be no result in the case other than that reached by the trial court.

For other cases see Appeal and Error, VII. m, 3, a, (5) in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Conflict of laws — secured notes — usury.

2. Where notes are claimed to be usurious, and there is no expressed or actual intent as to whether the governing law of the transaction is the law of one state or another, to either of which it may with propriety be referred in part, and there is no attempt to evade the usury law, the court will indulge the presumption that the law of the state which upholds the transaction is the law intended by the parties; and applying this rule it is held that the law of Montana, under which the transaction involved was valid, was the proper law of the contract where purchase money notes were made to a corporation of that state, secured on lands located there, sold to a South Dakota corporation, having an office in Minnesota, under the laws of which the transaction was invalid, though the negotiations were had in Minnesota, and the notes executed and payable there, and the trust deed securing them executed there to a Minnesota trust company as trustee.

For other cases, see Conflict of Laws I. b, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 18, 1914.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the District Court for Ramsey County denying new trial of an action brought to enjoin the defendant land company from paying, and the defendant trust company from receiving, interest on certain notes made by the former to an improvement company, secured by a purchase money mortgage in the form of a trust deed by the land company to the trust company as trustee and to enjoin the latter from proceeding to enforce the mortgage. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Harris Richardson and Walter Richardson, for appellant:

The notes and mortgage involved are usurious.

Chase v. Whitten, 51 Minn. 485, 53 N. W. 767; Aldrich v. Chase, 70 Minn. 243, 73 N. W. 161.

Although the notes were secured by a mortgage on land in Montana, the Minnesota statute applies.

Thomson v. Kyle, 39 Fla. 582, 63 Am. St. Rep. 193, 23 So. 12; Klinck v. Price, 4 W. Va. 4, 6 Am. Rep. 268; Tenny v. Porter, 61 Ark. 329, 33 S. W. 211; Sawyer v. Dickson, 66 Ark. 77, 48 S. W. 903; Freie v. No. 4 Fidelity Bldg. & Sav. Union, 166 Ill. 128, 57 Am. St. Rep. 123, 46 N. E. 784; Guignon v. Union Trust Co. 156 Ill. 135, 47 Am. St. Rep. 186, 40 N. E. 556; Commercial Bank v. Auze, 74 Miss. 609, 21 So. 754; Armistead v. Blythe, — Miss. —, 20 So. 298; American Freehold Land & Mortg. Co. v. Jefferson, 69 Miss. 770, 30 Am. St. Rep. 587, 12 So. 464; Long v. Long, 141 Mo. 352, 44 S. W. 341; South Missouri Land Co. v. Rhodes, 54 Mo. App. 129; Central Nat. Bank v. Cooper, 85 Mo. App. 383; Sands v. Smith, 1 Neb. 108, 93 Am. Dec. 331; Dolman v. Cook, 14 N. J. Eq. 56; Andrews L.R.A.1916D

v. Torrey, 1 N. J. Eq. 355; Cope v. Alden, 53 Barb. 350; Arrington v. Gee, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 594; Lockwood v. Mitchell, 7 Ohio St. 387, 70 Am. Dec. 78; Shipman v. Bailey, 20 W. Va. 144; Central Trust Co. v. Burton, 74 Wis. 329, 43 N. W. 141; Phelps v. American Sav. & L. Asso, 121 Mich. 343, 80 N. W. 120; Russell v. Pierce, 121 Mich. 208, 80 N. W. 118; Bennett v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 177 Pa. 233, 34 L.R.A. 595, 55 Am. St. Rep. 723, 35 Atl. 684; People's Bldg. L. & Sav. Asso. v. Berlin, 201 Pa. 1, 88 Am. St. Rep. 764, 50 Atl. 308; Equitable Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Vance, 49 S. C. 402, 27 S. E. 274, 388, 29 S. E. 204; Tobin v. McNab, 53 S. C. 73, 30 S. E. 827; Hubble v. Morristown Land & Improv. Co. 95 Tenn. 585, 32 S. W. 965; Ware v. Bankers' Loan & Invest. Co. 95 Va. 680, 29 S. E. 744; Pioneer Sav. & L. Co. v. Cannon, 96 Tenn. 599, 33 L.R.A. 112, 54 Am. St. Rep. 858, 36 S. W. 386; Conradt v. Lepper, 13 Wyo. 473, 81 Pac. 307, 82 Pac. 2; United States Sav. & L. Co. v. Harris, 113 Fed. 27; Goddin v. Shipley, 7 B. Mon. 575; Wm. Glenn Glass Co. v. Taylor, 99 Ky. 24, 34 S. W. 711; Brown v. Todd, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 697, 29 S. W. 621; Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Bedford, 88 Fed. 7, affirmed in 181 U. S. 227, 45 L. ed. 834, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 597; Vermont Loan & T. Co. v. Dygert, 89 Fed. 123, 37 C. C. A. 389, 94 Fed. 913; Guarantee Sav. Loan & Invest. Co. v. Alexander, 96 Fed. 870; Hamilton v. Fowler, 40 C. C. A. 47, 99 Fed. 18; Finnes v. Selover, 102 Minn. 334, 113 N. W. 883; Walsh v. Selover, 109 Minn. 136, 123 N. W. 291.

The notes are to be governed by the law of the place provided for payment, i. e., the place of performance.

Ames v. Benjamin, 74 Minn. 335, 77 N. W. 230; Schultz v. Howard, 63 Minn. 196, 56 Am. St. Rep. 470, 65 N. W. 363; Stahl v. Mitchell, 41 Minn. 325, 43 N. W. 385; Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Palmer, 52 Minn. 174, 38 Am. St. Rep. 536, 53 N. W. 1137; Smith v. Parsons, 55 Minn. 520, 57 N. W. 311.

Messrs. Butler & Mitchell, for respondents:

It was the intention of the parties that the transaction should be treated as a Montana contract, and was entered into with a view to the laws of Montana.

Smith v. Parsons, 55 Minn. 520, 57 N. W. 311; Martin v. Johnson, 84 Ga. 481, 8 L.R.A. 170, 10 S. E. 1092; Mott v. Rowland, 85 Mich. 561, 48 N. W. 638; Kellogg v. Miller, 2 McCrary, 395, 13 Fed. 198; Newman v. Kershaw, 10 Wis. 333; Vliet v. Camp, 13 Wis. 198; Swedish-American Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 89 Minn. 98, 99 Am. St. Rep. 549, 94 N. W. 218; New England Mortg. Secur. Co. v. Vader, 28 Fed. 265.

The validity of a mortgage contract is to be decided by the laws of the state where the land lies.

Post v. First Nat. Bank, 138 Ill. 559, 28 N. E. 978; Bramblet v. Commonwealth Land & Lumber Co. 26 Ky. L. Rep. 1176, 83 S. W. 599; Swank v. Hufnagle, 111 Ind. 453, 12 N. E. 303; Dow v. Memphis & L. R. R. Co. 20 Fed. 260; National Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Burch, 124 Mich. 57, 83 Am. St. Rep. 311, 82 N. W. 837; Swedish-American Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 89 Minn. 98, 99 Am. St. Rep. 549, 94 N. W. 218; People's Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. v. Kidder, 9 Kan. App. 385, 58 Pac. 798.

The place of payment is not a controlling factor nor an absolute criterion, and the general rule that the place of payment determines the law governing the contract was itself based on an effort to get at the presumed intention of the parties, and if there be other facts and circumstances from which a contrary intention could be presumed, the place of payment is ignored.

Brown v. American Finance Co. 31 Fed. 516; Wayne County Sav. Bank v. Low, 81 N. Y. 567, 37 Am. Rep. 533; Western Transp. & Coal Co. v. Kilderhouse, 87 N. Y. 430; Hosford v. Nichols, 1 Paige, 220; Van Vleet v. Sledge, 45 Fed. 743; Dugan v. Lewis, 79 Tex. 246, 12 L.R.A. 93, 23 Am. St. Rep. 332, 14 S. W. 1024; Bullard v. Thompson, 35 Tex. 319; Sherman v. Gassett, 9 Ill. 521; Roberts v. McNeely, 52 N. C. (7 Jones, L.) 506, 78 Am. Dec. 261; Jackson v. American Mortg. Co. 88 Ga. 756, 15 S. E. 812; Fisher v. Otis, 3 Chand. (Wis.) 83; McIlwaine v. Ellington, 55 L.R.A. 933, 49 C. C. A. 446, 111 Fed. 578; Hieronymus v. New York Nat. Bldg. & L. Asso. 101 Fed. 12; United States Sav. & L. Co. v. Shain, 8 N. D. 136, 77 N. W. 1006; Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. (The Montana) 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 788, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 469; Finnes v. Selover, 102 Minn. 334, 113 N. W. 883; Walsh v. Selover, 109 Minn. 136, 123 N. W. 291; Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Palmer, 52 Minn. 174, 38 Am. St. Rep. 536, 53 N. W. 1137.

Plaintiff has not alleged nor proved facts which are a condition precedent to the right of a stockholder to bring a suit to enforce a right belonging to his corporation.

4 Thomp. Corp. 2d ed. §§ 4553-4556; Mount v. Radford Trust Co. 93 Va. 427, 25 S. E. 244.

Dibell, C., filed the following opinion:

This action was brought by the plaintiff, a stockholder in the Cartersville Irrigated Land Company, against that company and L.R.A.1916D.

the Northwestern Trust Company to enjoin the Cartersville company from paying, and the trust company from receiving, interest upon certain notes made by the Cartersville company to the Rosebud Land & Improvement Company, secured by a purchase money mortgage in the form of a trust deed made by the Cartersville company to the trust company as trustee, and to enjoin the trust company from proceeding to enforce the mortgage. There were findings for the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

1. On November 23, 1911, the Rosebud company and the plaintiff, Green, entered into a contract for the sale of certain Montana lands, the contract setting forth the agreement in detail. This contract Green assigned to the Cartersville company on December 6, 1911. On December 20, 1911, the Rosebud company conveyed the lands to the Cartersville company.

During the summer of 1911 negotiations were had in Montana between the Rosebud company and Green relative to the disposition of these lands. The Rosebud company claimed that these negotiations had reference to a sale to Green and that they resulted in the conveyance to the Cartersville company. Green claimed that he was acting as agent for the Rosebud company; that if he made a sale he was to have a commission; that the contract of November 23, 1911, which was acknowledged by the company on November 18th, was executed for the purpose of enabling him to dispose of the lands to certain Minneapolis people; that these people did not complete the proposed purchase; that he then associated himself with other parties, with whom he was to have a joint interest, and that the contract was delivered to him by the Rosebud company as a matter of convenience in completing this transaction; and that the negotiations with reference to this transaction, which was completed when the conveyance to the Cartersville company was made, were had in Minnesota.

The real question in the case being whether the transaction was governed by the Minnesota law or by the Montana law, as is explained hereafter, the inquiry as to the nature and place of these negotiations was important. The court found that Green was not the agent of the Rosebud company. There was evidence that he was and that he was not. The court sustained objections to pertinent questions put by plaintiff's counsel upon the issue, and sustained objections to plaintiff's offers to prove the facts as he claimed them to be, both as to Green's agency and as to the negotiations culminating in the deed to the Cartersville company. In this the court erred. Ordinarily such an error, infecting, as it did, material facts in issue, results in a new trial. If, however, from the facts properly found, and the other facts found as the plaintiff claims them to be, including the facts in proof of which evidence was rejected, there could be but one result, and that the one reached by the trial court, a new trial should not be had; that is, if from the facts properly found, and the other facts taken to be as the plaintiff claims them, the law declares the transaction a valid one, a new trial is unnecessary. This is such a case. Therefore, in reciting the facts, additional to those properly found, they are assumed to be as the plaintiff by his rejected proofs offered to show them.

2. The ultimate question upon which the rights of the parties depend is whether the Montana law or the Minnesota law is the governing law of the transaction brought in question.

The facts, as we have them for the purposes of this appeal, are not in controversy, and are not complicated.

The Rosebud company is a Montana corporation. It has no office elsewhere. Its officers and stockholders reside in Montana. The plaintiff, Green, is a resident of Montana. The trust company is a Minnesota corporation. The Cartersville company is a South Dakota corporation, organized there in December, 1911. It does business and has its principal office in Minneapolis, though it did not obtain the required license until after the transactions here involved. Its connection with the state of its birth has never been more than nominal.

On November 23, 1911, the Rosebud company and the plaintiff, Green, entered into a contract of sale of certain Montana lands, the contract before mentioned. This contract was executed in Montana by the Rosebud company and was delivered by its resident, J. E. Edwards, to Green at Minneapolis, and was by the latter signed there. It was then returned to Montana. It was delivered as the result of negotiations had in Minnesota. It was originally executed for use in a sale attempted by Green as agent of the Rosebud company, which was not completed. One C. H. Wagner and one W. O. Williams were interested with Green in this contract. This the Rosebud company knew. It was at the time contemplated by Green and his associates that a corporation would be organized to take over the lands included in the contract. The Cartersville company was organized under the laws of South Dakota for this purpose. Green, Wagner, and Williams, together with a resident of South Dakota, were its incorporators.

The contract of November 23, 1911, contained this provision relative to the trust deed: "Said trust deed or mortgage, trust deeds or mortgages, executed in conformity with the terms hereof, in other respects to contain such terms and provisions as are ordinarily contained in like indentures and instruments within the state of Montana, and to be in such form as the party of the first part shall desire and elect at the time of the execution thereof."

On December 6, 1911, Green made a formal assignment of the contract to the Cartersville company. On December 20, 1911, the Rosebud company deeded the Montana lands to the Cartersville company. Edwards, the president of the Rosebud company, executed the deed in Minnesota and delivered it. It was attested by Beattie, the secretary of the company, and the corporate seal attached, apparently in Montana.

On December 20, 1911, the Cartersville company executed and delivered to the trust company a mortgage in the form of a trust deed to secure the promissory notes representing the unpaid purchase price. The notes ran to the Rosebud company. They were delivered to Edwards at Minneapolis and by him given to the Rosebud company in Montana. Of the purchase price $25,000 was paid in cash or in notes accepted in lieu of cash. The balance of the purchase price was represented by notes. One note for the sum of $25,000 was payable on January 1, 1913, and one for $772.21 and 163 for $1,000 each were payable on January 1, 1918. The amount secured by the trust deed was $188,772.21. These notes drew interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, payable annually, and the usual coupons were attached. The notes contained this provision: "And it is agreed that any unpaid principal or interest after the same becomes due shall bear interest at the rate of 8 per cent per annum, payable annually."

The coupons contained this provision: "This coupon note bears interest at the rate of 8 per cent per annum after maturity."

The Minnesota statute provides as follows: "Contracts shall bear the same rate of interest after they become due as before, and any provision in any contract, note, or instrument providing for an increase of the rate of interest after maturity, or any increase therein after making and delivery, shall work a forfeiture of the entire interest; but this provision shall not apply to notes or contracts which bear no interest before maturity." Gen. Stat. 1913, § 5805; Rev. Laws 1905, § 2733.

The provision for an increase of interest after maturity is valid under the Montana law. Its effect under the Minnesota law is to forfeit all interest reserved. Chase v. Whitten, 62 Minn. 498, 65 N. W. 84.

Under the facts recited, the question is whether these notes are governed by the Montana law and are valid, or whether they are governed by the Minnesota law and are so far invalid as to result in a forfeiture of the interest.

If the intent of the parties is expressed, or an actual intent is found, either that the Minnesota law govern, or that the Montana law govern, such intent must be given effect. If the intent is not expressed or an actual intent found, the court must find the presumed intent, and such presumed intent then fixes the governing law.

In Dicey on Conflict of Laws, pp. 560, 561, these rules are stated:

"When the intention of the parties to a contract, as to the law governing the contract, is expressed in words, this expressed intention determines the proper law of the contract and, in general, overrides every presumption.

"When the intention of the parties to a contract with regard to the law governing the contract is not expressed in words, their intention is to be inferred from the terms and nature of the contract, and from the general circumstances of the case, and such inferred intention determines the proper law of the contract."

In this case no intent was expressed. Neither, as we shall see, can an actual intent that the Minnesota law or the Montana law governs be found.

In a search for the actual intent of the parties when none is expressed there is an element of legal jugglery. Usually parties to transactions of this nature, referable to one state or another, or in part to one state and in part to another, have no unexpressed but actual intent as to the law which shall control. The question of what law governs does not suggest itself to them. Why should it? They engage in a transaction from which each hopes to profit, intending that it will be carried out as agreed. In looking at the case before us it is evident that the Cartersville company could not have had, consistently with an honest purpose, when it made the mortgage and notes aggregating $188,772.21, evidencing deferred payments on land for which it had made an initial payment of but $25,000, all of the deferred payments, except $25,000, running for six years, an actual intent L.R.A.1916D.

that the interest reserved, aggregating upwards of $60,000, need not be paid; and it is evident that the Rosebud company could not have intended, consistently with ordinary business sagacity, when it received the notes, that none of the interest promised it need be paid; and it is evident that the trust company, acting in a trust capacity, could not have intended taking a deed of trust, securing notes payable to the beneficiary of the deed, on which, contrary to their terms, no interest need be paid.

The suggestion is not that a transaction is free of usury because the parties to it do not know that there is a usury law. The contrary is true. If they contract for forbidden interest, though without moral wrong, not knowing that there is a usury law to violate, they are subject to the penalties of usury. 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 464. But when the circumstances determinative of the governing law are equivocal, and the determination of what the governing law is must be made by resorting to the presumed intent of the parties as to what law shall govern,—that of one state, which leaves the transaction valid, or that of the other, which makes it usurious and illegal,—a strong presumption is indulged that the intent was to contract with reference to the law of the state where the transaction is valid; and the presumption in a particular case may be conclusive.

It is competent for the parties to select any state, provided the transaction is referable in part to that state, as the one having the governing law, if this is done without an intent to evade the usury law. "It is doubtless essential to the application of this principle that one or more of the important elements of the contract, or significant circumstances of the transaction, shall have had their situs at the place whose law would uphold the contract." 2 Whart. Conf. L. 3d ed. p. 1200. The parties cannot arbitrarily assign their contract to a particular state. American Freehold Land & Mortg. Co. v. Jefferson, 69 Miss. 770, 30 Am. St. Rep. 587, 12 So. 464. Effect can be given to the presumed intention that the law of a particular state shall be the governing law only when such state has a vital connection with the transaction; or where elements of the contract, important in determining the governing law, have their situs in such state. 39 Cyc. 899; 2 Whart. Conf. L. 3d ed. pp. 1198 et seq.

The transaction here in question was vitally related to Montana. The Rosebud company was a resident of Montana. So were its officers and stockholders. The plaintiff, who was the vendee in the contract of November 23, 1911, and a promoter and incorporator and a large stockholder of the Cartersville company, resided there. The contract of sale was signed there, and was returned there, though originally intended for a different transaction. The land conveyed was there. The mortgage was drafted there. It was for unpaid purchase money and was secured upon lands located there. The notes were negotiable in Montana and non-negotiable in Minnesota. The Cartersville company covenanted in the trust deed to pay the taxes and assessments levied in Montana, including irrigation taxes. It had the right by the trust deed to sell portions of the mortgaged lands at not less than specified prices, and upon payment of a certain percentage of the price received, was entitled to a release of the mortgage as to the lands sold. It covenanted to keep the buildings, fences, ditches, and other improvements on the Montana lands in repair. It was contemplated by the November contract that the mortgage should contain, as it did, clauses usual to Montana mortgages. The connection between the transaction here involved and Montana was not artificial.

Opposed to the claim that the presumed intent was that the law of Montana should be the governing law, and supporting the contention that the Minnesota law should be presumed to be intended to be the governing law, these considerations are urged: The notes were signed, delivered, and payable in Minnesota. The trust deed, and the deed of the lands except as to the signature of the secretary, were executed here. Both were delivered here. The mortgagee was a corporation of this state. The mortgagor had its principal office in Minnesota. All of the negotiations relative to the transaction were had in Minnesota.

There was no intent to evade the usury law. The Cartersville company, the Rosebud company, and the trust company had no thought of engaging in other than a lawful and honest transaction. Indeed, there was no greed for interest. If the notes had provided for interest at 8 or 10 per cent from the beginning, instead of an advance from 6 to 8 per cent on principal and interest in default, more interest would have been received and the Minnesota law would not have been offended.

The courts go far in giving effect to the presumption that the parties intended their contract to be performed in the state where it could be validly performed according to L.R.A.1916D.

its terms, rather than in a state where it would be wholly or in part invalid. Thus, in Mott v. Rowland, 85 Mich. 561, 48 N. W. 638, the court said: "It cannot be presumed that the parties intended to enter into an illegal contract. The presumption is rather in favor of its validity. The law will presume an honest intention, unless there is something in the nature of the transaction or in the proofs to establish the contrary."

In Hieronymus v. New York Nat. Bldg. & L. Asso. (C. C.) 101 Fed. 12, affirmed in 46 C. C. A. 684, 107 Fed. 1005, the court said: "And it is well settled by the decisions of the United States Supreme Court that a contract is governed by the law with a view to which it is made; and it is to be presumed, in the absence of any express declaration or controlling circumstances to the contrary, that the parties had in contemplation a law according to which their contract would be upheld, rather than one by which it would be defeated."

Other cases, valuable because of their statement or discussion of the principle, but not cited because parallel in their facts, are the following: Miller v. Tiffany, 1 Wall. 298, 17 L. ed. 540; New England, Mortg. Secur. Co. v. Vader (C. C.) 28 Fed. 265, 270; Newman v. Kershaw, 10 Wis. 333; Jackson v. American Mfg. Co. 88 Ga. 756, 15 S. E. 812; Whitlock v. Cohn, 72 Ark. 83, 80 S. W. 141; Chapman v. Robertson, 6 Paige, 627, 31 Am. Dec. 264; Cromwell v. Sac. County, 96 U. S. 51, 24 L. ed. 681; United States Sav. & L. Co. v. Shain, 8 N. D. 136, 77 N. W. 1009. And see 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d. ed. 1330; 39 Cyc. 899; 2 Whart. Conf. L. 3d ed. § 510g.

There is nothing in Finnes v. Selover, 102 Minn. 334, 113 N. W. 883; Walsh v. Selover, 109 Minn. 136, 123 N. W. 291, or True v. Northern P. R. Co. 126 Minn. 72, 147 N. W. 948, at variance with the views expressed.

Applying the rules stated, we hold that the law of Montana was the proper law of the contract, and that its law, under which the transaction involved is valid, is the governing law. Under the facts, putting them as favorably to the plaintiff as is possible, it would be intolerable to require or to permit the Cartersville company to disavow its assumed obligation to pay interest on the purchase money notes. The law will conclusively presume the Montana law to be the intended governing law.

Order affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

MIDLAND SAVINGS & LOAN COMPANY,
Plff. in Err.,
v.

DANIEL W. BEATS et al.

(— Okla. —, 150 Pac. 868.)

Building and loan association — statutory authority.

1. A building and loan association incorporated within the state of Colorado under the laws of that state may loan its accumulations to members upon such plan of repayment provided for in its by-laws, and may charge, contract for, and recover a premium upon such plan as may be provided for in the by-laws or note or other evidence of indebtedness taken by such association, all of which notes shall be in form non-negotiable. Section 6, p. 125, Colo. Laws 1897.

For other cases, see Building and Loan Associations, III. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — premium — competitive bidding.

2. According to the by-laws of the plaintiff in error association, adopted pursuant to the statute, in addition to interest at the rate of 7½ per cent per annum, such premium could be charged as provided for in the note, bond, or other evidence of indebtedness taken by the company, provided the premium so charged should not exceed 62½ cents per month on each $100 borrowed. Held, when the premium fixed in the note was less than that authorized in the by-laws, the same was a proper item of charge for money loaned. Held, further, that under § 6, p. 125, Colo. Laws 1897, a building and loan association organized within that state and under its laws may loan its accumulations, when the by-laws of the association so provide, without the necessity of competitive bidding.

For other cases, see Building and Loan Associations, III. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Conflict of laws — contract.

3. As a general rule, it is within the power of the contracting parties, by the express terms of their contract or undertaking, to establish the place according to the laws of which the validity and construction of the contract shall be determined.

For other cases, see Conflict of Laws, I. b, 1, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — foreign contract — interest.

4. A first mortgage bond and real estate mortgage given by a resident of the Indian Territory in September, 1907, upon land located in said territory, to a foreign building and loan association, solvable according to the laws of Colorado, is uninfluenced by § 1523, Comp. Laws 1909 (§

1326, Rev. Laws 1910), providing that foreign building and loan associations shall not charge a rate of interest, or interest and premiums, in excess of 1 per cent per month upon the amount loaned, and making any charge over and above said rate usurious.

For other cases, see Conflict of Laws, I. b, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(July 13, 1915.)

ERROR to the District Court for Pittsburg County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor for less than the amount claimed, in an action brought to recover a balance alleged to be due on a bond, and to foreclose a mortgage given in satisfaction thereof. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Robert N. McMillen and A. J. Bryant, for plaintiff in error:

The court clearly erred in holding that the Colorado statute, which it found governed the contract, required that the loan in question should be submitted to competitive bids among the stockholders of the company.

6 Cyc. 149, and notes; Thompson, Bldg. & L. Asso. § 188, p. 377; Steinman v. Midland Sav. & L. Co. 78 Kan. 479, 96 Pac. 860; Manship v. New South Bldg. & L. Asso. 110 Fed. 861; Gale v. Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. 117 Fed. 732; Zenith Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Heimbach, 77 Minn. 97, 79 N. W. 609; Clarksville Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Stephens, 26 N. J. Eq. 355; New Jersey Bldg. L. & Invest. Co. v. Bachelor, 54 N. J. Eq. 600, 35 Atl. 745; International Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Wall, 153 Ind. 554, 55 N. E. 431; United States Sav. & L. Co. v. Rider, 155 Ind. 704, 58 N. E. 674; Boleman v. Citizens' Loan & Bldg. Asso. 114 Wis. 217, 90 N. W. 199; Sheldon v. Birmingham Bldg. & L. Asso. 121 Ala. 278, 25 So. 823; Beyer v. National Bldg. & L. Asso. 131 Ala. 369, 31 So. 113; Beckley v. United States Sav. & L. Co. 147 Ala. 195, 40 So. 655; Bedford v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 181 U. S. 227, 45 L. ed. 834, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 597; McNamara v. Oakland Bldg. & L. Asso. 131 Cal. 336, 63 Pac. 670; Sover v. Mercantile Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. 93 Mo. App. 302; Callison v. Trenton Bldg. & L. Asso. 98 Mo. App. 677, 72 S. W. 477; Johnson v. Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. 121 Ala. 524, 26 So. 201; Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Rector, 38 C. C. A. 686, 98 Fed. 171; National Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Ballard, 126 Ala. 155, 27 So. 971; United States Sav. & L. Co. v. Shain, 8 N. D. 136, 77 N. W. 1006; Hieronymus v. New York Nat. Bldg. & L. Asso. 101 Fed. 12.

Contracts made in one place to be performed in another must be construed according to the law of the place of performance.

Headnotes by SHARP, J.

Note. — For conflict of laws as to usury, see annotation following this case, post, 750. L.R.A.1916D.

Reeve v. Ladies' Bldg. Asso. 56 Ark. 335, 18 L.R.A. 129, 19 S. W. 917; Farmers' Sav. & Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Ferguson, 69 Ark. 352, 63 S. W. 797; Clarke v. Taylor, 69 Ark. 612, 65 S. W. 110; Hough v. Maupin, 73 Ark. 518, 84 S. W. 717.

Messrs. Stuart, Cruce, & Cruce also for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Wallace Wilkinson, for defendants in error:

All of the transactions in making the contract were made within the state of Oklahoma and the contract was an Oklahoma contract and subject to its laws.

Etna Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Rough, 32 Okla. 735, 124 Pac. 24; Washington Nat. Bldg. Loan v. Invest. Asso. v. Stanley, 38 Or. 319, 58 L.R.A. 816, 84 Am. St. Rep. 793, 63 Pac. 489; Meroney v. Atlanta Bldg. & L. Asso. 116 N. C. 882, 47 Am. St. Rep. 841, 21 S. E. 924; Martin v. Johnson, 84 Ga. 481, 8 L.R.A. 170, 10 S. E. 1092; Dickinson v. Edwards, 77 N. Y. 573, 33 Am. Rep. 671; Jackson v. American Mortg. Co. 88 Ga. 756, 15 S. E. 812; Royal Loan Asso. v. Forter, 68 Kan. 468, 75 Pac. 484, 1 Ann. Cas. 794; Parker v. Van Buren, 20 Colo. 217, 36 Pac. 900.

Sharp, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On September 3, 1907, at Kiowa, Indian Territory, the defendant in error, Daniel W. Beats, gave the plaintiff in error, the Midland Savings & Loan Company, of Denver, Colorado, his first mortgage bond or note in the principal sum of $500, and as part security therefor on said day executed a real estate mortgage on lot numbered 4 in block numbered 63 in the town of Kiowa. According to the terms of said bond, the maker thereof obligated himself to pay or cause to be paid to the said company, at its office in the city of Denver, the sum of $13.25 monthly, on or before the last day of each month, of which sum $8.25 was a monthly instalment due upon 15 shares of the capital stock of said company, the sum of $3.13 monthly interest due upon said principal sum, and the further sum of $1.87 as monthly premium upon said principal sum, and in addition thereto such fines as should accrue upon said stock, interest, and premium, according to the by-laws of the company; payment to be made until said principal sum should be paid in full as therein provided for. Default in the payment having been made, the company, on the 9th day of February, 1911, instituted its action in the district court of Pittsburg county, to recover of the maker of said bond the alleged balance due, and L.R.A.1916D.

to foreclose the mortgage in satisfaction thereof. The defendants, other than Daniel W. Beats, it was claimed, asserted some interest or lien upon the real estate described, which was junior and inferior to the liens of the plaintiff, and for the purpose of determining and foreclosing such interest said defendants were made parties. Trial being had, special findings of fact were made and returned by the trial court, and judgment entered for plaintiff in the sum of $196.25; the court also decreeing the sale of the real estate in settlement of the judgment. Among other things the court found that plaintiff was a building and loan association, incorporated and organized under the laws of the state of Colorado, with its principal office at Denver, Colorado, and that said association sold stock and loaned money to its subscribers only; that the 15 shares of stock sold said Beats were assigned to the company as collateral security for the loan made by it; that the contract entered into between said parties by its terms was to be governed by and construed according to the laws of the state of Colorado; that the by-laws introduced in evidence by plaintiff were in force at the time of the execution of the various instruments affecting said loan; and, further, that under the laws of the state of Colorado in force at the time, the plaintiff was required to submit its loan to competitive bids of its stockholders, which fact the court found plaintiff had failed to prove, and that therefore "the loan became and was a straight loan of money from the plaintiff to the defendant, and that the defendant was not bound under the by-laws of the state of Colorado to all the penalties, forfeitures, and payment of stock, as is provided for in their by-laws [statutes]."

Thereafter, and within the time allowed by law, plaintiff filed its motion for a new trial, including therein, among other grounds: "Error in the assessment of the amount of recovery, the same being too small."

The one contention urged in this court in the supplemental brief of the plaintiff in error is that under the laws of the state of Colorado a fixed premium may be agreed upon by the parties to the loan without the necessity of competitive bidding. Plaintiff both pleaded and proved various provisions of the statutes of Colorado, §§ 1, 3, 6, 7, pp. 121, 122, 125, Sess. Acts 1897. Section 1 in part reads as follows: "Any association of not less than three persons hereafter incorporated under the laws of this state, which shall be organized within this state for the purpose of raising a fund by the collection of dues or stated payments from its members, to be loaned among its members, shall, in furtherance of such purpose, and after having complied with the requirements of this act, be authorized and empowered to levy, assess, and collect from its members such sums of money, by rates of stated dues, fines, interest on loans advanced, and premiums bid by members for the right of precedence in taking loans, as the corporation may provide for in its constitution or by-laws."

By §§ 6 and 7 it was provided:

"Section 6. Every such corporation organized under the laws of the state of Colorado may loan its accumulations to members upon such plan of repayment as provided by its by-laws. They may charge, contract for, and recover a premium upon such a plan as may be provided for in the by-laws or note or other evidence of indebtedness taken by such association, all of which notes shall be in form non-negotiable.

"Section 7. No premiums, fines, or interest on such premium that may accrue to the said association, according to the provisions of this act, shall be deemed usurious; and the same may be collected as debts of like amount, are now by law collected in this state; but no fees for non-payment of dues shall exceed 5 per cent per month for the first sixty days, and 2 per cent per month thereafter."

In § 28 of the by-laws of the company it was provided: "All loans shall bear interest at the rate of 7½ per cent per annum, and such premium as may be provided for in note, bond, or other evidence of indebtedness taken by the company, all of which shall be in form non-negotiable: Provided that such premium shall not exceed 62½ cents per month on each $100 borrowed. Interest and premium shall be due and payable monthly, at the home office of the company on or before the 1st day of each month from time loan is closed until fully paid."

It will be noted that the premium called for is designated by reference to the bond or other evidence of indebtedness. The bond signed by Beats and accepted by the company provided, as we have already seen, for the payment of the sum of $13.25 monthly, on or before the last day of each month, of which sum $8.25 constituted the monthly instalment due upon 15 shares of stock issued to said Beats, and the sum of $3.13 monthly interest due upon the amount of the loan, and the sum of $1.87 premium payable monthly upon said principal sum or loan, and also such fines as might accrue upon such stock, interest, and premium according to the by-laws of the company, until the principal sum was paid in full, L.R.A.1916D.

by said shares of capital stock having reached their par value, or until otherwise paid as therein provided, when the obligation should become void. By § 7 of the act it was provided that no premiums, fines, or interest on such premiums that may accrue to the association, according to the provisions of the act, should be deemed usurious, and that the same might be collected as debts were at the time by law collected in the state of Colorado.

In holding that, under the Colorado statute, plaintiff was required to submit its loans to competitive bids of its stockholders, it is clear the court erred. Whatever may be the authority given the company under § 1 of the statute, it is not necessary to determine. We are concerned only with § 6, under which, admittedly, the loan was made. This section authorized the loan of the company's accumulations to members upon such plan of repayment as provided for by its by-laws, and stipulated that the company could charge, contract for, and recover a premium upon such plan as might be provided for in its by-laws or note or other evidence of indebtedness taken by such association. With reference to the premium, the by-law enacted under authority of the statute provided that in addition to the interest fixed at 7½ per cent per annum, such premium could be charged in the note, bond, or other evidence of indebtedness as therein provided for, conditioned only that the same should not exceed 62½ cents per month on each $100 borrowed. The premium fixed in the bond was $1.87, payable monthly, or less than that authorized in the by-law. The loan being made under authority of § 6 of the statute, and of the by-laws of the association, and the bond providing for the payment of a fixed monthly premium, there was no warrant of law for the trial court holding it was necessary that plaintiff established the fact that it had submitted the loan to a competitive bidding; otherwise, it could not recover such sums as authorized in the by-laws. The claim here made was urged in Steinman v. Midland Sav. & L. Co. 78 Kan. 479, 96 Pac. 860, where the same provisions of the Colorado statutes were before the court. Answering the contention, the court said: "It is also urged that as there was no competitive bidding for the loan, there could be no premium in fact, and that the provision therefor was an evasion of the usury laws; but the statute of Colorado, in connection with the by-laws, which were a part of the contract, provides for such premiums, and in following the rule in the Solomon Case, 71 Kan. 185, 79 Pac. 1077, we must hold the party bound by its terms."

In Boleman v. Citizens' Loan & Bldg. Asso. 114 Wis. 217, 90 N. W. 199, referring to the statutes of Wisconsin on the subject of loans of this character, the supreme court of that state said: "It is worthy of note that corporations of this kind, organized under our present statutes, are authorized to adopt fixed rates of premium and interest on loans. This was evidently done in deference to the fact that horizontal or uniform premiums, based upon a just profit to the association, have been demonstrated in actual experience as being more to the advantage of the association, and as of more fairness to the members desiring loans, than the other plan."

A statute similar in its meaning came under review by the supreme court of Indiana in International Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Wall, 153 Ind. 554, 55 N. E. 431. Referring to this statute, which in § 9 thereof provides: "It shall be competent and lawful for the borrower from such association to agree, in writing, upon a given rate of premium in addition to the interest to be paid upon each loan, without bidding. All contracts heretofore made between any borrower and any such association for the payment of any premiums, with or without any bidding, are hereby legalized" (Ind. Laws 1897, p. 287),—the court held that whether or not, prior to the taking effect of the act, an agreement for premium by rate, instead of in gross, was authorized by statute, was a question unnecessary to decide; however, no new rights having intervened, the legislature might ratify acts it might have authorized; and it was further said that, as the legislature had power to authorize building and loan corporations to take premiums, it could permit its corporate creatures to exercise that power in any mode it saw fit.

By statute, in Illinois, a building and loan association may by its by-laws dispense with the offering of its money in open meeting, and in lieu thereof loan its money at a rate of interest and premium fixed by its by-laws, and either with or without premium, deciding the preference or priority of loans by priority of applications for loans of its stockholders. Collins v. Cobe, 202 Ill. 469, 66 N. E. 1079.

In Beckley v. United States Sav. & L. Co. 147 Ala. 195, 40 So. 655, the contention was made that the contract was usurious, and that the premium should be added to and included as a part of the interest. There, as in § 7 of the Colorado statute, it was expressly provided that premiums should not render the contract usurious. Referring to the manner of making the loan, it was held that, because the money was not put up to the highest bidder, the L.R.A.1916D.

mortgage was not thereby invalid or the loan usurious,—citing, in support of its conclusion, Zenith Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Heimbach, 77 Minn. 97, 79 N. W. 609.

In 1895 a somewhat similar statute was adopted in the state of Missouri, which was before the court of appeals in Cover v. Mercantile Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. 93 Mo. App. 302. In sustaining the company's right to recover a fixed premium, the court said: "Defendant association, after the enactment of the statute of 1895, adopted a by-law authorizing the loan of its funds at a premium of 60 cents per share monthly. The loans in controversy, as we have just seen, were made at a premium of 40 cents per share, and, being thus less than that authorized by the by-laws, no complaint can be heard from the borrower that the by-law was not complied with. We therefore hold that defendant's demanding and exacting of plaintiffs a fixed premium, without competitive bids, was authorized by the statute aforesaid."

After reviewing the early statutes and decisions of the courts of that state, and referring to the change in the statute brought about by the passage of the act of May 1, 1891 (88 Ohio Laws, p. 469), which omitted the former condition of competitive bidding as to the premium paid, and in criticizing the practice prevalent under the earlier statutes, it is said in Cramer v. Southern Ohio Loan & T. Co. 72 Ohio St. 395, 69 L.R.A. 415, 74 N. E. 200, 2 Ann. Cas. 990: "The legislature, we must assume, had a reasonable motive for this material change, for before that time this court, in the cases cited under the former law, held that, if the premium was not bid for precedence in obtaining the loan, it was usurious in case it and the interest exceeded the legal rate to be charged under the interest laws. We think a reason for the change in the statute may be readily found. Experience with competitive bidding did not tend to fairness and equality among the members. The amounts of premiums bidden at different times and by different borrowers were not uniform. At one time competition was stronger than at another, thus increasing the sum to be paid. There was opportunity at least for fictitious competition to run the premium up; and, whatever the premium, high or low, the dividends were the same to all. The member who paid the high rate of premium received no greater dividend than the one who paid the lowest. There was no certain standard, and the rights of members thus varied with the seasons, or the financial stress in which the borrower might be found. The old law defeated the principle of mutuality, which is the basic principle of such associations. Now all borrowers are treated as upon a common level, and the premium is uniform, and all fare alike in that respect, and, of course, share alike in the dividends to be credited. Therefore the present law is not vicious, as declared by one of our circuit courts, but, on the contrary, it is fair, and is sanctioned by the rule of mutuality."

In Manship v. New South Bldg. & L. Asso. (C. C.) 110 Fed. 845, referring to the subject of loans by building associations, and after reviewing a number of the authorities, the opinion in part reads: "In my judgment, when there is no legislative prohibition, such as is found in Ohio, premiums may be fixed by contract, just as interest may be fixed thereby, and it seems to me certain that, in view of the present extent of building and loan association interests in the United States, fixed premiums are better calculated to put all the members of such associations on an equal footing than premiums fixed by open bidding, where the amount of same would not be fixed upon any business basis, but would only be determined by the financial exigencies and necessities of those who might be bidding for the particular sum of money offered."

To the same effect is the decision in Gale v. Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. (C. C.) 117 Fed. 732, where, after citing the Alabama statute and the decisions of the supreme court of that state (Sheldon v. Birmingham Bldg. & L. Asso. 121 Ala. 278, 25 So. 820, and other local decisions), the court holds that building and loan associations, under the statute, have the right, if their by-laws so provide, to lend on a fixed premium, which, together with the interest charged eo nomine, exceeds the interest rate allowed to be charged by other lenders. Other cases bearing upon and supporting the rule announced are Borrowers' & Investors' Bldg. Asso. v. Eklund, 190 Ill. 257, 52 L.R.A. 637, 60 N. E. 521; Co-operative Sav. & L. Asso. v. Fawick, 11 S. D. 589, 79 N. W. 847; New Jersey Bldg. L. & Invest. Co. v. Bachelor, 54 N. J. Eq. 600, 35 Atl. 745; Beyer v. National Bldg. & L. Asso. 131 Ala. 369, 31 So. 113.

It is true that some courts condemn the practice of charging fixed premiums, on the theory that it is a gross perversion of the whole spirit and design of the building and loan association scheme; and we may add that, since these institutions are liable to abuse, they must be guarded carefully to prevent them from being used as mere contrivances by which money lenders may evade the usury laws. It was never intended originally to have classes among shareholders,—one class being lenders exclusively, and the others borrowers only; one furnishing the money to be loaned for as high a premium as could be secured, and the other borrowing at such rates as his necessities forced him to submit to. There is, however, nothing in the record before us to authorize a finding that the plan by which the company transacted its business in the Indian Territory was to circumvent and avoid the law relating to usury.

Nor is there anything in Ætna Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Rouch, 32 Okla. 735, 124 Pac. 24, in conflict with our present views. It appears from that case, under the laws of Kansas, as well as the laws of Oklahoma, at the time in force, it was required as a condition precedent to the charging and collecting of a premium that the loan should be bid by the stockholder making application therefor, which was not done, but that, on the other hand, the company without right arbitrarily charged the premium as a part of the loan contract. The present case not being affected by the former statutes in this state, the opinion is not controlling.

Many of the states have statutes not unlike that of Colorado, and we know of no decision in which the validity of such statute, where called in question, has not been upheld and given effect. Section 17, art. 17, chap. 17, Stat. 1893 (§ 1503 Comp. Laws 1909), authorized loans to be made by building and loan associations by competitive bidding. This statute was amended in 1913 (chapter 200, § 4, p. 446, Sess. Laws 1913), by providing that any building and loan association may by its by-laws dispense with the offering of its moneys for bid, and in lieu thereof loan or advance its moneys to members at such rate of interest, or interest and premium, as may be provided for by the by-laws; and provides, further, that such premium to be paid in instalments shall not be deemed usurious, but shall be taken to be the payment as it falls due, and the same shall be lawful in so far as the said premium, together with interest, shall not exceed 1 per cent per month. Thus, it appears that our own state has changed its laws so as to authorize, within certain limitations, fixed premiums upon loans by building and loan associations. The statutes of the different states pertaining to loans of building and loan associations may be found in an appendix to Thornton & B. Bldg. & L. Asso. pp. 664-914. Indeed, counsel for defendant in error have not sought to defend the judgment upon the ground on which it was based, but instead say: (1) That the contract was an Oklahoma contract; and (2) the rate of interest, being in excess of 12 per cent was in violation of § 1523, Comp.

Laws 1909, prohibiting a foreign building and loan association to charge any rate, on account of interest and premium, in excess of 1 per cent per month upon the amount loaned.

The court found, as already seen, that the contract by its terms was to be governed by and construed according to the laws of Colorado. In this the trial court was correct. Where not forbidden by law, a contract of a foreign building and loan association, which is not usurious under the laws of the state where the association is domiciled, and where the obligations are payable, cannot be attacked for usury in the state where the land mortgaged is situated. Bedford v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 181 U. S. 228, 45 L. ed. 834, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 597. The parties having in good faith contracted that the laws of Colorado should control, and there being no statute in force in the Indian Territory, forbidding nonresident building and loan companies from transacting business and making loans of the character under review, the parties must be held to a performance of their respective undertakings. Midland Sav. & L. Co. v. Solomon, 71 Kan. 185, 79 Pac. 1077; United States Sav. & L. Co. v. Beckley, 137 Ala. 119, 62 L.R.A. 33, 97 Am. St. Rep. 19, 33 So. 934; Pioneer Sav. & L. Co. v. Cannon, 96 Tenn. 599, 33 L.R.A. 112, 54 Am. St. Rep. 858, 36 S. W. 386; United States Sav. & L. Co. v. Shain, 8 N. D. 136, 77 N. W. 1006; Bennett v. Eastern Bldg. & L. Asso. 177 Pa. 233, 238, 34 L.R.A. 595, 55 Am. St. Rep. 723, 35 Atl. 684; Hieronymus v. New York Nat. Bldg. & L. Asso. (C. C.) 101 Fed. 12; Dacey, Conf. L. pp. 563, 567.

The case is unaffected by act Cong. February 18, 1901, chap. 379, 31 Stat. at L. 794, for that act by its express terms is confined to banks and trust companies authorized to do business in the Indian Territory. Brewer v. Rust, 20 Okla. 776, 95 Pac. 233; Taylor v. Merrell, 22 Okla. 18, 97 Pac. 571; Sulphur Bank & T. Co. v. Medlock, 25 Okla. 73, 105 Pac. 321. Neither is the case influenced by the statutes of Arkansas in force by congressional enactment in the Indian Territory, making all contracts for a greater rate of interest than 10 per centum per annum void, both as to principal and interest (§ 4732, Mansfield's Dig.), for the reason that the rate of interest paid by Beats was contingent upon the length of time required to mature the shares of stock. It was so held in Lindsay v. Chickasha Bldg. & L. Asso. 39 Okla. 12, 130 Pac. 570, and is the settled rule of decision in Arkansas. Reeve v. Ladies' Bldg. Asso. 56 Ark. 335, 18 L.R.A. 129, 19 S. W. 917; Taylor v. Van Buren Bldg. Asso. 56 Ark. 340, 19 S. W. 918; Roberts v. American Bldg. & L. Asso. 62 Ark. 572, 33 L.R.A. 744, 54 Am. St. Rep. 309, 36 S. W. 1085; Black v. Tompkins, 63 Ark. 502, 39 S. W. 553. See also Spain v. Hamilton (Spain v. Brent) 1 Wall. 604, 17 L. ed. 619. Regardless, then, of the terms of the agreement making the contract solvable according to the laws of Colorado, we find that it inveighed against no policy of the territory where the contract was entered into. Being a valid and binding contract, it remains unaffected by any change in our form of government brought about by the admission of the states into the Union. Const. § 1, art. 25.

Answering the claim that under § 1523, Comp. Laws 1909 (§ 1326, Rev. Laws 1910), any rate charged by a foreign building and loan association in excess of 1 per cent per month upon the amount loaned should be usurious and subject such company or association to the penalties for usury, provided under the laws of this state, it need only be said that the statute has no application, for the reason that the transaction arose in the Indian Territory prior to statehood.

Having determined that the trial court erred in its construction of the Colorado statutes, it follows that the judgment must be reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to proceed further in accordance with the views herein expressed.

All the Justices concur.

Annotation—Conflict of laws as to usury.

The earlier cases on the question now under annotation are cited and analyzed in a previous note,<sup>1</sup> to which references will be made throughout the present annotation in support of the principles and rules therein stated, without again citing or setting out those cases. That note is also referred to for some points which are not touched in the present annotation, because they have received no further development in the later cases. The applicability to cases involving interstate elements, of statutes forbidding corporations to plead usury, has been elsewhere treated.<sup>2</sup> The question whether the Federal courts are bound by the decisions of the state courts in relation to usury is not within the scope of this annotation.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> 62 L.R.A. 33.
L.R.A.1916D.

<sup>2</sup> See note to Stack v. Detour Lumber & Cedar Co. 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 616

This annotation proceeds upon the assumption that if a contract is governed in respect of usury by the law of a state or country other than that in which the action is brought, the contents of that law has been proven or conceded. The proper course when that is not true, including the presumption to be indulged in regard to the foreign law, is elsewhere treated.<sup>3a</sup>

As affected by penal or remedial character of usury law, or by public policy of forum.

It is a well-established principle of private international law, operating by way of exception to the general principles that would otherwise refer a contract to a foreign law, that the courts of one state or country will not execute the penal laws of another.<sup>4</sup> This principle has been applied to usury laws in so far as they merely impose a penalty by way of punishment for the exaction of excessive interest.<sup>5</sup> There may, however, be some doubt as to the propriety of the application of the principle to usury laws in view of the strict and narrow criterion of penal laws in an international sense, adopted by the United States Supreme Court in a leading case.<sup>6</sup>

An interesting and somewhat puzzling question has arisen where the foreign statute, instead of declaring the contract void for usury, merely provides for the forfeiture of a certain amount measured by usurious interest exacted,—e. g., two or three fold such usurious interest. Some courts in that case have refused to give effect to the foreign statute, even when interposed as a defense to an action upon the contract, notwithstanding that the statute contemplated that the amount of the forfeiture might be deducted from the amount otherwise recoverable, and judgment rendered for the balance only, for the reason that such statute was penal only, and did not affect the validity of the contract.<sup>7</sup> The better view seems to be that a defense based on such a statute should be allowed.<sup>8</sup>

If usury statutes were regarded as remedial rather than substantive, it would follow that the law of the forum on the subject should be applied irrespective of the proper law of the contract. But while in a few cases the courts have refused to apply the usury law of another state for the reason that its provisions were remedial, and not substantive,<sup>9</sup> there seem to be no cases in which a foreign contract—i. e., a contract which, as regards matters of substance, is governed by the law of another jurisdiction—has been subjected to the local law upon the theory that its provisions were remedial.<sup>9a</sup> The usury laws often strike at the very foundation of the contract and declare it void; and it is universally agreed that the courts of another state or country will recognize the effect of the foreign statute in that respect and refuse to enforce the contract.<sup>10</sup> Upon the other hand, while the courts, as above shown, sometimes refuse to apply the usury statute of another state or country upon the ground that it is penal or remedial, they generally agree that if the contract is free from usury tested by the proper law, i. e., the law governing the substantive rights of the parties, it will be enforced according to its tenor, notwithstanding that it would be usurious by the law of the forum.<sup>10a</sup> There are

<sup>3</sup> See on that question note in 40 L.R.A. (N.S.) 428.

<sup>3a</sup> See notes in 67 L.R.A. 33; 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 261; and 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 40.

<sup>4</sup> 5 R. C. L. 1033.

<sup>5</sup> See note in 62 L.R.A. 42.

<sup>6</sup> Thus, in Huntington v. Attrill (1892) 146 U. S. 657, 36 L. ed. 1123, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 224, not, however, involving the question of usury, the court said: "The question whether a statute of one state which in some aspects may be called penal is a penal law in the international sense, so that it cannot be enforced in the courts of another state, depends upon the question whether its purpose is to punish an offense against the public justice of the state, or to afford a private remedy to a person injured by wrongful act." It is to be observed, however, that the criterion thus declared is stricter than the facts of the case required; and the courts have generally L.R.A.1916D.

adopted a broader criterion in this regard. See Whart. Conf. L. 3d ed. § 4b.

<sup>7</sup> See note in 62 L.R.A. 42.

<sup>8</sup> Ibid.

<sup>9</sup> See note in 62 L.R.A. 45.

<sup>9a</sup> Such an attempt was made in Shrick and v. Lacon (1906) 22 Times L. R. (Eng.) 245, in respect of the provisions of the English moneylenders' act to the effect that "where proceedings are taken in any court" by a money lender for the recovery of money lent, the court may reopen the transaction. But Mr. Justice Ridley was of a different opinion, and held that the act was inapplicable to a loan made and payable in India. And his conclusion was followed by Mr. Justice Darling in Velchand v. Mannars (1909) 25 Times L. R. (Eng.) 329.

<sup>10</sup> See note in 62 L.R.A. 42.

<sup>10a</sup> This is, of course, assumed by the cases cited throughout this note and the earlier note in support of the various prin-but few real exceptions to this principle.<sup>10b</sup> It is true, as subsequently pointed out, that considerations of public policy have doubtless influenced the decisions in cases which have referred the question of usury in the contracts of foreign building and loan associations to the local law; but in these cases there were many circumstances—e. g., the residence of the borrower, the location of the property by which the loan was secured, and the localization of the business of the association—tending to give a local character to the contract, and so subject it to the local law as to usury as its proper law, and not merely as the law of the forum.

General principles governing choice of law; intention.

Although the courts not infrequently profess to refer the question whether or not a contract is usurious to the law of the place where the contract was made, or the law of the place of performance,<sup>10c</sup> the fundamental principle, established by the overwhelming weight of authority, is to ascertain the intention of the parties as to the real situs of the contract and to apply that law with reference to which, in good faith, and not with the purpose of evading the law of the real situs of the contract, they intended to contract.<sup>11</sup>

It follows that when the parties have by an express stipulation in their contract designated the governing law, that stipulation is conclusive, and the law of the place so designated will determine the question whether or not the contract is usurious, if the parties acted in good faith with no purpose of evading the law of the real situs of the contract.<sup>12</sup> The express stipulation of the parties, however, is not controlling if made in evasion of the law of the real situs of the contract, or if contrary to the public policy of the forum.<sup>13</sup> When, as is usually the case, the parties have not principles and rules for ascertaining the governing law, though in some instances the application of these principles and rules has led to the selection of the law of the state in which the action was brought as the governing law, not because the lex fori, as such, controls, but because of circumstances connecting the contract or transaction with that state so as to make its law the proper law by which to determine the substantive rights of the parties. Naturally the point that it is not contrary to the public policy of the forum to enforce a contract valid by the proper law, but usurious if tested by the law of the forum, emerges more clearly in cases in which the only possible conflict was between the law of the state which was beyond question the situs of the contract and law of the forum as such. See note in 62 L.R.A. 77. See also Baxter v. Beckwith (1914) 25 Colo. App. 322, 137 Pac. 901.

<sup>10b</sup> But see a few cases in note 62 L.R.A. 77.

<sup>10c</sup> See note in 62 L.R.A. 44.

In Barras v. Young (1915) 185 Mich. 496, 152 N. W. 219, where a resident of Michigan, while temporarily in Nevada, wrote to another resident of Michigan proposing to give the latter a deed of trust on real property in the latter state, and the deed of trust was drawn up and sent to Nevada, where it was executed and returned to Michigan, the court took the view that the minds of the parties met in Michigan and that the contract was to be regarded as a Michigan contract, and also it seems to have assumed that the law of Michigan as the place of performance would prevail. As the contract in this case was not usurious tested by the law of Michigan, it would seem that the result might have been referred to the rule of the text. L.R.A.1916D.

<sup>11</sup> See note in 62 L.R.A. 44 et seq. cases cited and analyzed.

The general rule is recognized, either expressly or impliedly, by the great majority of the cases on the subject, and underlies most of the specific rules subsequently referred to throughout the note. A good statement and discussion of the principle will be found in the recent case of Crawford v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co. (1915) 86 Wash. 628, ante, 732, 150 Pac. 1155. The earlier note and cases there cited, however, should be consulted for the history of the rule and the reasons for its adoption.

<sup>12</sup> See cases cited in note in 62 L.R.A. 45; see also infra, note 36.

In Midland Sav. & L. Co. v. Solomon (1905) 71 Kan. 185, 79 Pac. 1077, involving a loan made by a building and loan association of Colorado to a resident of Kansas, the court observed that, the contract having been made in Colorado, and the sums due upon it having been made payable there, the presumption of law is that it is solvable in that state, but such a presumption is a rebuttable one, and, if nothing further appeared, the court would have the right to take into consideration extraneous facts in ascertaining the true intention of the parties; but the express provision of the contract in suit, that it was to be performed in Colorado and in all respects to be governed by, and entitled to the benefit of, the laws of that state, precluded further inquiry as to the intention of the parties, though, of course, their intention was subject to the test of good faith.

To the same effect is Goode v. Colorado Invest. Loan Co. (1911) 16 N. M. 465, 117 Pac. 856.

<sup>13</sup> Washington Nat. Bldg. & L. Assn. v. Piper (1908) 31 App. D. C. 434, 14 Ann. Cas. 734. And see also infra, note 37.

expressed their intention as to the governing law by an express stipulation in the contract, it is necessary to infer or presume it from the terms of the contract in connection with the circumstances surrounding the transaction.

As subsequently shown, the courts have formulated rules of broad application for ascertaining the intention of the parties in this respect, or imputing an intention to them, but obviously from the nature of the question these rules are not hard and fast rules,—like the rule, for instance, that the lex rei sitæ determines the requisites of the execution of a deed of real property,—but each rule rests upon an inference or presumption as to the intention of the parties drawn from one or more of the terms of the contract or circumstances of the transaction. They are therefore merely prima facie, and one rule may give way to another as additional circumstances appear, or all may yield to circumstances that have never become the basis of a formulated rule, but that nevertheless rebut the presumption upon which the formulated rules rest.<sup>14</sup> It is necessary, therefore, before applying any of the formulated rules, to examine the case in hand to ascertain if there are any facts or circumstances, whether the basis of a formulated rule or not, that either overcome the presumption upon which the rule rests, or show that the parties acted in bad faith and with an intent to evade the usury law of the real situs of the contract. The inference as to the intention of the parties must be drawn from the contract itself, viewed in the light of the situation of the parties and the circumstances attending the transaction. Though the question may involve the consideration of a wide range of circumstances, it is one of law for the court, rather than of fact for the jury.<sup>15</sup>

Rule that law upholding the contract will be applied.

So far as the question of interest generally is concerned, the broadest of the rules formulated for ascertaining the intention of the parties, or imputing an intention to them, with reference to the governing law, is that they will be presumed to have intended to contract with reference to the law of the place of payment; and so in general the question as to the right to interest or the rate of interest is referred to the law of the place of payment, conformably to the presumed intention of the parties.<sup>16</sup> The question as to interest, however, as distinguished from usury, is not within the scope of the present note.

So far as concerns the question whether or not the contract or transaction is usurious, the broadest of the formulated rules,—which, however, as already shown, is prima facie merely—is that the parties will be presumed to have intended to contract with reference to a law that would uphold their contract rather than with reference to a law that would invalidate it in whole or in part.<sup>17</sup>

This presumption cannot be invoked

<sup>14</sup> See opinion in Crawford v. Seattle R. & S. R. Co. (Wash.) supra, which states the principles on the subject substantially in the language of the text.

<sup>15</sup> The statement of the text on this point rests upon what the courts have apparently done in the cases, and upon general principles, rather than on express declarations in the case on the specific point.

In Crawford v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co. (Wash.) supra, the court observed that the presumption as to the intention of the parties was one of fact, and not of law; but the court apparently had in mind merely what is stated in the text, that there is no hard and fast rule on the subject, and that the inference must be based on the particular circumstances attending the contract in question.

In Davis v. Tandy (1904) 107 Mo. App. 437, 81 S. W. 457, in reply to the contention that in case of a contract made in one place to be performed in another, where the contract itself does not specify which law is to govern, it cannot be shown by parol evidence that the parties intended that the law of the place where it was made was to govern, as that would be contradicting or varying a written contract, the court observed that the authorities did not seem to so regard it; oral evidence is considered, not as contradicting the writing, but rather as showing by the situation and surrounding circumstances what was meant or intended by the writing. Apparently, however, the court had reference to oral evidence showing the circumstances of the transaction, and not to oral evidence relating directly to the intention of the parties.

<sup>16</sup> See note in 62 L.R.A. 37.

<sup>17</sup> See note in 62 L.R.A. 49 et seq.

The vast majority of the cases cited in this and the earlier note either expressly or impliedly recognize this rule, although, as implied in the text, it is sometimes overborne by other circumstances indicating a contrary intention, or more frequently because the parties intended to evade the law of the place to which the contract is really referable, or because it would be contrary to the public policy of the forum to give effect to their presumed intention. A good statement of the prima facie rule is found in Crawford v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co. (Wash.) supra. For the history and grounds of the rule, however, see cases cited in note for the purpose of referring the contract to the law of a state which is not the situs of any of the vital elements or significant circumstances of the transaction. In other words, the intention of the parties must be directed toward the law of some place that has a vital, and not merely a fictitious, relation to the transaction.<sup>18</sup> In most cases the result of the application of the rule has been to refer the contract either to the law of the place where it was made or to the law of the place where it was performable. The rule, however, is not necessarily confined to those alternatives. In some instances, the circumstances may be such as to indicate that the parties in good faith intended to contract with reference to the law of a place other than that in which the contract was technically made or performable. Thus, the residence or domicile of one of the parties in a certain state has occasionally, in connection with other circumstances, been regarded as sufficient to indicate a bona fide intention to contract with reference to the law of that state, although neither the lex loci contractus nor the lex loci solutionis.<sup>19</sup> But while the residence of a party to the contract is, or may be, a significant fact, yet it is only a fact to be taken into consideration with other facts in determining what law the parties had in view, and will readily yield to a manifest intention to contract with reference to the law of some other place.<sup>20</sup> Again, the place where the preliminary negotiations for the contract took place, though technically neither the lex loci contractus nor lex loci solutionis of the completed contract, may, in connection with other circumstances, be entitled to consideration in drawing the proper inference as to the intention of the parties.<sup>21</sup> in 62 L.R.A. 49 et seq. The most numerous or apparent exceptions to this principle are the cases referred to infra involving contracts of foreign building and loan associations. They are accounted for in part by the exception, inherent in the principle itself, that the intention must be bona fide, and in part by the existence in these cases of numerous circumstances tending to give the transaction a local situs and thus to support an inference of an intention to contract with reference to the local law, and in part to considerations of public policy peculiar to this class of contracts.

<sup>18</sup> See opinion in Green v. Northwestern Trust Co. (Minn.) ante, 739.

<sup>19</sup> In Crawford v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co. (1915) 86 Wash. 628, ante, 732, 150 Pac. 1155, the court applied the law of Washington as presumably that with which the parties intended to contract, although the bonds in question, which were secured by real property in Washington, were in terms payable in Illinois; this without reference to the question whether the contract was to be regarded technically as made in Washington. The result was based not only on the presumption that the parties intended to contract with reference to a law that would uphold the contract, but also on the presumption drawn from the terms of the bonds and circumstances of the transaction as a whole.

So, in Jackson v. American Mortg. Co. (1891) 88 Ga. 756, 15 S. E. 812, which contains a clear statement of the principle that the presumed intention of the parties is the criterion where there is no intent to evade the usury law of the place to which the contract is referable, the law of Georgia, by which there was no usury, was applied to notes which were payable in New York and finally delivered there, though signed by the maker in Georgia, the notes being secured by a mortgage on real property in the latter state. The court emphasized the residence of the borrower in Georgia as a circumstance pointing to an intention to contract with reference to the law of that state. The opinion suggests that, even admitting that there was no complete and final delivery of the notes and mortgage until they were put into the hands of the agent of the lender in New York, yet to effectuate the intention of the parties, and to accomplish the purposes of justice, such manual delivery there ought, on the doctrine of relation, to refer back to time and place of signing the instruments.
L.R.A.1916D.

But where a person who had purchased a lot of land lying in Georgia procured another to advance money with which to pay the balance of the purchase price, and a deed was made by the vendor to such other person, and a bond for title was executed by him, he agreeing to convey the land to the vendee upon payment of notes given to him by such vendee, and all these papers were executed in Georgia, and where it did not appear that payment was to be made or the contract consummated in any way elsewhere, the usury law of this state, and not that of the state of Florida, applied to the contract and conveyances so made, although the negotiations and parol agreements preceding the execution of the papers may have taken place in Florida. First Nat. Bank v. Rambo (1915) 143 Ga. 665, 85 S. E. 840. So held notwithstanding that by law of Georgia the contract was usurious.

<sup>20</sup> J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Tomlin (1913) 174 Mo. App. 512, 161 S. W. 236. This is assumed in most of the cases cited infra, ante 36.

<sup>21</sup> See note in 62 L.R.A. 73, under heading, "Which contract to be regarded; contract of principal and surety."

But in Knowp v. Carver (1908) 74 N. J.

When contract is usurious by lex loci contractus but not by lex loci solutionis.

When a contract would be usurious if tested by the law of the place where it is made (lex loci contractus), but not by the law of the place where it is performable (lex loci solutionis), the latter law will generally be applied in the absence of any objection based on the public policy of the forum, or of any circumstances tending to rebut the presumption that the parties intended to contract with reference to the law of the place of performance, or any indication of an intent to evade the law of the place to which the contract was referable.<sup>22</sup>

The result in this situation is sometimes referred to the general presumption that the parties intended to contract with reference to the law of the place of performance, rather than of the place of the making of their contract, but is more often referred to the presumption that the parties intended to contract with reference to a law that would uphold, rather than one that would invalidate, their contract. Upon the present hypothesis the two presumptions are coincident so far as the results are concerned.

When contract is usurious by lex loci solutionis, but not by lex loci contractus.

When a contract would be usurious tested by the law of the place where it is performable, but not by the law of the place where it was made, the presumption that the parties intended to contract with reference to a law that would sustain, rather than one that would invalidate, their contract, generally prevails over the presumption that they intended to contract with reference to the law of the place of performance; and so generally in this situation the law of the place where the contract is made will, in accordance with the presumed intention of the parties, prevail over the law of the place where it is performable.<sup>23</sup> The rule, however, may, of course, be defeated by circumstances indicating an intention to contract with reference to the law of some place other than that where the contract was made,<sup>24</sup> or indicating that there was an attempted evasion of the law of the place to which the contract was really referable.<sup>25</sup>

Effect of mortgage security; place where money is to be used; lex loci considerationis.

It is frequently declared in very general terms that contracts in relation to real property are governed by the lex rei sitæ, but, as shown in another note,<sup>26</sup> that principle is subject to many qualifications and exceptions.<sup>27</sup> And so, while there is some slight authority, especially in the earlier cases, for the view that the question of usury as affecting a mortgage is to be referred to the lex rei sitæ as such, the overwhelming weight of authority is to the effect that, a mortgage being a mere incident of the debt, the law of the place where the property is situated governs neither in respect of the debt itself nor the mortgage, so far as usury is concerned.<sup>28</sup> The rule ap-

Eq. 449, 70 Atl. 660, the court applied the law of New Jersey, by which the contract was usurious, notwithstanding that some of the preliminary negotiations for the loan were conducted in Philadelphia, upon the ground that the land was situated in New Jersey, the contract was to be performed there, the money was paid there, the papers executed and the entire transaction consummated there.

<sup>22</sup> See note in 62 L.R.A. 51 et seq.

<sup>23</sup> See note in 62 L.R.A. 55 et seq.

See also Whitlock v. Cohn (1904) 72 Ark. 83, 80 S. W. 141.

<sup>24</sup> Thus, in J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Tomlin (Mo.) supra, the law of Missouri, where the notes were payable, was applied, although it rendered the contract usurious, rather than the law of Kansas, where the maker resided and where the notes were executed, according to which the notes would not be usurious. This was upon the ground that the other circumstances of the case, which are too numerous to set out here, indicated that the contract was a Missouri contract, and overcame the pre-L.R.A.1916D.

sumption that the parties intended to contract with reference to a law that would uphold, rather than one which would invalidate, it.

<sup>25</sup> See infra, note 37, for illustrations of this exception. The exception is, of course, inherent in the conditions of the rule itself.

<sup>26</sup> Note to Hughes v. Winkelman, L.R.A. 1916A, 1007.

<sup>27</sup> Ibid.

<sup>28</sup> See notes in 55 L.R.A. 933; 62 L.R.A. 61; and 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1191. Later cases expressly sustaining this rule are Walker v. Lovitt (1911) 250 Ill. 543, 95 N. E. 631; Midland Sav. & L. Co. v. Solomon (1905) 71 Kan. 185, 79 Pac. 1077; Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Johnson (1907) 188 N. Y. 108, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1142, 80 N. E. 658, 11 Ann. Cas. 223; Exchange Bank v. McMillan (1907) 76 S. C. 561, 57 S. E. 630; Bank v. Doherty (1906) 42 Wash. 317, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1191, 114 Am. St. Rep. 123, 84 Pac. 872.

The usury statute of New York involved in Manhattan L. Ins. Co. v. Johnson (1907) 188 N. Y. 108, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1142, 80 N. E.

plies with respect to chattel mortgages as well as to mortgages on real estate.<sup>29</sup> The location of the mortgaged property is, however, frequently an important circumstance in determining the intention of the parties with reference to the governing law, or in testing their good faith, and may affect the question whether it would be contrary to the public policy of the forum to give effect to the law of the other state.<sup>30</sup>

There is some slight authority for the view that the law of the place where the money constituting the consideration for the contract is to be used governs the question as to usury.<sup>31</sup> This, however, is contrary to the great weight of authority. As a matter of fact, the place where the money is to be used has received but little consideration, even as a circumstance indicating the intention of the parties as to the governing law, though doubtless in some circumstances it may have a legitimate bearing on that question.<sup>32</sup>

The doctrine that the law of the place where the consideration is received should govern in respect of usury has been advocated with great ability by Prof. Minor in his work on Conflict of Laws, § 179, but has little support from the cases as opposed to the general principles and the subordinate rules previously stated, based on the presumed intention of the parties. The place where the consideration is received may doubtless in some cases be considered in connection with other circumstances as bearing on the presumed intention of the parties.<sup>33</sup>

Renewal contracts.

When a new contract made and payable in one state is based upon, or is in renewal of, a contract made and payable in another, it would seem upon principle that the question whether or not the new contract is usurious should be determined by the law of the place where it (the new contract) was made and payable. This, at least, is true so far as concerns the question whether or not the new obligation is usurious upon its face. Even when the contract is not usurious on its face, and the question of usury depends upon the amount of the pre-existing indebtedness, it still seems that the question is ultimately to be determined by the proper law of the new contract, although the result of the application of that law (i. e., the question whether by that law the contract is usurious) depends upon the result of the application of the law governing the original contract.<sup>34</sup> To illustrate, if a

658, 11 Ann. Cas. 223, provides that "all bonds, bills, notes, assurances, conveyances, all other contracts or securities whatsoever, . . . whereupon or whereby there shall be reserved or taken or secured . . . any greater sum or greater value for the loan or forbearance of any money, goods, or other things in action, than is above described, shall be void." Gray, J., said: "What we are asked to hold is that the law of the place where the property happens to be shall govern, rather than the law of the place where the loan was made, of which the conveyance was but an incident. In my opinion, the meaning or intent of our usury statute is that the validity of the conveyance or mortgage is determined by the validity of the agreement of the parties, and I think the law of the place of its making governs as to that."

The rule stated in the text is also supported by the results in many other cases. For example, as shown in the note in 62 L.R.A. 65, and infra, note 36, many cases have applied the law of the state in which a building and loan association was domiciled, notwithstanding that the suit was to foreclose a mortgage on real property in another state, by the law of which the transaction would have been usurious.

<sup>29</sup> Trower Bros. v. Hamilton (1904) 179 Mo. 205, 77 S. W. 1081; Casner v. Hoskins (1913) 64 Or. 282, 128 Pac. 841, 130 Pac. 55.

<sup>30</sup> See infra, note 37.
L.R.A.1916D.

<sup>31</sup> See note in 62 L.R.A. 62.

<sup>32</sup> Ibid.

<sup>33</sup> See note in 62 L.R.A. 63 et seq.

<sup>34</sup> In Scott v. Fabacher (1910) 100 C. C. A. 147, 176 Fed. 229, a contract was made and performable in Texas by which the lender was to receive in addition to interest a part of the profits which the borrower might realize upon a certain transaction then in contemplation; subsequently, a new note was given in Louisiana, where the borrower resided, for an amount representing the lender's share of the profits according to the original agreement. The court held that the contract was usurious by the law of Texas, but did not say that the law of Texas would supplant the law of Louisiana. So far as any facts to the contrary appearing in the opinion are concerned, the result might have been expressed in the formula that the law of Louisiana governed as to whether or not the note in suit was usurious, but that the law of Texas must be consulted to determine whether at the time the note in Louisiana was given there was any indebtedness constituting a consideration. Obviously, upon the assumption that, by the law of Texas, the promise to pay the lender a share of the profits was void for usury, there was no consideration for the note, which was made in Louisiana, and it would therefore be invalid even according to the law of that state, and even if it were to be assumed that the note would not have been void by that law if note for $1,080, bearing interest at 8 per cent, is made and payable in a state in which that rate of interest is allowed, the question whether it is usurious depends upon the amount of the indebtedness for which it was given. If it appears that the note represented the principal and interest at 8 per cent for one year, on a loan for $1,000 made and payable in another state in which 6 per cent interest is the maximum rate, it is apparent that the new note is usurious, even tested by the law of the place where it is made and payable, even though, on the present hypothesis, it would not have been if the original note had been made and payable in that state. This is simply an illustration of the point, which has many other illustrations, that an element affecting the result of the application of the law of one state may have antecedently received its character from the law of another state. While in the case supposed the result is practically the same as if the law governing the original contract had been directly applied to the new one, the distinction is of some practical importance when the question concerns the law by which the consequences of the usury are to be determined. The adoption of the view that the proper law of the original obligation governs the question whether the new obligation is usurious naturally leads to the conclusion that the question as to the consequences of usury is also to be determined by that law,<sup>35</sup> whereas, in the other view, the conclusion would seem to be that the consequences of usury should be determined by the governing law of the new contract, and they may be quite different from those which would follow from the other law.

Contracts of foreign building and loan associations.

The contracts of foreign building and loan associations are subject to the general principles previously formulated in this note for the determination of the governing law with respect to usury; but they possess certain features peculiar to them as a class, affecting the application of those principles, which make it desirable to consider them separately.

The typical situation in this class of cases presents a note or bond payable at the home office of the association, made by a resident of another state (the state in which the question arises), secured by a mortgage on real property in the latter state; a contract valid if governed by the law of the former state, but usurious if governed by the law of the latter state. In some cases the contract is regarded as made (i. e., consummated) in the state of the borrower's residence, and in others in the state of the association's domicile. In some of the cases the contract expressly stipulates that it is to be governed by the law of the state where the association is domiciled. There is, however, considerable variation between the cases as to the facts bearing upon the localization of the business of the foreign association, and that to some extent accounts for the difference in the the original contract, as well as the new contract, had been made in that state.

<sup>35</sup> This was the view taken in Bowman v. Miller (1874) 25 Gratt. (Va.) 331, 18 Am. Rep. 686, holding that, a note payable in Virginia, and not usurious on its face, was to be governed as to the effect of usury by the law of Maryland, by which only the illegal interest is forfeited, a recovery of the principal and legal interest being permitted, rather than by the law of Virginia, which avoids the entire contract. The decision was upon the ground that the renewal was not a novation of the previously existing debt, and the contract was still a Maryland contract to be governed by the law of Maryland.

And upon the authority of the Bowman Case, it was held in Miller v. Prudential Bkg. & T. Co. (1907) 63 W. Va. 107, 59 S.E. 977, that the law of West Virginia, by which a contract is not wholly void for usury, was applied rather than the law of New York, where the notes in question were made and payable, by which usury renders a contract void in toto, for the reason that the notes were merely in renewal of a contract governed by the law of West Virginia, and were usurious only because the original contract was usurious. As suggested in the text, the notes in question, upon the assumption that they were based on a previous transaction which, by the proper law of that transaction (West Virginia), was usurious, would be usurious even tested by the law of New York, for the reason that on this assumption they would represent an amount in excess of the debt due. They would be none the less usurious because it was necessary to apply the law of West Virginia to the old obligation to determine the amount of the debt, or because neither the old nor new obligation would have been usurious if both had been governed by the law of New York. Clearly, if the notes had been usurious upon their face tested by the law of New York, the law of New York would have fixed the consequences for engaging in the unlawful transaction; and it is not apparent why it should not fix the consequences for engaging in the transaction in question, which was equally contrary to the law of New York.

decisions. Regarding simply the results of the cases which have dealt with the situation above outlined, the cases appear to be in hopeless conflict. This conflict, however, does not indicate a difference of view as to the fundamental principles previously stated for the determination of the governing law with respect to usury. It is due in part to a difference in the facts and circumstances, in part to a difference of opinion among the courts as to the inference to be drawn as to the intention of the parties or as to their good faith; and in part, doubtless, to the difference of opinion as to whether the enforcement of the foreign contract would be contrary to the public policy of the forum.

In many cases presenting the typical situation above outlined, the courts have, in accordance with the presumed intention of the parties, referred the question of usury to the law of the domicile of the association, by which the contract was not usurious, although it would have been usurious by the local law.<sup>36</sup>

<sup>36</sup> See cases cited in note in 62 L.R.A. 64. Later cases belonging to the same class are Lewis v. Clark (1904) 64 C. C. A. 138, 129 Fed. 570; Allen v. Riddle (1904) 141 Ala. 621, 37 So. 680 (involving express stipulation that all contracts should be deemed made at home office); Beckley v. United States Sav. & L. Co. (1906) 147 Ala. 195, 40 So. 655, following decision in (1902) 137 Ala. 119, 62 L.R.A. 33, 97 Am. St. Rep. 19, 33 So. 934, on former appeal; Midland Sav. & L. Co. v. Solomon (1905) 71 Kan. 185, 79 Pac. 1077 (express stipulation that contract is to be governed by the law of the domicile of the association); Steinman v. Midland Sav. & L. Co. (1908) 78 Kan. 479, 96 Pac. 860 (express provision that contract is to be governed by the law of the domicile of association); Jenkins v. Union Sav. Asso. (1916) — Minn. —, 165 N. W. 765 (finding of agreement that contract should be governed by the law of the domicile of association); MIDLAND SAV. & L. CO. v. BEATS, ante, 745; Legg v. Midland Sav. & L. Co. (1916) — Okla. —, 154 Pac. 682; Equitable Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Corley (1905) 72 S. C. 404, 110 Am. St. Rep. 615, 52 S. E. 48; Columbian Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Rice (1903) 68 S. C. 236, 47 S. E. 63, 1 Ann. Cas. 239 (notwithstanding that the by-laws permitted members to make payment to local treasurer, who, however, is declared to be agent of member, and not of association); Middle States Loan Bldg. & Constr. Co. v. Miller (1905) 104 Va. 464, 51 S. E. 846.

<sup>37</sup> See cases cited in note in 62 L.R.A. 67. Later cases belonging to that class are Washington Nat. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Pifer (1908) 31 App. D. C. 434, 14 Ann. Cas. 734 (notwithstanding express stipulation that contract should be governed by the law of L.R.A.1916D.

Upon the other hand, many cases involving such a situation have applied the local law notwithstanding that the effect was to render the contract usurious, whereas by the law of the domicile of the association it would not have been usurious.<sup>37</sup>

Without passing upon the question of conflict of laws as an independent question, the position taken in the latter class of cases has been held by the United States Supreme Court to involve no denial of "full faith and credit" to the public acts and records of the state where the association is domiciled.<sup>38</sup>

It is apparent from what has already been said that the results in the latter class of cases involve the refusal to apply either the prima facie rule which rests upon the presumption that the parties intended to contract with reference to the law of the place of payment, or the rule that they intended to contract with reference to the law of the place which will uphold their contract rather than one which will invalidate it,—the

the domicile of the association); Washington Nat. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Conley (1908) 31 App. D. C. 439; Washington Nat. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Hill (1908) 31 App. D. C. 440; Washington Nat. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Nichols (1908) 31 App. D. C. 441; Royal Loan Asso. v. Forter (1904) 68 Kan. 468, 75 Pac. 484, 1 Ann. Cas. 794 (loan made through local board); Hoskins v. Rochester Sav. & L. Asso. (1903) 133 Mich. 505, 95 N. W. 566 (expressly decided on authority of National Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Birch (1900) 124 Mich. 57, 83 Am. St. Rep. 311, 82 N. W. 837, set out in the note in 62 L.R.A. 69); Cobe v. Summers (1906) 143 Mich. 117, 106 N. W. 707 (holding that the fact that the local board organized in Michigan was not expressly provided for in the articles of the association did not affect the question); Land Title & T. Co. v. Fulmer (1904) 24 Pa. Super. Ct. 256 (mortgage executed to a Pennsylvania corporation as trustee for the foreign association); Galletley v. Strickland (1906) 74 S. C. 394, 54 S. E. 576 (by-laws permitted payments to be made to local treasurer, and they were so made); Floyd v. National Loan & Invest. Co. (1901) 49 W. Va. 327, 54 L.R.A. 536, 87 Am. St. Rep. 805, 38 S. E. 653; Miller v. Prudential Bkg. & T. Co. (1907) 63 W. Va. 107, 59 S. E. 977 (decided on authority of Floyd Case).

<sup>38</sup> National Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Brahan (1903) 193 U. S. 635, 48 L. ed. 823, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 532, affirming (1902) 80 Miss. 407, 57 L.R.A. 793, 31 So. 840, cited in note in 62 L.R.A. 67; this case was followed by National Mut. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Farnham (1904) 194 U. S. 630, 48 L. ed. 1158, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 858, affirming (1902) 81 Miss. 364, 33 So. 2, also cited in note in 62 L.R.A. 67.

two rules, on the present hypothesis, being coincident. The cases of this class do not ordinarily repudiate those rules, but regard the situation in question as presenting an exception. They do not always make it clear whether the exception rests upon the ground that the other circumstances of the case overcame the presumption upon which the general rules rest, or indicated that the purpose of the parties was to evade the local usury law, or upon the ground that it would be contrary to the public policy of the forum to give effect to the contract. When these cases are examined with reference to the particular circumstances upon which the courts based their decision that the state of the borrower's residence was the real situs of the contract, or that the attempt to refer the contract to the law of the domicile of the association was for the purpose of evading the usury law of the former state, it will generally be found that, while each case depends to a certain extent upon its own circumstances, and while the location of the premises, the place where the proceeds of the loan were received and were to be used, and other circumstances are sometimes mentioned, yet the main distinguishing circumstance is the localization of the business of the foreign association within the state.<sup>39</sup> The fact that payments were permitted to be made to local officers or boards has sometimes been given considerable weight in favor of applying the local law.<sup>40</sup>

It is difficult to institute a comparison in this regard between the cases that apply the law of the domicile of the association and those that apply the local law, for the reason that the latter naturally place greater emphasis than do the former upon the facts respecting localization. Doubtless many of the cases applying the law of the domicile of the association have done so notwithstanding facts indicating a considerable localization of the business of the association.<sup>41</sup>

There are two opposing principles of public policy involved in the question of usury in the contracts of foreign building and loan associations. Upon the one hand, the courts which apply the law of the domicile of the association are doubtless influenced by the recognition of the desirability, even the necessity, in view of the mutual character of these associations, of subjecting their contracts to a common law. Upon the other hand, the courts that apply the local law are often clearly influenced by the view that it would be contrary to public policy to place foreign associations in a better position as regards usury than that occupied by domestic associations, and that the local policy concerning usury should be preserved notwithstanding the features of the contracts which point to the law of the domicile of the association as the proper law.<sup>42</sup> Doubtless the relative importance of these general considerations has had as great, if not greater, effect on the actual results than the particular facts of the individual cases.

Law determining consequences of usury.

As already shown, the governing law of the question whether or not a contract or transaction is usurious is gen-

<sup>39</sup> See note in 62 L.R.A. 68.

<sup>40</sup> See note in 62 L.R.A. 69.

In the later case of Galletley v. Strickland (1906) 74 S. C. 394, 54 S. E. 576, the court said that the turning point was the relation of the local treasurer to the association; (a Virginia corporation) that if he was the agent of the borrower to transmit to the association, then payments to him could not operate to remove the inference that payments were to be made at the home office; but if he was the agent of the association, then it would seem that the parties contemplated a contract to the effect that payment was to be either in Virginia or at the local branch in South Carolina, in which case the contract was performable in South Carolina, and is distinguishable from the contract in the Rice Case because of the provision in that case that the local treasurer was the agent of the member. No reference was made in this case to the South Carolina statute referred to at page 65 of the note in 62 L.R.A. L.R.A.1916D.

<sup>41</sup> See note in 62 L.R.A. 70.

<sup>42</sup> Thus in Floyd v. National Loan & Invest. Co. (1901) 49 W. Va. 327, 54 L.R.A. 536, 87 Am. St. Rep. 805, 38 S. E. 653, the court declared that "a foreign corporation coming into this state to transact business must conform to the law of this state, if there be any, regulating similar corporations organized under the laws of this state; and its contract, although in terms solvable in the foreign state in which such corporation has its domicile, must be such a contract as a similar domestic corporation is authorized to make, or the courts of this state cannot enforce, or permit the enforcement of, its performance." The court further observed that the case involved the status in the state of a foreign building and loan association that has complied with the statutory conditions of doing business in the state and the nature of the contract which it can make under such conditions.

erally determined by reference to the actual or presumed intention of the parties. But when the contract is usurious by the law of any place to which it might reasonably be referred,—and, as already shown, this condition ordinarily, though not necessarily, obtains when it is usurious both by the lex loci contractus and the lex loci solutionis,—the weight of authority, although there is a conflict on the point, is to the effect that the consequences of the usury are to be determined by the lex loci contractus rather than by the lex loci solutionis.<sup>43</sup> The reason for the rule seems to be that, the parties, ex hypothesi, having made an invalid and illegal contract according to both the lex loci contractus and lex loci solutionis, there is no question as to their intention, and that the penalty or consequence of their entering into an unlawful contract is necessarily to be determined by the law of the place where the contract is made.

Some cases have apparently taken the view that the consequences of exacting usury are to be determined by the law of the forum, irrespectively of the proper law of the contract.<sup>44</sup> The better view, however, seems to be that the consequences of the usury pertain to the substantive rights of the parties, and are not to be determined by the lex fori as such,<sup>45</sup> though it may be otherwise when a party asks for affirmative relief from a usurious contract made and payable in another state.<sup>46</sup>

<sup>43</sup> See cases cited in note in 62 L.R.A. 60; and later case Davis v. Tandy (1904) 107 Mo. App. 437, 81 S. W. 457. But see contra cases cited at page 61, and also Ringer v. Virgin Timber Co. (1914) 213 Fed. 1001, and Jewell v. Wright (1864) 30 N. Y. 259, 86 Am. Dec. 372.

The hypothesis of the proposition as stated in the earlier note (62 L.R.A. 60), though correct as applied to the cases there cited, is somewhat too narrow and specific for the purposes of a general proposition. It should embrace the usurious character of the contract by any law to which it might be reasonably referred, since occasionally, as already shown, a contract, although usurious both by the lex loci contractus and lex loci solutionis, may be referred to the law of some other place by which it is not usurious.

<sup>44</sup> See note in 62 L.R.A. 77, especially Meares v. Finlayson (1899) 55 S. C. 105, 32 S. E. 986.

So, in Granite City Nat. Bank v. Cross (1911) 188 Ill. App. 242, while the court referred the question whether or not the note was usurious to the law of Missouri, where it was made and payable, yet, having found that it was usurious by the law of Missouri, it applied a statute of Illinois, which permits a recovery of only the principal where the debt is usurious, and the rule of that state to the effect that all payments made on interest shall be applied on the principal, upon the ground that the law of the forum governed as to the mode and extent of the remedy.

<sup>45</sup> See note in 62 L.R.A. 77.

So, in Trower Bros. Co. v. Hamilton (1904) 179 Mo. 205, 77 S. W. 1081, it being held that the note and chattel mortgage in question were Kansas contracts, the law of that state, which requires usurious payments to be applied as payments of the principal and interest, but does not invalidate the lien of the security, was applied rather than the law of Missouri, by which the lien would be invalidated.
L.R.A.1916D.

In Bowman v. Miller, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 331, 18 Am. Rep. 686, supra, note 35, the court arguendo takes the position that the law of the place which determines whether or not a contract is usurious is to be applied in determining the effect of usury, and that if the contract in suit was governed by the law of Maryland, and was usurious by the law of that state, it was governed as to the effect of usury by the law of Maryland, by which only the illegal interest is forfeited and recovery of the principal and legal interest is permitted, rather than by the law of Virginia, lex fori, by which the entire amount, principal and interest, would be forfeited.

It will be observed that though the cases cited supra, note 43, differ as to whether the lex loci contractus or lex loci solutionis governs as to the consequences of usury, they assume that the question relates to the substantive rights of the parties, and is not governed by the lex fori as such.

In Davis v. Tandy, for example, the court, upon the assumption that the contract was usurious both by the law of Texas, where it was made, and by the law of Missouri, where it was payable, expressly held that the law of Texas as lex loci contractus would prevail over the law of Missouri as lex loci solutionis as to the consequences of the usury, and necessarily assumed that the lex loci contractus would prevail over the lex fori, although the question was not discussed from that point of view.

While in Miller v. Prudential Bkg. & T. Co. (1907) 63 W. Va. 107, 59 S. E. 977, supra, note 35, the law of West Virginia, in which state the action was brought, was applied in determining the consequences of usury. This was because, in the view which the court took, that the law was the proper law of the contract, and not because it was the law of the forum.

<sup>46</sup> Note in 62 L.R.A. 78.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

C. D. DOTSON, Piff. in Err.,

v.

EFFIE A. SKAGGS, Exrx., etc., of John S.
Summers, Deceased.

(— W. Va. —, 87 S. E. 460.)

Bills and notes — indorsement by maker — effect.

1. A negotiable note payable to the maker and another jointly, not partners, indorsed in blank by the maker, does not imply a promise by the maker to pay such joint payee.

For other cases, see Bills and Notes, III. b, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — possession.

2. Possession of such note by either joint payee is presumptively possession by both. For other cases, see Evidence, II. k, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — action by joint payee.

3. A declaration on such note by one joint payee holding the note, indorsed in blank by the other, who is also the maker, is bad on demurrer.

For other cases, see Pleading, VII. c, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — judgment on matters not in issue — reversal.

4. A final judgment for defendant upon issues joined upon a bad declaration, to which a demurrer was interposed and overruled, will not be reversed for error in overruling the demurrer, when it plainly appears from the averments and proof that the declaration cannot be amended without introducing a new cause of action. In such case plaintiff is not prejudiced by an affirmation, because the judgment is no bar to a cause of action in no wise pleaded or otherwise in issue.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. m, 2, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(December 14, 1915.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Greenbrier County to review a judgment in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a promissory note. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. R. F. Dunlap and Thomas Coleman, for plaintiff in error:

The note, being made payable to Summers himself as one of the payees, was invalid as to him, but he completed the execution of the note as maker when he placed his name on the back thereof.

Headnotes by WILLIAMS, J.

Note. — As to effect of note made payable to order of maker and another, see annotation following this case, post, 763. L.R.A.1916D.

Pickering v. Cording, 92 Ind. 306, 47 Am. Rep. 147; Dan. Neg. Inst. § 130; Parsons, Bills & Notes, 17, 18; Dubois v. Mason, 127 Mass. 37, 34 Am. Rep. 336. See also Hall v. Burton, 29 Ill. 321, 81 Am. Dec. 310; Smalley v. Wight, 44 Me. 442, 69 Am. Dec. 113; Scull v. Edwards, 13 Ark. 24, 56 Am. Dec. 294.

One may make a valid and binding signature to a note by the use of a name or term of description which he has adopted for that purpose.

4 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 109, and footnote, No. 9.

In the absence of any competent evidence disproving or tending to disprove the claim of the plaintiff, the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment non obstante veredicto.

Mason v. Harper's Ferry Bridge Co. 28 W. Va. 652.

A judgment non obstante may be entered not alone because of defects shown on the mandatory record, but also when there is no competent evidence in support of the verdict.

Murray v. Blackledge, 71 N. C. 492; Holland v. Kindregan, 155 Pa. 156, 25 Atl. 1077.

Mr. Thomas N. Read, for defendant in error:

John S. Summers could not be held as maker of the note under the circumstances, but only as indorser.

Bank of Huntington v. Hysell, 22 W. Va. 142; National Exch. Bank v. McElfish Clay Mfg. Co. 48 W. Va. 406, 37 S. E. 541.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

C. D. Dotson sued Effie A. Skaggs, executrix of John S. Summers, deceased, in assumpsit upon a negotiable note. Defendant demurred to the declaration, and the demurrer was overruled, and she pleaded the general issue and non est factum, and tendered another special plea of limitations, which, on motion of the plaintiff, was rejected. The trial of the issues joined resulted in a verdict and judgment for defendant, and plaintiff is here on writ of error.

The note and indorsements thereon are as follows:

Parkersburg, W. Va., Sept. 25, 1903.
$1,500.

Four months after date we promise to pay to the order of C. D. Dotson and John S. Summers fifteen hundred dollars. Value received, negotiable and payable at the Second National Bank of Parkersburg.

Steamer John S. Summers,
John S. Summers, Owner.

Indorsements on back of note: "C. D. Dotson. John S. Summers."

It is proven by competent witnesses that the signature, "Steamer John S. Summers, John S. Summers, Owner," and the name "John S. Summers" on the back of the note, are in the handwriting of John S. Summers, deceased. He must have intended, by the use of that signature, to become the maker of the note. 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. 6th ed. § 75. He made it payable to himself and C. D. Dotson jointly, and why he made it in that form does not appear. Although made before the new negotiable instruments act was passed, the note was negotiable under the old statute, being payable at a bank in this state. A negotiable note payable to the order of the maker is a nullity until indorsed by him and negotiated. 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 130. One cannot be both maker and payee at the same time. He cannot be both debtor and creditor by the same transaction, and, to give any effect to such a note, the maker must negotiate it. However, in this instance the maker is not sole payee, but joint payee with another; the two not being general partners. What, then, is the legal effect, as concerns the original parties, of the indorsement in blank by the joint payee, who is also maker? Does it pass legal title to the other? Certainly not, because, not being partners, it would require their joint indorsement to pass title.

"If several persons, not partners, are payees or indorsees of a bill or note, it should be indorsed by all of them, unless it be expressed to be payable to the order of either of them, or to the order of certain ones of them, in which cases their indorsement would suffice." 1 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 684.

"Where negotiable paper is payable to two or more persons, there is no presumption that one indorses and transfers it for the others, and if the title is to be transferred, it must be by the indorsement of all." Kaufman v. State Sav. Bank, 151 Mich. 65, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 630, 123 Am. St. Rep. 259, 114 N. W. 863.

"If a note be made payable to several persons, not partners, it can only be transferred by a joint indorsement of all of them; but, when it is made to two or more persons as partners, it may be transferred by the indorsement of any one of them." Ryhiner v. Feickert, 92 Ill. 305, 34 Am. Rep. 130.

"The joint payee of a promissory note cannot indorse it either in his own name alone, or in his own name and that of his copayee. They are not considered partners, either in a commercial or legal sense of the term." Wood v. Wood, 16 N. J. L. 428.

That no presumption of a partnership arises from the fact that they were joint payees was decided in the following cases also: Sayre v. Frick, 7 Watts & S. 383, L.R.A.1916D.

62 Am. Dec. 249, and Haydon v. Nicoletti, 18 Nev. 290, 3 Pac. 473. The last-cited case also holds that joint payees must all join in the transfer of title.

Possession of the note by Dotson does not import exclusive ownership by him. Being a joint note, possession by one is presumptively possession of both. Wood v. Wood, supra, and Brown v. Dickenson, 27 Gratt. 690. Both could not have physical possession at the same time; hence possession by either is presumptively a joint possession.

No doubt Dotson, by adding his indorsement in due course, could have passed title to a third party, but that he did not do. Summers by his indorsement did not become liable to Dotson. As between the two he was not technically an indorser, because one joint payee cannot pass title; it requires a joint indorsement to do so; and that was never done. True, Dotson's name also appears on the back of the note, but that gives it no additional effect, as he claims to be the sole owner of it. He avers in his declaration that he has been the owner of the note ever since it was indorsed by Summers; that by such indorsement he became liable to pay him the full amount of the note. The declaration avers no other promise, nor was there any attempt to prove any promise, other than what the note and indorsement import, and they do not imply a promise to Dotson, the joint payee. The legal import of Summers' indorsement was implied authority to Dotson to negotiate the note, which he did not do, but could have done by completing the indorsement and passing title to a third party. Whatever interest, if any, Dotson has in the note, is purely equitable, and no action at law can be maintained upon it. We are cited to no authorities for the proposition that one joint payee becomes liable to the other by his indorsement in blank, and we have been unable to find any in support thereof.

The supreme court of Virginia, in Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Walton, 96 Va. 435, 31 S. E. 890, held that an assignment of his interest in a negotiable note by one joint payee to the other, and a subsequent transfer of the note, in due course, by such other, to a third party, rendered the former liable to the holder as if he had indorsed it in blank. But the contrary effect was given to the same kind of an assignment in a similar case by the appellate court of Indiana. Bond v. Holloway, 18 Ind. App. 251, 47 N. E. 838. However, the point decided in those cases is not exactly the question presented in this case. Here the note was never negotiated, and is now in the hands of one of the original parties, who is suing to recover on the note from the estate of the other. Not exactly in point, but apropos to the question here involved, see Pitcher v. Barrows, 17 Pick. 361, 28 Am. Dec. 306, and Reid v. Windsor, 111 Va. 825, 69 S. E. 1101.

There being no liability by one joint payee to the other because of his indorsement in blank of a negotiable note, it necessarily follows that Summers's estate is not liable to Dotson on the note sued on. The declaration, averring no other grounds of liability, fails to state a good cause of action, and the demurrer thereto should have been sustained. The overruling of the demurrer is cross assigned as error, and, in disposing of the case, this is the first assignment to be considered. This error would be sufficient cause for reversing the judgment and remanding the cause, with leave to plaintiff to amend his declaration, if we did not see that he cannot be prejudiced by an affirmance. It clearly appears from the averments of the declaration and the proof that plaintiff will be unable to amend without averring new matter which, in legal effect, would constitute a new cause of action, and, as to such, the judgment in the present suit would not be a bar. State v. McEldowney, 54 W. Va. 695, 47 S. E. 650; Doonan v. Glynn, 28 W. Va. 715; and Western Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Virginia Cannel Coal Co. 10 W. Va. 250.

Defendant was entitled to a judgment upon the issue of law presented by the demurrer, but, having obtained a final judgment on the facts, it would be needless to reverse it in order that another might be rendered in her favor on the law. Wherefore we will affirm the judgment. In view of the court's rulings in the matter of instructions to the jury, which mainly accord with our view of the law as herein expressed, except defendant's peremptory instruction, which was improperly refused, we do not understand why the demurrer was not sustained.

Numerous other assignments and cross assignments are made, but, in view of the conclusion already reached, it is not necessary to consider them.

Annotation—Effect of note made payable to order of maker and another.

Authority on the effect of a note made payable to the order of the maker and another is limited. It is stated in Jeneson v. Jeneson (1872) 66 Ill. 259, that payment of a note given to the heirs of a certain person, of whom the maker is one, can only be enforced in a court of equity.

A statute the purpose of which is that a party who makes an instrument negotiable in form payable to his own order shall be estopped from asserting, as against one who brings an action upon the instrument, that he has not indorsed it, where he has received a valid consideration therefor, is stated in Main v. Hilton (1880) 54 Cal. 110, to apply as well where the instrument is payable to the maker and to a third person (in case it has been indorsed by such third person) "as where it is made payable to the maker alone." It appears from the statement of facts, however, that L.R.A.1916D.

the note sued upon in this case was signed by one of the payees and others. It was indorsed by the other payee, and delivered for a valuable consideration.

The note involved in Pease v. Dwight (1848) 6 How. (U. S.) 190, 12 L. ed. 399, was made payable to a firm, of which the maker was a member, and another, but it was shown that the latter had no interest in the note, and the only question in the case was whether one who had taken the note upon the indorsement of the firm alone could maintain an action thereon. As to this question, that is, indorsement by one of two joint payees or indorsees of the bill or note, see note to Kaufman v. State Sav. Bank, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 630.

As to a negotiable instrument naming in the alternative two or more payees, see note to Voris v. Schoonover, 50 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1097. W. A. E.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.
(Department No. 2.)

CHARLES SALLY, Appt.,
v.
WHITNEY COMPANY, Resp't.

(— Wash. —, 154 Pac. 1089.)

Adjoining owners — filling space between buildings — injury by water — liability.

One who, in constructing a building close to a brick wall on the adjoining lot, chokes the intervening space with debris so that, in a normal rainfall, it holds the water against the wall until it soaks through and injures wainscoting on the other side, is liable for such injury.

For other cases, see Adjoining Owners, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 17, 1916.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for injury to plaintiff's building by water, alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

From the findings in this case it appeared that plaintiff's wall was not exactly perpendicular, and did not extend quite to the edge of the lot, so that the space between the two walls varied from an inch at the bottom to about 2 inches at the top.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Vanderveer & Cummings, for appellant:

Defendant's acts were the proximate cause of plaintiff's damage.

29 Cyc. 490; Rosenbaum v. Shoffner, 98 Tenn. 624, 40 S. W. 1086; Eskildsen v. Seattle, 29 Wash. 583, 70 Pac. 64, 12 Am. Neg. Rep. 366; Akin v. Bradley Engineering & Machinery Co. 48 Wash. 97, 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 586, 92 Pac. 903; Detsur v. B. Stroh Brewing Co. 119 Mich. 282, 44 L.R.A. 500, 77 N. W. 948, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 371; Hollidge v. Duncan, 199 Mass. 121, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 982, 85 N. E. 186; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Carlin, 189 U. S. 354, 47 L. ed. 849, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 585.

The damage suffered by plaintiff was such as should have been contemplated by a reasonably careful and prudent man.

Bohrer v. Dienhart Harness Co. — Ind. App. —, 45 N. E. 669; Detsur v. B. Stroh Brewing Co. 119 Mich. 282, 44 L.R.A. 500, 77 N. W. 948, 5 Am. Neg. Rep. 371; Buckner v. Stock Yards Horse & Mule Co. 221

Note. — As to liability for damages caused by filling space between building and wall of adjoining building, see annotation following this case, post, 765. L.R.A.1916D.

Mo. 700, 120 S. W. 766; Williams v. San Francisco & N. W. R. Co. 6 Cal. App. 715, 93 Pac. 123; Beaning v. South Bend Electric Co. 45 Ind. App. 261, 90 N. E. 786.

Mr. George R. Biddle, for respondent:

In the absence of the evidence upon which the court below based its findings, the appellate court will presume that the evidence was sufficient to support the decree.

Nelson v. McPhee, 59 Wash. 103, 109 Pac. 305.

Bausman, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff sues in damages the builder of a structure adjoining his own, who allowed mortar and other debris to choke a long and very narrow space lying between the two, and belonging to the land on which plaintiff's building rested. In the following season the ordinary rainfall saturated this debris until the absorbed or collected water oozed through plaintiff's common brick wall, 12 inches in thickness, and injured the wainscoting inside.

Liability in tort, exceeding that of contract, cannot safely be defined. Each case must be decided upon its own facts. On the one hand, the law does not wish to punish too severely the careless man; on the other, it is he that is at fault in some degree when the damaged party may not be at fault at all. The former must not, accordingly, expect easy limitations. And the law holds him liable in two classes of consequences from his fault; one, where purely physical or natural causes set in motion go beyond what ordinarily follows; and, second, where an intervening cause appears in an unexpected meddler who makes things worse.

In Eskildsen v. Seattle, 29 Wash. 583, 589, 70 Pac. 64, 12 Am. Neg. Rep. 366, we quoted with approval the Lord Chief Justice's statement of the law in Byrne v. Wilson, 15 Ir. C. L. Rep. 332, that the tortfeasor's liability is "not only for the immediate consequences of his negligence, but also for the resulting consequences of his acts, whether those acts are acts of violence, or of negligence in breach of a duty." This he held applicable where a defendant stage driver's negligence tipped the coach into a canal lock, and yet no injury would have come to plaintiff save for the blunder of a lock keeper who turned in the water. In Akin v. Bradley Engineering & Machinery Co. 48 Wash. 97, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 586, 92 Pac. 903, we applied the same doctrine with more rigor to him who left dynamite in a field where a child chanced to come upon and blast it. There we expressed the view that the child's exploding a piece of this dynamite by means of a dry battery which she obtained was not too remote a consequence to be answered for under the rule, though we then put the rule in these words: "Where a negligent act or omission sets in operation a train of occurrences resulting naturally in the injury complained of, such negligent act or omission is deemed to have been the proximate cause, or to have contributed thereto."

In the Eskildsen Case, Seattle was held liable for injuries to a boy who, when his foot was caught in a defective street, was run over by a negligently operated locomotive of a railway company, and this decision was approved as upholding, proximate cause in another case (Thoresen v. St. Paul & T. Lumber Co. 73 Wash. 99, 107, 131 Pac. 645, 132 Pac. 860), where, under different facts, a third person's negligence contributed to the ultimate mischief.

Here the result came of a succession of physical causes naturally convening. Sooner or later this choking must have some effect on the wall; if not in one season, then in two or three or more. This is not, let it be remembered, a case of unprecedented rains; for the lower court expressly found the rainfall to have been normal. Now, the builder is presumed to have known that this débris would absorb and obstruct rain, that in this climate rain in considerable quantities must fall, and that rain stopped and collected against a wall must tend to soak into or through it. That it would probably soak through a 3 inch wall the builder would have to admit, and the most he can say is that he did not believe that it would ever penetrate a 12 inch wall. In short, defendant but debates degree. He has set in conjunction two natural forces, and merely argues that he did not think they would go so far. He must respond to the consequence. It was he who was in fault, not the plaintiff; and he must make at his own peril estimates as to the effect of natural forces set in motion. He is in a far poorer position to complain than if he were held liable for the capricious or unexpected act of a third person.

Allowing to the findings of the lower court all proper presumptions of fact, we are nevertheless of opinion that it was in error.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to enter one in favor of plaintiff for his ascertained damages, $1,011.85.

Morris, Ch. J., and Holcomb, Main, and Parker, JJ., concur.

Annotation—Liability for damages caused by filling space between building and wall of adjoining building.

As appears from its title, this note lies in narrow compass, and no case other than SALLY v. WHITNEY CO. ante, 764, has been found exactly within its scope.

Probably the reason why in that case no stress is laid on the fact that the space where the débris was thrown was beyond the lot on which the defendant had built, was that the narrowness of this space, from 1 to 2 inches, makes it fairly clear that the fall of débris therein was largely, if not entirely, accidental, as distinguished from the case of purposely throwing débris upon a neighbor's land.

In Abrey v. Detroit (1901) 127 Mich. 374, 86 N. W. 785, the plaintiff's building was near a park bridge "approach," but on a much lower grade, with a narrow strip between, which was not a public highway; the plaintiff had no right to use this strip for a passageway, but he obtained a license to use it, and built a sidewalk at or near the grade of the roadway; the city later filled in this strip between the roadway and the plaintiff's building with earth, without any protection whatever to his building, breaking and injuring it and in part L.R.A.1916D.

filling his basement. The court, in sustaining a verdict for the plaintiff against the city, said: "In filling this space the defendant was bound to exercise the same care as though the land were owned by a private individual. Plaintiff was not under obligation to build a wall to protect against the dirt thrown in. When one places a bank on his own land, above his neighbor's, he is bound to erect a retaining wall or structure sufficient to keep the dirt from encroaching upon his neighbor's land. The case comes within the maxim, 'Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas.'"

In this connection it is interesting to refer to cases of throwing or placing earth or sand against a neighbor's wall.

In Davis v. Evans (1891) 37 N. Y. S. R. 714, 13 N. Y. Supp. 437, it was held that a landowner who piled a quantity of sand against the brick wall of his neighbor's building, breaking it in, must respond in damages. The court said: "The use by the defendant of his premises in a manner that injured the property of the plaintiff was wrongful, and rendered the defendant liable for the damage which resulted from such use."

The same was held in Barnes v. Mas- terson (1899) 38 App. Div. 612, 56 N. Y. Supp. 939, 6 Am. Neg. Rep. 143, where the sand broke down the plaintiff's house and destroyed the personal property he had therein. The court said: "There can be no doubt that there was an invasion of the plaintiff's property right for which the persons responsible for the injury were liable to him in damages. The wall was wholly on the plaintiff's land, and the occupant of the adjacent lot had no right whatever to make use of it as a retaining wall for the support of material stored on that lot, any more than he would have had the right to cut openings into it and place beams therein for the purpose of supporting a building or other structure. Sand or gravel will not stand vertically without support, and, therefore, wherever it is deposited in such a way that the sides are vertical, it exerts a lateral thrust on the supports. There was no right whatever in the party storing the sand to impose this pressure or thrust on the plaintiff's wall. The act itself was wrongful, and either a trespass or a nuisance. This doctrine should not be carried to an extreme, and we do not say that where a man leans his walking stick or a stepladder against his neighbor's wall, but on his own land, this would give a cause of action. But wherever the placing of articles or material against the neighboring wall creates pressure sufficient in any way to weaken or injure it, then the property rights of the owner of the wall are violated. (Davis v. Evans (N. Y.) supra.) The action is brought not for a trespass or a nuisance, but for negligence. We do not see, however, that the form of the action has any very material bearing on the case, for the deposit of sand against the plaintiff's wall so as to injure or destroy it might be charged as negligence as well as a trespass, and the jury have found it to be such by their verdict."

In Hutchinson v. Schimmelfeder (1861) 40 Pa. 396, 80 Am. Dec. 582, the court affirmed a judgment for the plaintiff where the trial court had charged the jury, inter alia, as follows: "If two persons own adjoining lots which lie below the grade of the street on which they front, and either wishes to grade his lot up to the street, he must build a wall on his own ground, or in some other way keep the dirt within his own line. He cannot so fill up his own lot as to let the earth pass over his line on the lot of his neighbor; and if the latter has built a wall and erected a house within his own line, the former is not at liberty either to build to his neighbor's wall, or throw earth against it so as to spring it out of line, or do it any other injury; and if he does so, he is responsible in damages. If the plaintiff's house was built of improper materials, and the injury to the walls resulted from that cause, the plaintiff cannot recover for that injury. In other words, if the injury to the walls was not caused by the defendant heaping up the earth against them, he cannot recover for that injury, but still the plaintiff would be entitled to recover nominal damages, at least, if the defendant covered up for several feet the small strip of ground between his line and the wall of his house."

So, if a landowner whose lot is below street grade raises his lot to the grade, he may not call on his neighbor to share in the expense of supporting the embankment. Fisher v. Green (1852) 1 Phila. (Pa.) 382.

And if an owner on a higher level makes such a fill on his lot that his lower neighbor has to strengthen the wall of his house to stand the extra strain, this is actionable, as it also is to cause dirt to fall on the lower neighbor's lot. McKnight v. Denny (1901) 198 Pa. 323, 47 Atl. 970.

So, in Knight v. Dunbar (1891) 83 Me. 359, 22 Atl. 216, the plaintiff recovered (in an action on the case) where the defendant had deposited earth on his land which pressed the plaintiff's fence over on his land, carrying some of the newly deposited earth with it.

So, in a similar situation, the plaintiff was held entitled to an injunction. Berry v. Fleming (1903) 87 App. Div. 53, 83 N. Y. Supp. 1066.

But where the plaintiff's wall was 2 and  $\frac{1}{2}$  feet beyond his line on the defendant's land, the plaintiff could not recover for the defendant's heaping of earth against the wall, breaking it down. Harvey v. Philadelphia (1856) 2 Phila. (Pa.) 165.

For liability for injuries from matter precipitated upon adjoining property, see the note to Bishop v. Readsboro Chair Mfg. Co. 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1171.

For right to discharge water, snow, or ice from roof upon premises of adjoining owner, see the note to Shea v. Gavitt, L.R.A.1916A, 693.

Other questions of collateral interest are treated in notes cited in Index to L.R.A. Notes, under the title, "Adjoining Owner."

For extent of trespasser's liability for consequential injuries resulting from the trespass, see the note to Wyant v. Crouse, 53 L.R.A. 626. B. B. B.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF IOWA

v.

JAMES GARDNER, Appt.

(— Iowa, —, 156 N. W. 747.)

Prostitution — conviction of male.

1. A male person cannot be punished under a statute making it a crime for any person to resort to a house of ill fame for the purpose of prostitution.

For other cases, see Prostitution, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — cross-examination — reason for change of opinion.

2. A witness who had testified that he gave testimony in two other cases and in one contradicted that given in the other may, on cross-examination be asked why he changed his opinion.

For other cases, see Witnesses, II. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Criminal law — insufficiency of indictment — instruction to acquit.

3. Acquittal cannot be directed for insufficiency of the indictment if the statute provides that such question may be raised by demurrer or by motion in arrest of judgment.

For other cases, see Trial, II. d, 3, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Trial — motion in arrest of judgment — questioning sufficiency of indictment.

4. A motion in arrest of judgment for failure to give an instruction to acquit because of insufficiency of indictment is not sufficient to raise the question of the sufficiency of the indictment.

For other cases, see Criminal Law, II. f, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Lewdness — what constitutes guilt.

5. One is guilty of resorting to a house of ill fame for the purpose of lewdness who visits such place to commit an act of lewdness as the term is understood in the accepted usage of language.

For other cases, see Disorderly Houses, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Trial — giving requested instructions.

6. An instruction that one cannot be convicted of resorting to a house for the purpose of lewdness unless the jury was convinced that such was his purpose satisfies a request that he cannot be convicted if he resorted to the place for a mere friendly visit.

For other cases, see Trial, III. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Lewdness — single offense — liability.

7. A single offense is sufficient to sustain

Note. — As to whether a male may be convicted of resorting to house of ill fame for the purpose of lewdness or prostitution, see State v. Rayburn, L.R.A.1915F, 640, and footnote thereto.
L.R.A.1916D.

a conviction of resorting to a house of ill fame for the purpose of lewdness.

For other cases, see Disorderly Houses, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Trial — instructions — irrelevant.

8. An instruction not relevant to the evidence in the case is properly refused.

For other cases, see Trial, III. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Definition — house of ill fame.

9. A house of ill fame is one visited by persons of both sexes for the purpose of having unlawful indiscriminate sexual intercourse.

For other cases, see Disorderly Houses, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — refusal of requested instruction.

10. There is no error in refusing a requested instruction fully covered by the court in its own instructions.

For other cases, see Trial, III. b, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(March 14, 1916.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Plymouth County convicting him of resorting to a house of ill fame, for the purpose of prostitution and lewdness. Reversed.

Statement by Salinger, J.:

Defendant appeals from a conviction on the charge that he resorted to a house of ill fame for the purpose of prostitution and lewdness.

Mr. T. M. Zink, for appellant:

Before defendant can be convicted, it must be shown that Lillie Lawrence and Richard Lawrence kept a house of ill fame within the definition of such a house as expressed by the decisions of the courts.

State v. Chauvet, 111 Iowa, 689, 51 L.R.A. 630, 82 Am. St. Rep. 539, 83 N. W. 717; State v. Mullen, 35 Iowa, 207; State v. Render, 163 Iowa, 339, 144 N. W. 293; State v. Lee, 80 Iowa, 81, 20 Am. St. Rep. 401, 45 N. W. 545; 5 Cyc. 676; 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 518; Wright v. Paige, 36 Barb. 438; State v. Smith, 29 Minn. 193, 12 N. W. 524; State v. Irvin, 117 Iowa, 470, 91 N. W. 760; State v. McDavitt, 140 Iowa, 344, 132 Am. St. Rep. 275, 118 N. W. 370; Boswell v. State, 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 47, 122 Am. St. Rep. 731, 85 S. W. 1076; People v. Salmon, 148 Cal. 303, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1186, 113 Am. St. Rep. 268, 83 Pac. 42; Beard v. State, 71 Md. 275, 4 L.R.A. 675, 17 Am. St. Rep. 540, 17 Atl. 1044, 8 Am. Crim. Rep. 173; State v. Calley, 104 N. C. 858, 17 Am. St. Rep. 704, 10 S. E. 455; 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 520; State v. Lee, 80 Iowa, 83, 20 Am. St. Rep. 401, 45 N. W. 545; State v. Gill, 150

Iowa, 211, 129 N. W. 821; State ex rel. Slater v. McDonald, 121 Minn. 207, 141 N. W. 112.

Defendant was not guilty of committing lewdness within the meaning of the statute.

State v. Marvin, 12 Iowa, 505; State v. Shaw, 125 Iowa, 422, 101 N. W. 109; State v. Kirkpatrick, 63 Iowa, 557, 19 N. W. 660; State v. Ruhl, 8 Iowa, 447; State v. Irvin, 117 Iowa, 469, 91 N. W. 760; State v. Mitchell, 149 Iowa, 365, 128 N. W. 378; State v. McDavitt, 140 Iowa, 342, 132 Am. St. Rep. 275, 118 N. W. 370; Jackson v. State, 116 Ind. 464, 19 N. E. 330; State v. Williams, 94 Minn. 319, 102 N. W. 722; State v. Chandler, 132 Mo. 155, 53 Am. St. Rep. 483, 33 S. W. 797; Bird v. State, 27 Tex. App. 635, 11 Am. St. Rep. 214, 11 S. W. 641; Cannon v. United States, 116 U. S. 55, 29 L. ed. 561, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 278; Sweeney v. State, 59 Neb. 269, 80 N. W. 816, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 28; Bodiford v. State, 86 Ala. 67, 11 Am. St. Rep. 20, 5 So. 569; Carotti v. State, 42 Miss. 334, 97 Am. Dec. 465; State v. Poyner, 57 Wash. 489, 107 Pac. 181; Wright v. State, 108 Ala. 60, 18 So. 941; Richey v. State, 19 Ann. Cas. 655, note; People v. Salmon, 148 Cal. 303, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1187, 113 Am. St. Rep. 268, 83 Pac. 42.

Evidence of reputation of a house being one of ill fame is not sufficient to sustain a conviction, there must be other evidence of the immoral purposes for which the house is kept and used.

Botts v. United States, 83 C. C. A. 646, 155 Fed. 50, 12 Ann. Cas. 272; State v. Steen, 125 Iowa, 312, 101 N. W. 96; State v. Burns, 145 Iowa, 590, 124 N. W. 600; State v. Lee, 80 Iowa, 75, 20 Am. St. Rep. 401, 45 N. W. 545; State v. Hendricks, 15 Mont. 194, 48 Am. St. Rep. 666, 39 Pac. 93.

Defendant had the right to know the reason of the witness Laura Heigner for the changes and contradictory statements she made in her testimony, and the court erred in sustaining the objections of the state to the questions asked her by defendant.

People v. Payne, 131 Mich. 474, 91 N. W. 740; Dikeman v. Arnold, 78 Mich. 455, 44 N. W. 410; 40 Cyc. 2492, 2493; State v. Caron, 118 La. 349, 42 So. 960; Bennett v. State, 95 Ark. 100, 128 S. W. 853; Chicago R. Co. v. Handy, 208 Ill. 81, 69 N. E. 917; Alward v. Oakes, 63 Minn. 190, 65 N. W. 271.

Messrs. George Cosson, Attorney General, and Wiley S. Rankin, for the State:

A conviction may be had under an indictment charging with having been found in a certain house, leading a life of prostitution and lewdness, without proof of actual sexual intercourse.

L.R.A.1916D.

State v. Shaw, 125 Iowa, 422, 101 N. W. 109.

The crime of lewdness may be committed in different ways and forms. Prostitution is the common lewdness of a woman for gain; lewdness is irregular indulgence of the animal desires.

State v. Toombs, 79 Iowa, 741, 45 N. W. 300.

In the prosecution for keeping a bawdy-house, evidence of the general reputation of its inmates and frequenters is admissible.

State v. Lyon, 39 Iowa, 379.

Where a woman is in possession and control of a dwelling house, she being in control of the house, and occupying it for the purpose of prostitution and lewdness, this would make it a place kept for that purpose, within the meaning of the law. Proof of a single act of prostitution would be sufficient to justify a conviction.

State v. Russell, 95 Iowa, 408, 64 N. W. 281.

The statute does not require that the place be used habitually or for any considerable length of time for the prohibited purposes in order to constitute the offense in question.

State v. Lee, 80 Iowa, 83, 20 Am. St. Rep. 401, 45 N. W. 545.

The reputation of a house may be shown to enable the jury to determine whether it is a house of ill fame or not.

State v. Moore, 78 Iowa, 494, 43 N. W. 273.

Where evidence given by witnesses more or less familiar with the reputation of the house and the practices of persons stopping at it is submitted to the jury, and, while there may be a difference of opinion as to the weight and preponderance of the evidence, a verdict will not be interfered with to the extent of granting a new trial.

Ibid.

In prosecutions under § 4943, for resorting to, occupying, and inhabiting a house of ill fame, it is permissible to show the character and reputation of the house as well as testimony as to character and reputation of the inmates of the house.

State v. Burns, 145 Iowa, 588, 124 N. W. 600; State v. Beebe, 115 Iowa, 128, 88 N. W. 358; State v. Porter, 130 Iowa, 690, 107 N. W. 923.

If the character of the house is established as a house of ill fame, the intent and purpose of those resorting thereto is a matter of inference.

State v. Gill, 150 Iowa, 210, 129 N. W. 821.

It is not necessary that anyone see the indiscreet exposure or act, to convict, if it be in fact shown, or act committed. An exposure to one person is sufficient to bring the offense within the statute.

State v. Bauguess, 106 Iowa, 107, 76 N. W. 508; Com. v. Wardell, 128 Mass. 52, 35 Am. Rep. 357; State v. Juneau, 88 Wis. 180, 24 L.R.A. 857, 43 Am. St. Rep. 877, 59 N. W. 580; 25 Cyc. 212, note.

Prior and subsequent acts of intimacy may be shown.

Crane v. People, 168 Ill. 395, 48 N. E. 54; 25 Cyc. 216; Hill v. State, 137 Ala. 66, 34 So. 406; Wright v. State, 108 Ala. 60, 18 So. 941.

The fact that prostitutes were kept at a house is proof of knowledge on the part of the keeper that the house was, in fact, a house of ill fame. Knowledge may be established by indirect evidence, and positive proof of knowledge is not required.

State v. Schaffer, 74 Iowa, 705, 39 N. W. 89; State v. Steen, 125 Iowa, 307, 101 N. W. 98; State v. Wells, 46 Iowa, 662; Johnson v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 504, 24 S. W. 411; Forbes v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 24, 29 S. W. 784; Graeter v. State, 105 Ind. 271, 4 N. E. 461.

To establish the fact that a house is a house of ill fame, it is sufficient to prove that for a limited time prostitution or lewdness has been carried on therein.

State v. Lee, 80 Iowa, 75, 20 Am. St. Rep. 401, 45 N. W. 545; State v. Young, 96 Iowa, 262, 59 Am. St. Rep. 371, 65 N. W. 160; State v. Gill, 150 Iowa, 210, 129 N. W. 821; People v. Mallette, 79 Mich. 600, 44 N. W. 962.

Salinger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The statute (Code, § 4943) makes it a crime to resort to a house of ill fame "for the purpose of prostitution." We have to determine whether the trial court erred in holding that both men and women are within this statute. While in a broad sense "prostitution" means "the setting one's self to sale or of devoting to infamous purposes what is in one's power," it will not be questioned that the word is in this statute used in a narrower sense, and is the equivalent of sexual prostitution. Such prostitution is the conduct of a prostitute as such.

An allegation in an indictment that a female was enticed away with the intent of rendering her a prostitute is equivalent to an allegation that it was done for the purpose of prostitution. Nichols v. State, 127 Ind. 406, 26 N. E. 839.

A "prostitute" is "a woman who practices illicit intercourse with men for hire" (Worcester's Dict.; Zimmerman v. McMakin, 22 S. C. 372, 53 Am. Rep. 722; Sheehy v. Cokley, 43 Iowa, 185, 22 Am. Rep. 236); one L.R.A.1916D.

"who prostitutes her body for hire" (Peterson v. Murray, 13 Ind. App. at page 423, 41 N. E. 837); a "female" given to indiscriminate lewdness or promiscuous sexual intercourse for gain (Carpenter v. People, 8 Barb. 603, 611; State v. Stoyell, 54 Me. 24, 89 Am. Dec. 716; Davis v. Sladden, 17 Or. 259, 21 Pac. 140, 142). "Prostitution" in its more restricted sense is the practice of a female offering her body to an indiscriminate intercourse with men. State v. Stoyell, 54 Me. 24, 89 Am. Dec. 716; Haygood v. State, 98 Ala. 61, 13 So. 325; State v. Goodwin, 33 Kan. 538, 6 Pac. 899, 901, 5 Am. Crim. Rep. 1; Fahnestock v. State, 102 Ind. 156, 1 N. E. 372; Osborn v. State, 52 Ind. 526, 528, 1 Am. Crim. Rep. 25; Miller v. State, 121 Ind. 294, 23 N. E. 94, 95; State v. Brow, 64 N. H. 577, 15 Atl. 216, 217; Carpenter v. People, 8 Barb. 603, 610; State v. Toombs, 79 Iowa, 741, 45 N. W. 300; State v. Ruhl, 8 Iowa, 447, 453; Com. v. Cook, 12 Met. 93, 97; People v. Demouset, 71 Cal. 611, 12 Pac. 788, 789, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 1. It is the act or practice of prostituting or offering the body to an indiscriminate intercourse with men; common lewdness of a woman for gain; the act of permitting a common and indiscriminate sexual intercourse for hire,—and it is said same is considered a heinous offense "for which the woman may be punished." 2 Bouvier's Dict. Rawle's Rev., p. 785. And see State v. Gibson, 111 Mo. 92, 19 S. W. 981; Bunfill v. People, 154 Ill. 640, 39 N. E. 566; and Century Dictionary. While cases hold there may be prostitution though there be no desire for gain (State v. Clark, 78 Iowa, 492, 43 N. W. 273; State v. Rice, 56 Iowa, 431, 9 N. W. 343; State v. Thuna, 59 Wash. 689, 140 Am. St. Rep. 902, 109 Pac. 331, 111 Pac. 768, all that speak on the point agree that it is the practice of a woman only.

It follows that both "prostitute" and "prostitution" have such a fixed meaning in the approved usage of the language, and such peculiar and appropriate meaning in law, as that, if we give effect to such meaning, the statute in question does not contemplate that a man can be a prostitute or can practice prostitution, and does not intend to punish him for what he cannot do; for one cannot purpose to do what he knows is impossible. If a man cannot commit prostitution, he cannot go to a place for the purpose of prostitution. Having acquired such meaning, and we having ascertained "what is the appropriate and well-authorized meaning of the term," we should hold that "in this sense the legislature is supposed to have used it." State v. Ruhl, 8 Iowa, 453. The terms "prostitution" and "lewdness" as used in the statute are by a general rule of construction to be construed according to their most usual and best-understood signification. Bunfill v. People, 154 Ill. 640, 39 N. E. 566; Fahnestock v. State, 102 Ind. 156, 1 N. E. 376. And see also Com. v. Cook, 12 Met. 97.

2. Since the statute does not, in terms, include men, we need not and do not pass upon whether the legislature could effectively declare that men can be guilty of "prostitution." We may for the purposes of the argument assume such power exists. Thus we reach the question whether, though it was well understood that prostitution was the act of a woman, the legislature intended § 4943 to include men. The trial court charged such was the intention. It said that, though "when we use the word 'prostitute,' we mean a woman, and [though] prostitution is legally defined as the act or practice of offering the body to indiscriminate intercourse with men," yet this section of the Code does "include men as well as women," because it uses the words, "prostitution or lewdness." The position of appellee is that the statute includes men because it makes it a crime "for any person" to resort to a house of ill fame for the purpose of prostitution. The view expressed by the trial judge simply begs the question. It is a declaration that, though the legislature, which imposes a punishment for resorting for the purpose of prostitution, knew prostitution is the conduct of none but women, and though the punishment provided can have effect as to women, the very use of the word "prostitution" proves the punishment was intended to apply to men.

As to the position of appellee, while it is true that ordinarily the words, "any person," include both men and women, this is not always so. As in all other cases, the rule of reason controls as to the interpretation of these words.

Section 4756 punishes rape upon a female committed by "any person." Literally construed, these words would authorize a woman, or the husband of a woman assaulted, to be punished for rape, as principals. And so of § 4758, which prohibits "any person" to have carnal knowledge of "any female" imbecile or rendered insensible; and since a four-year-old child is a "person" (Sutton v. State, 122 Ga. 158, 50 S. E. 61), such child could, on the theory of appellee, be guilty of rape, or of carnal knowledge of an imbecile, or of a woman by it rendered insensible. No court would so interpret "any person." If it were claimed that a statute like § 4762, which makes it a crime for "any person" to seduce or debauch a female, contemplated a seduction and debauchment by a female, it would be held that "any person" should not be so construed, because it must be assumed the legislature believed the woman could not commit the offense. If the claim were that the words included all who entered a dwelling in the nighttime by means of any breaking, it would be held they did not include the owner of such dwelling, not because the owner could not thus enter, but because the legislature could not in reason have intended to include him. But, whether the words are held not to include some person because the legislature knew he could not commit what is forbidden, or because it is clear for some other reason that it could not have been intended to include him in the general words, the rule of construction to be deduced from either or both cases is to exclude him, if it be clear for any reason that it was not intended to include him. We think the point within this rule. The legislature knew "prostitution" was generally understood to be something that men could not, and women could, be guilty of, and that this interpretation was settled in law. It used the word in the settled sense, and "any person" to avoid repetition. The statute forbids: (1) Resort to a house of ill fame for the purpose of prostitution; (2) for the purpose of lewdness; (3) using such house for prostitution; (4) occupying such house for such purpose; (5) inhabiting such house for such purpose; (6) using such house for the purpose of lewdness; (7) occupying same for such purpose; (8) inhabiting same for such purpose. The legislature knew it was matter of common knowledge that some of these can be committed by both men and women, and some by women only. It therefore refrained from labeling four of these as applying to women only. In the light of this, it is plain that "any person" was intended to mean "any person who can be guilty of any of these;" that the purpose was to save words regarded as needless, rather than to enlarge a class of offenders. In effect, the statute is within the reasoning of cases like State v. Cooster, 10 Iowa, 453, and State v. Brandt, 41 Iowa, 593. It is its purpose to enable the state to indict in the alternative, to charge an offense that can be committed by men and women, or by men or women, or by women alone,—not to permit men to be punished for what all understood they could not do. It is against reason, so long as any other explanation can be found, to suppose that a legislature which knew that all persons believed prostitution could not be practiced by a man intended to declare that it could, and omitted to put so radical an innovation into unmistakable language. No statute that imposes a five-year imprisonment in the penitentiary should be construed to work such a change unless its words compel such interpretation.

When § 4943 was enacted it was settled that men could not be guilty of prostitution. Hence they did not become punishable for prostitution unless this was effected by enacting that statute. We said in Caster v. McClellan, 132 Iowa, at page 505, 109 N. W. 1021: "The general rule is, however, that words must be construed according to their natural meaning. And in the case of a statute which imposes a liability which, but therefor, would have no existence, a strict construction must be given not only to the particular words employed, but to the act generally."

Where a statute provided that all persons should be denied the right to form or be in any manner interested, either directly or indirectly, in any trust as defined by the act, it was held, against the argument that the law was unconstitutional because it prohibited two or more farmers from agreeing not to sell their wheat to a neighboring mill for less than so much per bushel, that the general language of statutes will be limited to such persons and subjects as it is reasonable to presume the legislature intended it should apply. State v. Smiley, 65 Kan. 240, 67 L.R.A. 903, 69 Pac. 199. In Rohlf v. Kasemeier, 140 Iowa, 182, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1284, 132 Am. St. Rep. 261, 118 N. W. 276, 17 Ann. Cas. 750, a case cited by the appellee, there was under consideration the construction of a statute making it unlawful for any persons to combine to fix the price of any article of merchandise or commodity. We held that the practice of medicine and surgery was labor, and did not come within the purview of the act, and we said: "Moreover, it is well settled that in construing any statute all the language shall be considered, and such interpretation placed upon any word appearing therein as was within the manifest intent of the body which enacted the law. Much, of necessity, depends upon the context and upon the usual and ordinary significance of the language used."

We believe both reason and authority justify us in refusing to give said general words the effect the state claims for them. The rule eiusdem generis is an avoidance of giving to general words a strict construction inconsistent with the general scope of what they are found in. It is that, where general words follow the enumeration of particular classes of persons or things, the general words will be construed as applicable only to persons or things of the same general nature or class as those enumerated. 36 Cyc. p. 1119; State v. Campbell, 76 Iowa, 122, 40 N. W. 100; State v. Eno, 131 Iowa, 619, 109 N. W. 119, 9 Ann. Cas. L.R.A. 1918D.

856; Brown v. J. H. Bell Co. 146 Iowa, 89, 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 407, 123 N. W. 231, 124 N. W. 901, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 852; State v. Wignall, 150 Iowa, 650, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 507, 128 N. W. 935; Den ex dem. Low v. Goldtrap, 1 N. J. L. 272, 274, 275; State ex rel. Balch v. Fry, 186 Mo. 198, 85 S. W. 328.

In Dowell v. Vicksburg & M. R. Co. 61 Miss. 529, it is held that the words, "any person," in a statute declaring that a railroad shall be liable for any damages or injury which may be sustained by any person from a locomotive or cars, do not embrace employees of the road. In Carle v. Bangor & P. Canal & R. Co. 43 Me. 271, 15 Am. Neg. Cas. 305, a statute making a railroad corporation liable for damages sustained by "any person" by the neglect of its servants is held to be limited to such persons as were not the servants of the corporation, and who sustained damages without any contributory fault. See Sala v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 85 Iowa, 683, 52 N. W. 664. In Miller v. Coffin, 19 R. I. 164, 36 Atl. 8; Sullivan v. Missouri P. R. Co. 97 Mo. 113, 10 S. W. 854; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Farrow, 6 Colo. 505; Lutz v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 6 N. M. 490, 16 L.R.A. 819, 30 Pac. 913; Proctor v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 64 Mo. 122, and Connor v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 59 Mo. 292, in a statute permitting the representatives of "any person" who shall die from any injury resulting from or occasioned by the negligence of any person or employee while running a train of cars, the words, "any person," are held not to include a servant whose death was occasioned by the negligence of a fellow servant.

In Dixon v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (C. C.) 68 Fed. 631, it is held that a statute providing that every corporation shall be liable in damages for personal injuries suffered "by any employee while in its service where such injury resulted from the act or omission of any person," etc., does not impose liability upon the employer for injuries resulting from the act or omission of the person injured. It is said that, while the language employed is capable of a construction as broad as is contended for, it will not be given such construction if to do so would lead to absurd or unjust consequences, and that the natural import of the words of a statute, according to the common use of them, when applied to the subject-matter, is to be regarded as expressing the intention of the legislature, unless it is repugnant to the acknowledged principles of justice and sound public policy, in which case the words ought to be enlarged or restrained so as to comport with those principles, unless the intention of the legislature is clearly and manifestly repugnant to them, and that, therefore, it is required that the words, "any person," be limited so as not to include the person injured. And see Jewell v. Sumner Twp. 113 Iowa, 49, 84 N. W. 973.

The words, "any person," in a statute providing for the taking of affidavits of any person for the purposes of a motion when required by his adversary, are applicable only to those persons who may, by existing laws, be subjected to this species of examination; wherefore it is held a party to an action cannot be compelled by the adverse party to make the affidavit for the purposes of a motion. Hodgkin v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. 74.

A statute requiring county officers to permit examination of documents by any person is to be limited to persons who have an interest of some sort, great or small, to be subserved by such examination. Boylan v. Warren, 39 Kan. 301, 7 Am. St. Rep. 551, 18 Pac. 176. The right of any person to contest the validity of a will is to be limited to any person having an interest in the subject-matter of the contest. Campbell v. Fichter, 168 Ind. 645, 81 N. E. 662, 11 Ann. Cas. 1089; Crawfordville Trust Co. v. Ramsey, 178 Ind. 258, 92 N. E. 180.

A statute giving a lien to every laborer or miner who shall perform labor in opening, developing, or operating any coal mine upon all the property of the person, firm, or corporation owning or operating such mine, and used in the construction or operation thereof, does not give such lien upon the property of the owner of miners employed by an operating lessee of the mine. Caster v. McClellan, 132 Iowa, 502, 109 N. W. 1020. In Powers v. Hocking Valley R. Co. 31 Ohio C. C. 488, a statute relating to the lease of railroads, and making the lessor and lessee jointly liable for all rights of action accruing to any person for any negligence or default growing out of the operation and maintenance of such railroad, is held to cover obligations of the lessor and lessee to the public, and hence not to apply to an action for negligence by an employee of the lessee against the lessor and lessee.

A corporate charter providing that, if "any person" chosen to be warden shall refuse to accept the office, he shall suffer a forfeiture, means, considering the direct provision of the same charter, only such persons as are by the terms of the charter eligible to such office. Tobacco Pipe Makers' Co. v. Woodroffe, 7 Barn. & C. 838, 5 Dowl. & R. 530, 4 L. J. K. B. 301. And in United States v. Palmer, 3 Wheat. 631, 4 L. ed. 477, it is said that "any person or persons," as used in the Constitution, relating to those who commit mis-prison of treason or felony, are necessarily confined to any person or persons owing allegiance to the United States, though the words in themselves are broad enough to comprehend every human being.

In State v. Brown, 38 Kan. 390, 16 Pac. 260, 8 Am. Crim. Rep. 165, there was construed a statute punishing any person who was drunk in any highway, public place, or in his own house, etc., and it was held that "any person" should be construed to mean only such persons as act voluntarily in the performance of the interdicted act, that hence it does not include idiots, insane persons, and children under seven years of age, babes, and persons who have been made drunk by force or fraud, and carried into a public place; and that, therefore, one who innocently drinks of liquor which intoxicates him, without an idea that it would make him drunk, is to be held not guilty of the offense prescribed by the statute, though it in terms is made applicable to any person.

In State v. Olson, 108 Iowa, a case cited by appellee, we said on page 668, 77 N. W. 333: "The words, 'unmarried person,' in the indictment, taken alone, do not show whether that unmarried person was man or woman; but it is not in this narrow sense that we are to construe this indictment. The law has never recognized that the crime of seduction can be committed by any other than male persons, nor upon any other than female persons."

And see Davis v. State, 95 Ark. 555, 129 S. W. 530.

Though the briefs have not called it to our attention, we do not overlook our statute rule that "words importing the masculine gender only may be extended to females." Code, § 48, ¶ 3. It does not operate where its application violates reason and nullifies the intent of the legislature.

On the meaning to be given the words, "any person," the citations for the state, Crane v. People, 168 Ill. 395, 48 N. E. 54, and Hill v. State, 137 Ala. 66, 34 So. 406, are irrelevant. So is Williams v. Poor, 65 Iowa, at 413, 21 N. W. 753, cited by appellant. We are unable to see how Com. v. Lavonsair, 132 Mass. 1, and State v. Phillips, 26 N. D. 206, 49 L.R.A.(N.S.) 470, 144 N. W. 94, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 320, cited by appellant, or United States v. Cannon, 4 Utah, 122, 7 Pac. 369, and Purdy v. People, 4 Hill, 384, cited by appellant, bear upon anything in this appeal, and State v. Myers, 10 Iowa, 448, State v. Smith, 46 Iowa, 670, State v. Shaw, 125 Iowa, 422, 423, 101 N. W. 109, presented by appellant, and Com. v. Goodall, 165 Mass. 588, 43 N. E. 520, and State v. Burns, 145 Iowa, 588, 124 N. W. 600, cited by appellee, have very remote, if any, bearing, and whatever is said in the last as to resorting is said as to a woman defendant. The substance of the decision is as to the admissibility of evidence on reputation. State v. Toombs, 79 Iowa, 741, 45 N. W. 300, upon which the state puts some reliance, was the case of a woman charged with keeping a house of ill fame, and does not touch the point now in consideration. The following citations on part of appellant are relevant to nothing involved in this appeal: State v. Moore, 78 Iowa, 495, 43 N. W. 273; State v. Hasty, 121 Iowa, 507, 96 N. W. 1115; Wright v. Paige, 36 Barb. 438; Cannon v. United States, 116 U. S. 55, 29 L. ed. 561, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 278; Com. v. Sliney, 126 Mass. 49; and Sweeney v. State, 59 Neb. 269, 80 N. W. 815, 15 Am. Crim. Rep. 28.

The indictment charges that defendant feloniously resorted to a house of ill fame "for the purpose of prostitution and lewdness." The jury was directed to give time and energy which should have been expended on the consideration of a real case, to considering whether defendant was guilty of something not prohibited by the statute under which he was indicted. At the least, it was made possible for the jury to find that defendant resorted for the purpose of lewdness, because the jury thought he went to the house for the purpose of prostitution. To create such a situation is error. O'Brien v. People, 28 Mich. 214. This might have been error had the jury disregarded prostitution by its verdict. But it appears by the verdict that it was or may have been a basis for the verdict. And the court by constructions overruling a motion in arrest of judgment, and entering sentence equally upon either finding, affirmatively put the element of prostitution into the case as a co-ordinate factor.

In all the steps which work a holding that § 4943 punishes men for resorting to a house of ill fame for the purpose of prostitution, the trial court was in error. For this we are constrained to order a reversal, notwithstanding the argument of the representatives of the state that "this is a crime which affects the very foundation of society," that no sense of justice and no theory of fairness permits the holding a man to be innocent and a woman guilty, and that "this defendant is so plainly guilty that he should not have complained of any kind of treatment in the lower court, and is so flagrantly guilty that the finding of the lower court should be sustained. This court does not pass upon the guilt or innocence of this defendant de novo. Both as to those who may be guilty and those who may be innocent it is our duty to give to L.R.A.1916D.

statutes which impose degrading imprisonment a construction which avoids the punishment of accused where the statute proceeded under imposes no punishment. Fahnestock v. State, 102 Ind. 156, 1 N. E. 377; Bunfill v. People, 154 Ill. 640, 39 N. E. 567. In the last case it is said that prosecutions for even such offenses as this "can only be conducted under and in accordance with the statutes," and that errors entitle the defendant to a new trial because "the law warrants it and the court doth give it." We do not administer lynch law, which at times executes men because it is believed they are guilty of something, and felt they should be hung, on general principles.

II. The witness Laura Heigner testified she had been a witness in State v. Deviney, and that on that trial she testified that she had had improper relations with Deviney and him only, and she repeated the statement on the instant trial. She testified also that she had been a witness in the case of State v. Lawrence, and, as such witness, had said that she had such relations with forty different men in Mrs. Lawrence's house, and that the Brose girl was present. She testifies that both statements are true, in her opinion. Thereupon she was asked to say why she testified thus differently as to this matter on different trials, to say why she had changed her testimony since a witness in State v. Deviney, to say when she first made up her mind to testify differently in the instant case, to say why she changed her testimony upon the trials of these various cases, and to say whether anyone told her to change her testimony for the instant case. To this objections were sustained, that it is immaterial, irrelevant, unfair, because there is no evidence that some of the alleged contradictory statements were made, and that it is improper cross-examination. We think the examination was neither irrelevant nor immaterial, and that for the purpose of cross-examination at least it appeared sufficiently the witness had changed her testimony substantially as the questions indicate, and that therefore the examination was not unfair. See Abstract, 91-99. See State v. Cater, 100 Iowa, 505, 515, 69 N. W. 880. Was it improper cross-examination?

State v. Caron, 118 Ia. 349, 42 So. 963, approves the text in Roscoe that cross-examination may go to any subject, however remote, if it bear on testing the character or credibility of the witness. Inquiries into the feelings or disposition of the witness to conceal or pervert the truth are not to be excluded as being collateral. Alward v. Oakes, 63 Minn. 190, 65 N. W. 270. To say the least, it is proper, where a witness admits the existence of a variance between his testimony and his statements on other occasions, to examine him as to the motives inducing the variance. 7 Enc. Ev. 69. In State v. Pulley, 63 N. C. 8, a witness admitted that he had on a former occasion denied the truth of a statement he was then making, and it is held to be admissible thereupon to ask him why he had thus formerly made denial. The accused in a criminal case should be given very large liberty in proving the motives which induced a change in the testimony of a witness from favorable to accused to favorable to the state. People v. Dillwood, 4 Cal. Unrep. 973, 39 Pac. 438; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Porfert, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 716, 20 S. W. 870.

Where a party changes his testimony after a reversal by the supreme court and admits having read the opinion, he may be asked on cross-examination if he did not change his statement because he had seen the ground on which the case was reversed. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Porfert, supra. Where prosecutrix changes her testimony as to the time when intercourse occurred and admits her former testimony to have been false, it is error to sustain an objection to the question why she had given such former false testimony. People v. Payne, 131 Mich. 474, 91 N. W. 739.

It is our opinion that the objections should have been overruled.

III. Defendant asked the court to direct the jury to acquit on the ground that the indictment fails to charge the crime of lewdness. The offer asserts, inter alia, that the indictment fails to state any facts; that it sets out no acts constituting lewdness, nor states with whom committed. In effect, the offered instruction attempts to operate as a demurrer to the indictment. It is not required that we pass upon whether the indictment is well criticized. The statute permits the points raised by the offer to be raised by demurrer (Code, § 5328), or by motion in arrest of judgment (§ 5426). Either method of attack being sustained, it is often possible to cure the defect by a new accusation. We think it fairly appears to be the legislative intent that such an attack upon the indictment shall not be made at a time when to sustain it must result in a final acquittal; that the defendant may not decline to use his right to demur nor anticipate his right to proceed by motion in arrest, and substitute for both an offered instruction which, if given, works an acquittal, thus obtaining a result which the employment of neither of the other methods would yield. Why provide for a demurrer, with power of resubmission, if same be sustained? Why provide for a second opportunity to demur by means of a motion in arrest if, at the pleasure of the defendant, neither may be used, and an acquittal be obtainable by attacking the indictment by means of an offered instruction? Who would ever use demurrer or motion in arrest if this be permissible? We can see no justification for the defendant's waiting until all the evidence has been taken on both sides to so present a demurrer to the indictment; no reason why he should not present it before the trial is actually begun; why, having passed this point, he should be allowed to anticipate the time, if ever it shall come, when he needs present a motion in arrest of judgment. To make him proceed either at the one time or the other, rather than between the two, is not only orderly procedure, but absolutely fair to both the state and the defendant. It takes nothing justly due from defendant, and, as said, avoids the making said two statutes idle.

The nearest that the motion in arrest of judgment and for new trial comes to attacking the indictment is a statement that the court erred in not giving each and every paragraph of the instructions asked by the defendant. Waiving the question of definiteness in assignment, it remains the fact that this is merely a repetition of the exception taken to the refusal to give said offered instruction. As we hold that it was right to refuse the instruction, it was also right to overrule that part of the motion in arrest of judgment which complains of the refusal to give such instruction.

We must decline to review the sufficiency of the indictment with reference to charging facts, because no attack recognized by law was below made upon the indictment. This disposition of the attack upon the indictment, and also that almost all of them are irrelevant on such attack, makes the following citations of appellant ineffective: State v. Wasson, 126 Iowa, 320, 101 N. W. 1125; State v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 63 Iowa, 508, 19 N. W. 299; State v. Potter, 28 Iowa, 554; State v. McKinney, 130 Iowa, 370, 106 N. W. 931; State v. Brandt, 41 Iowa, 607, 608; State v. Martin, 125 Iowa, 715, 101 N. W. 637; State v. Brown, 47 Ohio St. 102, 21 Am. St. Rep. 790, 23 N. E. 747, 8 Am. Crim. Rep. 373; State v. Bauguess, 106 Iowa, 107, 76 N. W. 508; State v. Ashpole, 127 Iowa, 680, 104 N. W. 281; Cosgrove v. State, 37 Tex. Crim. Rep. 249, 66 Am. St. Rep. 802, 39 S. W. 367. And so are Webb v. State, 106 Ala. 52, 18 So. 491, and Com. v. Wardell, 128 Mass. 52, 35 Am. Rep. 357, cited by the state.

IV. The court charged that lewdness is the unlawful indulgence of the animal desires, and is also legally defined to be lustful and licentious behaving, such as unchastity, sensuality, and debauchery. It is urged this does not define lewdness clearly, nor with sufficient fullness. The definitions presented by the defendant through offered instructions were: (1) That lewdness, within the meaning of the statute, is the living or dwelling together of a man and woman who are not married to each other, as if they were; (2) living with and having illicit sexual intercourse with but one woman to whom defendant is not married, and with whom he dwells as if he were married to her; (3) habitually living or dwelling with some woman as his wife and habitually having illicit sexual intercourse with her without being married to her.

The authorities cited to sustain the claim that it was error to reject these indicate appellant labors under the misconception that he is charged with a course of incontinent living, or with habitual illicit relationships, or with offending by creating public scandal. He is accused of neither. He is not charged with open adultery or leading a life of lewdness, but of resorting to a house of ill fame to commit lewdness; i. e., to do lewd acts. That is one reason why the citations are irrelevant. It is not relevant that resort on a single occasion for a lewd purpose fails to prove leading a life of lewdness. State v. McDavitt, 140 Iowa, 342, 132 Am. St. Rep. 275, 118 N. W. 370. That merely decides that "one swallow does not make a summer." And so of the fact that a single act of lewdness is not the "lewd and lascivious conduct" punished as such by statute. State v. Marvin, 12 Iowa, 499. Such statutes use "conduct" in the sense of customary behavior. It is self-evident, but not material, that a single act of illicit intercourse will not sustain a conviction for living in open adultery. Bird v. State, 27 Tex. App. 635, 11 Am. St. Rep. 214, 11 S. W. 641; Bodiford v. State, 86 Ala. 67, 11 Am. St. Rep. 20, 5 So. 559; People v. Salmon, 148 Cal. 303, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1186, 113 Am. St. Rep. 268, 83 Pac. 42. And see too Wright v. State, 108 Ala. 60, 18 So. 941; Carroti v. State, 42 Miss. 334, 97 Am. Dec. 465; Richey v. State, 172 Ind. 184, 139 Am. St. Rep. 362, 87 N. E. 1032, 19 Ann. Cas. 654. Equally manifest that such an act does not justify conviction for open and notorious cohabitation and adultery. People v. Salmon, 148 Cal. 303, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1186, 113 Am. St. Rep. 268, 83 Pac. 42. It is, of course, true, and equally, of course, irrelevant, that resorting for an isolated act of intercourse does not warrant conviction for lewd and vicious association L.R.A.1916D.

and cohabitations, or for open and gross lewdness, and that clandestine intercourse does not violate a statute forbidding lewdly and lasciviously abiding and cohabiting. State v. Chandler, 132 Mo. 155, 53 Am. St. Rep. 483, 33 S. W. 797. Such statutes inhibit the unlawful living together as only man and wife may lawfully live. Of course, no isolated act of illicit intercourse is that. See State v. Poyner, 57 Wash. 489, 107 Pac. 181. Nor are holdings material that some acts of lewdness do not constitute the one who practises them a prostitute, nor her conduct prostitution. Bunfill v. People, 154 Ill. 640, 39 N. E. 565; State v. Brow, 64 N. H. 577, 15 Atl. 216.

In State v. Mitchell, 149 Iowa, 362, 128 N. W. 378, Mr. Justice Ladd makes this distinction clear. The case involves the charge of conspiracy to induce two females to commit the crimes of adultery and lewdness and to become prostitutes. An instruction which defines lewdness to be "the unlawful indulgence of the animal desires" is held to be inadequate and misleading, because the essence of the indictment is an attempt to induce the women to lead an incontinent life, and the instruction compels conviction if the conspiracy was no more than to procure their willing presence for the purpose of committing a single act of incontinence,—an act which would constitute neither lewdness nor prostitution. It is said the case differs from keeping a house of ill fame, resorted to for the purpose of prostitution and lewdness, in that on indictment for the last the term "lewdness" is employed in the ordinary sense as meaning a lustful, lecherous, lascivious, or libidinous act. In other words, while on the charge of leading a life of lewdness, or inducing others to lead such or to become prostitutes, there may not be a conviction merely because there was an unlawful indulgence of the animal desires or lustful and licentious behaving, such as unchastity, sensuality, and debauchery, where the charge is resorting for the purpose of lewdness, it is sufficient that the place was visited for the purpose of committing an act of "lewdness," as the term is understood in the accepted usage of the language.

V. There is evidence from which the jury might have believed that some of the visits of the defendant to the house occupied by Richard and Lillie Lawrence were visits of friendship. Defendant complains of the refusal of instructions that he might lawfully go to a house of ill fame if his purpose was that of friendly visiting, and the failure to give an equivalent direction. We think there was not such failure. The court once, if not oftener, instructed that the jury could not find defendant guilty unless convinced beyond reasonable doubt that he resorted to or used the said house "for the purpose of prostitution or lewdness." This is, of necessity, a charge that defendant could not be convicted for visiting said house for the purpose of friendly visiting. One who goes to the dwelling of his friend for the purpose of visiting as a friend does not resort to it for the purpose of prostitution. A direction, then, that it is only a visit with the last-named purpose that can convict is fairly equivalent to an instruction that visits for any other purpose are not covered by the indictment.

2. There is a line of cases which hold, in effect, that private incontinence and resort to a place for a single night for the purpose of lewdness does not come within the statute provision against leading a life of lewdness, and that incontinence by a householder with a servant in his household is not within the statute. See State v. McDavitt, 140 Iowa, 344, 132 Am. St. Rep. 275, 118 N. W. 370; State v. Irvin, 117 Iowa, 469, 91 N. W. 760; and People v. Pinkerton, 79 Mich. 110, 44 N. W. 180. Complaint is made of refusal of an instruction in effect that there could be no conviction unless it was found defendant frequently resorted to the house of the Lawrences for the purpose charged in the indictment, and that one or an occasional visit to an alleged house of ill fame for such purpose will not warrant a conviction. We have to say that, if the jury was warranted to find that the defendant resorted to said house for said purpose at all, it was also warranted in finding that he so resorted many times. If, then, we were to concede the rule invoked by defendant, it would still be proper to refuse said instruction, because, while the jury might find that there was no resorting for the purpose charged in the indictment, there is no theory of the evidence upon which it could find that the resorting done, if any, was occasional merely, or that defendant resorted there but once. We are, however, disinclined to affirm such a rule. O'Brien v. People, 28 Mich. 214, does not hold that the offense of resorting is not made out unless the visits are frequent. The exact decision is that "to hold that when such persons resort to such places no criminal purpose can be inferred would be absurd." While, as said, it does not sustain the contention of the defendant, it does meet his claim, also made, that the court should have charged defendant's visits to this house should be presumed to be for an innocent purpose. In State v. Ah Sam, 15 Nev. 27, 37 Am. Rep. 454, this very question was determined.

It was there argued that to resort to such places is not to go merely once, but to go and go again,—to make a practice of going. The court said that, while the etymology of the word lends some support to this argument, yet "the definitions given in the lexicons show that whatever may have been its original meaning it no longer means anything more in the connection in which it is employed in the statute than to go once."

VI. There is no merit in the contention that it was error to refuse a charge, in effect, that it would not constitute the house one of ill fame because Lillie Lawrence alone therein had sexual intercourse with various men named in the indictment, and that to constitute it such house it must further be found that other women were kept or made their habitation there for the purpose of indiscriminate intercourse. While it is true that such acts of illicit commerce by the proprietor are not ordinarily sufficient to give the house this character (9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 520; State v. Lee, 80 Iowa, 76, 20 Am. St. Rep. 401, 45 N. W. 545), even this is not always so (State v. Young, 96 Iowa, 262, 59 Am. St. Rep. 371, 65 N. W. 160; State v. Gill, 150 Iowa, 210, 129 N. W. 821). Be that as it may, no theory of the evidence made the instructions asked relevant. We may assume, for the sake of argument, the jury might have found no woman resorted to the Lawrence house for illicit sexual commerce, but there was no evidence whereupon it might find that no one but Lillie Lawrence practised such commerce in that house. Moreover, the court defined a house of ill fame to be one "visited by persons of both sexes for the purpose of having unlawful, indiscriminate sexual intercourse," and thus clearly negated the thought that the acts of Lillie Lawrence alone could give the house that character.

2. Defendant asked instructions defining a house of ill fame, the essence of which is that it is a place of resort inhabited by more than one woman actually engaged in prostitution. The court charged, instead, that it is a house visited by persons of both sexes for the purpose of having unlawful, indiscriminate sexual intercourse, and defendant complains of both acts. We are of opinion that State v. Wilson, 124 Iowa, 264, 99 N. W. 1060, and People v. Hampton, 4 Utah, 258, 9 Pac. 508, sustain the action of the trial court, and that State v. Clark, 78 Iowa, 493, 43 N. W. 273, does so in effect. While King v. People, 83 N. Y. 587, and Beard v. State, 71 Md. 275, 4 L.R.A. 675, 17 Am. St. Rep. 536, 17 Atl. 1044, 8 Am. Crim. Rep. 173, are rightly decided, they do not hold that the definition given by the trial court is incorrect. State v. Mullen, 35 Iowa, 207; State v. Toombs, 79 Iowa, 741, 45 N. W. 300; State v. Calley, 104 N. C. 858, 17 Am. St. Rep. 704, 10 S. E. 455; State v. Chauvet, 111 Iowa, 689, 51 L.R.A. 630, 82 Am. St. Rep. 539, 83 N. W. 717; Boswell v. State, 48 Tex. Crim. Rep. 47, 122 Am. St. Rep. 731, 85 S. W. 1076; State v. Irvin, 117 Iowa, 469, 91 N. W. 760; and State v. Lee, 80 Iowa, 75, 20 Am. St. Rep. 401, 45 N. W. 545, cited by appellant, are not relevant to the point now in consideration. Neither are State v. Beebe, 115 Iowa, 128, 88 N. W. 358; People v. Mallette, 79 Mich. 600, 44 N. W. 963; Johnson v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 504, 24 S. W. 411; Graeter v. State, 105 Ind. 271, 4 N. E. 461; State v. Schaffer, 74 Iowa, 704, 39 N. W. 89; State v. Steen, 125 Iowa, 307, 101 N. W. 96; and State v. Wells, 46 Iowa, 662, cited by appellee. All but one of these last deal with what evidence will make it a jury question whether the proprietor of a house of ill fame knew the house was of that character and consented to what was being done therein.

3. The defendant asked the court to charge that, while evidence of the general reputation of the Lawrence house is admissible, there may be no conviction on that alone, and there must be some other evidence showing that such house was actually kept and used as a house of ill fame. No doubt this is the law. State v. Hendricks, 15 Mont. 194, 48 Am. St. Rep. 666, 39 Pac. 93; State v. Steen, 125 Iowa, 307, 101 N. W. 96; Botts v. United States, 83 O. C. A. 646, 155 Fed. 50, 12 Ann. Cas. 272. And see State v. Porter, 130 Iowa, 690, 107 N. W. 923. But the refusal of the request to charge is not error because the court seems to have fully adopted this theory in its own instructions. In ¶ 5 the jury is told they should carefully consider testimony received regarding the general reputation of the house and the like, also to consider the things that were said and done in and about the same, the coming and going of people to and from it, and all the facts and circumstances shown in evidence, and from these to determine the real character of the house, which seems to be an instruction that the reputation is to be dealt with as merely one item in the proof. In instruction 10 the jury was further charged that, while evidence of general reputation of the house is admissible, the defendant cannot be convicted on that alone, and that there must be some other evidence tending to show that the house was of the character charged, and that in considering this question the jury should consider all the facts and circumstances shown upon the trial, including the testimony with regard to the general reputation of the house.

VII. Instructions offered, and one ground of the motion in arrest of judgment, assert there was no evidence to sustain the verdict. We are of opinion that these instructions were rightly refused, and this ground of the motion in arrest rightly overruled. State v. Rayburn, — Iowa, —, L.R.A. 1915F, 640, 153 N. W. 59, decided by us June 18, 1915, fully supports several holdings herein announced, and is in no respect in conflict with this opinion. See State v. Gill, 150 Iowa, 210, 129 N. W. 821.

For what is pointed out in the first and second division of this opinion, the cause must be remanded for a new trial.

By stipulation this is the order in State v. James Deviney, appellant.

Evans, Ch. J., and Ladd and Gaynor, JJ., concur.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

OGALLAH ELEVATOR COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
FRED HARRISON.

(97 Kan. 289, 154 Pac. 1016.)

Master and servant — outside earnings — duty to account.

1. The rule that a servant must account to his master for earnings received from outside employment ordinarily relates to Headnotes by Dawson, J.

Note. — As to right of principal or employer to earnings by agent or servant who undertakes extraneous work, see annotation following this case, post, 782.
L.R.A.1916D.

employment in the same kind of business in which his master is engaged, and does not relate to the servant's earnings in another kind of business in which his master is not interested and which is not inimical or prejudicial to his master's business.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, I. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Same — independent business.

2. The plaintiff employed the defendant to manage its business of buying and selling grain and coal, and to keep open during business hours its offices and warehouses, and to keep its books and accounts. The defendant, with the knowledge and acquiescence of plaintiff, undertook for another employer the business of selling flour, a business which the plaintiff had considered and decided not to engage in. No complaint was made that the defendant neglected plaintiff's business on account of the other employment. Held, that the defendant's earnings in the sale of flour are his own property, and the plaintiff has no legal claim thereto.

For other cases, see Master and Servant, I. a, in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Principal and agent — business manager — liability for bad debts.

3. Ordinarily a manager of a business is not a guarantor of its credits extended nor an insurer against mistakes, and in the absence of negligence he is not personally liable for an uncollectable debt.

For other cases, see Principal and Agent, III. in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

Evidence — earnings — establishment.

4. Where an elevator company lays claim to moneys earned and collected by its manager for the use of its scales, and the jury finds that the amount collected was somewhere between $12 and $30, and that the manager paid out between $10 and $25 for help in operating the scales, and that the manager retained no part of the earnings to his own use, the plaintiff fails to establish its cause of action.

For other cases, see Evidence, II. in Dig 1-52 N. S.

Appeal — incompetent evidence — non-prejudicial error.

5. Prejudicial error cannot be based upon the admission of incompetent testimony when it is not shown to have improperly affected the result.

For other cases, see Appeal and Error, VII. m, 3, a, (5), in Dig. 1-52 N. S.

(February 12, 1916.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Trego County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover an amount paid out by him without authority from plaintiff while acting as plaintiff's agent, and to recover certain money collected by defendant from the sale of flour and for the use of plaintiff's scales. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Herman Long, for appellant:

It was error to permit witnesses to give their conclusions as to the effect of conversations and transactions material to the issues involved.

State v. Nolan, 48 Kan. 723, 29 Pac. 568, 30 Pac. 486; Shepard v. Pratt, 16 Kan. 209; Eagle Mfg. Co. v. Jennings, 29 Kan. 657, 44 Am. Rep. 668; Marshall v. Weir Plow Co. 4 Kan. App. 615, 45 Pac. 621; Diehl v. State, 157 Ind. 549, 62 N. E. 51; State v. Brown, 86 Iowa, 121, 53 N. W. 92; Hibbard v. Russell, 16 N. H. 410, 41 Am. Dec. 733.

Evidence of the acts and declarations and agreements of individual members of the board of directors, without any showing that they were authorized in any manner to transact business for the plaintiff, was inadmissible.

Cook, Corp. 6th ed. §§ 712, 713, 716, 726, and cases there cited; First Nat. Bank v. Drake, 35 Kan. 564, 57 Am. Rep. 193, 11 Pac. 445; Asher v. Sutton, 31 Kan. 286, 1 Pac. 535; Robins Min. Co. v. Murdock, 69 Kan. 596, 77 Pac. 596; J. I. Case Plow Works v. Pusifer, 79 Kan. 177, 98 Pac. 787; Johnson v. McLain Invest. Co. 79 Kan. 423, 131 Am. St. Rep. 302, 100 Pac. 52; Dodge v. Childs, 38 Kan. 526, 16 Pac. 815; Cherokee & P. Coal & Min. Co. v. Dickson, 55 Kan. 62, 39 Pac. 691; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Johnson, 55 Kan. 344, 40 Pac. 641; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Osborn, 58 Kan. 768, 51 Pac. 286; Walker v. O'Connell, 59 Kan. 306, 52 Pac. 894; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Consolidated Cattle Co. 59 Kan. 111, 52 Pac. 71.

Evidence of the action of the board of directors ordering a dismissal of the action, and revoking the authority theretofore given to the president of the board, was improperly admitted.

Wigmore, Ev. § 1061; Harrington v. Lincoln, 4 Gray, 563, 64 Am. Dec. 95; Colburn v. Groton, 66 N. H. 151, 22 L.R.A. 763, 28 Atl. 95; Gilleland v. Schuyler, 9 Kan. 569.

It was error to admit in evidence the contents of the report of an auditing committee which had been appointed to examine the defendant's books of account.

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Burks, 78 Kan. 515, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 231, 96 Pac. 950; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. Orig. § 242, 4th ed. § 305; Carroll v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 82 Ga. 452, 6 L.R.A. 214, 10 S. E. 163; Atchison v. King, 9 Kan. 550.

The burden of proof on all of the negative allegations was placed upon the plaintiff, contrary to well-established rules of evidence.

Farmers' Warehouse Asso. v. Montgomery, 92 Minn. 194, 99 N. W. 776; Green v. Macy, 36 Ind. App. 560, 70 N. E. 264; Warren v. Holbrook, 95 Mich. 185, 35 Am. St. Rep. 554, 54 N. W. 712; Boyles v. Bradley, 79 Kan. 844, 101 Pac. 477; Woodson Mach. Co. v. Morse, 47 Kan. 429, 28 Pac. 152; Bank of Commerce v. Schlegel, 66 Kan. 509, 72 Pac. 210.

It was error to instruct the jury that if the president of the plaintiff company, with proper authority, agreed in good faith with the defendant that he might handle flour on his own account for the Wheatland Elevator Company and retain for his own use all compensation received for so doing, the plaintiff cannot recover for any moneys received by defendant for such services.

Asher v. Sutton, 31 Kan. 286, 1 Pac. 535; Cook, Corp. 6th ed. § 716; Zimmerman v.

Knox, 34 Kan. 245, 8 Pac. 104; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wells, 56 Kan. 222, 42 Pac. 699; Meyer v. Reimer, 65 Kan. 822, 70 Pac. 869; Raper v. Blair, 24 Kan. 374.

It was error to instruct that if the president or a majority of the directors knew of the acts of defendant, and permitted him to continue in this course, there can be no recovery.

Union P. R. Co. v. Milliken, 8 Kan. 647; Hasie v. Connor, 53 Kan. 720, 37 Pac. 128; First Nat. Bank v. Drake, 29 Kan. 311, 44 Am. Rep. 646; First Nat. Bank v. Drake, 35 Kan. 564, 57 Am. Rep. 193, 11 Pac. 445; Davis v. Morgan, 117 Ga. 504, 61 L.R.A. 148, 97 Am. St. Rep. 171, 43 S. E. 732; King v. Duluth, M. & N. R. Co. 61 Minn. 482, 63 N. W. 1105; McCarty v. Hampton Bldg. Asso. 61 Iowa, 287, 16 N. W. 114.

An instruction making a recovery depend upon the question whether the defendant's work for the Wheatland Elevator Company interfered with his duties to the plaintiff, or lessened the value of his services to the plaintiff, is erroneous.

Jackson v. SeEVERS, 115 Iowa, 370, 88 N. W. 931; Hove v. Savory, 51 N. Y. 631; Amory v. Wood, 51 N. Y. 644; Kinney v. Mahoning Mills, 13 Pa. Super. Ct. 573; Sumner v. Nevin, 4 Cal. App. 347, 87 Pac. 1105; Leach v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 86 Mo. 27, 56 Am. Rep. 408; Mechem, Agency, § 471; Seaburn v. Zachmann, 90 App. Div. 218, 90 N. Y. Supp. 1005.

A mistake which an ordinarily prudent man might have made is not sufficient to excuse defendant.

Rose v. Douglass Twp. 52 Kan. 451, 39 Am. St. Rep. 354, 34 Pac. 1046; State use of Wyandot County v. Harper, 67 Am. Dec. 363, and note, 6 Ohio St. 607.

No instruction on fraud should have been given to mislead the jury.

Raper v. Blair, 24 Kan. 374; Union P. R. Co. v. Fray, 31 Kan. 739, 3 Pac. 550; Zimmerman v. Knox, 34 Kan. 245, 8 Pac. 104; Cobe v. Coughlin Hardware Co. 83 Kan. 522, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1126, 112 Pac. 115; Fish v. Poorman, 85 Kan. 244, 116 Pac. 898; Smith v. Edelstein, 92 Ill. App. 38; Granrud v. Rea, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 299, 59 S. W. 841.

Messrs. E. A. Rea, Lee Monroe, James A. McClure, and O. M. Monroe, for appellee:

The court did not err in its instruction regarding the burden of proof.

McCormick v. Holmes, 41 Kan. 265, 21 Pac. 108; Badger Min. & Mill. Co. v. Ellis, 76 Kan. 796, 92 Pac. 1114; People's Gas Co. v. Fletcher, 81 Kan. 84, 41 L.R.A. (N. S.) 1161, 105 Pac. 34; 38 Cyc. 1749-1750.

Plaintiff is estopped to object to the outside work by having acquiesced therein. L.R.A.1916D.

Wallace v. DeYoung, 98 Ill. 638, 38 Am. Rep. 108; 16 Cyc. 714.

Handling the flour did not conflict with defendant's duties.

5 Labatt, Mast. & S. § 2037; 26 Cyc. 1020; Jaffray v. King, 34 Md. 217; Hillsboro Nat. Bank v. Hyde, 7 N. D. 400, 75 N. W. 781; Williams v. Crane, 153 Mich. 89, 116 N. W. 554; Clarke v. Kelsey, 41 Neb. 766, 60 N. W. 138; Wheeler & T. Co. v. Dahms, 50 Ill. App. 531; Bailey v. Sibley Quarry Co. 166 Mich. 321, 129 N. W. 17; Hermann v. Littlefield, 109 Cal. 430, 42, Pac. 443; Stone v. Bancroft, 139 Cal. 78, 70 Pac. 1017, 72 Pac. 717; Shoemaker v. Acker, 116 Cal. 239, 48 Pac. 62.

The court required the proper measure of proof to establish fraud.

20 Cyc. 120.

Dawson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Ogallah Elevator Company brought this action against Fred Harrison, who served as its manager from November, 1909, until March, 1912, to recover $40.90 which he had paid to one Jeff Belveal without authority, and to collect from Harrison $180 which he had earned and received for the sale of flour for a rival elevator company while in the plaintiff's employment, and also to collect from defendant $40 which he had collected from various persons for the use of plaintiff's scales.

The defendant answered by pleading the statute of limitations and an audit and settlement as to the Belveal item, that the money received for the use of plaintiff's scales had been paid out with plaintiff's consent for work and labor, and that the sale of flour for the rival elevator did not interfere with his duty to plaintiff, and that plaintiff lost nothing thereby, and that he had done this work with the knowledge and consent of plaintiff and its officers.

Plaintiff replied that any settlement touching the Belveal item and for the use of the scales had been procured by defendant's fraud and concealment, and made without authority and without its knowledge of ratification; and that if any officer consented to or acquiesced in defendant's employment to sell the rival elevator's flour, it was without authority from plaintiff.

The special findings and general verdict were in favor of defendant. The plaintiff assigns many errors in the admission and exclusion of evidence, in the instructions, and in the general result. Such of these as may have been of sufficient consequence to affect the final result will be noted.

1. Much of appellant's brief is devoted to its claim to the $180 earned by the defendant in the sale of flour for a rival elevator. The plaintiff was engaged in dealing in grain and coal. It was not engaged or concerned in the business of dealing in flour. It had considered the advisability of doing so, but on account of lack of funds it decided not to undertake it. The defendant's employment required him to attend to its business and keep its funds and accounts, and its offices and warehouses were to be opened for business from 7 o'clock A. M. until 6 o'clock P. M., or later, if business demanded it. It was clearly shown that the plaintiff knew, through the only way a corporation can know, by notice to its president and directors, that the defendant was handling this flour, and it took no action to stop it as inimical to its business. If the plaintiff had any grievance on this account, its action would be for breach of contract or in tort. It certainly has no legal claim to defendant's earnings. The case is not to be considered as if the plaintiff itself were dealing in flour and had employed the defendant for that purpose.

The president of the plaintiff company testified:

